Al: “Either way, it makes me proud to say that having protected a future like that is one of my crowning glories in my life. Princess, are you going to answer my question from before? Like, what basis is there for these Vollachian assassins…”

Priscilla: “It’s obvious. —The Empire really felt like killing me.”

Al: “…You, princess? Don’t tell me it’s some sort of issue with the catastrophe Leip left behind?”

The domain Priscilla ruled over, the Barielle Barony, were originally the lands of her late husband, Leip Barielle. The barony was located near the border with the southern Vollachian Empire. It served as a buffer zone between the Kingdom and the Empire; the latter of which was always in conflict with the former one way or another.

It wouldn’t surprise him if they’d earned the Empire’s enmity from something like that. And although Al had been thinking that, Priscilla’s reply came as a complete shock to him.

Priscilla: “No, my foolish husband had nothing to do with it. The reason why the Vollachian Empire is trying to kill me should be because I come from its imperial family, but faked my death before later fleeing the country.”

Al: “…Huh?”

She said those words while resting her chin against her hands, with a look of tedium on her face. Although he’d taken in what she’d said, his brain could barely process what she’d meant, leaving him completely confused.

What was it that she’d said now?—That she came from its imperial family?

Schult: “So you’re really from the Empire, Priscilla-sama!”

Priscilla: “There’s really not a scrap of significance to be had in where one is born. Regardless, were you to trace back to where I was born, it’s sure to be that land where my history began.”

Schult: “Um, but like, you came to the Kingdom?”

Priscilla: “I had to, in order to avoid those troublesome rules. It’s the way of the Empire after all, to be unable to succeed its throne without first killing all of your siblings…I am completely fed up with it.”

Al: “Wait, wait, wait, wait, waaaait.”

Priscilla casually answered Schult’s innocent question, showing no signs of hesitation. Nevertheless, Al really couldn’t help but interrupt, having been listening beside him in utter confusion.

This was news even for Al, who due to one reason or another possessed a lot of knowledge that others didn’t. He’d never dug deep into Priscilla’s history, but…

Al: “Princess, if I’m not mistaken, wasn’t your title: daughter of a feudal lord?”

Priscilla: “That’s because I switched places with a girl who’d come as a servant, to learn the ways of etiquette, at the time I faked my death.”

Al: “…So you’re seriously Vollachian nobility?”

Priscilla: “What reason would I have to lie? You ought to be mindful of your heedless behavior.”

Though Priscilla’s demeanor was cool and collected, there was still time for Al’s mind to snap back to its sense.

Of course, there were times where Priscilla would say pretty erratic things, but that was just down to the fact that her ability to think outside the norm went beyond the understanding of ordinary men and women. That, and she wasn’t the type who’d go out of her way to deceive people.

In other words, it meant that everything she’d told them here was the truth.

Al: “I’ve heard that the succession to the Vollachian throne is a pretty damn crazy affair. All the Emperor’s children who hold the right to succession set out to kill each other, right? So, the current Emperor must be…”

Priscilla: “My elder brother. Though he’s my half-brother.”

Her reply was nonchalant as ever, but that shouldn’t have been the case to begin with.

He’d taken up the seat of Emperor with another one of his siblings who held the right to succession still alive. It would be a terrible scandal if that were to come to light, even should he be ousted from the throne.

Al: “Then why did you participate in the Royal Selection?”

Priscilla: “What?”

Al: “Like, isn’t it obvious? You hold a position that stands out a ton, so you saying you pretended to be dead so you’d escape makes no sense. Shouldn’t it be obvious that the Empire would notice, as well as that assassins would come?”

Priscilla: “So, you’re implying I should live in fear of them, with my head down, eyes shut and ears plugged? If you’re being serious about that, then I must have been awfully wrong about you.”

Al: “…”

Al let out a small gulp as he felt cold heat coming from her crimson eyes.

However, he wasn’t going to be so reluctant as to take back his opinion because of that. Al was convinced that his opinion was right in this matter.

If Priscilla held her life dear, then she shouldn’t have gotten involved in stuff like the Royal Selection.

Al: “…Though who am I to say that?”

Al realized, as he tried to call Priscilla’s behavior into question, that he didn’t have the qualifications to do so.

The one who'd twisted her path into shape, had been none other than Al himself. There'd once been the choice for him, to progress things in a different manner, and not let her participate in the Royal Selection.

Al had already made the choice when he refused to help Leip Barielle with his wicked scheme. He was wrong here to pin the blame on Priscilla for his own choice.

Al: "So, Princess… What will you do now?"

Priscilla: "Hmm. Since the assassins won't have returned, the Empire will immediately make their next move. It will be nigh impossible to change their minds. Thus, the path we must follow is but one."

Priscilla gave a radiant smile, like that of a blazing fire, as she snapped her fingers.

Priscilla: "…To settle this in person."

Al: "…"

Al's breath hitched for a moment when he heard her unyielding answer. Beside them, with a nervous look on his face, Schult anxiously observed their back and forth. Even if his worries for Priscilla were genuine, he could barely follow the conversation, considering how young he was.

That's why only Al could advise Priscilla against this.

Al: "Princess, I know you may not want to listen to me, but please listen to what I have to say. It's not like we have only one option. We can forget about the Empire, and even with the Royal Selection, and everything, there's the option to abandon them—"

Al counselled her with rueful resignation, that it'd be for the best if it was to put her first.

Or otherwise, he had to take into account the possibility that this might incur her wrath as well. That's why he'd been somewhat surprised, though not enough as to cluelessly wonder why.

—Even were he to have his head burnt off, without having a chance to explain himself, by the Yang Sword of Priscilla, who'd gotten up from her chair.

There are things that won't change, no matter what you say or how many different actions you take.

That was the case with fate or faith unyielding, things which weren't influenced by the actions or interference of others. A stubborn person, who won't budge once they decide on something, won't yield, regardless what kind of persuasion or threats you use. And the most stubborn person Al knew, was Priscilla.

Thus, when his attempts to make her give up on the idea were about to reach one thousand, Al was left with no choice but to regretfully admit that his persuasions weren't going to work.

Priscilla: "…To settle this in person."

Priscilla's choice couldn't be changed anymore by outside interference. Al understood that more than enough, thus he let out a sigh, and said.

Al: "I get what you mean, Princess. I don't have any objections."

Priscilla: "Oh? Now that's surprising. Considering your behavior recently, I was thinking that you'd have been foolish enough to not understand your position and go against me, getting your head lopped off in the process."

Al: "…I'm sorry things haven't gone your way."

Al couldn't hide the cold sweat within his helmet, speaking to her like he'd seen that before.

Either way, he knew all too well that he wouldn't be able to change her choice. Thus, what Al could do was deal with every single obstacle that awaited her.

…This was a reawakening of the same determination he'd held on the day he'd decided to stop being a following star.

Priscilla: "Then get prepared. We'll be going to the Empire as soon as the inspection of our lands is complete."

Schult: "R-Right away! I'll give it my all as well!"

Schult stood up straight and replied back to Priscilla, holding no intentions of going against what Priscilla had decided. Al afforded only a glance to the side at their exchange, before looking out at the scenery outside from the study window.

Under the endless sky, far, far away, lay the Vollachian Empire—A land that Al held a close connection with; a land that Al never wanted to set foot in again, if possible.

Al: "…Let's do this, shall we. Bring it on, oh inevitable fate!"

No matter what awaited, he would break through each dead-end and seize the result they so desired.

Al, or rather, Aldebaran, clenched his remaining fist in determination, unbeknownst to anyone.

Chapters 71-90

Chapter 71:
Count One

1

—With his final words washed away by the wind, Natsuki Subaru's consciousness came to an end.

"…"

Speaking of irony, ironically enough, his Death this time had been a Death by his own volition.

Perhaps that is why his mind and heart had remained calm at the moment of Death— of course, that had not been the case, he had possessed uneasiness and nervousness for jumping into the circumstance of Death on his own accord.

However, unlike till now, he had faced the Death he had anticipated with much more sincerity than his other Deaths up to this time.

Of course, he did not believe that him choosing to die had truly saved Shaula.

She did not want to kill him, so she wanted him to command her to die.

Shaula, who had been concerned about Subaru to that extent, had let Subaru throw himself to his death right in front of her eyes. The weight of that impact he did not know and it must have immensely shattered her heart, which had continued awaiting for four hundred years.

That is why, this was nothing more than Subaru's self-satisfaction. The worst kind of self-satisfaction of exaggerating and not seeing the result for himself with his own eyes.

However—

Subaru: “—So what.”

If all that is fastened to him was nothing but self-satisfaction, nothing but hypocrisy, what was wrong with that.

In the end, the method to catch and halt the impact of all happenings in this world could only be wielded in one’s own weighing scales. Unaccomplished good deeds hold no meaning, and the word known as hypocrisy doesn’t ultimately exist.

—All of them, surviving.

After his discussion with Shaula, Subaru cemented the final objective he had touted.

—No, to be precise, the survival of all of them had been his goal from the beginning. That judgement had merely decided whether to include Shaula in that or not, and Subaru chose to love all of them.

He shall lead the way to solve all of the catastrophes surrounding this sand tower.

For that purpose, he would do anything he could.

That is—

Subaru: “The meaning, behind why I am myself. —Isn’t that so, ‘Natsuki Subaru’.”

Along with that instantaneous decision, he awakened from the deep, deep abyss of Death—.

2

???: “—Subaru, are you certain of what you said earlier?”

Subaru: “Yeah, don’t be doubtful after coming this far. It’s the information I collected after meeting it face to face and everything. If it couldn’t be made the best use out of, I wouldn’t bring it up!”

Harshly replying to the sideward face of the good-looking man running at an average speed, Subaru dashed while pulling the tiny palm.

Running past the fourth layer's aisle, they aimed for the second layer of Electra — loaded with frustration, as Subaru sprinted whilst pulling Beatrice's hand, Julius' yellow eyes glanced sideways at him.

Julius: "Subaru, your paleness has not gotten any better. So indeed, the happening in the book was…"

Subaru: "I'm not hiding how worried I am. Don't even try telling me I should have quietly caved into the Green Room, you."

Julius: "I would recommend you to stay calm here if it weren't for this situation, but unfortunately things are quite bustling. Right now, we must use anything we can, even if they are mere grains of sand."

Subaru: "You've got nothing to say so you'll call me using grains of sand, eh…"

Julius: "They can be thrown if the wind is meagre enough. If possible, when in a position capable of reaching the opponent's eyes."

Narrowing his eyes at the elegant eloquency, Subaru thought of his words about being thrown into the wind to be ironic.

The truth is, in terms of experience Subaru's Death just a few minutes ago had been one of being thrown into the wind. Julius comparing Subaru's existence to grains of sand was not necessarily a mistake either.

Subaru: "But, grains of sand have their own qualities."

Beatrice: "On top of that, those grains of sand have Betty with them, I suppose. In other words, they are grains of sand with the cutest companion, in fact."

Subaru: "What, I guess you're talking about the sand that got into your shoes."

Beatrice: “That’s not what that means, I suppose!”

Smiling at Beatrice, who puffed her cheeks, Subaru pulled her body by directing strength into his arm. Beatrice let out a shriek saying “Wa~h ~hk” and her light frame tightly fit into Subaru’s chest.

Running while pulling her hand was something quite romantic, but right now he wanted to prioritize speed. Fortunately, Beatrice’s body was light like an angel’s feather so carrying her and running was an easy win as well.

Subaru: “Well, I haven’t ever carried an angel’s feather, though.”

Julius: “About time, idle talk ends here. —Subaru, I do believe it is annoying but”

Subaru: “Yeah, it’s annoying. Though I can’t come up with words telling you to relax even if I rip my mouth apart, but… it is absolute that that guy Reid, and Gluttony will come in contact. We have to go, to hold that off.”

Halting his legs, Julius asked while gazing at the humongous stairway that led to the second layer which lay ahead of them. Interrupting that inquiry, Subaru affirmed that he possessed confidence in it.

It was inconceivable for that to be untrue. After all, this was something he had heard from Julius himself. And, if they could obstruct this—

Subaru: “We can put out a safe, against Reid messing everything up.”

Julius: “…At any rate, it would be better if his trespassing can be avoided in this chaos. Even if it is just for confirming his movements, it is well worth it to make our way here.”

Positioning his legs ahead of the humongous stairway, Julius nodded at Subaru. Returning a nod to that Subaru, whilst keeping Beatrice in his grasp, stepped onto the final level of the stairway.

And—

Subaru: "—Gugh."

Beatrice: "Subaru, your condition really is bad, in fact. The book's effect is visible, I suppose."

Beatrice looked at Subaru, who had shaken his head violently for a single moment and touched his cheek out of anxiety. Whilst gaining tranquility from the warmth of that small palm, Subaru shook his head, saying "I'm fine".

Subaru: "Exhaustion from reading did not lower my wisdom. On top of that, it's just as what I told Julius. This is no time to stay in bed. —This is the time when everyone should put their strength together."

Beatrice: "…When about to really reach the limit, absolutely tell Betty, in fact."

Subaru: "…Yeah, I know."

Responding to Beatrice, who was pressurizing him based on her senses, Subaru took in a long, deep breath.

His body felt sluggish. His head felt heavy. His nausea was increasing without pause and he felt congestion in his blood vessels as if in place of blood, coal tar had been poured into them.

All of this, was the result of Subaru taking over Ram's inferior physical form through Cor Leonis.

"…"

What he had harvested was the aftermath of having strode across Return by Death and the continuation of Cor Leonis. —Equal to his uneasiness by the memories of Death, what he carried over by the Authority.

Thanks to that he was able to grasp on the positions of his comrades at the current moment. Everyone was abiding by Subaru's instructions, and had started to respond to each of the respective attacks.

Within those responses of his comrades also existed Meili, in the balcony, and Shaula, struggling fiercely. She was certainly there and fighting for Subaru and the others'— no, for Subaru's sake.

Subaru: "I will, definitely help you."

Whispering behind him, Subaru followed Julius' back, who had gone ahead of him.

The humongous stairway, which cleared over the first layer of the tower and went through the layer above that, was lengthy. But neither was this the time to spit up complaints nor the situation to leak whining.

His entire body was sore, his bones had been shattered to pieces, but they were a necessary compensation to break out of this situation.

And—

Julius: "Subaru, let's advance!"

Julius' dignified voice resounded, and Subaru raised his face whilst running out of breath. And Julius, who had reached the utmost step, turned half of his body back and gestured to Subaru with his hand.

Abiding by that, the moment he galloped over the stairway he was met with the space that had opened up.

"…"

The complete opposite arrangement of rooms from the fourth layer, which had multiple rooms dividing the floor like a spherical wineglass that had been shattered. The second layer Electra, which divided all of their worth of existence by the Trial, is where they had arrived.

And, in Electra, where the three of Subaru, Beatrice and Julius had arrived, the first generation Sword Saint Reid and the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony were—

Reid: “—Hey, you. Is that all ya’ve got, you. It ain’t a joke, you. Didn’t ya come here to entertain me, you. It’s lackin’, you. Don’tcha be makin’ me laugh, you. No, at least be makin’ me laugh ya know, you. It ain’t amusin’ or anythin’, you.”

They came across the scene where the Sword Saint Reid Astrea went on and on complaining, having grabbed a single leg of the young boy that had been mercilessly struck down onto the floor.

Julius: “This is…”

Staring at the spectacle before their eyes, the one to whisper that in blank surprise was Julius. However, Subaru’s mental state witnessing the scene was absolutely the same as what he had whispered.

Then, what scene had they been expecting, was something quite difficult to determine now that if it were to be mentioned—

Reid: “A∼h? What’s up, you all. Y’all comin’ here too, ain’t that some enthusiasm. Or, do ya have business not with me, but with this guy?”

Gluttony: “Kah, kah, kah…”

Saying that, Reid scratched the area of his chest with his right hand, and with his other hand the leg of the young boy he had in his grip — the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, he lifted him upside down and made a look of suspicion.

Just as mentioned before, what scene they had been expecting was something quite difficult to determine now that if it were to be mentioned, but at the very least, this scene far surpassed what Subaru had assumed.

Subaru: “I had heard that Reid and Gluttony were negotiating, but…”

Beatrice: “Negotiating… this, I suppose? Betty thinks that even an exchange would be a lacking expression for this, in fact.”

Julius: “Yes, I agree. It is difficult to even call this a conversation.”

With that, Beatrice and Julius arrived at the same conclusion as what Subaru had whispered. However, the reaction of those two did not make sense from Subaru’s perspective.

Because the contact between Reid and Gluttony, the one to express it as negotiation from what he had heard last time, had been Julius, who must have witnessed a similar situation.

In any case—

Subaru: “The scene where Gluttony got overwhelmingly whipped down, would that be correct?”

Though nobody had asked for it, that is what Subaru worded what he witnessed.

In the white space of the second layer Electra indeed, the one-on-one battle Gluttony and Reid had engaged in, its traces remained in various spots.

They were the crevices on the floor caused by being stepped firmly upon or the cracks in walls which gave the impression of being caused by slashing strikes, aside from those, the traces of black burns caused by fires, or the scattered lumps of earth which were not supposed to be here, that precisely made clear the characteristic of Gluttony, it was unmistakable that the departments of all kinds of special moves had been lavish feasts.

—The departments of those techniques had been struck and smashed to atoms by the calamity known as Reid.

Subaru: “Earthquake, thunder, fire, are all of them Reid…”

Reid: “So, what’re y’all gonna do, you all. Do ya wanna go for the Trial ? Ya can go for it since ya’ve a slightly nice expression. But, young fish, you can’t. Ah, you can’t.”

Julius: “Why do you say, he is an exception?”

Reid: “Don’tcha get it jus’ by takin’ a look. A guy who ain’t perfect or can’t even become a game companion, instead of bein’ imperfect, is jus’ full of holes, ain’t that so. Don’t stand in front of me when ya’re like that. I start wantin’ to kill ya with a single finger, ya know. “

Gluttony: “Gi, gughya~a~a~!!”

While saying that, Reid stabbed his right hand’s fingers into the torso of Gluttony whom he had in his grip. With his guts mercilessly gouged, the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony gave rise to an unseemly shriek.

Though it was unknown how old Gluttony physically was, even so, from the standpoint of his outward appearance, the young boy of thirteen or fourteen years of age was being tormented by an adult was the emotion he felt, difficult to suppress upon that sight.

It seemed as if Julius also had the identical feeling, and so—

Julius: “Reid Astrea, you must also be possessing the dignity as a knight. Then, what reason is there for you to torment that young boy any more than necessary…”

Reid: “Hey, you, don’tcha be sayin’ idiotic bullshit.”

Said Reid without changing the tone of his voice, and declared whilst possessing only the sword spirit similar to penetrating cold in response to Julius, who tried to offer commencing conversation from a fresh start.

Reid shook the body of Gluttony left and right whose leg he had grabbed,

Reid: “The dignity of a swordsma~n? If ya scatter that ‘bout in exaggeration, that’s exactly why the thin’ called the preparedness of a swordsman exists. Are ya gonna be fightin’ without even the preparedness to die. If ya’re gonna have an attitude makin’ light of it like that, then there ain't any choice but to teach it to ya with pain. Aye?"

"…"

The preparedness and dignity of a swordsman, if the argument was to be placed such a sumo ring, the one to be at the inferior position would be Julius. On top of having pride hang outside earlier, Reid's words about preparedness possessed a constant persuasive power.

On top of that, though the visible person was painful to even look at,

Subaru: "If Gluttony collapses, then the result certainly is alright…"

Though obvious, the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony was not included in his touted objective of everyone's survival.

The ones Subaru wanted to save were only Emilia, Beatrice, Ram, Rem, Meili, Echidna, Julius and Shaula. On top of that, the two of Patrasche and Gyan.

Gluttony and Reid were not subject to that. If the two of them were to crush each other— to call it as that results in an outcome too unilateral, but it was advantageous for Subaru and the others should that happen.

However—

Reid: "First of all, you. Is this guy yer buddy. If that's so then it ain't as if I don't get why ya're gettin' so heated up…"

Julius: "No, absolutely not. That Sin Archbishop of Gluttony is a bitter enemy of myself as well, an opponent with whom, in the worst case scenario if I were to fight to the extremity, one may end up taking the other's life."

Reid: "Eh? Then why're ya gettin' so mad? Cause yer prey got snatched away?"

Julius: "—It is because, you are kicking the pride of a swordsman."

Julius told the Sword Saint — the man who was the first one to hold that title, bestowed upon only those who stand at the pinnacle of the sword.

That declaration of Julius', which couldn't even be an insult, was silently being heard by Reid who narrowed his eye not covered by the eyepatch.

Upon the waitful watch of that Sword Saint, Julius continued as if slashing the atmosphere.

Julius: "If battling swordsmen, warriors, knights is something where one must prepare his body for death beforehand, then it is fine to submit to losing one's life at the extremity of the battle. However that, at most, is the extremity of battle, death at the extremity upon the exhaustion of all of one's desperate efforts is how it should be. The victor, absolutely, must not play around with the life of the defeated."

Reid: "…Ya're sayin' shit that's makin' my ears itchy. Who the hell's gonna be listenin' to all that."

Julius: "I do not mind should they be named as even inexperienced ideals, or sweet nothings! Merely, embodying those ideals and sweet nothings is the way of the knight I believe in."

"…"

With that bold assertion Julius unsheathed his own knight sword.

From what he had heard, this knight sword had gotten fractured once— it was not supposed to be a sword he had a habit of using, hence, it was something suspicious which his hand was yet growing accustomed to.

But above all, what must have always been in his fundamental values, those will never waver.

That is because they had certainly, always continued to shimmer within his self.

That shimmering something, did not let Julius overlook Reid's unjustness.

Even if the one to fall victim to that unjustness should be a Sin Archbishop, someone who had committed grave atrocities.

Reid: “—The way of the knight, aye.”

Beyond all expectation, that whisper jolted the atmosphere in Electra.

That was, a quiet tone of voice.

That was, not a voice harboring emotions of little significance.

That was, nothing but an echo which seemed as if it had slipped in amongst the other nonchalant and bored echoes.

—However, that was the signal of eruption of the first generation Sword Saint, Reid Astrea.

Reid: “Hey, you. How long’re ya gonna be sleepin’. Wake the hell up.”

Gluttony: “Gughi ~tsu!”

As he groaned and directed strength of grip such that he could crush that grabbed leg with his hand, Gluttony responsively shrieked upon his leg almost being crushed. And, Reid looked down onto the upside down Sin Archbishop,

Reid: “You, ya said some interestin’ shit, ain’t that so. Ya said ya’re gonna eat me up, taste me up, lick me up, aye. —I will, let ya do that.”

Gluttony: “—. Gihi, gaha, ahahaha ~tsu! What’s up with that ~tsu! What’s that what’s that, what happened so suddenly ~tsu! Why so suddenly, do you feel like that, red-haired onii-san! Even though you swung we or us around this much because you were against that hu~h!”

Reid: “I changed my mind. —Ah, that’s right that’s right.”

Removing the distortion of his face caused by pain, Gluttony tried regaining his state of health as Reid glared at him. After that as if having suddenly noticed something, Reid rotated his neck around,

Reid: “Ones like ya’ll will be intrudin’ right away anyway, ain’t that so.”

Remarkably saying that, Reid stepped ahead diagonally.

At that moment, shining violet crystals were thrown into the spot Reid was standing on. A shrill sound as that of shattering glass reverberated, and the violet arrows themselves along with the floor smashed and got scattered about.

However, they missed their aim. And Reid, who had been their aim, took a single step and leapt, shortening his distance to Subaru and the others who had commenced that attack just now.

Beatrice: “—~hk! Subaru, not good I suppo…”

Reid: “Here.”

Beatrice’s warning rendered fruitless, Gluttony was struck into Subaru’s torso, delivering a side blow.

Handling a human as a blunt weapon, the unstoppable force mercilessly sent Subaru flying who had been carrying Beatrice.

Subaru: “Gahagh ~hk!”

Reid: “It’s good ya didn’t hesitate, you all. This is way better than that beautiful girl in terms of fightin’. Well, the broken fragments of yer ability haven’t been reassembled, though.”

With no flexibility to even respond to Reid’s brief review, Subaru rolled over while holding Beatrice with all his might. He must not feel as if the origin of his life had been shorn off, with his internal organs overturned by the single blow just now, accompanied with Ram’s physical burden.

Julius: “Subaru! Beatrice-sama! Kgh… ~hk.”

And whilst fearing for the blown away Subaru and Beatrice, Julius, in a single instant piercingly charged towards Reid who had shortened the distance in between. However, Reid strode on and crushed that with his feet and hammered a kick into Julius' abdomen, who had tilted the axis of his legs.

Though Julius received that with the handle of the knight sword he had instantaneously drawn he could not block being lunged through by the shock wave as well. With his guts churned by the perforating single blow, he fell back greatly.

And meanwhile—

Reid: "Here, try it out n' see. To eat me up, or to die jus' like this by bein' played around by me, choose one what ya'd like or I'd have no choice but to make a move. Ain't that the thin' called life, hey you."

Gluttony: "—A~h, ah, ah ~tsu! We get it, we do get it, we really get it, we completely get it, as we get it, so we get it, as we want to get it, because we get it! Gluttonous drinking ~tsu! Gluttony ~tsu! We'll do as per your wish ~tsu! It's impossible for us to stay without eating ~tsu."

Remaining upside down, raising his face right towards the front, Gluttony smiled at Reid. And, Gluttony stretched his hand, grabbing the area of Reid's left eye which had been concealed by the eyepatch.

He subsequently opened his mouth and—

Gluttony: "Reid Astrea."

Licking, Gluttony let go of Reid from his hand, as if tearing something off. And, gazing lovingly at his palm where that something was not even present, he exposed his tongue.

At the same pace, he chewed that invisible something, and reverberated a slurping sound as if indulging in it.

Afterwards—

Reid: "—Ah."

Abruptly, change arrived in a single instant.

As if it had been an illusion or something, Reid's form vanished in the blink of an eye. With the tall figure disappearing from the space it was certainly supposed to be in, Gluttony, whose leg had been grabbed, fell onto the floor. At the same pace, his hands skillfully made a reversal and Gluttony made an agile landing, and looked at his own palm.

What was recurring in those eyes, was something close to the nothingness, desolateness, dismay of seemingly a gourmet delicacy, which had exhausted its extravagance, disappearing from the top of the platter—

Gluttony: "A~h, so amazi~ng. That kind of flavor, this kind of flavor, which kind of flavor would it be like, we imagined a lot a lot a lo~t about it but… it was above expectations ~tsu!"

Subaru: "He ate, Reid…?"

Gluttony: "A~h, you saw that, right ~tsu?! We did eat him! We indeed ate him! Really, isn't it the best, this is the flavor which cannot be imagined ~tsu! Even we, who are called something like Bizarre Eating are able to get it at this guy's rich taste ~tsu! Even without knowing Lye's say—"

Leaning backwards, whilst touching own sharp canines Gluttony praised Reid's flavor. As far as thought could go, it was the worst food report in human history— it halted in between.

It was not as if something had barged in as an obstruction. Its origin lay in Gluttony himself.

Gluttony: "—Wha? Ah, ah, a~h, a~h, a~a~a~a~h?"

Beatrice: "J-Just, what is being started up this time, in fact…"

Subaru: "No, that is…"

Putting his hands on his own throat and abdomen, Gluttony started making movement as if practicing speech. Though Beatrice found that state to be ominous Subaru had an idea regarding this abnormality.

If the exchange between Reid and Gluttony just a moment ago— if that was what Julius spoke of as “negotiation” then,

Gluttony: “Wa-Wa-Wa~-Wait, hieh, gihi, gihihi ~tsu. Strange, it’s strange, isn’t it strange ~tsu! After all, this is… you, odd isn’t it?”

Gluttony: “It ain’t odd, you. To eat or to be eaten, that’s how life works, ain’t that so.”

Strangling his own throat, Gluttony fired words as if answering his own questions. That tone of voice met clear change, and as if pulled into the change of that tone of voice change ensued in Gluttony’s flesh body itself.

It was a change as if the waxing and waning of the moon, and the expression of questioning when did it even happen was appropriate for it.

Subaru did not avert his eyes at all.

The same went for Beatrice, who was in his chest, and of course Julius, who had taken stance with his sword. However, whilst remaining captured in the field of vision of the three, Gluttony erased that form of his in an instant.

And instead, the one standing at the spot where Gluttony had been was—

???: “—Ah, a fresh body sure’s different. It feels like blood’s flowin’ through flesh. I’m already feelin’ hungry. At least come after fillin’ yer stomach, mentally adult brat.”

Pronouncing so, the one who had carried out substituting for the former player, having exited the stage known as the Pleiades Watchtower for merely a few ten seconds, the existence who was blooming a second time at the center of the stage, was Reid.

Reid Astrea had stolen the flesh body of the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony and had achieved resurrection into the present world.

Julius: "This is…"

The result of the negotiations between Reid and Gluttony from Julius' perspective.

Of course, the details of the content of the conversation between Reid and Gluttony must have changed due to Subaru and the others' intervention but it should have approximately remained the same.

In other words—

Subaru: "What the hell's the negotiation, speaking while putting on airs…"

Beatrice: "Subaru, this is not the time to be saying all that, I suppose. Gluttony has disappeared, and Reid has…"

Subaru directed a rough remark towards Julius' pretentious phrasing the previous time. Within those arms, Beatrice called for further vigilance but Subaru patted her head lightly and gazed towards Reid—

Subaru: "Strictly speaking, taking a backhand grip onto the Authority of Gluttony which reconstructs eaten opponents, and painted out the opponent's self… is that right?"

Reid: "Don'tcha go 'round sayin' tough bullshit. Like I'd know such convenient shit. So, don't swagger 'bout with shit I'd no way in hell know, damn young fish. Young fish? A~h, hm? You… ah? You, this, you, that's it, ain't it, you."

"—?"

Though his spirit had hijacked that flesh body, Reid made a wry face unrelated to that truth. He unusually groaned saying hm and gently put a finger in his own eyepatch. And turning it over, he looked at Subaru with his healthy blue eye which had no particular need for an eyepatch.

Looking, gazing, staring,

Reid: "—You, ya're pretty disgustin'."

"…"

Reid: "Good job not havin' yer head gettin' screwed up with that. No, has it gotten so? What it'll be precisely cause it's gotten so, I ain't got any idea. I haven't even given it a thought."

"…"

What was he saying, thinking that, Subaru got truly perplexed upon Reid's attitude.

On top of being perplexed, the shivering and nausea enveloping his entire body were about to hit the critical point. Though obvious, Ram's inferior physical form was worsening as much Ram's body increased its voltage, and was throwing the backfire of recoil she was originally supposed to have felt into Subaru.

This time Subaru had not personally met up with Ram so there were no means for Ram to find out the reason why her body was favorably working.

Thinking of it now, it seemed as if Ram had been concerned regarding Subaru last time as well.

Though he had noticed Ram's concern, who was not in this place, only after dying twice—

Reid: "I see I see I do see. I ain't got any idea, but it looks like ya're the one these guys're aimin' for, ain't that so. Then that makes things faster."

Julius: "Reid! Your opponent is myself!"

Stepping ahead, Julius fired a slashing strike. But Reid attempted receive that with the chopsticks he had drawn out from his bosom —

However,

Reid: "Ah?"

The slashing strike lightly touched the tip of the chopsticks and blood spouted out of Reid's right hand, despite him wanting to receive it. Looking at that Reid made a suspicious look, Julius raised his eyebrows in faint surprise as well.

And—

"…"

For having witnessed that with his own eyes, that alone was a harvest for Subaru.

Reid: "Tch."

Clicking his tongue, Reid gyrated his chopsticks as if spinning a pen between the gap of his fingers and skillfully repelled Julius' knight sword. At the same pace, stepping ahead with a single stomp he lapsed the distance between him and Julius, who had instantaneously drawn his body back, and aimed his palm towards his abdomen,

Reid: "Your opponent is myself, did ya say that?"

Julius: "Kh—"

Reid: "No way ya'll be gettin' to have an exchange with me, after doin' a princess carry back there!"

The further twisted sole of the palm burst open Julius' abdomen, the slender tall figure continued bleeding and was blown away backwards. He tried to position his lengthy legs to the floor in order to kill off that vigor, but failing to do so, Julius' body turned upward at the bottom on the floor, and tumbled over at the same pace.

And, concluding his battle with Julius, who had widened the distance in between, Reid turned back,

Subaru: "Shi ~hk!"

Aiming for that sideward face of Reid's, Subaru fired the whip which was at the back of his waist. However, without the occurrence of a miracle such as his body continuing to remember it, the tip of the whip flew towards the wrong direction.

The effect of lost memories was not only in his mind but also affecting the recursive actions of his flesh body. As a result of fully realizing that, Subaru took in a heavy inhale.

At the same time as that—

Reid: “You, with such a borin’ trick…”

Beatrice: “—That boring trick, is the recommendation of you getting an end of being buried, in fact.”

Going past his amazement, Reid expressed his rage, and from his hind echoed the loud sound of striking hands. Upon looking that had been Beatrice, who had both her hands free, away from Subaru.

However, even if their hands were unconnected there was a certain connection between them. Beatrice extracted an extremely small amount of something like MP from the path of Subaru— and exercised great magic.

Beatrice: “—Ul Shamak.”

The moment immediately after Beatrice’s chant had achieved completion, what arose in the space was an enormous black hole.

That which had appeared all of a sudden in the air, manifested as an existence accompanied by primordial fear such as its unknown bounds and unknown depths, and tried to swallow Reid, who was right before it.

Subaru: “That, is…”

At a single glance, it could be understood that it was the great magic in effect within the space.

This was more of an issue of imaging it so, rather than having knowledge about it. Subaru had heard of Beatrice being a wasteful spirit, but the intensity of the real great magic could not even be in the same league of comparison.

Subaru had been unaware, that this was even possible. This was, a harvest.

That black hole swallowed Reid, and repelled away his Sword Saint off to somewhere unknown—

Reid: “The hell, it’s jus’ air. Somethin’ like air’s everywhere, as if it’d stop me.”

“…”

With just a single swing of his chopsticks, Reid broke through that immense magic with extreme easiness.

A carefree attitude as if, quite literally, slashing through air— no, for him, it truly was exactly that. He did not have the nature of taking roundabouts around something which he was capable of doing and then boasting about it.

He had slashed the air, so that was his explanation. That was all there was to it.

Subaru: “Slashing dimensions, I imagine it as quite a superior ability, you know…”

Reid: “Heyhey, don’tcha put such cool names on it, better food can be served, ya know. If ya’ll stay persistent jus’ cause things’ve gotten a bit lively, that won’t be amusin’ or anythin’, ya know.”

Swinging his chopsticks at the same angle as when he had slashed Beatrice’s magic, the moment immediately afterwards, Subaru’s body had been diagonally burst open from his chest to his waist.

Subaru: “Gha, a~a~a~!!”

Beatrice: “Subaru!!”

Julius: “Subaru— ~hk!”

Tasting the sensation of scorching heat Subaru collapsed on the spot, as Beatrice and Julius called for him. Upon the voices of those two, Subaru gnashed his molars and glared at Reid with bloodshot eyes.

And, turning his palm towards the two trying the rush up to him, he managed to halt their legs.

Subaru: “I’m, al, right…”

Shaking his head left and right, he urged the two to not worry for him. Of course, there was no way he could truly convince them simply by conveying such words to the two.

The chest wound, was shallow. —No, it was not shallow. Though it was not shallow, it did not ache. It could be expressed as not being unbearable. At any rate, though it was bitter, it was alright. It was not worthy of making those two experience bitter, painful emotions. Gnashing molars, the blood on the verge of being vomited—nausea? Whichever it was, vomiting must be restrained from. Facing the front, glaring ahead, Reid must be carefully observed.

Reid: “As if ya can reach me with that, you.”

With a stunned expression, Reid was looking at Subaru, who was bleeding out of his lips.

Facing that Reid, Subaru stretched out his hand, and raised a single finger.

Subaru: “—Y-Yeah. I will, reach you.”

Even right now. I can reach you. In a place not necessarily here.

I will, for sure, save Emilia, Beatrice, Ram, Rem, Meili, Echidna, Julius, Shaula, Patrasche, Gyan.

Without failing, a single person.

Gluttony and Reid were exceptions. —The ‘Natsuki Subaru’ who was not Natsuki Subaru as well.

That is why, right now, at this moment—

Subaru: “—This is, count one.”

Overlapping with Death necessary for a counterattack, was an accomplishment of Natsuki Subaru's as well.

At the very end of the end, Reid's blue eyes sheened a dull flash towards Subaru, who had made that declaration.

□ The fight between Reid and Gluttony cannot be stopped.

□ If it's Julius, then there is a chance for them to succeed.

□ —Natsuki Subaru, has no chance of succeeding.

1

—Upon the advent of unforeseen Death, Natsuki Subaru heard the sound of ■ cracking.

However, upon each instance of that inexorable sound, he thought.

That it was certainly the proof of his progress not having come to a halt. That it was, the footsteps of the approaching future.

No matter how small those steps were, no matter how trifling the path he had advanced upon was, he was certainly, walking and progressing.

???: "—Subaru."

"…"

The moment his consciousness was led to awakening, blue eyes of a characteristic pattern were reflected into his own. In front of his eyes, peeping at Subaru worriedly was Beatrice.

Beatrice's hand was gently placed at Subaru's cheek, and Subaru inhaled.

He had parted with Beatrice's crying face not too long ago.

That consciousness' switchover had not been carried out well. Just previously, though it could not be associated with something as extravagant as a parting, she certainly had been in Subaru's eyes.

Subaru: "…Ah."

Beatrice: "Is your consciousness firm, I suppose? It took time for you to wake up till now, it was worrying, in fact. It would be better to confirm you did not lose any memories accidentally, I suppose. To start with, Betty, do you recall who…"

Subaru: “Bea, trice…”

Beatrice: “—. It seems you do properly remember, in fact. Good boy good boy, I suppose.”

Saying that, Beatrice stretched the hand she had at Subaru’s cheek towards his head. At the same pace, she patted him with her tiny palm and slowly, his consciousness caught up to reality.

Subaru: “Count, one huh…”

“—?”

Beatrice tilted her head upon the whispering voice.

However, neither did she know what it meant, nor did he intend to explain it. She might not understand even if he were to explain, and he did not intend to make her understand either.

She was kind. Beatrice, was extremely kind.

That is why, what Subaru was testing out. If he were to tell her about that, it was a given that she would be absolutely against it. — That was, something which Beatrice must not be allowed to know.

Beatrice: “So, how did it go, in fact? Was the purpose of reading the book fulfilled, I suppose?”

Subaru: “—Yeah, about that.”

That is what Beatrice asked Subaru, who still had the book placed on his knees.

The moment immediately before the immediately previous moment — the moment immediately before Subaru had disregarded his own physical state, Subaru had just been seeking a way to capture Reid Astrea and was just about to read his Book of the Dead.

That had come to a standstill due to complicated reasons, and multitudes of situations got caught in between the interval such that that would feel as if it was quite an old topic— though that went only for Subaru, at maximum.

Things he ought to do, things he must do, they had all been decided.

That is why—

Subaru: “Beatrice, it’ll be getting a bit confusing. —Lend me, your strength.”

Beatrice: “—. That is a given, in fact. Betty is Subaru’s partner, I suppose.”

Promised Beatrice to Subaru, who had broken the ice without any explanations.

Her existence was, truly, very truly, reassuring for the ■.

—The impact, jumped around freely in the aisle of the stone tower.

???: “Haha ~tsu! Hahaha ~tsu! You’re doing it, you’re quite doing it, you’re surely doing it, perhaps you’re doing it, you’ve been doing it, you’ve done it, because you’ve been doing it ~tsu! Gluttonous drinking ~tsu! Gluttony ~tsu!”

???: “Is there any time to be playing around? That is quite the pliability, isn’t it.”

Using the walls, ceilings of the aisle as a foothold, making free use of transforming tactics at will from next to next was the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, Lye Batenkaitos.

And the one rushing around at high speeds, having kept the inferior physical form of her body someplace else and moving around nimbly, was Ram.

Her petite frame fluttered about and danced, and directed merciless blows towards the direction of Gluttony’s body, who countered with equivalent fiendishness. At that point, rushing in as having been waiting for that was—

Emilia: “—Wroom and, boom!”

Wielding a large ice hammer in both of those hands, swinging it as if aiming for a home run was Emilia.

The damaging portion of the ice hammer, as large as a human's trunk, turned into a strike with all of her might and made a firm hit onto Lye's back. The small frame bounced and jumped along with a thunderous roar like a gum ball.

—No, he bounced too far off.

Instantly kicking the ice hammer, he by himself had jumped ahead and killed the impact.

Lye: "Ahawaha~! You're doing it doing it doing i~t! But but, that won't do! That can't defeat us!"

Emilia: "——~hk, he's fast!"

In response to Gluttony displaying moves with a touch of acrobatics, Emilia made a frustrated expression on her cute face.

Past and present, east and west, chewing the experts of all kinds of master arts, demonstrating abilities that had, quite literally, become "every single kind of martial arts" was the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, Lye's fighting strength— or perhaps, it should be called his opposing pressure. It had attained preeminence, a remarkable difference of unleashing optimal techniques of the highest peak each moment to the next.

Subaru: "If the Memories, the efforts or the training, if they're all being completely included then…"

Though it was quite hateful, perhaps Gluttony did not even have a need to possess a consciousness such as one saying "let's pull them out". When noticed the body already moved, that was the kind of Authority it was, of pulling them out in all kinds of scenes.

—The stolen Memories even included the experience points of the physical body.

That was also evident by Subaru not remembering how to use the whip he carried around whatsoever. It seemed that the whip had been Subaru's main weapon before losing his memories, but the correct way to hold it and swing it, he could remember none of it altogether.

In the first place, why did he choose something like a whip as his main weapon.

It'd be easier to make better use out of than a sword or a lance, it must have been a shallow thought like that. Though there were no objections to that itself—

Subaru: "I wish I would've thought of a counter plan, in case I lost my memories…!"

Of course, he was aware it was an absurd request, however, Subaru still cursed it. By doing that, for a single moment, he was able to forget his effeminate jealousy towards his disappeared Memories.

The jealousy towards the disappeared Memories ＝'Natsuki Subaru'.

Beatrice: "Subaru, asking again, in fact. Are you really alright, I suppose?"

Towards that sideward face of Subaru's, Beatrice raised her voice.

Upon her question, who had been supporting Subaru's body as he shrugged his shoulders, Subaru nodded with a "Yeah",

Subaru: "Right now, the fight's a struggle… if that collapses, our way to victory will…"

Beatrice: "—But, there is opposition in Subaru being taken away from here, in fact."

Subaru: "But, it's necessary. You understand, right, Beatrice…"

Beatrice: "That is—"

Subaru: "Lend me, your strength. Once again… I request you."

While maintaining meticulous caution among the ceaseless shocks, trying not to have his voice tremble, Subaru blackmailed Beatrice with an unfair manner of speaking.

In response to those cruel words of request of Subaru's, Beatrice closed her eyes, making a strained expression.

Lend your strength, that was the flow of conversation they had also had in Taygeta library.

However, that time had been before Subaru had activated Cor Leonis, and neither had Beatrice known that the situation of Pleiades Watchtower had deteriorated this much.

That is why, this was a heinous technique of Subaru's which gripped onto Beatrice's kindness.

"…"

Beatrice scrutinized Subaru's proposal with a difficult face.

The sudden deterioration of Subaru's physical condition and the recovery of Ram's fighting strength which accompanied it— the associativity between them was evident, and Ram, Beatrice, and even Emilia had noticed Subaru's rash perseverance.

But still, everyone knew they could not tell him to stop.

—For Subaru being burdened with his hardship was why the war front was being barely maintained.

Talk in name only, if Subaru was to unfasten Cor Leonis here whilst caring for himself, the first to follow would be the collapse of Ram, Emilia will get her Name eaten by Gluttony, their cooperation will crumble down and they will be defeated.

And should Gluttony be rendered free, the power balance of the tower would fall into an unrecoverable state, ultimately everyone would die in defeat and it would be game over.

Subaru: "…In the end, me being burdened is the best, the better option."

Subaru, who could never really be of any help even when he was acting rash, was making strides in the fighting strength by taking over Ram's inferior physical form. That was, an absolute requirement for capturing the tower.

Correctly speaking, even in the efficacy of Cor Leonis, there lay a trap not easy to solve.

That was, consciously or subconsciously, Ram saving up a bit of her fighting strength.

"…"

With overwhelming sense and techniques beyond comprehension, Ram maintained a firm balance in the place.

In spite of that, the reason why she had not gone further in order to overcome the opposition was because Ram had imposed a limiter on her own fighting strength. —The reason for that was her faltering due to carefully considering Subaru's status.

If Ram were to move to the fullest, it would impose an enormous burden onto Subaru.

Subaru would not be able to endure that. That possibility, was putting a halt on Ram's limbs.

The truth is, something similar had occurred when he had gone around towards Julius and Reid.

It had been confirmed he was capable of taking over Ram's inferior physical form through Cor Leonis itself without having to meet up with her— however, in a situation where Ram does not know of the interrelation between her own favorable state and Subaru's state, Ram does not save on her fighting strength.

As a result, the backfire, lacking any regret, scorched only Subaru and did not lead to mutual harm.

It also meant the end for Ram's time as standing unrivalled, the worst kind of mutual harm.

It was not possible to continue sprinting with the entire strength for long in a state of lacking oxygen. That was all there was to it.

Henceforth, drawing up Ram's fighting strength through Cor Leonis, in terms of results, Ram's judgement to save onto her abilities was correct. Being balanced was the best.

However, that improvement of Ram's combat power, Gluttony was indeed following and keeping up with it with the limitless arts of war he had plundered. Emilia was compensating for the parts where he could not be pushed away, but still, Gluttony could not be distanced away from, continuing to eat away with an extraordinary ability to survive.

That is why, towards that—

Beatrice: "—Minya!!"

Enough to envelop the entire aisle, violet crystals materialized and were fired in a single action.

Acting in consent with Beatrice's chant, who swung her small arm downwards, the concentrated attack of the magic called shadow magic swooped down onto Lye, who had turned his back towards this side, with tremendous vigor.

Immediately afterwards the boisterous dance of violet light swallowed the petite frame, engulfing the aisle with the sound of shattering glass.

"…"

Within the fluttering flakes of violet, dancing and falling, leaping away from the attack's span were the two of Emilia and Ram. Evading the fire with instantaneous judgement, it was as expected of their physical ability to quickly avoid it.

On the other hand, having been in the same circumstance but only having delayed the part of him facing it with his back, Lye could not evade it easily the way Emilia and Ram had done.

It was a magic to be feared which crystallized the struck targets, turning them into a brittle and transient existence and smashing them.

Minya, capable of fatally wounding even through light contact, if it were to be recklessly fired this much in such a confined range it would be difficult for an enemy, even if it were to be a transient being, to cut through unhurt.

When the dance of the light which had been given rise to by the violet arrows came to a halt, the form of Gluttony who had taken enormous damage was— not there.

Beatrice: "—~hk?!"

Emilia: "Eh?! Where did…"

Beatrice inhaled in astonishment whilst Emilia made a strained expression and looked around.

Within the chaos, the one to get a grasp on the situation the fastest truly had been Ram.

She put her hand on her own right eye, and with only her left eye open, turned back. Subaru knew there was something like a path connecting him and Ram through Cor Leonis.

Ram, activated some type of a technique. Using that peculiar power, she understood where specifically the disappeared Gluttony was.

His whereabouts were—

Ram: "Barusu!"

"…"

Ram shouted, widening her light crimson eyes.

At that moment, from her line of sight Subaru comprehended the arrival of a hazardous presence right behind them. That was aiming for the back of Subaru— no, Beatrice.

With the interruption by Minya just now, did it intend to convey that it had polluted the battle.

At any rate, it was not vastly different from the transpiring happening.

Lye: “—Must say, if the one right now was to be continued consecutively, it’ll be getting tiresome, that’s why.”

Accompanying the sneering words, the dagger fastened to his arm flashed.

That was the strike by Lye, who had leapt through the space and escaped the concentrated attack of violet arrows. In line with the frequent usage of the Fist King, the odd talent of the one who became the Leaper — it could be named, short range warp.

According to what had been seen, it seemed as if there were certain limits to the distance, but still the compatibility of the strange talent of jumping over space and the encircling attack was the worst.

Carrying no significance regarding the type of the surprise attack, in the end, anything aside from getting involved in the head-on match was—

Subaru: “Beatrice”

Beatrice: “Suba—”

Thoughts and actions, ■ and body did not always coincide.

The moment initially after he pushed the small body away reflexively, a piercing sensation deeply gouged out his chest.

Subaru: “Kah.”

Like scratching the scab with claws, no, the pain and impact was several thousand times that. He instantly regretted having received that with his chest. Though he regretted it, no other convenient shield had been present there.

Bewildered by the momentary judgement, he shuddered at the mere thought of Beatrice having been slashing down. So much so that he thought it would be better for him to become a shield of flesh compared to that. It was painful, though it was painful, if it was merely pain, merely the wound on his body, it would last for only an instant. Not even an instant. But, it was much better than ■ being wounded.

Much better, than ■ dying.

“Subaru— ~hk!!”

The loud voice echoed within the tower, when he tried to turn back and see to whom it belonged, his knees snapped.

Strength faded away from his limbs surprisingly easily. Pathetically fragile, he was unable to support even his head. Even an infant could hold his head still but what was this man, who had significantly aged, doing.

Such that even this frivolous talk wouldn’t come to mind, his consciousness fell into the sole of the deep, dark hole.

A vivid ache and sense of loss, scorched his brain.

Subaru: “—Ghi.”

Whilst wanting to give rise to a shriek, he endured his voice trying to fly out by grinding his teeth.

It was not as if he would feel any better if he were to let it out. It was not as if he would feel any better if he were to not let it out. However, there were people here who would surely have their ■ shattered, if Subaru were to cry out now.

He could not allow that. Because he could not do so, stay silent and die. Natsuki Subaru.

Lye: “—How nice, onii-san. So you will be going to the next one by doing tha~t?”

There echoed a voice overlooking Subaru, who had powerlessly crumbled down whilst continuing to resist his screaming.

He had endured his screaming. However, he could not possibly endure that mocking voice.

“…”

In a situation where his limbs had been rendered completely incapable of moving, he directed strength into his arm and moved his finger.

And, with a single middle finger raised, his lips moved.

Subaru: “Die, idiot.”

After that, his consciousness came to a halt—.

☐Having Emilia and Ram cooperate, aiming for an early settlement with Lye Batenkaitos, failure.

☐Timing is essential for taking over Ram’s inferior physical form through Cor Leonis.

☐—Beatrice’s surprise attack is incompatible with Gluttony.

—Fiercely, the enshrouding clouds of sand were trying to enwrap the field of vision.

“—Haahraan.”

With his entire body swinging around at the sensation of violently swaying about, Subaru desperately clung on, trying not to be thrown off. Ahead of him, a pigtail was shaking about left and right.

???: “—Work hard, Sand Earthworm-chan!”

In accordance with Meili’s call, the Sand Earthworm trembled its large build and intensely hammered in and struck its face. Being swallowed by that shock wave gave rise to an immense loss in the troops of the advancing horde of Witch Beasts.

However, those lost troops were covered in the matter of a few seconds, trampling upon the scattered corpses of their own kind, the hordes of Witch Beasts continued to push in without halting their feet. —The war situation, was unfavorable.

Under their eyes— no, in all directions, advancing in were the innumerable Witch Beasts. With those as her opponents, Meili made free use of her preparations, which in no way could be stated to be sufficient and was struggling fiercely.

Honestly speaking, Meili's efforts, as she controlled the Witch Beast, were hard to notice by an outsider's perspective. She ordered instructions to the Witch Beast and abiding by that the fiendish monster rampaged about. There was no mystery in that if that alone was to be observed.

However—

Meili: "Hah, hah ~hk."

Looking at her shape, with sweat on her forehead and her occasionally inhaling agonizingly, it could perhaps be understood at a single glance that it was a recognition too difficult to observe.

Meili: "Hah, fu~h… enough, geez o-onii-san, treats people so rudely~."

Wiping the sweat dripping down her chin by the back of her hand and stating some rather harsh words, Meili's eyes had become bloodshot.

It was not as if she had directly linked with the Witch Beast like Subaru's Cor Leonis but to bend the atrocious Witch Beast's instinct as per her own notions, an immense strength of will was needed.

For Subaru, who had read her book once and personally experienced her half death, the weight of that indemnification was clearly known. That is precisely why, it had been transmitted to him.

—That Meili was seriously thinking of capturing the tower, along with Subaru and the rest.

Subaru: "—~hk "

Meili: "He~y, onii-san?! If you don't grab on properly, you'll die~, you kno~w!"

Subaru: "I-I know…!"

The moment immediately after he profoundly thought of those deep emotions, his body felt as if it was being carried away in the horizontal jolts and his posture crumbled. He had momentarily withstood his ground but he was shouted at by Meili when she discovered that.

Whilst complying with those words, Subaru calmed down and clung to the protuberance of the large build.

—At present, the figures of Subaru and Meili were on top of the large build of the Sand Earthworm.

Meili: "If instructions were to be given directly from a close distance, there must be a child which listens to what is said even within children who cannot learn anything, isn't i~t."

Subaru: "Like I said, I never thought, I'd get to have a Witch Beast ride…!"

Swishing through the air, with his frame being jolted by the velocity of the Witch Beast's body cutting through the atmosphere with a roar, Subaru skillfully moved around his body weight whilst stuck in admiration of Meili, who was managing the Witch Beast's back.

This time as well, Meili's battle with the hordes of Witch Beasts commenced from the balcony of the fourth layer.

Making use of several Sand Earthworms which had been prepared in advance, having the hordes of Witch Beasts advancing towards the watchtower suffer an attack in order to block the invasion of the Witch Beasts into the tower was Meili's role.

However, she quickly gave up on the attack from the balcony, jumping onto the back of the Sand Earthworm underneath and then in one go, plunged into the Witch Beasts with vigor like that of a high wave, from the middle of its forehead.

With that heroic tactic of Meili's, accompanying her as bait was what Subaru's current state was.

Meili: "Really, the Witch Beast-chan's all really love onii-san, isn't i~t."

Subaru: "And that's nothing to be happy about… ~hk."

Looking at the excited state of the Witch Beasts drawing near, Meili sighed as they were crushed by the Sand Earthworm. Whilst agreeing with her comment, Subaru narrowed his eyes at the hurriedly approaching hordes of Witch Beasts.

Though the principle behind it was unknown, it was something he was aware of in terms of the result.

The Witch Beasts who surrounded the watchtower, strictly speaking, were not aiming for the watchtower but had gathered aiming for Subaru who was inside of it. —That was, evident from this situation as well.

The spearheads of the Witch Beasts were concentrating on the extreme towards the Sand Earthworm, which was giving a ride to Meili and Subaru.

Turning their legs around, which were supposed to have been facing towards the tower, hastily making way towards this side with unraveled fangs was merely the instinct of Witch Beasts trying to kill a living being, nothing more.

Subaru: "It wasn't as if I was half-convinced, but…"

Him having the physical constitution which attracted Witch Beasts was a peculiarity Subaru, who had been in present-day Japan till yesterday, did not even need confirmation for as a real feeling. In the past, he had gnawed the pocky for the dog kept in the neighborhood, but could that have possibly been a symptom of the early stage of this physical constitution.

He was utterly unaware now. Though he was unaware—

Subaru: “It seems it’s no mistake that I am responsible for a large part of the five obstacles.”

The large hordes of Witch Beasts advancing towards the watchtower, the ones of Gluttony putting his approach towards the tower to test through Subaru’s Memories, Reid who took in that Gluttony and acquired substance, Shaula who commenced aiming for Subaru by the virtue of her transformation, the jet black shadow which swallowed the entirety of the watchtower—.

Looking at it back now, it was impossible to prevent the thought of the responsibility for their origin seemingly coming down onto Subaru in the truest sense. Of course, inevitability was no possible part of it.

Subaru: “My mind, is getting depressed…”

However, if the Witch Beasts, Shaula, and the jet black shadow could be lured outside of the watchtower, there may possibly form a way to break out of the deadlock of the present circumstances.

Subaru: “…It is not forbidden to destroy the Trials, huh.”

The fifth rule, behind capturing Pleiades Watchtower.

When he thought of the feelings of Shaula’s ■, who had hid that, he felt his chest ache but the rule he had finally fished out of her mouth granted a new viewpoint towards the place known as the Pleiades Watchtower.

It was not as if his eyes had opened innovatively by getting to know that rule.

However, granted with a scale he had never thought of, his way of looking at the world had expanded remarkably. Things which dk not exist cannot be obtained. That was, the fundamental law of the world.

To pass over the Trial without finishing it, to act contrary to the established routine of the Trial, those had been prohibited.

Without even getting involved in that, destroying the Trial itself had not been prohibited. What, could that mean.

What could it—.

Subaru: “Mei—”

Li, trying to continue his words on, that is when Subaru witnessed it.

By changing the course of the Sand Earthworm, whilst attempting to confirm whether the terrain of the watchtower’s environs were usable or not, the objective came to a standstill.

Because an assailing corona, from overhead, had scattered away the thick trunk of the Sand Earthworm.

“—Haahraaaan.”

With more than eight meters blown off of the approximately ten meter wide waist the Sand Earthworm shrieked, giving rise to its death wail.

The proceedingly lowering roar of the Witch Beast also resembled a howl, and Subaru, who had basked in that at close proximity, felt his vision dye white with its explosive intrusion into his eardrums.

Atop the Witch Beast, which had experienced that and was disseminating bluish-purple bodily fluids, having failed to stop its body from getting blown off into a thousand scraps from both the front and back of its trunk, Subaru and Meili’s bodies were thrown down.

Subaru: “—Ah.”

Meili: “Gh— ~hk!”

Instantaneously stretching out his hand, he took Meili's petite body within his arms.

Patting his shoulder and trying to call out to him was a byproduct of it. By reflexively leaning his body forward, he had been able to catch her falling body.

However, that had not been a drastic settlement. The Sand Earthworm's large frame somersaulted, and not only Meili but Subaru had also been thrown off.

Even if he were to pull her in, in the end, they would fall on top of the sand, a place entirely surrounded by Witch Beasts.

Should that happen, the two of them would become feed for the Witch Beasts whilst they attempted to reorganize themselves.

Above all—

Subaru: "—Shaula."

Clinging to the outer wall of the tower with its tail stinger facing towards Subaru and the rest, the titanic scorpion— Shaula, with her large build slipped into the twilight, she was distantly visible having made her appearance.

They were out of time.

Within the tower, someone broke the rule. In accordance with that, Shaula lost her self and transformed into the titanic scorpion and just as what she had reported about herself, she commenced attacking, aiming for Subaru.

That single bomb had scattered away the Sand Earthworm's trunk, and mid air, towards Subaru and Meili—

Meili: "Onii-sa… ~hk."

Hugging Meili tightly, who was within his arms and had raised a voice as that of a scream, Subaru did not let his eyes avert from the titanic scorpion— no, Shaula. The red compound eyes emitted a distinct glow within the presence of night and the line of sight unbeknownst to any course of action, clearly understood its aim was Subaru upon looking at him.

Light gathered at the tail stinger, and now once again, a corona was fired.

They would get vaporized away should they be struck by that. However, they must not get struck by that.

He wanted to avoid being killed by Shaula, regardless of how much that may abrade away his ■. If he were to bend away from that notion, he would surely become a miscreant then.

However, a way to defend themselves while they were mid air was.

“—Haahraan.”

The moment the corona was fired, the Sand Earthworm writhing in agony thrusted itself above the line of fire. Was that simply the instinctive movement of the Sand Earthworm or did Meili influence it in some way, he did not know.

However, the single blast Shaula had fired had been avoided at the moment when it was supposed to have vaporized Subaru away.

And—

Subaru: “Gah, gugh.”

With vehement vigor, Subaru and the rest fell on top of the sand from their sands.

Meili, who was strongly embraced within Subaru’s arms, was perhaps safe. However, Subaru himself had not been safe. Unable to defend himself, he had gotten his head within the extensive sand.

A dull sound echoed, the joints of his bones, which must be avoided from getting smashed, had gotten broken.

At that instant, his field of vision was rendered completely black.

His nerves, which must be avoided from getting slashed, had gotten cut a thousand times.

Not only what was visible to his eyes, but sounds, sensations, anything and everything turned distant.

Merely his nose remained alive. It was baffling. The nose, which was not even expected to be capable of doing something useful normally. For some reason, till the very end of the end, he could sense scents.

The sweet, scent.

Within his arms, having been there till recently, that sweet scent.

Perhaps, yet remaining alive, that sce—.

□ The Witch Beasts' aim is Subaru. The aim of the shadow and titanic scorpion as well, is perhaps the same.

Subaru: "Ghu—"

Enduring the nausea welling up within him, Subaru glanced at the front once again.

Stepping firmly, pouring immense strength in the legs, he somehow managed to have his body remain still. His anguish had not been eased. He was merely skillfully deceiving his anguish.

???: "Hiyah! Hiyayah! Eiyah!"

Crushing the bitterness of gastric juices in his teeth was Subaru and in front of him, fiercely welding two ice swords was Emilia. Evading those attacks of Emilia's calmly, with a deriding smile was the bitter enemy he was tired of looking at, Lye Batenkaitos.

"…"

Since the restart point of Return by Death had been set up to the moment immediately following the confrontation with Louis Arneb in the Book of the Dead, Emilia and Gluttony's encounter was inevitable.

At the point in time Subaru had Returned by Death to, the battle between Emilia and Gluttony had already commenced.

The simple way to change situations was to tamper with the matchmaking. However, by activating Cor Leonis immediately after Returning by Death Subaru was able to see the positions of his comrades within the tower, and he naturally understood that this fight was unavoidable.

Henceforth, he did not have the situation of the tag team of Emilia and Ram fighting Lye change.

—However, something could be done about that in its own way.

Subaru: "—Julius!"

Julius: "I know!"

At Subaru's sharp call, in accordance with that, a single shadow stepped in.

That was, with a knight sword in his grip and running through the frozen aisle, Julius. Having his light purple hair flutter in the icy wind he commenced his gallant piercing sprint from a lower posture.

Lye: "Haha ~tsu! Even the nameless knight-sama shall be partaking in the battle hu~h!"

Julius: "Unfortunately, if that was intended to be a provocation then that is quite weak. Subaru pricks at spots much more painful."

Lye: “You know, despite being comrades, what’s up with that?”

Brushing away the advancing piercing bolt with his dagger, Lye and Julius exchanged words at close proximity. Even in the midst of that sword strikes unfolded between the two, and exchanges of special moves, opposite to the content of their conversation, were being performed.

—Having Julius accompany them to this place, was a type of a gamble.

When the five obstacles had attacked the watchtower for the first time, Subaru had Julius accompany them for going around this as well. At that time, Emilia had gotten her Name eaten and her cooperation with Julius, who had been rendered unknowing to her battle style, had been shoddy and lacked the ability to corner Gluttony.

However—

Subaru: “This time, nobody has forgotten Emilia-chan. On top of that…”

Emilia and Julius’ coordination attempted to soundly counter Lye. At that point, ahead of Subaru’s line of sight, was the shadow of a person kicking the ceiling and making a sudden descent— Ram severely cut in between.

Of course, increasing her fighting strength through Cor Leonis was Subaru’s greatest duty. That had been practiced this time as well, and Ram advanced closer to Lye’s torso with unordinary body handling.

And,

Ram: “Just, kindly take the exit already.”

Lye: “Ghu, egh.”

Cold words, and her palm, with equal sharpness, drove into Lye’s side. At the palm strike aiming to directly impact the internal organs through the gaps in ribs, and a distinct rumble of pain spilled through Lye's lips.

At the same pace, Ram's knee tried assaulting the snapping body which then got blocked, but grabbing the hair of her opponent from the back of his head she slammed him onto the floor. On top of that, she consecutively swung down her heel into his face.

Merciless might, continuous attacks, those were the only way to drive Lye into certain defeat.

However, this had been far from being sufficient for damaging Lye. The heel Ram swung down onto his face, having grabbed that slender ankle whilst lying down, he glared at Ram from below with a bloodstained evil countenance.

Lye: "Nee-sama, cau~ght…"

Emilia: "Hiryah!!"

Lye: "—Gah ~tsu?!"

Lye expressed a smile on his evil countenance and his body, from a directly horizontal attack— by the ice hammer given shape to and swung by Emilia like a golf swing, got blown off.

It was a nice save, just when he was about to put his wickedness to work by grabbing Ram's leg. At Lye, who went rolling and somersaulting skillfully, Emilia gallantly raised her eyebrows and puffed up her chest.

???: "…As merciless, as always, I suppose."

Beatrice, while supporting his body right by his side, whispered in response to those actions of Emilia's with admiration, amazement, and somewhat pride.

The truth is, Subaru felt the same. She had a cute face, she could truly be relied upon.

Ram: "Emilia-sama, gratitude for the rescue."

Emilia: "Mhm, it's fine. Ram got grabbed because she's moving around this much, after all. Julius as well, thank you for coming here.”

Julius: “Not at all, Gluttony is an opponent I am deeply connected to as well. Rather, my deepest apologies for exposing Emilia-sama and Miss Ram to danger. This was originally supposed to be a spot where I would tell you to kindly stand back, but…”

Ram: “With that as the opponent, there must be no room to be acting upon chivalry or gentlemanliness, isn’t it.”

Whilst hugging her elbows, Ram flatly intercepted Julius’ words. Even Julius could not refuse that. It seemed as if he felt ashamed of his feelings towards that itself.

There is a certain style to battle, there are certain rules to warriors.

However, adhering to that and becoming too obsessed over pride would result in large losses. —For Julius, this was a difficult spot. However, there was no choice for him but to respond to it.

At the very least, with the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, an atrocious gang as the enemy—

Lye: “…A~h, you sure are doing it. To do this much with us as the opponent is quite something.”

Saying that, the aforementioned Sin Archbishop stood up while shaking his head.

Whether that was him resounding having received Emilia’s heroic blow from his shoulder, his right arm was still loosely handing down. Possibly, the shoulder bones had perhaps been fractured.

If that was true, then it could be said it was possibly fatal for the Authority of Lye Batenkaitos, of reconstructing battle styles through Memories. No matter how proficient a battle style may be, it would be rendered meaningless if it was not exercised perfectly.

Subaru: “…Or instead, by substituting with the little sister, are you going to be switching the body and everything to the other?”

Lye: “—. Waha~n, we see, huh. Onii-san is aware of our Solar Eclipse and Lunar Eclipse is what that means. Well well, got seen through, isn’t it. But you kno~w”

Putting an abrupt halt to his words, Gluttony carefreely stuck his tongue out as if mocking Subaru and the rest. Though Subaru furrowed his eyebrows to that gesture, the answer was provided immediately.

That was—

Lye: “—In such a disadvantageous situation, i~s there any meaning for us to still continue fighting?”

Subaru: “—~hk! Not good!”

Obvious logic, Subaru shouted while cursing the shallowness of his own thought.

Hearing that call of Subaru’s, Emilia and the others also seemingly reached the same thought, but they were too late.

Lye: “Baha~hayee.”

Lightly swinging his hand, Lye’s figure jumped over the space.

Using the odd talent of the Leaper, he erased his form from the aisle.

Julius: “Stay on the lookout for the surroundings! We don’t know where he may appear from yet!”

Ram: “—It is futile. That bunch, once they are allowed to get away, they escape. That must be why, they haven’t been caught even once yet, isn’t it.”

Rendering his form invisible was Gluttony, Julius called for vigilance for his surprise attack but Ram probed into the situation with composure whilst shaking her head left and right.

Subaru too felt the same as Ram. Just as the words Lye had left, there lay not a single reason for him to continue fighting in such a disadvantageous situation.

Lye Batenkaitos, was a Sin Archbishop, not a warrior.

He did not possess the qualities of continuing to fight until the very end, or enjoying hard battles either. According to Louis' statement, what they desired was the greatest life, the itinerary of optimum solutions.

—The hazards of hard battles or defeat, those could not even be forgotten desires for them.

Emilia: "…Then, it's over already?"

Dumbfounded, Emilia whispered whilst reducing the ice hammer she held in her hand to air.

In those words was not the relief of the enemy having disappeared, but the disappointment having let a bitter enemy slip from their hands— no, something differing furthermore, despondency.

The reply to that despondency, was—

Ram: "—Just, a little bit more and yet!"

"…"

Ram: "Just, a single step more, and the bunch who made Rem go through all that could have been… ~hk."

Kneeling down, Ram raised a high-pitched voice.

She powerfully struck her fist to the aisle's floor, trembling her voice regarding Gluttony, who had artfully succeeded in running away.

Everyone in this place was painfully aware, of the feelings of her regretful self.

The reason why Emilia prevaricated her words, why Julius hid his yellow eyes, why Beatrice, beside Subaru, lowered her shoulders, all of it collected upon that.

They had come to possess a sudden clue.

However, unlike relying on knowledge of the tower, enquiring Gluttony about the damage dealt by the Authority of Gluttony directly was a way that had been thought over with certainty.

To have that slip away from right in front of the eyes, it was obvious to feel despondency for that.

Subaru: “…With this, Lye has been repelled away, is that what it would mean?”

Understanding the feelings of Ram’s ■ sinking deep into lamentation, Subaru possessed a different kind of doubt.

Seeing the disadvantage of three against one, Lye decided to withdraw from this spot. However, speaking in terms of whether he had withdrawn completely as a threat to the watchtower, that was yet unclear.

Though Ram had informed Julius of the futility of looking out for a surprise attack, that was something limited to only this place. Within the tower, dangerous Gluttony were wandering around, that situation yet remained unchanged.

If so then it could not possibly be said that one of the five obstacles had been eliminated.

On the contrary, they had left an opponent about whom they had no idea where he may clash in from, to take care of himself, that was all there was to it.

Subaru: “——~hk, should the guy who escaped be ran after, or should another problem be looked after. At any right, right now…”

???: “—The thin’ known as a situation’s all ‘bout the opponent, where ya should be movin’ ‘round without thinkin’ anythin’.”

“…”

Suddenly, the moment he was giving consideration to the possibility of not making a move, he felt his hair rise at the voice which originated from behind. When everyone turned back instantly, slow footsteps approached from ahead of the aisle.

Their owner, as if simply taking a walk without halting a single step, that was not something the aforementioned bunch would do.

For some reason.

???: “I’m takin’ a walk ‘round my garden, yet why’d I be worryin’ ‘bout other fellas?”

Boldly, without feeling shy for a single thing, the man— the figure of Reid who descended down from the second layer, at that Subaru felt the situation deteriorate further.

Keeping the issue of Reid for later he had hastened Lye Batenkaitos’ subjugation, but in terms of results, Lye had escaped and obstructing Reid’s revival had completely failed—

Emilia: “Since when, did this tower become your garden?”

Reid: “Heyhey, don’tcha go ‘round havin’ misunderstandin’s, fiercely frizzlin’. Lemme tell ya, when I said garden I wasn’t refferin’ to this gloomy tower. You, ain’t it obvious I’d be callin’ the whole damn world’s my garden.”

Julius: “…If the man who became legend by a single swing of sword says that, then that comment must not be a trifling matter.”

At the arrival of Reid, who was not supposed to be able to leave the second layer, Emilia and Julius fired their own respective astonishment and words. The response to that was extremely typical of Reid, that could be stated straightforwardly.

For this warrior who surpassed all human intellect, the idea of thinking over his footsteps— no, not just footsteps. The thought of taking other people into consideration, was completely out of the balance.

Ram: “—Why, have you descended down here? You were not supposed to be able to leave that floor, isn’t that so, trial taker.”

Reid: “Talkin’ to women knelt down and sunken ain’t to my likin’. If ya want me to answer then try requestin’. I don’t think strong-hearted women’re bad. Though I don’t think weak-hearted women’re bad either.”

Ram: “Is that so. —Such a sleazebag.”

Without expecting a direct response, Ram promptly halted her response to Reid.

The next instant, Ram, who had kicked the floor with enough force to burst it open, rushed towards the opposing Reid’s bottom in a straight line and turning into a pink whirlwind, leapt towards the Sword Saint standing bolt upright.

At the same pace, making the best use of her petite build, a high speed rotating kick was fired from her heel towards Reid’s head. Without any exaggeration, a kick strike with enough force to mow down his head.

It was a stark kick which, if it landed a direct hit, would blow off his head physically, if not that then at the very least, his consciousness.

Of course, the respective recoil would flow into Subaru from Ram and ache like a strike of lightning would bolt through his body.

Subaru: “Ghu, ghu~u~u~ ~hk.”

It is said that when an artery explodes, it pains to an inconceivable level. Right now, it could be boasted that what was running through Subaru’s entire body was something close to that.

Ram’s attack which had been unleashed to this extent, the fruits it bore were—

Reid: “Not bad. But, that’s all it’s got. Had it been Trisha she would’ve broken the floor with a single blow, ya know.”

Ram: “…Monster.”

Reid: “Don’t lump me together with somethin’ like monsters.

There's gotta be a limit to how low my worth can be, ya know."

Intercepting the kicking leg, he had the impact flow into the ground.

Having been witnessed earlier, physical attack killing— that made the floor and walls of the aisle develop cracks, however, the damage to Reid himself had been blocked perfectly.

And, towards Ram's abdomen, who had halted movement—

Reid: "Here, try endurin' this, you."

Spinning and turning around his body once, Reid's bulky and sturdy leg sprang up. At the same pace, the sole of his foot captured Ram's body and swept it right upwards energetically.

Ram: "Kafugh."

With the air within her lungs squeezed out, Ram's lips, as she widened her eyes, vomited a large amount of blood out. Whilst bathing in that without evading it, Reid narrowed his eye unconcealed by the eyepatch and distorted his lips.

However, immediately opening up his narrowed eye again, he spilled out "The he~ll?" with his voice.

Ram: "It was successful, wasn't it."

At that instant Ram grasped the leg caved into her abdomen and using her entire body, settled the joint of her knee. With an attitude as if unaffected by the impact of the strike which had pierced through her abdomen. Seeing that, Reid carved a puzzled expression—

Reid: "—The heck. Ya're behind this too aye, young fish."

"…"

With a damp voice, he told Subaru, who gnashed his molars at the anguish like a bowling ball had been thrown into the pit of his stomach.

Emilia: "——~hk, no! Don't get any closer to Subaru!"

Immediately afterwards Emilia stepped ahead upon observing hazardous emotions levitating across Reid's blue eyes. However, upon her advance Reid swung his arm in annoyance, purloining the ice sword driven into him and mercilessly struck Emilia's shoulder with its handle, and energetically kicked her after she fell down.

Emilia: "Ah ~hk!"

Reid: "Ya're in my way."

Receiving the kick, Emilia got physically blown away. Much frighteningly, Reid did that with the leg whose knee was supposed to be captured in grip.

In other words, whilst continuing to have Ram cling to his leg, he had kicked and sent Emilia flying. In the end, no matter how much strength Ram may pour in, it could not do anything to Reid's knee.

Ram: "Kgh, his limits know no end!"

Julius: "—Prepare yourself!"

Casting aside the advantage of locking him, Ram, like a chess piece, and Julius drew near him alongside.

However, the result of the attacks of the two was just as miserable.

His kick and his hand being used like a sword shot down Ram and Julius respectively, who were supposed to be at the pinnacle as warriors. Ram had her neck struck, Julius had his leg broken, all of them rendered incapable of standing.

Subaru: "—Shit."

And, in the aisle where comrades had fallen, Reid approached further, having literally eliminated the obstacles in his way. In front of his eyes was merely the groggy Subaru, who had taken up Emilia and others' damage, and Beatrice, who had spread both of her arms wide as if shielding that Subaru.

Subaru: “Bea… it’s no use…”

Beatrice: “It doesn’t matter if it’s no use or if it’s absurd, in fact. This is property protection of Subaru… in this case, it is a special field of Betty’s, Subaru’s partner as well, I suppose.”

Beatrice’s voice of acting strong, right now, echoed far too vainly.

Even when trying to respond to that strong spirit of Beatrice’s, Subaru’s hands, legs, made no reaction to the fighting spirit. What Subaru had taken up was only damage, which seemingly rendered the actions of his comrades futile.

Three of them were merely conscious, that was the fruit their willpower bore.

Beatrice: “Reid, why are you aiming for Betty and the others… for Subaru, in fact?”

Reid: “Cause it’s in the middle of the Trial, sayin’ that’d be a pretty outdated response. My original plan aside, that actually goes for that pretty one…”

Beatrice: “So what, I suppose.”

Reid: “By meetin’ that one firsthand, my mind changed. It’s disgustin’, so I’ll erase him.”

A judgement grounded on peculiar sensitivity, conversation could not work against such an opponent.

At the same time, with the possibility of him turning over his view wiped out Beatrice gnashed her pretty molars and glanced at Subaru lying behind, who had crumbled down and had been rendered immobile.

“…”

The reason why she took a tiny breath, was because she resolved her preparedness to fight and protect Subaru.

He wanted to tell her, to run away. However, what spilled out of Subaru's lips was merely a hoarse breath.

Reid: "There ain't any need for ya to go outta yer way and rush to yer death ya know, kid."

Beatrice: "Unfortunately enough, living as if dead is utterly unwelcome at this point."

Reid: "Hu~h, that so. Then, there ain't any choice."

With his name bearing the expression of a hero and a legend, he would not hurt a girl child.

Believing such thoughts to be as though illusions, the glint in Reid's eye remained firm. It seemed to be sentencing as if the one standing in his path was naught but an infant.

Henceforth, without expecting any benevolence of ■, Beatrice was the first one to use all her might.

Beatrice: "Ul Minya."

The emerging countless violet arrows submerged the aisle entirely, and completely blocked off any paths for Reid to escape through.

To fatally wound with the slightest contact was the special trait of Minya's, fathoming that with a single glance, without flinching whatsoever, Reid curved his lips.

Beatrice: "Natsuki Subaru's Great Spirit, Beatrice."

Reid: "Good goin'. — Stick Swinger, Reid Astrea."

With the mutual exchange of names, the atmosphere froze. Beatrice, with the violet crystals spread out in the air, and Reid, having picked up Julius' knight sword that had fallen at his feet, prepared themselves.

"…"

Until the very end of the end, Subaru was unable to voice anything.

However, he kept his eyes open, he never closed them for even an instant.

His own decisions and choices, from the results they bore, he had been unable to avert his eyes.

He had been unable to avert them—.

8

Subaru: “Beatrice ~hk.”

???: “Wah?! Wh-What happened, I suppose?! Subaru?! Subaru?!”

The moment he opened his eyes, he hugged the young girl before him without any forethought.

Astonished by the sudden action, the young girl— Beatrice, stiffened her petite body.

It was his reunion with her, who had persisted with tragic preparedness until the previous moment. It turned into relief within his chest, along with unbearable guilt that breathed a painful wind into his ■.

Subaru: “Beatrice…”

He was grateful, he was able to meet her again.

Along with that, he felt apologetic for having her go through all of that.

Beatrice: “Subaru?”

Subaru: “—No, it’s nothing. I do remember. You are Beatrice, I am Natsuki Subaru. You and I, are each other’s partners, now onwards too, please take care of me, please have fun with me, very good.”

Beatrice: “V-Very good, in fact…”

Beatrice, perplexed, raised her thumb at Subaru’s rhythmic words.

It was an expression that must not be existing in this different world, so it must be the result of Subaru poisoning her with it. Patting that head of hers, Subaru took in a deep inhale, and exhaled shortly.

Following that he switched over his consciousness, believing he must grasp the situation—

Beatrice: “Calm down, I suppose, Subaru.”

Subaru: “Eh?”

Beatrice: “Properly tell what happened, in fact. Did something happen inside the book, I suppose? Were Reid’s memories displayed? Betty aside, what about Emilia and everyone? Confirm whether you remember them, in fact. Properly recall, all things precious, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Th-That’s… yeah, hm, that’s right.”

Holding both of Subaru’s cheeks in her hands, Beatrice brought that to attention.

Hearing those words of her’s, in front of her hurried self he fell into slight reflection. It was a phenomenon that might happen to someone who was looping often.

For an individual piling up loops, the fresh taste of a happening eventually fades away.

With that, experience points gained with people for whom that happening is for the first time and react accordingly slips off, and suddenly people start to appear as not being people—

Subaru: "…I never thought, I'd be in that position."

In those kinds of works, the mind and body falls into that state due to trials run tens, hundreds or times even more than that.

Compared to that, for Subaru it was— merely, the fifteenth time.

To stop thinking of people as people in merely fifteen times, perhaps it could be said his ■ was turning harsher.

Subaru: "Am I an idiot. No, I am an idiot."

Casting away the weak, brittle, pathetic nature of his own ■, Subaru braced his mind.

He had only, died fifteen times yet, that is all. Without having made any progress, he had merely exhausted his life in indolence. How come did his such self, hold any right to proclaim that he was exhausted.

Such a thing did not exist for him. It did not.

Stand up, raise your face, clench your fists, Natsuki Subaru.

There's nobody else except you. Except you.

—Had it been 'Natsuki Subaru' , such failures never would have.

Beatrice: "—From the very beginning, Subaru has never been some superman capable of doing everything, in fact."

"…"

Suddenly, Beatrice told Subaru, who had been repeatedly wondering to himself.

Subaru inhaled upon that comment and widened his eyes. Gazing into those black eyes of Subaru's straightforwardly, Beatrice shook her head left and right, conceiving grief in her blue eyes.

Beatrice: "It can be said countless times, I suppose. Subaru is no such superman who can do anything, in fact. Always frantic about what lies in front, gets hurt for everyone's sake… even enduring pain is not something he is good at, he is a normal boy, I suppose."

Subaru: "Th-That's not, possible. That's not. After all, it should be that way…"

Beatrice: "It should be that way?"

Subaru: "It should be that way, only then can this…"

He firmly gripped to the pit of his stomach, gritting his molars, thinking back to the wounds of his arm, to the wounds within his body, to his arms which had grown slightly sturdier, to everyone who relied upon Subaru, to Emilia, to Beatrice, to Ram, to Julius, to Echidna, to Meili, to Shaula.

His guts were rumbling such that it was irritating.

They were rashly pushing away, more than the moment of being on the verge of death, but perhaps Subaru's ■.

???: "So you have returned, Natsuki-kun… Did something, happen?"

???: "Geez onii-sa~n, just when I thought you've worried everyone, it's because of tha~t? No fighting with Beatrice-chan now onwa~rds."

Disputing with Subaru and Beatrice— no, it was nothing so stern.

However, looking at the state of the two facing him, they were Meili and Echidna returning from their patrolling of the library. Neither could he look at the faces of those two straightforwardly.

Echidna: "Beatrice, did something happen to Natsuki-kun? Was the impact, indeed, too much?"

Beatrice: "…It's not as if that's not true, in fact. But, Betty and the rest's proper thought was far too lacking for Subaru, who had to experience that misery, I suppose."

Echidna: “That is…”

Echidna furrowed her eyebrows at Beatrice, who turned her gaze downwards after staring at Subaru. However, she immediately pulled her chin in, as if having judged the circumstances,

Echidna: “Shaula, who had jumped out, and Julius, who went after her have not returned. I am also worried about Emilia-san and Ram-san who went to see Rem-san. I would like to join up with at least either of them, but…”

Beatrice: “…Echidna and Meili, head to the balcony, in fact. Betty will head to the Green Room and search for Emilia, I suppose. Stay sufficiently careful, in fact.”

Meili: “That’s okay bu~t, what’s onii-san going to do~?”

At Beatrice’s brisk instruction, Echidna and Meili’s lines of sight turned towards Subaru.

At those gazes, naturally, Subaru wanted to say he would accompany Beatrice but,

Beatrice: “—Subaru, will quietly stay here, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Wha…! Don’t say stupid stuff, Beatrice! I’m alright! My senses may certainly have dulled down after returning from the book but, they’ll immediately be in their place…!”

Informed by the standing Beatrice, Subaru reflexively snarled at those words. At the same pace, he poured strength into his legs in order to stand at the same level as them.

He poured strength into his legs but—

Subaru: “—Ah?”

Beatrice: “Be in their place and, what then, in fact?”

At Beatrice’s question, Subaru looked down onto his legs in astonishment. Even if he tried to pour strength somehow, especially into his knees, he was unable to retain balance.

No matter what he did, his posture crumbled, and he was unable to stand up.

Subaru: “Why…”

Beatrice: “It’s a matter of course, I suppose. Subaru is always, working too hard, in fact.”

Subaru: “No, wait, please wait! Everything somehow working out when I’m at this level, that’s…”

“…”

Subaru: “That’s, not possible. I am…”

Shaking his head left and right in refusal, no matter how many times he tried, the result remained unchanged.

Even though he possessed no pain, no anguish, no fatigue, his will did not get conveyed to his limbs. And whilst he remained occupied with that, Beatrice ultimately took a single step in the direction of the staircase.

Beatrice: “—Subaru, Betty and the rest will cover whatever remains lacking, I suppose. That is why, you don’t have to think of doing anything and everything all alone, in fact, after all”

Subaru: “Beatrice…”

Beatrice: “After all, that is Natsuki Subaru, I suppose.”

Leaving behind a smile for Subaru, who widened his eyes in astonishment, Beatrice dashed. As if equaling her energy, Echidna and Meili also turned their backs towards Subaru,

Echidna: “Natsuki-kun, I have expectations from you. That you still might be able to give one last push.”

Meili: “I think it’s fine if you rest. But, it was onii-san who said some pretty grand stuff to me so~, work hard on that a bit more.”

Saying all they had to say, the figures of the three disappeared from the library, leaving Subaru behind, whom they had all spoken to.

If they were to take the staircase from the third layer, the three will encounter Julius, who must be making his way back around this timing. Or perhaps at this rate, Julius would not come and drag Subaru out, he had embraced that expectation as well—

Subaru: “No way, he’d come… if Beatrice, says all that.”

He respected that.

Much less, the Subaru after returning from the Book of the Dead had been seen by the two of Echidna and Meili. There was no way their kind selves, would not relay that.

However, that solicitude came at the cost of life. Even though, he did not want to see someone among his comrades die before him.

Subaru: “All because, I’m so weak… because I’m losing my spirit, at just this level, why.”

Had it been the true ‘Natsuki Subaru’, he must not have halted his feet by just this. His rage towards his own worthless self, gave rise to warmth in Subaru’s chest.

However, alongside that, a separate feeling was also gushing forth.

That was, the words Beatrice had left behind.

‘—From the very beginning, Subaru has never been some superman capable of doing everything, in fact.’

‘It can be said countless times, I suppose. Subaru is no such superman who can do anything, in fact. Always frantic about what lies in front, gets hurt for everyone’s sake… even enduring pain is not something he is good at, he is a normal boy, I suppose.’

What Beatrice had recited, the image of the ‘Natsuki Subaru’ not present here.

Despite hearing that, Subaru was unable to believe that. It was difficult to believe in. After all, in accordance with that, that would truly mean he was just a normal human, isn’t it.

Subaru: “Something, must have happened. That must have changed you, isn’t it, ‘Natsuki Subaru’ …”

Something, like an extravagant meeting with someone.

Something, like attaining an unbelievable power.

Something, like experiencing something his current self couldn’t even imagine.

Because something must have happened, which had allowed him to grow out of being the hopeless Natsuki Subaru, that ‘Natsuki Subaru’ must have won the faith of everyone in his life in a different world.

Subaru: “It has to be like that…”

Without change, beating his legs, Subaru rolled up the sleeves of his clothes. Over there, a sarcoma with its origins not within Subaru’s memories had engraved a pattern.

Personally experiencing as if taking responsibility for that seeming curse over his body, its root perhaps still remained without changing. That was not possible.

That is why, ‘Natsuki Subaru’ was—

Subaru: “‘Natsuki Subaru’, I summon you…”

Suddenly, what he had mouthed was the genesis of the suspicion he harbored for this world’s ‘Natsuki Subaru’.

The message for the existence absent here who had, upon times, engraved upon his arm, upon times, composed as if it were a curse and inscribed it on the room.

Seemingly finding it to be as if hexing someone who had stolen away the role which originally belonged to himself.

Subaru: “If, you really are within me, then… come out now…!”

Gripping his arms powerfully, with strength such that his bones would grate, Subaru called for 'Natsuki Subaru' who was within—no, who was not present here.

The existence who could achieve ideals which Subaru, who was present here, could never attain. He asked 'Natsuki Subaru' to come out, if he was here.

Subaru: "Come, come, come…! Show yourself, 'Natsuki Subaru' !!"

His arms had been lacking, so he latched to his neck with his hands. Of course, the deed of strangling oneself with his own hands, neither was it easy, nor could it be properly done.

In the first place, something as convenient as 'Natsuki Subaru' showing his face when his life was in a predicament would never occur. Had that been the trigger, Subaru would have drawn him close twenty times now.

Just how many times 'Natsuki Subaru' would have shown his face through that.

Subaru: "Shit, shit, shit…! I am! I can't, do it! You're needed for this, 'Natsuki Subaru' !"

Seizing the grasp on his trembling knees, Subaru powerfully struck the floor with his fist. Though his fist pained upon striking the floor of the library of unknown material properties, it could not possibly equal the sense of hopelessness tormenting his chest.

He wanted to save them. He truly, wanted to save everyone.

Nobody was in the wrong. Nobody would mutually hurt each other. He knew that. He could believe, without any wavering, that he could save, that he could love everything.

Even though he wanted to save his beloved everyone, he did not possess the power to save them.

Subaru: "Precisely now, is when you are needed, isn't it… and yet, why is it me. My weak, cowardly self, cannot save… and yet."

Even now, his legs could not move.

Due to that, he ended up making Beatrice, Echidna, Meili, those who had not been here, Emilia, Ram, Julius, Shaula, face their point of death.

Because Subaru had not been able to do anything, they, who had been destined to die, could not be saved.

Subaru: “…Cor Leonis.”

Whispering weakly, Subaru activated his own Authority, in order to be wounded.

The power of the Little King that dwelled within him immediately reported the positions of his comrades within the tower. On top of that, the reality of them heading to face their own end, of the tower heading to its demise.

Distant, having unrolled a violent battle, that light was Emilia. This time, Ram, who was supposed to stay by her side, her light was slightly distanced away— two separate lights, Patrasche and, Rem. She was accompanying them.

In the balcony, Shaula was struggling fiercely, and perhaps Meili had joined together there with her. Julius and Echidna seem to be moving together, and Beatrice, acting independently, was heading towards Emilia and the others is what he comprehended.

The flow was precisely as Beatrice’s instructions, and Subaru’s knowledge of the situation.

At the same pace, the current circumstance headed towards failure as well—.

Subaru: “—?”

With his mind directed by such negative thoughts, Subaru picked up a curious sense of discomfort.

As he turned his head towards his hind— Subaru took an extensive look of the enormous library, filled with countless Books of the Dead, Taygeta.

"…"

It was an odd sensation.

Unmistakably, it was a sensation he was feeling for the first time. After all, ever since he grew conscious of his Authority of Cor Leonis, he had been activating it at this spot after Returning by Death.

Each time after that, Subaru headed for his comrades below, changing the cards he played repeatedly, running about for the sake of changing the situation, ultimately using and exhausting his own life.

That is why, activating the Authority in Taygeta was a matter of course for him.

However, after what Beatrice told him, stopping his feet here, a single step distant from the core and getting to overlook the situations within the tower, might have been the origin of this.

Thanks to that, what could this have been,

Subaru: "—This, response is."

Faintly, he could feel it, so dim that it felt as if it was about to disappear.

It was distant from his comrades within the tower, however, when compared to being felt with certainty, it was a fleeting, frail sensation— but a sensation that was certainly present there.

Pushing himself and having his trembling legs move, Subaru advanced tardily like a caterpillar. After that, he quickly had his body lean onto the bookshelf and elevated his upper body with all his might.

Somehow leaning his body weight on the bookshelf, he stood up. And he stretched his hand out to the frail light about to disappear, and grasped it.

That grasped light, a single Book of the Dead, drawing that out—

“…”

He gulped down a single inhale.

A single book, with just the title upon its black binding, a book terribly dull and stale.

However, it possessed profound meaning for Subaru.

Because—

Subaru: “—Natsuki Subaru.”

—There present was, the Book of the Dead not supposed to be there.

Chapter 73:
'Natsuki Subaru'

1

—With the Book of the Dead which had 'Natsuki Subaru' inscribed on it in his hands, he stood still.

Subaru: "…"

Widening his dark eyes in astonishment, Subaru felt his throat rapidly turning parched.

Modest expressions such as astonishing or stupefying would be far too lacking. What had struck Subaru at that moment was something much more serious, something as if numbing harm.

A lethal toxic which would wield affect only when used on Subaru, and nobody else—.

The Book of the Dead of 'Natsuki Subaru', was piercing through Subaru whilst commanding such powerful connotation.

Subaru: "Wh, y…"

So, the Book of the Dead not supposed to be here was present here.

What was supposed to be present in the third layer of Pleiades Watchtower, Taygeta were the Books of the Dead recording the lives of the departed. Having the book of a living being was contradictory.

Or perhaps, could this mean he simply, by chance, had found the book of a human with the same name and surname.

Subaru: "That would have actually been convincing, had this not been a different world…"

The possibility that rose to the surface in his mind, was instantly repudiated.

Though it was a matter of course, this place was a different world—in this place, where even the rules of naming would be vastly different from what Subaru was aware of, why would a name like 'Natsuki Subaru' take birth here.

Even before that, there lay a decisive issue.

The title of that book of 'Natsuki Subaru', had been written in Kanji.

Subaru: "…"

From what all Subaru had witnessed till now, even letters were disparate in this different world. That is why, even if someone else, aside from Subaru, who did not know of the world's letters were to see it, they would probably perceive this title as if being hieroglyphic characters or something of that sort.

If that were to be considered, the unbelievable chances of Subaru finding the Book of the Dead of 'Natsuki Subaru' here through sheer luck were—

Subaru: "—It's predetermined and established, whom this belongs to."

He could only think of that being true.

Subaru: "…"

Once again, with the Book of the Dead in his hands, Subaru silenced himself and pondered.

The reason why Subaru happened upon this Book of the Dead, was because he had depended upon the dim response he had spied out through Cor Leonis.

This had not been the first or second time he had searched for a book in the library, though Subaru was mindful of it, discovering the book being aimed for in this enormous archive was a deed next to impossible to achieve.

Perhaps, the kind unattainable unless god's invisible hand was being put to work.

Subaru: “Or perhaps, not god, but someone’s…”

Subaru convicted, as if having anticipated that.

The rest lay, in the authenticity of this Book of the Dead — whether what was depicted here, was truly the life of ‘Natsuki Subaru’ or not. If it was depicted indeed, then what sort of a trick was behind it.

As the solemn truth, Subaru was here, alive.

If the Book of the Dead of this Subaru was truly here then—

Subaru: “Am I being treated as deceased, ever since I lost my memories… the Books of the Dead of Taygeta, that Hall of Memories, is even observing the worlds I die in…?”

If that were the case, then in no way is it inconceivable that it was depicting Subaru’s Deaths in some type of form through the Book of the Dead. However, in that case, what did that make of Return by Death.

Subaru: “Whether it rewinds time, or does it rebuild the world itself, I had given a thought to both but…”

For the argument’s sake, in the case that the Books of the Dead assumed a method to generate the book of ‘Natsuki Subaru’, it could not be helped but to reach the conviction that the latter had much more likelihood. If that holds true, then the phenomenon which encased this Natsuki Subaru was not something as charming as Return by Death but—

Subaru: “Am I, an idiot. No, I am an idiot… Damn, coward.”

Sensing his contemplation disarray into a slant, Subaru abused himself.

Why his thoughts had gone astray, he understood the reason for that by immediately noticing his own cowardice. —He was merely, frightened of the Book of the Dead.

What would happen when he would read the book of ‘Natsuki

Subaru’.

He was frightened, of that happening whose course was completely unfathomable. That is why, pursuing the hypothesis lacking all foundation, he was trying to delay it and keep delaying it.

Of opening up the first page, of the book within his hands.

Subaru: “…”

Though it was not a hypothesis which came into being merely five minutes ago or anything, the fact that the Book of the Dead of ‘Natsuki Subaru’ was present here was strange, but for Subaru, it was also salvation.

Subaru also considered the evidence that it had not popped up and appeared at just this instant.

However, along with that, it also held the meaning that a ‘Natsuki Subaru’ other than himself, had certainly existed and had walked his own path in this different world, and also that Subaru was trampling upon those footsteps from above, laying waste to them, and painting them out.

That is why, all that was left was to gain confirmation.

Subaru: “First of all, as the Book of the Dead of ‘Natsuki Subaru’… where does this thing start from, and where does it end at?”

At Meili’s instance, precisely from her infancy onwards— ever since she gained awareness of ■, ever since her memories had been established as memories, even her half death was able to be followed up to.

However, how would things unfold in Subaru’s case. —Having read the Book of the Dead, it originated with sprouting as self-consciousness identical to that of Meili, facing growth over time, and finally, where it all came to an end.

If ‘Natsuki Subaru’ is being counted as deceased instead of the present Natsuki Subaru who lost his memories, to follow up to Natsuki Subaru’s memories till the moment immediately preceding the loss of memories, would be natural, or perhaps not.

Instead, perhaps it would follow up to the memories of the present Subaru, who had lost his memories, and awakened inside the tower. In that scenario, which Death would it choose for the end.

Otherwise, as Reid's Book of the Dead, what would merely be present would be a wreckage of memories turned void.

Just as the memories of Reid, which had been recorded in the Book of the Dead, had disappeared from within the book in order to reconstruct him as the trial taker of this tower, the memories of 'Natsuki Subaru' had also possibly disappeared.

That is why, what would be visible after opening this book would not be the memories of 'Natsuki Subaru', but—

Subaru: "—In the end, what do you want to do, cowardly bastard."

Does he desire to see it, does he desire not to see it.

Disdaining his own self, who had been unable to easily respond to that, reprimanding the fearfully curled up ■, he exhaled.

After coming this far, it was inconceivable to opt for not seeing it. Even if it had risen to the surface as an option, he could not even envisage the lunacy of choosing it.

That is why, that is why, that is why, that is why, that is why—

And then, and then, and then, and then, and then—

Subaru: "—~hk."

Taking a powerful breath in, he opened up, the Book of the Dead.

And, the journey of 'Natsuki Subaru', of an unknown origin and an unknown termination—.

2

—This is seriously bad.

Tasting a solid sensation on his face, his brain was being scorched by the flaming heat in his abdomen.

Violent fever which restricted even his breathing, his head felt hot as if magma had been poured into his blood vessels. Yet his limbs turned colder and heavier, the inconsistent sensations jolting his existence down to the very soul itself.

His thoughts screamed about what had occurred. His thoughts screamed that he must do something.

With those flowing in and intertwining, he gave rise to a screech.

However, his consciousness, which was screaming he must do something, proved to be futile.

The moment he moved his hands in an attempt to break out of the deadlock, and touched his guts, which were the origin of the scorching heat, his palm was drenched wet with thick blood, and he understood that further blood also had the floor drenched.

—Ah, is all of this, my blood.

Though he was unaware of the amount of blood that had flowed on and inundated the floor, the bleeding had not been of the level of blood donation and so forth. The source of his life streaming out, did not put a halt to the fragile lamp of life.

In short, his flesh body had already commenced the countdown to death.

Even still, the reason why ■ had not died yet, was because for this life of his, which was heading towards its death, there yet remained a mission to fulfill.

—He had, to raise his voice.

He must raise his voice.

Watch out. It’s dangerous. Don’t come here. Run. Without turning back even once, run at full speed.

And, he must inform about the hazard.

He must convey it to her, inform her about danger, so that she does not enter this place.

And yet—

"…"

He was unable to raise his voice.

What spilled out instead, was the nauseating warm blood clot. With his throat clogged by that, he was rendered incapable of bringing out even a single uncouth word. Violently coughing, the scorching heat in his abdomen expanded.

Ache and agony, misery and disorder, and—

"—baru?"

The tone of the silver bell's voice, eventually took a step into the space it must not enter.

"…"

He had to stop that, no matter what.

And yet, he did not make it.

Though he had to do that even if it meant selling his life away for it, just because his guts had gotten lacerated.

"—~hk!"

A scream echoed, someone collapsed down onto the floor along with a violent report.

The hand of that fallen someone, overlapping with hand of his fallen self, was an offensive prank on part of the far too ironic fate. In all ways, the wickedness of the one known as fate was far too onerous to describe with words.

"…"

Those weakly trembling fingers, softly grasped that overlapping hand. Grasping back that sensation of fingers, as if they were clinging and relying upon, Subaru deeply, deeply, along with that clump of blood, inhaled.

"…ait."

The overflowing clot of blood, the seeping and streaming away life. He could not, stop that outward flow of blood.

No longer, could he do anything. This situation, had reached its absolute limits.

All due to a single powerless, incompetent man, everything was going to start afresh.

That is why, his vow dyed with this blood, wielded no significance.

Even though he knew nothing could be done, his idiocy yet commanded him to vow.

Even though he knew it was over.

Even though he knew it will be over.

As if those were not coming to an end, disgracefully, he vowed.

"I will, for sure—"

—Save, you.

At the next instant, he— Natsuki Subaru 'Natsuki Subaru' 'Natsuki Subaru' lost his life.

3

The moment the connection was severed, Subaru sensed firm pain at the back of his head.

Subaru: "Gah— ~hk."

The impact reverberating in his skull, he hallucinated as if he had been suddenly struck from behind, but he immediately understood that he was mistaken. Because, Subaru's body had collapsed right behind, and he could feel the entirety of his back make contact with the chilling floor.

Subaru: "This, place is…"

Icy and dim, not in the soiled building, but he was in the library of Taygeta.

Slowly pouring energy back into his body, turning about his dumbfounded head, Subaru turned his neck around— and then, touched his own guts with great perplexity.

There supposed to be present, was the wound which would diminish his life.

However—

Subaru: "Not, there… not there, not there, the wound is, not there. The slash, in the guts, is not there… ~hk."

Touching his guts countless times, he confirmed the disappearance of the origin of scorching heat. Within the spectacle he had witnessed immediately previously, that utmost vivid sensation was vanishing.

He had heard that the brain hallucinates ache far too scorchingly hot as a "fever". A phenomenon identical to what had occurred. In other words—

Subaru: "—A memory, of having the guts be slashed open, and dying."

The end of having the guts cut open by a sharp edged tool, drowning in the foam of blood and powerlessness, and dying.

Finally, if he himself had alone been the one to die by that, it was still excusable. However, that was not how it had been.

Subaru: "Satella…"

What he whispered, at the very end of the end, the girl he had been unable to save, her name— her alias.

Within that memory, the silver-haired young girl he recognized had fabricated her name and come in contact with Subaru. What had been the reason behind that. Though it was evident no evil intent was the reason for it.

Subaru: “…Still, dying such an uncouth way.”

Putting his hand on his forehead, Subaru ruminated about what had occurred to his own body.

Summoned to the different world, wandering aimlessly in the town with foolish positivity, picking up a quarrel with delinquents and almost dying, saved by Satella from that, and assisting her in her search for what she was looking for—

Subaru: “Completely useless…”

At the final moment, without even conveying the crisis he was supposed to convey, he ended up having her get involved as well.

Not just dying wastefully, the word vain in the expression dying in vain could not even make for an excuse.

The life of Natsuki Subaru— ‘Natsuki Subaru’ could never compensate for it.

Subaru: “But.”

It was not as if he had gained absolutely nothing from it.

Subaru: “—This was, the Book of the Dead of ‘Natsuki Subaru’.”

That alone was the certain, absolute, unquestionable truth.

Subaru: “…”

Hopeless, foolish, weak, irredeemable ‘Natsuki Subaru’.

He continued to enlarge his absurd self-consciousness, overlapping with that, averted his eyes away from his lack of filial piety. And finally, using being summoned into the different world as a convenient means of escaping, and by exhibiting pessimistic positivity, he became a swindler trying deceive himself, those around him, anything and everything.

The result of that idiocy, had tied together with the tragedy in that loot storehouse.

What a pretentious, naive, and foolish failure had it been.

How come, could he stay defenseless at that hazardous place. What gave your idiotic self such baseless confidence. Like that, it would not be odd to get killed overseas, let alone in a different world. That lack of vigilance was to blame. The result of it all, must be that.

It had been so unsightly, such that he would have wanted to kill himself had he survived.

Subaru: “That hopeless, idiotic bastard… but.”

Evidently, it had been fatal foolishness, but it was fortuitous to have it affirmed.

Putting a check on his rage, enduring it, he scrutinized that truth closely.

The Book of the Dead was certainly functioning. That book had recorded the death of ‘Natsuki Subaru’. And, it thrust a great number of truths, which were a matter of course for ‘Natsuki Subaru’, at Natsuki Subaru, for whom there was no way to know them.

—To name it specifically, it was the sequence of events of obtaining Return by Death.

As per convention, an existence who was god, or wielded similar strength, normally in a transcendental state of being, summoned Subaru to the different world.

However, for that ‘Natsuki Subaru’, if he were to not have the memories of being summoned by such a transcendental being, there would be no occasion where he would get to know whom he got the power granted to him from and how he grew conscious of that power.

That was something Subaru could affirm, who had seen the end of that ‘Natsuki Subaru’ for himself.

At the very end of the end, though he had been blabbering things without knowing when to give up, at that moment, ‘Natsuki Subaru’ was supposed to not have any confirmation that he would overcome death, and rewind time.

At the very least, he himself had been like that. —Thinking that far, he abruptly noticed.

That he, and ‘Natsuki Subaru’, had not been objected well visually.

The reason for that, evident.

Subaru: “It’s diving more deeply in, than on, Meili’s instance…”

When he had read Meili’s Book of the Dead, and personally experienced her life, he had tasted the sensation of having his mind undergo influence quite severely as well. Halfway melting together with her personality, Meili appeared within his mind as a symptom of hallucination, such that she said all what she wanted to say, and was toying around with Subaru.

Above all, that had ultimately been a Meili fabricated by Subaru’s consciousness, utterly unrelated to the real Meili, an illusion brought forth by chaos, he was aware of that.

Subaru: “…”

However, this instance’s Book of the Dead demarcated a line between itself and Meili’s experience.

All things said and done, in the chaos immediately after reading Meili’s book, still present were clues to differentiate between himself and her. The difference in gender, the difference in age, the difference in values, there were plenty.

Detaching himself from her through those clues, even if slightly, it was a possibility to withdraw the comprehension that she was an entirely different existence.

However, that was not how it was this time.

None other than he himself was the party concerned. His self who was not himself, a situation which normally would not manifest, it layed expectation upon Natsuki Subaru, and pushed him into his fight with himself.

His fight with himself. —Judging by mere words, those were not words too cliché, but they were words which evidently and straightforwardly denoted the situation which Subaru had currently been placed in.

The truth is, he possessed a negative outlook.

Overlapping with his self, rather meant an act of painting his self out. The water washed by the dark paint called ‘Natsuki Subaru’, dyed him as if with a paintbrush that had been dipped in that.

Subaru: “—Emilia. Emilia, Emilia, Emilia, Emilia, Emilia.”

At the sensation of feeling himself be painted out, Subaru called Emilia’s name, as if it were some magic.

The reason why he chanted Emilia, that reason was evident. The ‘Natsuki Subaru’ inside the Book of the Dead, did not recognize her as Emilia.

Trusting the alias he had been told, he saw through his duties as a buffoon till the very end of the end.

That is why, that was the difference between the present Subaru, and ‘Natsuki Subaru’.

Subaru: “…”

With the roots of his teeth quivering, fearing the sensation of his self being whittled, Subaru looked at his feet. The single book he had dropped thoughtlessly, that had fallen there.

Subaru: "…"

He continued to observe, such that 'Natsuki Subaru' would have died.

If considered now, mysteriously enough, the Book of the Dead commenced from the moment he arrived into the different world, from when he had shouted out the change of worlds with a foolishly bare expression. Even though for Meili's instance, it had properly commenced since she gained the awareness of ■— no, for now, all that was of no significance.

The problem was, the continuation to that Book of the Dead.

Subaru: "You must be thinking, the same, "Natsuki Subaru"…"

Thanks to the Book of the Dead, he was able to witness what was perhaps the Death of 'Natsuki Subaru' when he was first summoned into the different world for himself.

However, that was merely the beginning.

That 'Natsuki Subaru', must have also utilized the power of Return by Death.

Otherwise, that may have been a power which had manifested not in the form of Return by Death but something further different. — No, that was the natural state of affairs.

Rewinding time at will, that was much more convincing.

For 'Natsuki Subaru', who was met by Emilia, Beatrice, Ram, Echidna, Julius, Meili, Shaula, Patrasche, Gyan, and was expected to play an active role, something like that was much more suitable.

In that case—

Subaru: "That must be there, ahead of this…"

'Natsuki Subaru', who seemed to be no different from Natsuki Subaru.

However, there present was something decisive which caused that 'Natsuki Subaru' to be 'Natsuki Subaru'. Seeking that, Subaru, at once, held the book in his hands.

And, closing his eyes, took deep breaths.

Subaru: "…"

With the book in his hands, Subaru counted the beating of his chest. And while calming his ■ down, he slowly commenced walking.

A slow gait, however, straightforward, lacking all faltering.

Before long, where Subaru had reached was in front of the bookshelf, and as he stretched his hand out—

Subaru: "—Second book."

The single book following 'Natsuki Subaru', made a weak assertion of itself through Cor Leonis.

4

—The progress 'Natsuki Subaru' made, was unsightly, haphazard, irredeemable.

"Completely useless. A novice as per appearance, with crude movements. Neither with any Divine Protections nor with any skills, imagined that there would at least be some instinct or intelligence, but not even that. Just, why must you challenge."

Tormented by the self-indulging mighty enemy, he was minced without being able to even launch a proper counterattack.

And in the environs of his wounded self, was a bloodstained old man and a golden-haired girl, collapsed. Neither of them could be saved. He could not even move.

"Slowly, slowly, slowly, slowly, slowly, agonize."

Before long, with his guts sliced, with his eyes sliced, within the world where he lost his eyesight, with a time limit running against his life, he lived the time until his death nestling close with dismay.

Until the very end of the end, all whilst fearing, shivering, dreading, disgracefully—

5

“Hey, did you get stabbed.”

“It can’t be helped, you know. Try running outside. It’s more than just difficult.”

“A~h, this won’t do. If the insides of the guts get wounded then it’s death for sure… The clothes are all a mess too.”

Fallen with the opponent overhead of him, did he truly intend to make such heedless dialogue.

He must use his brain for such worthless thoughts, otherwise he would be rendered unable to comprehend the shocking pain piercing through his back.

A technique to escape pain, or a method to protect himself, to have possession of them would have astonished him to the bottom of his ■.

He was unable to save himself, from the truly futile, vain death.

Calling the girl Satella while she was not Satella, having to hear harsh words from her due to that, unable to sense the strikingly obvious situation, killed by the opponent whom he already had tasted before abandoning thought.

A suitable end. Why, from the beginning to the end, could he not live without regretting even for a second, even for a minute.

Enough. This world was going to end. He knew it.

Because from the very beginning, he knew and could see Death, and henceforth came here. That is why, if there was not something decisive present, it was the end of this world. As it is the end, as it is the end, go to the next one. Go to the next, to the next, to the next, to the next, to the next, to the next. Otherwise, it hurts, it hurts, it hurts it hurts it hurts it hurts it hurts and it hurts and it's painful and it's unbearably hurtful but something must be carried on to the next—.

The demise that was brought to him whilst he was asleep, contrary to a swift and easy end, was accompanied with mercilessness as if chilling venom was poured into his blood vessels.

The arrival of the Death whereby he couldn't even comprehend he had died, compared to the Deaths till now in which he was unable to detach pain and suffering from himself, was perhaps the easiest one is what he believed.

However, in no way was that true.

Why, did he die. First of all, did he really die.

Within humans fearful of Death, the wish to die as if sleeping is substantially present, but if Subaru, who had experienced that, were to be asked, then he would respond that it was not worth wishing for.

In Death, there lies the meaning of Death.

In the demise, denouement of life, something which is learnt from it must be attached to the end.

Within chaos and despair, fright and yearning, Subaru sought the subsequent Book of the Dead. He must unravel what had occurred. He must unravel, what had killed his self—.

7

—Mysteries invited further mysteries, as incomprehensible and irrational Deaths followed him.

Overlapping ends, continual tragedies.

Though he had refused dying as if sleeping, dying as if being shattered, as if being gouged out, were indeed not pleasant either.

From next to next, his life was aimed for, robbed, shattered, and finally, betrayed.

Why, was no longer the question for that.

Why, must he have to save the blue-haired girl, who had killed his self.

Why, did his self become so frantic in order to save her, why, did she give such a powerful push to Subaru's back, who was crushed and knelt down.

Why, did he gain strength by her words, and resolve to move forward.

Ahead of betrayal, he earnestly yearned.

For the desire which had actually not been betrayed, for the world which affirmed that it was correct.

'Natsuki Subaru', offered his life as indemnification for the sake of the fruitless, sorrowful misunderstanding of saving someone, and prized it open through sheer strength.

Meeting Emilia, meeting Puck, meeting Felt, meeting Grandpa Rom, meeting Reinhardt, meeting Elsa, meeting Beatrice, meeting Ram, meeting Rem, meeting Roswaal, meeting Petra, meeting the residents of Earlham Village—

—No matter what, he will thrust refusal at any muddy stream that may advance upon them, is what he believed.

8

Subaru: "Ugh, bhu… ~hk."

Putting a check on his lips, facing assailing death once again, Subaru knelt down in the library of Taygeta. Without supporting his body, he collapsed onto the bare ground as if falling.

Subaru: “Hah, hah…”

His breath was rough, what drenched the entirety of his body was abundant cold sweat.

Whether it was hot, whether it was cold, whether it was bitter, whether it was sweet, whether it was agonizing, whether it was pleasant, his feelings were blended into a heterogeneous mixture of likes and dislikes, black and white, and he was unable to comprehend the correct answer.

It felt as if he was being struck from all angles and directions ceaselessly, from next to next.

Subaru: “…With this, eight books.”

Discovering the Books of the Dead of ‘Natsuki Subaru’, and ever since he commenced reading them, he was merely piling up the number of books.

To say the number of books, was something odd in itself as well. Not that the numbering kept on ascending, originally, to have the “next book of the same series” for a book present in this library was not how it was supposed to be.

Yet, the books of ‘Natsuki Subaru’ kept on piling up the number of books readily, and continued.

Adding to the mystery, the structure of not being able to find the next book of ‘Natsuki Subaru’ unless the first book of ‘Natsuki Subaru’ was read— it all commenced orderly.

Without skipping a single Death for the purpose of an interval, he followed the footsteps of ‘Natsuki Subaru’.

And, whilst following the footsteps, he thought.

About how tactlessly frank, incorrigible, immature ‘Natsuki Subaru’ was.

Particularly the last book, observing the fate of the eighth Book of the Dead, it was impossible to not feel that way.

Immediately after the announcement of the royal election, fracturing his relationship with Emilia, ultimately, merely hurting her ■ simply because he could, without any apology or retrospection, dying within the chaos was ‘Natsuki Subaru’.

His self who was reading the books, sunk with his consciousness equivalent with the subjectivity of the Book of the Dead.

Merely the people concerned were supposed to particularly experience that effect, but it was still difficult to tolerate.

His self, who thought why did he not understand, was present.

On the other hand was his self, who thought why did he lament by not understanding through that, as well.

Subaru: “Don’t be trapped, in the past…”

It was a tragedy he had witnessed with these eyes an instant ago, that is why, his body ached as if being torn off.

However, that was the past. At maximum, a happening that had occurred in the past.

Even if it was a happening right in front of the eyes for ‘Natsuki Subaru’, who faced Death at that instant.

Even if it was a happening right in front of the eyes for Subaru, who was in agreement with ‘Natsuki Subaru’, who faced that instant.

That was the past.

Persisting by turning into a wound difficult to forget, it was the past.

That is why, at the present instant, take a breather and escape the impact. Forget it. That someone, killed Emilia. That someone, committed that terrible spectacle in the village.

If not, then ■ would get shattered.

What would he do, should Subaru’s ■ shatter here, rendered unable to stand up.

How would someone, do something. ‘Natsuki Subaru’ was not present here. That is why, there was no other choice but for Subaru to somehow manage through.

Subaru: “Not, yet…”

—Has it been found.

Subaru: “…”

There was supposed to be something decisive existing, bestowed only upon ‘Natsuki Subaru’.

It would be the key to precisely distinguish between Natsuki Subaru, and ‘Natsuki Subaru’. At the very least, until that key was procured, this voyage of going through Books of the Dead shall not terminate.

The decisive key, which made Natsuki Subaru grow wings and attain flight, as ‘Natsuki Subaru’.

The key which changed him into the savior who could catch Emilia, Beatrice, Rem, Ram, Echidna, Julius, Meili, Shaula, Patrasche, Gyan, from falling.

At the current instant, there were no signs of it.

‘Natsuki Subaru’ could not possibly possess the mettle, the magnanimity, to be a savior or a hero, to be able to fulfill the immense duty of saving someone.

What he possessed was merely standing out stubbornness, and the good fortune of being blessed by the people around him.

However, that was not all.

It was not that formless “something”.

He possessed the omnipotent key, something which was further apparent, evident, which could be recognized at a single glance, which convinced everyone that he had the ability because he possessed that.

He possessed it. That is why, seeking that—

Subaru: “—Number, nine.”

Once again he tackled, the samsara of Death, whirling with mayhem and chaos, betrayal and despair.

His wish, ‘Natsuki Subaru’. To turn into you, as fast as possible.

—Before I, am no longer able to bear with your footsteps, your wounds, Death, in my ■.

9

—Deaths, were accumulated relentlessly.

—Ends, were relentlessly accumulated.

Each time he felt ache, each time he was in agony, each time he lost something, each time he was robbed of something, he heard the sound of ■ cracking.

Crying and screaming why and how, gritting his molars thinking it ends here, standing up whilst vomiting blood, sheathed in wounds, he advanced.

The struggle of an uncouth man risking his life, was present there.

Not once but twice, not twice but thrice, not thrice but four times and so forth, getting cornered by situations and expiring, yet, he held his ground in order to smash through the lock of turmoil.

That was amazing. Plenty amazing. Truly worthy of respect.

To not give up, that was something quite amazing. Even after experiencing so much, gritting teeth so much, to fight to the bitter end was amazing. Truly admirable. Improved opinions. —But, that was not it.

But, that was not it. That was not it. That was not it. That was not it indeed.

Subaru: “Something was… ~hk.”

—”Something” was, supposed to have happened, isn’t it.

“Something” must have happened. Otherwise, it would not make sense. Otherwise, things would not hold true.

“Something” happened, which made the impotent, irremediable Natsuki Subaru develop wings, attain flight and turn into ‘Natsuki Subaru’, who could save everyone, someone, Emilia and the others, that was how it was supposed to be.

That was why, he was searching for it, dying, losing sanity, with bloodshot eyes.

Upon each instance of reading the Books of the Dead, personally experiencing the impact, terror, and the agony of Death which ‘Natsuki Subaru’ had to taste by trifling with the altering situations, he grew further desperate and pursued his search.

Yet, he was unable to find a single clue—

Subaru: “Ugh, a~a~a~a~a~— ~hk ~hk!!”

He struck his head onto the floor.

It was alright when he was in the midst of witnessing it. However, the instant he returned, his ■ was fomented with disgrace.

Subaru: “Dad… mom… ~hk.”

There had been ‘Natsuki Subaru’, who exchanged words with his father and mother, and apologized to the two of them.

There had been ‘Natsuki Subaru’, who was thrown into the different world, and for the sake of residing in this place, bid farewell to those two.

Even after carelessly forgetting what all his self had committed, knowingly of the fact that his parents would be saddened, conveying words of love for self-satisfaction—.

Subaru: “Ugh, bhu, e~e~e~gh.”

He vomited. His tears, overflowing.

What was hurtful, what was excruciating, was that he was painfully aware of the feelings of ‘Natsuki Subaru’, and the fact that Subaru also got to know, that his parents forgave it.

Please don’t forgive. Please curse. He wished his parents would speak ill of him, call him out for lacking filial piety.

However, they did not act that way.

Neither his father nor his mother, be as per Subaru’s wishes. In order to console himself, he wished his parents to call him a petty human or things similar. He was unable to achieve that.

Subaru’s father, Kenichi. Subaru’s mother, Naoko. —They were the greatest couple of parents.

There had been his self, who was happy for that, there had been his self, who approved of the judgement ‘Natsuki Subaru’ took, despite lacking all rights to be saved, there had been his self, who was going to be saved, making his ■ unsightly.

—This. Was this the source for it? With this being the reason, did he turn into ‘Natsuki Subaru’.

Subaru: “No… no, no, no! That’s not it! Not something like, this!”

Scratching his head violently, striking his aching eyebrows with his fist, Subaru disparaged his own self.

What Subaru sought, was not spiritual salvation. What he sought was a key, —a power further evident, which was established in terms of proper efficacy.

The power which Subaru was ignorant of, which only ‘Natsuki Subaru’ was cognizant of.

Just as Subaru had succeeded in the manifestation of Cor Leonis, the special “something” which only ‘Natsuki Subaru’ had awakened, that, that was.

Subaru: “The key to change this situation, I have to believe it is, or…”

The laceration of his guts, which had been the very last cause of his death from the present moment, touching the wound he was supposed to have from that, Subaru whispered.

His memories, started to overlap with what he had witnessed in Meili’s Book of the Dead. The assault on the mansion, Meili’s both beloved and troublesome elder sister, Elsa’s attack. A natural enemy for ‘Natsuki Subaru’.

However, that was all about a world where everything came to an end.

That was all about a world which ‘Natsuki Subaru’ already surmounted.

What was crucial, was not sympathizing with ‘Natsuki Subaru’. But unveiling, and obtaining, the deception only he was supposed to possess, which only he was using.

For that, only for that, read the Books of the Dead.

—Because only for that, Natsuki Subaru had been dying and redoing his actions.

Subaru: “Please tell me, ‘Natsuki Subaru’! —How are you special! How can only you, stay being special! There must be “something”, right?!”

Subaru: “Something”, must have changed you! “Something”, must have rid you of your uselessness, and turned you into someone else!”

Subaru: “Please change my weak, pathetic, petty self who can’t be useful for shit! I’m fed up now! I can’t see everyone suffering, not anymore!”

Subaru: ““Something”… “something”! Is there, right?! If “something” isn’t there then, it doesn’t make sense… “something”, happened… that’s why, you are… different from, me… it has to be that way…”

—It has to be that way, or he will be rendered incapable of doing anything, but to simply watch.

Subaru: “You were, the same as me, weak, petty, completely powerless…”

—Kneeling down time and time again, and on each instance having someone give a push to his back, as he wanted to recompense everyone who acted courteously towards him, as they had acted kindly towards him, he wanted to pay them back.

Subaru: “Please, ‘Natsuki Subaru’. I request you. Please, just stop…”

—It would have had been much, much better, had he been a superhuman.

—He wished for him to be an existence completely dissimilar to his self, one who had transcended above weakness with both his ■ and body.

—That is why, he wished to be convinced by him that he had done, what his self could never achieve.

And yet—.

Drawing books out as if plucking berries, having his head struck by continually stockpiling Death, all whilst having ■ shatter upon each instance of that, eagerly, earnestly, as if sipping mud, he ate into his life.

But still, until the very end of the end, he did not cast aside the possibility he clung onto—.

Subaru: "…"

He opened up, the book he had in his grasp.

With the preparedness of his brain tissues being churned, his ■ being violated, his soul being humiliated, he opened it up.

After all, it was far more painful to have the very last hope severed rather than feeling ache or anguish.

Subaru: "You get it, right, 'Natsuki Subaru'…"

As if, seemingly seeking consent, he called out to the person concerned who was not in presence here.

The tone of that voice, felt as if it had sustained a terrible loss of ambition, it could not be helped.

After all, the person concerned was not someone to be enthusiastic about.

He was not, that great of a man. —Whilst wishing for that to not happen, his fingers as if pulling a rope, he started to draw the Book of the Dead out.

And, what will follow will certainly be the finishing blow, harboring such feelings—

???: "—Yeah, I get it."

Subaru: "…"

A white, white world.

Upon noticing, Subaru was not in the library, nor a shapeless existence overlapping with memories, but had been sent a place which he recognized, which was not here.

There—

???: "I get it, Natsuki Subaru."

Subaru: "…"

???: “After all, because you are me, you know.”

Standing still within the white world, sanpaku eyes he was well acquainted with, had been awaiting Subaru.

SETOWI

Chapter 74:

1

Short, black hair, legs with the same length as his upper body, sanpaku eyes enough to kill someone.

Those almost unpleasantly familiar features no matter which one was to be chosen, were overlooking Natsuki Subaru whilst sitting on the white, bare ground.

Subaru: "…"

Astounded, fixedly, he gazed a deep stare into the opposing person's face.

No matter which angle he looked at it from, it was a face he was acquainted with— no, it looked slightly different. That was perhaps because it was, in a true sense, not the form he was accustomed to seeing.

That which he had grown accustomed to looking at ordinarily, on overwhelmingly multiple occasions, was something reflected upon mirrors or the surface of water. Strictly speaking, the human face was not perfectly symmetrical on both halves, that alone shaped a sensitive disparity.

That is why—

???: "Ah, is that so. It's not a mirror's reflection so it feels a bit awkward, huh. In that sense, this is probably closer to imaging it as facing a photograph or a video recording, isn't it."

Subaru: "—~hk."

???: "—? Ah, could it be, you thought of the same thing?"

When he slightly tightened his cheeks upon the single voice seemingly having read his mind, the opposing person precisely guessed those feelings as well.

Though ■ was flustered by even that, any response he could possibly give could neither serve as poison nor medicine. In the first place, what was essential for Subaru was not something on the likes of quick exchange of remarks.

Far greater, precisely that, the problem which seemingly jolted away everything was—

???: “Once again then… hey, sibling.”

Subaru: “…”

???: “No, sibling feels slightly faulty for an expression, huh. More accurately this’d be… hey, another me.”

Raising a single hand, the personage greeted with a relaxed tone—no, he was not a person so unduly distant. He was an existence such that even calling him someone close would be a half-hearted expression.

After all, because the one present there was unmistakably was, with the same face as Natsuki Subaru, none other than ‘Natsuki Subaru’ .

Subaru: “— ‘Natsuki Subaru’ .”

‘Subaru’: “…You know, doesn’t that have a strange ring to it? On top of that, calling yourself using the full name… though, I don’t know using what else would be correct. Though it’s a situation often there in manga and stuff, it’s pretty troublesome in reality.”

Subaru: “‘Natsuki Subaru’…!”

Discerning rage for Subaru, who piled up remarks as if talking about good weather, Subaru stood right up at that spot. And as he tried to grasp the opponent’s collars, his legs tangled instantly.

With no strength driven into his knees, his stance crumbled—

‘Subaru’: “Woops, watch out.”

Subaru: "——~hk, don't touch me!"

Subaru, who was in front, caught his body which was pitching forward and falling. The moment he came in contact with those arms, Subaru experienced unbearable repugnance and shook off the opponent's arms.

At the same pace, taking steps and distancing himself away from Subaru, he continued glaring at the opponent.

Subaru: "Why are, you here… first of all, where is this place?!"

With Subaru within his field of vision, Subaru signaled the surrounding white world with his hands.

White space, a place with nothing, that was just as the cradle of Od Lagna where he had confronted that Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, Louis Arneb.

Subaru: "Shit…!"

It was a total mess inside of his mind.

In accordance with the real time that flowed within the tower, his meeting with Louis was not something which happened even a few hours ago.

However, for Subaru who had stockpiled multiple attempts pertaining to the five obstacles, it felt like an incident in the faraway, distant past.

Furthermore, Subaru had personally experienced the life and death of 'Natsuki Subaru' more than twenty times through the Books of the Dead. Even if the contents of the Books of the Dead were something which felt short, running through life and death in less than five minutes, there had also been more than a year's time where nothing had occurred.

He had tasted those successively, indulgently. Neither were there any guarantees regarding his recognition not getting disordered.

The passage of time was vague, on top of that, he had much awaited this meeting with the unanticipated opponent.

Subaru widened his eyes and waved his arms about violently,

Subaru: “Why, are you in this place!!”

‘Subaru’: “—It is, the proof of you having caught up to me.”

Subaru: “…”

‘Subaru’: “You read the Book of the Dead, and caught up to me. Everything you were not aware of, you must have seen it in the form of personally experiencing it. My, life in a different world, alright.”

Subaru: “Huh.”

With an indifferent tone, Subaru responded to Subaru, who had depleted his breath and clamored. Viewing that composed attitude, Subaru gritted his molars.

He was unable to stomach that conclusive expression, that attitude of seemingly knowing all, anything and everything.

—First of all, what did this man, making that odious face, say just now?

Subaru: “I, caught up to you?”

‘Subaru’: “That’s right. There’s not a single thing anymore, which you don’t know about me. That’s why…”

Subaru: “—Don’t, joke around ~hk!!”

‘Subaru’: “…”

Subaru: “I, caught up to you, you say? Stop kidding! Don’t lie! Not yet! I don’t know about that which is the most important, which is much more essential, yet!”

Roaring with his eyes open wide, Subaru seized hold of Subaru’s collars this time.

Upon that usage of brute strength, Subaru made no attempt to parry it. Pulling the opponent's collars towards himself at the same pace, from a distance where both of their breaths entwined, he glared into those black eyes.

"…"

Within the dark eyes of the face which was the same as his, the instant he perceived the same face reflected within, nauseating self-hatred surged within his own self.

Whether he harbored that self-hatred for himself or for the Himself present before his eyes, was neither known to him nor did he even contemplate considering it.

Merely remaining at that extremely close distance, he glared at the opponent and unraveled his fangs.

Subaru: "Tell me! It's pretty convenient you're here! Tell me now! The reason you became yourself must be somewhere! I haven't seen that. I haven't found it. That is…"

'Subaru': "The reason I, became myself?"

Subaru: "That's right! There must have been a cue for you, to turn into yourself! You are, you are…"

'Subaru': "—That, must have been seen by you, no?"

With his collars seized, Subaru was gazing at Subaru, nonresistant.

He did not even try to repel away the arms waving him about. Subaru received that as a hallucination as if he wasn't even doing anything.

He perceived exactly that, as being looked down onto from a higher level—

Subaru: "Stop looking at me like that!"

'Subaru': "—Gah ~hk."

Aiming at that conclusive side profile, Subaru launched his fist.

The fist wielded firm impact, blowing Subaru off as if he had been strummed. There was no recoil, no similar pain striking back at Subaru.

The pain Subaru sustained, injured, was only the pain Subaru had sustained.

That was, not identical to what Natsuki Subaru had sustained.

Subaru: “Lining up words, as if knowing that… is that so, I get it.”

Smacked by Subaru, Subaru had knelt down on his right leg. Observing him rubbing his struck cheek with the back of his hand, Subaru consented.

That opponent ahead of his eyes, who spoke with a mouth as if knowing everything, was not mistaken.

First of all, if this was the cradle of Od Lagna— the Hall of Memories, would that not make him the opponent he should be utmost vigilant of above all other matters

Subaru: “Are you, Louis? The Sin Archbishop of Gluttony ! It’s you again, right?!”

‘Subaru’: “…Me?”

Subaru: “Don’t play dumb!”

Last time, Louis, whom he had encountered in the Hall of Memories, attempted to prompt segregation between Subaru and ‘Natsuki Subaru’ , and eat that existence away from his head through one way or another.

Back then, he had managed to escape those fangs from a hair strand’s breadth worth of distance but had their nature been such that they would be willing to give up through simply that alone, they would not be called Sin Archbishops.

Just how ugly, how irredeemable the existences known as the Sin

Archbishops were, he had witnessed that in its entirety.

Petelgeuse, Regulus, Sirius, Capella, all of them were the absolute lowest and worst of failures as personalities. Lye, Roy, and Louis were no exceptions to that either, he could especially affirm that.

What if Louis, who had been lying in wait inside of Reid's Book of the Dead, was utilizing some form of method and hiding in ambush within the Book of the Dead of 'Natsuki Subaru' .

Thus, it was plausible that she had been boldly lingering and awaiting Subaru.

Subaru: "Isn't that true, Gluttony ! Louis Arneb! There's no way I can be confused by you, who can change shapes and forms, like this!"

Relying upon the Memories and Names stolen from others, rather than just the opponents' abilities but extorting even their form, and chewing and digesting them as if they were her belongings was the Authority of Louis Arneb, as well as that of her elder brothers, Lye Batenkaitos and Roy Alphard.

She had demonstrated that artifice even within the tower, lacking any regret. Nothing felt out of place should her place of demonstrating that merely have gotten changed to the Hall of Memories.

Subaru: "This time for sure, devouring me and hijacking me, is that what your plan is? Even after being rejected once, persistent little… do you really want to Return by Death so much?!"

Without any vacillation, he voiced the words Return by Death.

He had personally experienced the memory of having to taste hellish anguish by voicing that on several instances. The penalty of having his heart be crushingly gripped accompanied with immense pain. However, it was still alright if only his self was to be the one to experience that agony. —Compared to the cases where it befell over Emilia, or the surroundings.

However, the penalty was not invoked for Subaru, who had shouted whilst crushing faint horror.

Subaru before his eyes, did not seem to have had his heart crushingly gripped at all either. In bug a single instant he understood that Subaru had also been relieved at the lack of the evil influence's ingress, seemingly having been on lookout for the same. That was, infuriating.

With the same face as his, he also bore the same thoughts as him. —He thought of it as an assertion that, at maximum, he and his opponent were the same.

Subaru: "—~hk! Just, get it already! Is this really that amazing of a power? Is this an admirable power?! It's just dying, and redoing. Dying and redoing… nothing more than that. If I, who uses it, am shit then the results it brings are also shit! That's why…"

'Subaru': "…"

Subaru: "That's why, I couldn't save anyone… I let everyone die. Because I am weak, I make everyone, miserable. Just like how, even now, nobody will get saved…!"

— Return by Death, was nothing so adequate.

It was always far better, to not have something like this be of need. Though there had been a Witch who claimed this power to be something splendid, the utmost prime and nonpareil thing in this world, he could never hold the same opinion.

Even if an ant is made to wield artillery, it can never utilize it. Ultimately, it was unsuited to it.

He was a weak, petty, lonely child who kept crying and throwing tantrums.

What the Witches in that dream tea party had stated, was correct. He was hopeless. He was weak. He could never find it. He could never use it. Both Gluttony and the Witch of Greed, who failed to comprehend that, were damned.

Just, how many times would he have to get deceived, how many times would he have to get his hope trampled underfoot, how many times would he have to get his ■ vanquished, until he learnt.

Why, after countlessly getting deceived, countlessly having his hope trampled underfoot, countlessly having his ■ vanquished, does he still think of doing it.

Return by Death, displayed all of the unpleasant fragments of the world.

It displayed the absurdities, the irrationalities, the destiny enough to make one avert one's eyes.

Yet, how come—

Subaru: "—I love, everyone."

Without noticing, with his head hanging down, kneeling down at that very spot, Subaru shouted as if casting a curse.

And upon the disgraceful grievance similar to weeping, Subaru horizontally shook his head. Whilst shaking his head horizontally, for once, at this instant, he said, converging with his words.

'Subaru': "—I love everyone. That's why, I can't stop."

Subaru: "…"

Erasing the tinge of red on his struck cheek with his fingers, Subaru stood up in Subaru's stead.

The same attire, the same expression, possessing the same face and name, 'Natsuki Subaru' , who seemed to be decisively different from his self— whilst that looked at Natsuki Subaru,

'Subaru': "The position you were put in, to be honest, even imagining its difficulty is rough. Everything completely new, starting from level 6 having the status of initial stage without the option of going back. The complaints you voice out too, I understand all of them. Because those, are wounds I have gotten to taste time and time again."

With immense powerlessness, with immense ignorance, it was a countenance that had gotten to taste that countless times. —No, he had gotten to taste that countless times.

The defeat, the agony, the grief of Death which Subaru had to taste, Subaru was aware of it all. He had witnessed it all with these eyes. He had tasted it all, with this body and ■.

Precisely because he had tasted those, precisely because he knew that was not a lie, he could not accept Subaru's words. He did not want, to accept them.

'Subaru': "Had I been strong, had I been smart, had I been more, more… it must be frustrating."

Subaru: "Speaking as if, you understand it…! About me, what the hell do you"

'Subaru': "I do know. You must also be aware of what I know. It's a pointless quarrel, actually. For both me and you."

Subaru: "—~hk."

There was no strength in his words of objection. It had been a matter of course.

An objection repels away the opponent's words, brushes them away suggesting lack of agreement, crushingly defeating them, making the statement that you are wrong. Such an intention was essential.

Subaru of now, did not have the ability to face Subaru with that.

After all, he was aware of it.

He was aware that that was no lie or deceit, but the entirety of 'Natsuki Subaru' .

Subaru: "I didn't look, at your memories or anything…"

'Subaru': "Hey you can't be doing this, after looking through one's diary as per your own convenience."

Subaru: “I didn’t look, at your memories or anything!”

Upon hearing Subaru’s seemingly sullen voice, Subaru powerfully clenched his fists.

Slapped, poured with jeers, yet not bending his approach of dialogue Subaru gave the impression of being far more mature than Subaru. Perhaps even that, was a matter of course.

After all, the truth is Subaru was supposed to be an year older than Subaru.

That too, having observed rich experiences in the different world and having personally experienced Death on multiple occasions, on top of that, having woven many bonds and acquiring the position of his current self.

But still—

Subaru: “I didn’t look, at your memories or anything… ~hk.”

Once again, once again Subaru utilized those words.

For once, right now Subaru said nothing to Subaru, who stockpiled the very same repentances. Subaru, without even seeking any response, resumed as if incoherently muttering.

Subaru: “I, wanted to have hopes for you. That you were an amazing guy, and that if I got to know the “something” which was supporting your amazing nature, I would be able to do the same thing too. But still…”

But still, he ended up knowing it.

He ended up witnessing, everything.

‘Natsuki Subaru’ had absolutely no difference from the Natsuki Subaru present here, that he was a weak and petty man, he ended up knowing that.

In the time unknown to Subaru meeting people unknown to Subaru, running past a chronicle unknown to Subaru, having witnessed a scenery unknown to Subaru, he was merely an ordinary human who had done all that.

Subaru: "—By denying you, I wanted to proclaim something plausible and fulfill it."

However, he could not do that.

Subaru: "After all, I understand your feelings. —Because you, are me."

The world 'Natsuki Subaru' had witnessed, had tasted, he had viewed it.

'Natsuki Subaru' had fallen in love with this world, with the people of this world, with Emilia and everyone else and the wounds he had accepted for them to survive, he had viewed all of that.

He had been misunderstanding. He had been misapprehending.

Since it was regarding himself, it may be appropriate to say he had conceited.

The illusion of 'Natsuki Subaru' being a superhuman, had been shattered and cast aside.

Subaru: "Yeah, I get it! I got it! Why you… why you kept standing up again and again, why you never gave up after dying again and again, is because that's all you can do!!"

Just like Subaru, Subaru had also gotten slammed into walls he could do nothing about on innumerable instances.

Upon each occasion of that, he died recurrently, repeatedly, stockpiling Deaths, amending the way he met, amending the way he connected, Subaru overcame hindrances.

That was all.

Subaru: "Can there be someone who won't stand up despite Rem telling him so much to do so?! Acting conceitedly after getting knocked by Otto, I noticed that! I always knew that dad and mom, were considerate like that! I mean, they are my dad and mom, after all!”

The scenery ‘Natsuki Subaru’ passed through, the cue essential for surmounting, not the “something” which Subaru sought but merely accumulated wishes were certainly there.

Subaru: “I love Emilia. I want her to rely on me to protect her. I want to be with her. The reason I wanted to be a knight, was so that she thought of me that way. I was happy. I want to walk outside with her without any failures, she, who is afraid of getting hated, and I want to boast around that she is someone capable of being loved by everyone! I finally had Beatrice accompany me. I want to make her happy as much as the time she had been in pain. She, has the right to be happy!”

That is why—

Subaru: “—The reason why you don’t give up, is just because you love everyone! Bloody bastard! Why aren’t you a superhuman! Why, are you still an idiotic brat!!”

‘Subaru’: “…”

Subaru: “Be strong like Reinhardt! Be someone who can do anything like Julius! If you can’t do that then be useful like Ferris! How about exceeding in a single thing like Wilhelm-san?! Choose even one, for you to…”

By taking time and even experiencing agony, what he realized was merely that.

That ‘Natsuki Subaru’ was an ordinary human, that he possessed only the cards which were the same as what Subaru did, that he extremely lacked skill in properly utilizing them, that neither did he have good fortune when it came to victory and defeat.

Even, a single one of just those—

Subaru: “Any single one of them…”

With a powerless voice, having forfeited all spirit, he whispered.

Any single one of them, even a single one of them, grasping tightly the hand incapable of wielding anything.

Subaru: "…You, are Louis, aren't you."

With a husky voice, he uttered a query unrelated to what he had said till now.

Listening to that, Subaru, who had remained silent for long nodded, saying "Ah".

'Subaru': "No. I'm not Louis. Unfortunately, I won't say even that. I'd rather not have her disturbing. You don't need an explanation for her personality being the worst, do you?"

Subaru: "Yeah… I guess, so."

Responding with a meagre, feeble voice, Subaru hid his own face with his arms.

Concealing that his throat had shriveled up due to his howling up until the previous moment, oozily, pain started to well up in his fist which had hit Subaru.

If this was the Hall of Memories, then Subaru's body could not be stated to be a real entity here, is how it was supposed to be, and yet, it was absurd that he could feel pain.

—Yes, pain, Death, was ever absurd and ever difficult to bear.

That was accurately why, the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, Louis Arneb was mistaken.

The thought of wishing for that by one's own accord, was unmistakably mistaken.

Subaru: "…Why did you, disappear."

'Subaru': "Hm?"

Subaru: "Why did you vanish away. You disappeared, that caused, so many hardships…"

The impetus of the ever present incomprehension, and the origin of everything.

The reason why 'Natsuki Subaru' disappeared, and Natsuki Subaru was born.

Just what happened to the body of 'Natsuki Subaru' , who had disappeared alongside his memories.

Subaru: "The reason why you disappeared…"

'Subaru': "…That was a total miss on my part. I entered Taygeta with the intention of finding a way to capture Reid. Then, through the series of events, it was all great till I found Reid's book, but…"

Subaru: "…Then, Reid's book turned out to be empty."

'Subaru': "Then I was put in the same bowl as Gluttony. The rest is, you probably get it even without me having to say it."

Scratching his head, Subaru looked back onto his own shame.

Encountering Louis Arneb in the Hall of Memories, 'Natsuki Subaru' had gotten Memories stolen. And, forgetting all of his life in the different world until that point, his self, of course, created Natsuki Subaru who could not apprehend the feelings of the people around him.

'Subaru': "Don't depreciate yourself like that… Would be difficult even if I tell you so, huh. After all, you are me."

Subaru: "…'Natsuki Subaru' is a weak, petty, irredeemable huge idiot."

'Subaru': "That's not wrong."

Subaru: "But."

'Subaru': "—?"

Whilst making a wry smile and gesturing his agreement, Subaru raised his eyebrows in response to Subaru, who had whispered powerlessly.

While looking at that Subaru, Subaru voiced the continuance of the words he had held back.

That was—

Subaru: "—You are, an amazing guy, 'Natsuki Subaru' ."

—That was, his honest opinion lacking all exaggeration, having witnessed him Return by Death greater than twenty times.

2

Whilst looking at the man before him, he steadily narrowed his eyes.

With a face he was used to looking at, with a face he was tired of looking at, a face he thought that was even was distressful to look at, it was his own self. It was his own self, it was not his own self, though it was his own self, he did not believe it to be his own self.

That face had a reaction as if having been pricked with something unanticipated for the first time, it was gratifying.

Subaru: "…The closest person, huh."

There were not many humans who loved their own self from the bottom of their heart.

Subaru particularly belonged to that category, and Subaru hated himself. Perhaps 'Natsuki Subaru' was no different in that regard either. —Subaru, Subaru, hated himself.

However, as the closest person, when Natsuki Subaru saw 'Natsuki Subaru' , to say this would be exceedingly embarrassing but, so cool, was the thought that crossed his mind.

Subaru: "I respect you, who is weak, hopeless, unable to do anything, but still, continues to struggle, and loves them. That's why—”

‘Subaru’: “…”

Subaru: “—The meaning of me, reading your Book of the Dead, was there.”

He had not opened up the Book of the Dead merely in order to gnash his weakness, to grieve the cease of trails, to slam grudges on his self who had the same face as his own self.

Of course, neither was it to have the megalomania of following up to the superhuman Natsuki Subaru’s roots and attaining unparalleled strength, granted.

What he sought was learning that ‘Natsuki Subaru’ was merely human, his deeds, his path.

Subaru: “…You sure are a guy, who says embarrassing stuff suddenly, you.”

Subaru, who had remained frozen by Subaru’s oration until then, abruptly came alive.

Subaru had his eyes narrowed at the ill humor— no, in a state of feeling somewhat awkward, he sharply gazed at Subaru and slowly stretched his fingers ahead,

‘Subaru’: “It’s pretty questionable for me to say it myself, but you sure can say all that after having looked back onto my entirety up until now. Now that it’s mentioned, it’s Natsuki Subaru Starting Life in a Different World from Zero, you know.”

Subaru: “Ah, it feels so weird to have the leading actor’s name be the same as yourself.”

‘Subaru’: “It’s better than having the heroine have the same name as your mom, isn’t it… No, not that.”

Unreservedly reciprocating persiflage, Subaru exchanged a gaze with Subaru.

Subaru, who somewhat seemed to have tasted an under-shoulder swing down, he pointed at himself with his hand and,

‘Subaru’: “I had said all that earlier, but is this seriously okay? The possibility of me being a fake of Louis is not supposed to have completely disappeared, you know.”

Subaru: “It has disappeared. You didn’t revert even after I seriously hit you.”

‘Subaru’: “I mean, to revert back by that is just in the case of Yanagisawa’s copy ability…”

As per Subaru’s objections, that could not truly be used as rationale.

However, at that point in time, Subaru had let go of his skepticism regarding Subaru.

The reason for that was perhaps what Subaru had commented earlier.

For argument’s sake, even if Louis Arneb ate away one’s life away from head to toe without sparing a single part, he believed that she would not be able to reconstruct that face, that voice.

Because she did not have the ability to comprehend blessedness, felicity, happiness.

That is why—

Subaru: “She, who loved nobody, cannot understand the emotion of Returning by Death for the sake of someone you love.”

‘Subaru’: “…”

Subaru before his eyes kept silent, as Subaru took a long, painful inhale.

Now that he had voiced it out, it was terribly stale, naught but sweet nothings pleasing to hear, nothing more. Yet he had been unable to discover any other responses.

That is why the Subaru before his eyes was unquestionably 'Natsuki Subaru' .

Subaru: "Why are you, here? Were you waiting, for me?"

He recognized the Subaru before his eyes to be possessing the same roots as himself.

On top of that, the doubt surfacing in his mind, was regarding the two Subaru happening upon each other here.

Upon that question of Subaru's, Subaru firmly stepped on the pure white floor,

'Subaru': "The reason why you and I met each other here, is because this place is the sole point of contact between you and me."

Subaru: "The point of contact, between you and me…"

'Subaru': "The reason me, who has Memories within the tower, and you, who doesn't have Memories, crossed over is just because of the Book of the Dead of this area. Both ahead of this and before this, you and I couldn't have met each other."

Subaru: "—. On second thought, let's go back to the first question. Why, are you here?"

Without digesting the explanation Subaru gave, Subaru, once again, cast the same question.

Strictly speaking, he could not comprehend the logic behind the two Subaru coming across each other here. It ended up being that Subaru, who possessed Memories, and Subaru, who did not possess Memories, both existed alongside each other.

—The rules of the formation of a Book of the Dead, its intricacies were unknown.

Now that if it were to be mentioned, the book of 'Natsuki Subaru' piling up the count of deaths up until now was strange in itself. Precisely that was a phenomenon which if the Deaths of 'Natsuki Subaru' were not being observed from outside of the world, it would not come into existence.

Did that mean, that Od Lagna fulfilled the role of that observer.

Subaru: “But if that’s the case then Louis, who was in the Hall of Memories, if she had been observing Return by Death, I don’t know for what reason she would be in such high spirits. If she can recognize that from the outside…”

‘Subaru’: “She may be staying in the Hall of Memories, but she can’t be its ruler. It’s ruler is… probably a guy even more nasty, I think. If you consider it from this situation.”

Subaru: “I get it when you say it’s a nasty guy. The one most plausible is…”

Halting words there for once, Subaru and Subaru collectively stated.

“—The Sage Flugel.”

They called that, to be the ill-natured utmost plausible personage.

The personage who had connections to the establishment of this Pleiades Watchtower, installing a Trial such that Reid was placed in it, furthermore, imposing an ascetic of unknown termination upon Shaula for four hundred years.

In all honesty, Shaula was pitiable. If it would be possible, then he wanted to snatch her away from that master of her’s.

Subaru: “Then, the reason for my self, both possessing and not possessing Memories existing alongside is…”

‘Subaru’: “—. That’s the type of question difficult to find an answer for. Since I am here, and you are here”

Subaru: “That’s just how, it is, huh…?”

Whilst feeling a sense of unease, catching Subaru’s words, Subaru drew his chin in.

The truth is it had been the kind of question lacking a question setter. Even if theories of some kind were to be arrived at, in the end, they could never provide the answer.

If this question must be investigated thoroughly, and the answer must be found, then it was—

Subaru: “As long as you truly aren’t Louis Arneb, it shouldn’t be a problem.”

‘Subaru’: “That’s a pretty bothersome way to confirm. Do you, really trust me?”

Subaru: “I trust you I trust you. If you let me hit you one more time on the other side, I’ll trust you more.”

‘Subaru’: “Is that so. I wouldn’t say it’s the best bargain, you know.”

Interchanging frivolous dialogue in a relaxed manner, Subaru shrugged his shoulders at Subaru’s words.

The cowardly way of conversation for delaying the core of the dialogue like this, with other people aside, but when it was used with oneself it got seen through far too easily.

That is why, Subaru took it upon himself and for the third time, fired the same question.

Subaru: “He~y, another me. —For what purpose, are you here?”

‘Subaru’: “…”

Subaru: “You must also be knowing, I won’t listen to something like that.”

Upon Subaru’s attitude, who opted for reticence, Subaru whispered with his black eyes straitened. Even after hearing that, he did not return back persiflage similar to the one until now.

Instead of that, what levitated in Subaru’s black eyes was the radiance that had always been present since the beginning.

Perhaps that was, often called, what is known as, the feeling of guilt

‘Subaru’: “—Hey, what do you think will happen, in unification of memories?”

That was why, Subaru had deliberately asked that question cheerfully.

3

“—In the pattern of a conversation about this trick, what would be the normal answer, huh.”

“I have no idea. Clearly, it feels like something which has no answer to it.”

“To be honest, you seem to be the more knowledgeable one here, do you know about any rules that would be advantageous to know about which I don’t?”

“You read the book dissecting me, didn’t you. It’s as likely as not.”

“As likely as not, huh.”

“As likely as not.”

“…If you and I carelessly bump into each other and one eliminates the other, if it’s something like that, what will you do?”

“Don’t say all that. Whatever you think when you’re anxious, generally I also think the same when I’m anxious, that’s why.”

“That’s that. Then, no hard feelings no matter which one wins, hm?”

“No, I sure will be crazy bitter. And so if I’ll be bitter, then that means you’ll be bitter too.”

“Well, I guess so. That’s, probably right. Hm, pretty shallow-■ed huh.”

“What did you say?”

“Pretty shallow-■ed… huh, is something wrong?”

“…No, I just probably misheard, I guess.”

“…”

“Ah, that’s right. There are some things you may wonder about their possibility, so there are some things I want to tell you, can I?”

“Well, since you’ve heard everything I’ve said up till now go right ahead and say anything.”

“Originally, you were more informed than me regarding this world… though that advantage has more or less disappeared by me reading the Book of the Dead, there are some things that have changed a bit, you know?”

“Things that have changed?”

“After losing Memories, I talked to everyone, I got to know everyone… it’s the story of Natsuki Subaru Starting Life in a Different World from Zero you don’t know about.”

“…”

“First up, Meili, okay. She’s a bit, in various ways, saddled with bombs upon herself so it’s rough but she understands if you talk to her so please, properly talk to her. I’m imagining Meili-senpai to be pretty angry right now.”

“Yeah, got it.”

“And then, there’s this huge scorpion wandering about inside the tower, but it’s true identity is Shaula. That makes things really dangerous but… she’s not doing that, because she wants to. Please, help her too.”

“Yeah, got it.”

“Oh, by the way, I forgot to say this, but when I met Louis I got my back kicked hard by Rem. Back then, I didn't remember Rem, so it was only after I read the book did I recall what kind of a girl Rem was, but… hmm, as expected, that had been my Rem."

"No, it's my Rem, you know."

"No, mine."

"Mine."

"…"

"…"

"Ram had said. That when the season of snowmelt arrives, things invisible will be visible and will surely show their faces… As expected of her."

"Yeah, I guess so."

"About that guy Julius… well, it'll be fine even if I don't say anything, isn't it. He's not that unreliable, that I must tell you something about him."

"Yeah, agreed."

"Thank you, for apologizing, to dad, and mom."

"Yeah, hm."

"Thank you, for saving Otto, and Garfiel."

"Yeah."

"Thank you, for saving Petra, Frederica, and everyone from Earlham Village."

"Yeah."

"Thank you, for taking Beatrice out, and holding her hand."

"…"

“Emilia…”

“…”

“Thank you, for falling in love, with Emilia. I also, love her. I really love her.”

“…Yeah, I know.”

“—Natsuki Subaru. You are an amazing guy, I sincerely know that, if it’s you then it’ll certainly be alright.”

“Yeah.”

“…”

“Hm… I guess so.”

“…”

“Yeah. —If it’s us, then it’ll certainly be alright.”

4

“Yeah, that’s right. Yeah, it’ll be alright.”

“You, are amazing, I sincerely know that.”

“…Yeah, but, hm. I have to say, that.”

“…”

“—Looks like my summer vacation is, over.”

Chapter 75:
Louis Arneb

—Want to become, happy.

1

—What are termed as the positives and negatives of life, are great gambles determined by birth and environment.

That had been the philosophy Louis Arneb acquired, upon the extremity of eating and hunting down the lives of innumerable humans, as the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony.

Louis Arneb, was the youngest sister among the three siblings who were Sin Archbishops affixed with Gluttony.

By nature, contrary to the scale and unsound state of control of its activity, was the Witch Cult with surprisingly unascertained true state of affairs, though much regarding the Sin Archbishops especially was enveloped in mystery.

Although the principal source for that was that the majority of people who happened upon them had lost their lives, the ones to have their names well known even amongst Sin Archbishops— no, it is past tense, so the ones who "had their names well known" must have been the two of Sloth and Greed.

Aside from those, even if it was identified that the Sin Archbishops of Wrath and Lust, and finally, Gluttony existed, for several years it had been fogged with enigmas what kind of a bunch they were. Much less, the very existence of Louis Arneb, the youngest sister among the trio of siblings of Gluttony, save for fellow Sin Archbishops being the only exception, was unknown.

The concealed Sin Archbishop, that had been the position Louis Arneb stood at.

"Well, it's not as if we wished for it, you know."

So whispered Louis, stretching her legs within the white space she had been in since birth.

Impotently, Louis could not exit this white space, and did not have the ability to meet anyone. Unable to avail the Authority of Gluttony anywhere except in the location where it was highly restricted as well, it was what is called an unused treasured possession to her.

However, thanks to her two elder brothers, only when it came to meals was she not incapacitated.

That was because the Memories and Names her elder brothers ate—that is to say, the lives of others, she could unassociatedly snitch that food and be able to fulfill her hunger.

“Why, do we have to be like this?”

Fulfilling her hunger through her elder brothers’ leftovers, whilst indulging in the lives of others, Louis, who was having her self-identity molded and taking form little by little, immediately discerned that she was in circumstances entirely different from others.

Without a body that could be free, what she could operate was merely consciousness.

Though she possessed the Memories of having walked, she possessed no experience of having walked. That was, the defective article known as herself.

“Ah… we are, in such unhappy circumstances.”

That was how Louis recognized to herself, that she was in a Sorrowful environment.

And, she understood these circumstances shan’t change, regardless how much she lamented.

In order to console their younger sister lost adrift within such sorrow, her elder brothers seemingly vied with each other and ate. And provided their little sister, the platters same as what they had eaten themselves.

Those platters which her elder brothers served to her, were brimming with respective individuality.

Lye, who named himself Gourmet, loved lives with strong flavors for both better or worse.

Roy, of Bizarre Eating, anyhow gave precedence to amount, becoming entranced for fulfilling hunger with off-flavors.

From Louis' perspective, if she had to say then she had been able to enjoy the platters chosen by Lye on numerous occasions, but on numerous occasions she had also made gains from the platters chosen by Roy, who ate and hunted in an unprincipled manner.

Chewing and digesting eleventy lives, comparing flavors by rolling them atop her tongue and within her mind, what she came to understand. —That was, the difference in the absolute amount of Joyfulness.

Louis, who possessed the power to compare the lives of others through her own sense of values, graded various items such as the difference of wealth and poverty or the presence or absence of affection, from the environment of growth to family and friends, the existence of lovers, through a formula based on their extent, awarding scores to the lives of others from one to the next, and continued rating.

For being prosperous by birth. For being loved by parents and siblings. For living a life sailing smooth without any trials or tribulations. For having a great number of friends, who could be reached out to in times of difficulty. For possessing overflowing talent, such that it was possible to stand above all others.

Either this or that or this or that, regardless of fortune and misfortune, countless reasons, such that some could be discarded.

Though it was an idea terribly prideful and conceited, Louis possessed the Authority to make it attainable.

If it were to be expressed in alternate words, that was equivalent to the act of peeping onto the screen of a game other people were playing, complaining and pointing out they should've done this and they should've done that all whilst ridiculing them.

Knocking disdain and mockery across the entire screen, she criticized the lives of others as per her own conveniences as a bystander. Showering jeers as well, striking frank impressions lacking all distinction between likes and dislikes as well, all to her own contentment.

Those were Louis' deeds. Rating as per her principles, egoistic abuse and slander.

However, that which she enjoyed at first, soon turned wearisome as well.

That was natural. What Louis could do, was to review the Memories passed onto her, she could not interfere with anything further. She did not possess the ability to speak of the present and the future.

Even if she tried to speak ill of or correct the gameplay of others, there was nobody who would lend an ear to what she would point out, that is why she lost her initial amusement.

To incessantly look at the play of unskillful humans, was close to torture rather than just being tedious.

"Even though if allowed to, then we would do it so much much mu~ch better. Because each and every single one is incompetent."

Despite possessing feet to walk their own life, despite having arms to cut through distress, despite owning a head to picture the future, all of the other people were brainless.

Louis' elder brothers, Lye and Roy were no exceptions to that either. Rather, they could be called the incarnation of ineptitude.

If Memories would be peeped into, it could be well understood what that life failed at, and at what point was it unable to recover. All of them, accumulated failures terribly simple and trivial.

Why would one stumble at such a spot, Louis was unable to comprehend at all.

“Incompetent, incompetent, incompetent. If you’re going to live irresponsibly, then hand it over to us, that life. We will do it way way wa~y better. Everyone everyone everyone, is too brainless.”

From one to the next, Lives ought to be felt contempt for were itemized in the form of platters.

Chewing and digesting numerous, multitudinous of them, Louis was overwhelmed with rage, and became nauseous.

Without realizing such emotions of Louis’ ■, her elder brothers, who successively resumed eating for fulfilling their own desires, she also felt irritated at. Without even feeling anxious for their younger sister, who was making a nauseous expression, the folly of continuing to provide filled platters incessantly, what could she possibly detest could she not detest that.

“—Ah, we are, we are, even now even now, feeling nauseous, you know.”

That was the reason why Louis Arneb, named herself Satiation.

The starvation not fulfilled no matter how much is eaten.

For what was starved was not her body, but her ■.

2

—Want to become, happy.

—Want to become happy. Want to become happy. Want to become happy. Want to become happy.

3

“—Ahahahaha! This is, this is the feeling of walking outside, isn’t it! Both onii-chan and nii-sama, doing this the whole time… a~h, unfair unfair unfair!”

Within the enforced confinement, her shackled self-consciousness followed the lone road to expansion.

Just as eating facilitated healthy growth amongst humans, while being provided with platters unwished for as well, Louis underwent favorable growth vigorously.

The same was also the case with Lye and Roy, her two elder brothers.

Her elder brothers too, had their own ego enlarge rampantly, having their ■ feel greater zeal for meals. The insensible food selection by such elder brothers of hers, Louis anyhow felt irritated by.

That change had been, a byproduct of Louis’ such growth, and irritation.

“This is the air of outside! This is the water of outside! This is the soil of outside! This is the blood of outside! A~h, amazing amazing amazing! It’s real! It’s rea~l!”

Lying sprawled on bare earth, whilst lovingly licking the soil, having his fill of the world with his entire body was a young boy—no, though that very flesh body belonged to the personage who named himself as Lye Batenkaitos, the content within it was disparate.

It was not Lye wielding the right of control over that flesh body, and moving about freely.

Believed to possess the fate of being unable to leave the white world congenitally, Louis Arneb— the Sin Archbishop of tragedy, it was her form having broken through the white cage for the first time.

It had been a coincidence.

Certainly, she did not think the Authority possessed such an ability. Or perhaps Louis' craving spirit had stimulated the Authority to bloom instead, there was no definite answer. Neither was it momentous.

What was momentous, was that this had been realized. —That she, had walked outside.

"Ahahahaha! Ahahahahahaha!"

Intervening between her restricted reality, Louis grandly guffawed for the fruit it bore.

It had become possible for her to borrow her elder brothers' bodies, and independently manipulate that body, that Authority.

And—

"Huh? Lye, just what is the meaning of this. While putting on airs as something like Gourmet and being fastidious, are you sure you didn't get too hungry and go crazy?"

"A~hahaha! That's wrong that's wrong, that's completely wrong. That's wrong anyway, as that's wrong, that's certainly wrong, as that's certainly wrong, that is wrong, because that's wrong!"

"…"

"We are, Witch Cult Sin Archbishop representing Gluttony, Louis Arneb."

Saying so, Louis gave greetings to the baffled Roy Alphard, using the body of Lye Batenkaitos.

For this had been the first time ever since she was born, did she get to even converse with her elder brothers, after all.

"It's the cute, cute little sister, the third sibling of onii-chan and nii-sama. Please be loving, please be doting, please be well wishing, and please be caring, okay?”

4

—Want to become, happy.

—Want to become happy. Want to become happy. Want to become happy. Want to become happy.

—Want to become happy. Want to become happy.

5

By borrowing the bodies of her elder brothers, she acquired a method to meddle with the outside world.

Her elder brothers’ supply of food did not halt, and as always, never did she suffer with hunger.

However, such long awaited opportunities, and jumping out into the outside world she much yearned for, Louis Arneb grew tired of it before long. —She ended up growing tired it.

“Outside is pretty boring, more than what we tho~ught.”

In the end, a borrowed body was a borrowed body.

There lay no change in the fact that the real form of her self, who was unable to be free, was trapped inside the white world.

Rather, by firmly making certain of her shadow, she strangled her throat by herself.

“In the end, something like life… is not what you eat, or how much you eat. Who you eat with, and yet.”

Her elder brothers, were living lives of their own. For that must be, why they were not seeking it.

Louis alone, had been dispossessed of her own life. For that must be, why she was eternally seeking it.

“Want to become, happy.”

Within the white world, whilst untidily scattering around countless Memories, she wished for that with all her ■.

That could have perhaps been the greatest— or the sole desire, of Louis Arneb.

“Want to become happy.”

A desire unfulfilled.

Unfading regardless of her borrowing the bodies of her elder brothers, or kicking others as per her liking.

Albeit tasting rich Lives and getting drunk on momentary pleasures, it all perished immediately.

“Want to become happy.”

She grew tired of it. She had grown tired of it.

She wished for a life, which belonged to herself, and her alone. She wished for a body, a soul, a destiny.

“Want to become happy.”

Louis was sorrowful.

The origin of Louis’ sorrow, was that nowhere present a life which was her own.

“Want to become happy.”

However, at the same time, Louis knew herself.

Even if her fickle natured, easily resigning self attained a life that suddenly appeared before her, it would be inconceivable for her to be satisfied by that. After all, she had known.

In this world lay countless lives, in them lay the absolute amount of joyfulness, and they were primarily determined upon the result of the incorrigible great gambles.

In what way would things play out for a human belonging to a poor residence born into the harsh Holy Kingdom of Gusteko.

In what way would things play out for a human weak by birth born into Vollachia Empire, which valued warriors.

In what way would things play out for a slow-footed nitwit born into Kararagi City States, which expected perpetual progress.

In what way would things play out for a mixed race, a silver haired half devil born into the Kingdom of Lugnica, which was spoiled by ancient customs.

By possessing the selves of others, Louis was aware that they would not have a decent time.

However, to say joyfulness would be being affluent in those aspects, would be an immense mistake as well.

Being born into the household of a great priest in the Holy Kingdom of Gusteko, being born into the household of a general in Vollachia Empire, being born into the household of a distinguished merchant in Kararagi City States, being born into the household of any kind of an influential noble in the Kingdom of Lugnica, as one looked upward it continued without cease.

Louis, did not want to be inferior. She wanted to be affluent. She did not want to be looked down upon.

She had continued rating the lives of others.

Within those, naturally the lives who had received the worst evaluation, but withal the lives who had received the highest evaluation, it was not as if all of the items to be graded within them were the greatest. Even those highest evaluated lives, she could not gain satisfaction by.

"A~h, want to become happy."

—Lye and Roy, around that time, discovered a novel transfiguration of the Authority, Eclipse.

The ability the Authority of Gluttony was endowed with, was the ability to plunder the Memories, the Names, from others, chewing and digesting them. Applying that in practical use, the Authority of Solar Eclipse and Lunar Eclipse which reconstructed the plundered populace.

Drawing out techniques or knowledge from the Memories of others, and using them as one's own belonging, Lunar Eclipse.

To the utmost it drew out skills, not the benefits of the likes of physical abilities, so the possibility of not utilizing that power perfectly was high.

Conversely, Solar Eclipse used the captured Name as foundation, and reconstructed the person's existence in its entirety, completely reconstructing the techniques polished by that flesh body, it could manifest strength to its maximum.

As an ability, it went without saying that Solar Eclipse was overwhelmingly excelling, but her two elder brothers preferred to exercise not Solar Eclipse, but Lunar Eclipse. —No, perhaps it would be more accurate to say that they feared using Solar Eclipse, and found it repugnant.

According to Lye and Roy’s cognizance, Solar Eclipse seemed to drag along the thinking in the flesh body which had transformed.

That sensation felt as if their selves were being damaged, it was unendurable, was the two’s reasoning. Hearing what her elder brothers had to say, Louis, from the bottom of her ■, found it to be utterly ludicrous.

Despite even possessing their own flesh bodies, despite standing on a position where even their person had been established, to not be able to preserve their selves possessing firm beliefs, how deficient and puny must that self-consciousness be.

It was no jest to assume the airs of being more sorrowful than her, who possessed no flesh body of her own, did not have even her siblings be cognizant of her existence for greater than ten years, and had, at last, grown tired of even the sourness and sweetness of life.

The Authority of Solar Eclipse was very much splendid. Rather, for Louis it was convenient.

It would be no misstatement to say that precisely this was the power Louis Arneb longed for.

—Louis Arneb was craving for a life belonging to her alone, that too, a life which was the greatest.

That was unlike her elder brothers’ self-pleasure, who gained contentment by eating the lives of others and capturing Memories. A right further refined and ubiquitous— Louis, wanted to live.

Birth could not be chosen.

That was the entire source of what brought forth sorrowful humans. However, Louis was different.

Louis, had acquired the power, the opportunity, to choose her birth, her life. She could heist the Memories of others, reconstruct them by way of Solar Eclipse, and make it to be her own belonging.

She had the ability, to choose life. —Everything, she could choose again.

She shall be fastidious, seeking the greatest Memories and Name which she was yet to see.

Though there had been some aligned favorably amongst what all Lye and Roy had eaten, they had not been perfect. There had been a dearth of novelty and ingenuity.

Happy homes, tender parents, wealthy livelihoods and rich environments, magnificent friends and seemingly destined companions, all of it seemed naught but "happiness which had seemingly been seen somewhere else".

She was searching for not that, but the greatest life.

Having the ability to choose as per one's liking, did not coincide with the fact that one would not get tired of what one was choosing. Getting tired of the countless platters lined up before her eyes, what could she possibly find enjoyable.

Louis Arneb, was searching for the greatest life. —She had been searching.

6

—That is why, when she happened upon Natsuki Subaru, Louis' chest pulsated intensely.

"Oho? Onii-san is… umm, Natsuki Subaru was it?"

To be precise, it did not throb the instant she had met him.

Natsuki Subaru’s outward appearance was not to Louis’ taste, to make it throb the instant of meeting him.

From start, though it seemed a face not to her taste, in accordance with the sense of values cultivated within Louis, the beauty which a vast majority of humans pictured would precisely be the face Louis would seek.

In that sense, there did not exist even a single atom which would throb for Natsuki Subaru’s outward appearance.

Moreover, from Louis’ perspective Natsuki Subaru was certainly a personage she had already known, but he was not someone she had been attentive of simply because he was in the Memories of others.

Though it was something not requiring much thought, the Memories present within Louis went up to enormous numbers. It was not simple to draw out the intended Memories from within that.

All the more when the opponent was one she held no interest in.

The reason why Louis yet recollected the opponent’s name at a single glance was because, not Louis, but one of her elder brothers — Lye Batenkaitos had been considerably attached to that name.

If not mistaken, then there had been something mightily attached to Natsuki Subaru amongst the platters Lye had eaten.

‘—’

“This place? This place you see, is the cradle of Od Lagna… the Hall of Memories. The place where the souls of dead people are filtered. As it’s rare for a person to come here maintaining one’s self, you shall be welcomed, onii-san. We, have too much boredom at hand, you see.”

Smiling sinisterly, Louis gave a warm reception to the visit of the rare guest.

Truth be told, there lay no dishonesty in those feelings of welcome. Louis longed for others, quite a bit.

The birthplace of Louis Arneb, the white world she could not leave, the Hall of Memories.

The reason why Louis was aware that this place had been designated that title, that the gigantic existence of unknown disposition was a workshop of such an enormous scale, was the result of her generally mobilizing the knowledge of the Memories which Lye or Roy had eaten and hunted down.

Within the ones fallen prey to the Authority of Gluttony, there had been many wise men who, in reality, had done great studies which would remain for posterity, and had made historical findings. Without seeing the light of day, they had settled into the sole of the bellies of the three Gluttony siblings, but they were profoundly serving Louis.

In all honesty, Louis was not at all interested in the reason why she was born here, or why she was confined here.

Neither would there be any means to dispel those doubts, nor did she find it to be meaningful. She had assented it as that's just how things were. Even if she was suddenly taken into the outside world at this point, it would have merely been troublesome in its own way.

The day she shall leave this place, must be the day she has discovered the greatest life.

'—'

"Awa! Sorry sorry, name giving was still left, isn't it! But, do forgive! After all, introducing like this while being sober doesn't happen often in this place, you see!"

'—'

"Well then, guess it's introduction one more ti~me! —We are Witch Cult Sin Archbishop representing Gluttony, Louis Arneb."

'—'

"Don't know if it'll be for a long time or short, but please be caring, okay, onii-san?”

The opponent was exceedingly surprised and distressed with regards to Louis, who named herself in that manner.

Obviously enough, standardly, humans who step afoot here do not possess the aim of coming here. Though occasionally there are some who thus slip in, Louis considered that as something like lost souls — rephrasing, the consequence of near-death experiences.

A situation where the Soul was easily separated from the flesh body, or a situation where it had come unstuck, perhaps.

From their perspectives, such situations were close to the feeling of being summoned out of the blue by Od Lagna.

If that were to be considered, possibly, Louis’ role was something like a guide who quelled the turmoil of people who had experienced near-death, and elucidated what this place was.

If that were to be considered as being atop Od Lagna’s invisible palm, that was, again, infuriating.

Of course, being looked down upon, but Louis also despised being directed.

That was the same as Od Lagna, an existence for whom that perpetually was the usual state of things. Louis did not want her life, which yet remained to commence, to be distorted by the interference of anyone but Louis.

“Eh? Of course we do know? Lye and Roy… onii-chan and nii-sama, right? Ah, ah, don’t get so excited, onii-san! As the two are just devoted to their little sister, you know.”

‘—’

“The two of them devouring here and there too, part of it is for our sake. They lack brains, and don’t have a grasp on our preferences at all either, but they are being considerate. Probably, isn’t it. But it can’t be helped, isn’t it. After all, all three of us have never even been together.”

‘—’

“By borrowing onii-chan or nii-sama’s body, you see, we have gone outside a wee bit on times, you know? But, when we do that the one lending his body goes to sleep and can’t be met, is what that means! That’s why, all three of us have never been together. Awa, spilled that out.”

Enumerating whilst speaking rapidly in somewhat agitation, Louis carefully observed the opponent’s reaction.

Slight panic, just a smidgen of daze. Somewhat preponderant rage, and a fairly strong sense of purpose. What was perplexed at first, had now regained presence of mind, possessing the ambience of trying to proceed ahead logically.

“He~h…”

Not bad, with that thought in her innermost ■, Louis licked her lips.

Whether it should be labelled as being accustomed to diving into scenes of carnage, he was suitably fast in adapting to situations. If observed and compared with the impression she had received at first, that was quite a mismatching attribute.

That which varied greatly from the original attribute, a posteriori, too was an attribute compelled into polishing.

What lay at its origin, Louis incited her appetite with interest, and alongside—

“—Ah, there it is there it is. This is it, right, onii-san.”

Whilst conversing, what Louis towed out were certain Memories.

The greatest reason why Lye, through a single platter which Lye had indulged in, was attached to the juvenile before her eyes. Reeling in and collecting the Memories mightily, potently calling out to that existence, Louis synchronized with them.

“—Awa.”

At that precise moment, her breathing was obturated by feelings of love overflowing out in the interior of her chest.

Welling up unaware of any bounds, the feelings of love for the juvenile within her sight. He was so beloved, so beloved, so in love with, it was unbearable. Louis’ small chest hottened, and her entire body throbbed with a sweet premonition.

With her eyes moist, her breaths sweet and warm, her lips smiled.

And—

“Please don’t make such an anxious face. —Subaru-kun.”

—Upon that instant, there existed mighty, potent rejection.

‘—!!’

Honing his eyes whilst maintaining his rage, Natsuki Subaru charged ahead and pounced.

Though she possessed the impulse to accept his outbursting self by spreading both her arms wide, she somehow immobilized that and sharply crawled into his chest in accordance with Memories.

Catching ahold of the juvenile’s arms with smooth movement, pulling him towards herself she gave him a twisting throw. With a flesh body which was not a real object, hallucinating the sound of his bones creaking, the juvenile, giving rise to a roar of anguish, was held down onto the white floor by her.

‘—’

“Please stop. If you throw yourself so bravely, it will be embarrassing. —Something like that.”

Utilizing the Memories which thought lovingly of the juvenile, she held the juvenile down through sheer force. With her sadistic ■ fulfilled, she ended up relaxing the edges of her mouth. As if giving further satisfaction to that desire to afflict belonging to Louis' ■, frantically continuing to scream was Natsuki Subaru's voice, as he twisted his body.

His form, earnestly calling for rage for the sake of someone else—upon that, incidentally, Louis tilted her head.

"—Onii-san, why do you remember the Memories we had stolen?"

It had been an unnatural response.

Perceiving that whilst holding him down, Louis greatly twisted her neck.

The Memories eaten by Gluttony did not remain extant within the person concerned, the Names eaten by Gluttony did not remain extant within other people. That is because the Authority tore them off from the Soul, which defined existence in the world.

The proper cleansing of the Soul by Od Lagna, which was practiced in the Hall of Memories — arbitrarily acting as its agent, and stealthily deceiving, plundering and harvesting was what the Authority of Gluttony was.

Therefore, the Memories and Names snavelled by Gluttony did not remain extant within anyone. Restrictively, though there had been ones who had only Memories, only Names stolen away, respective negative effects got applied.

If the Memories were stolen then said person, if the Name was stolen then other people, could no longer remember the person concerned. That could not be altered as long as the disposition of the Soul remained within the protection of Od Lagna.

Yet, Natsuki Subaru did remember.

The ingredient, the soul which had been rendered naked, having both sides of Memories and Name gotten stolen.

Despite not being supposed to be able to remember it. Why, why, why—.

‘—’

“We may have developed a bit of interest in onii-san now. Though it seems onii-chan will resent us.”

Licking her lips, Louis dyed her cheeks with welling passion.

It was the opponent Lye had been attached to. To have that food snitched detachedly from the side, would surely make even Lye take befitting offence. Though Lye was actually quite soft and sweet to his little sister, the major premise of him listening to her selfishness was to the utmost until they did not cross each other’s appetite.

Appetite was, Gluttony was, the meaning of living for Louis, for Lye, and for Roy as well.

To have that be invaded arbitrarily could not let their ■ remain calm.

“If a dear platter that has been looked forward to is usurped, even if by a sibling, even killing them would be something that can’t be helped, isn’t it. —Ah, but, how irresistible, onii-san.”

Whilst twisting his arms behind his back, she drew her lips closer to the nape of the juvenile pushed onto the floor.

It was something alike the form of the spirit with no true substance. She could not sense the taste of sweat from him, who was in the state of mere Soul. Though by nature, even pain was something similar to hallucination, she did not intend to expressly inform him.

Merely, the feelings of love she wanted to be in contact with erupted. —It seemed the owner of these Memories had been attached to this juvenile greater than what was appropriate. She could feel that strongly.

“Well, right now that goes for us.”

Should it even be a hearsay Memory, now that it had been stored like this, it belonged to her.

She could slightly understand Lye or Roy's feeling of fear for Eclipse. She held no fear, but she did understand that the two's premonition was correct. —Perhaps, if she continued at this pace,

"We, will certainly end up loving onii-san, isn't it."

'—'

"…E~h? Nauseating you say, that is so ha~rsh. Because despite everything we are still a girl, even though we mustered up courage and confessed, how cruel. Ah, you're acting violently again. That won't do, onii-san. It won't hurt so please calm down, okay?"

'—'

"There's no way we would hurt onii-san, you know. After all, he is so beloved. That's why calm your ■."

No matter her tenderly addressing him in an effort to calm him down, she faced opposition through frantic meagre movement.

With the name of the Memories called countless times, Louis had her entire body tremble with a sensation terribly ecstatic. This ecstasy, could only be tasted from a personage remembering one who had their Name stolen.

Namely, a flavor which Louis had never tasted.

—An unknown, sweet, sweet berry.

"—Natsuki Subaru."

—What shall, your flavor be?

"Let's eat."

Seeking the answer to that glacé inquisitiveness of her ■, Louis tenderly licked the juvenile's nape with her scarlet tongue. Calling his name, whilst tasting a lanuginous texture on the tip of her tongue, amiably, suavely, she licked.

In the significance of being fulfilled, what was termed as appetite lay similar to sexual desire.

Within such strengthening of affection for the person before her eyes, for even this unremitting appetite to be fulfilled, this must now be something alike copulation sought after sordidly.

People who mutually valued each other, blend within the existence known as Louis.

The sufficiency of that flavor, or how a saccharine a thing would it be—

“Thank you for the treat.”

Savoring adequately, as per her contentment, Louis conveyed her gratitude for the food through words.

That was the procedure of Gluttony’s meal— invoking the name of the opponent whose Memories are desired to be stolen, peeling off one section of the Soul from the opponent’s flesh body, and eating that.

—What are termed as Memories, are things similar to sediments accumulated upon the Soul.

It was also possible to adorn that with alluring words, such as feasts dished upon white platters.

However, should everything be exposed to its origin, what shall be stretching before would be the meaninglessness of adorning it beautifully. That was the cognizance of Louis, who was affixed with the Authority of Gluttony, and the ability to indulge in those Souls, Louis’ privilege.

With this, the entirety of what was associated with the Soul of the juvenile before her eyes shall get particularized.

What would then remain, would be for her to mix it with the Memories of the young girl already within Louis, then have her fill of what nature of chemical reaction it would cause—

‘—You, just now, what did you do to me.’

With a voice not supposed to be audible echoing, for the first time, Louis faced Natsuki Subaru himself.

Until then it had not seemed like they had been conversing. They had not faced each other as if facing each other. It had been naught but such a vague, drowning dream.

That was, for Louis too, an occasion of never before seen circumstances, abruptly getting tinged with colors.

What had been said, just now.

“…Onii-san, it can’t be, you remember us?”

A gaze charged with mighty, potent animosity, was the answer to Louis’ doubt.

“—Ah.”

That had been the moment Louis’ slim, petite chest throbbed at a definite high rate of pulsation.

7

Why, in spite of getting Memories eaten, could he remain composed.

Why, even now, was he glaring at Louis with such a look in his eyes.

Why, despite within such bewilderment, was Louis having her chest throb so intensely.

Why, why, why, why, why—.

Rather, that could have perhaps been the impetus deserving to be called premonition.

“Why, does onii-san remember us?”

Whilst glaring at the back of Natsuki Subaru's head, under her eyes, whom she had held down, what Louis suspected at first was the possibility of having failed at the meal.

In the Authority of Louis and the others, of Gluttony there were a certain set of protocols absolutely necessary.

The prime amongst them was to know the name of the opponent who was to be eaten, this was an indispensable element necessary for meddling with the Soul of the opponent.

Therefore, in the case of seizing an alias, the Authority was rendered powerless.

And, till now there had been a number of cases of having failed at the meal.

In those cases, the one to face the painful experience had always been either one of Lye or Roy, so not even once had Louis herself faced the painful experience but—

"Onii-chan and nii-sama, felt unpleasant like it was painful but…"

Louis stiffened up her body, assuming there would be similar recoil upon her.

However, though she waited for a long time, there were no signs of that supposed recoil rushing upon Louis.

To begin with, new Memories were certainly being poured within Louis.

"Watchtower of the Sage, dear comrades, and there were Trials …"

Murmuring indicating approval, as if carefully reading a single book within her mind, Louis became entranced with excavating through the new Memories.

Appending to the fact that there occurred no recoil, she was being successful in the extortion of Memories.

Referring to those Memories, she had comprehended what Natsuki

Subaru and his comrades were doing, and even the sequence of events due to which he strayed into this Hall of Memories.

What remained, was for Natsuki Subaru's specialness to be—

"—Huh."

Upon that instant, the voluminousness of the impact which was firmly placed upon Louis, what words shall be apt enough to describe it.

"…"

Astound due to the overwhelming substance, with the strength in her arms fading, she widened her eyes.

Prodding that interval, the held down Natsuki Subaru made his escape from Louis's arms. Taking distance at the same pace, he took a fighting pose nothing too impressive.

Though it was opposition rather comical and creasing up, Louis was not made to laugh at it.

There existed no scope for her, to be laughing over that.

The impact of having seen something improbable, was stabbing through Louis' petite physique.

That was—

"Why, are there Memories of the time of dying?"

'—'

"No, that's not all. That's not all, onii-san. It's of course strange to have the Memories of the time of dying. Plenty odd, you know. But, it's strange. After all…"

'—'

"After all, in the Memories we ate, there's nothing like the Memories of killing onii-san, yet onii-san has the Memories of getting killed!”

That was, something abnormal.

There was no origin, what was occurring was a mysterious paradox.

Ah, the influence of Natsuki Subaru’s Memories, the repertoire of words originally she was not supposed to be aware of increase. It was a paradox. Under the emergency due to the paradox, Schrödinger’s Maxwell’s Einstein was Nikola Tesla—!

“What is this?! What’s the meaning of this?! Memories are different from delusion, you know?! The sediments stuck onto the Soul, can’t be distorted or bent as how one pleases! That’s why! This is the world onii-san witnessed ~tsu! This is, the history onii-san tasted! This is, the story of onii-san, only onii-san knows ~tsu!”

Putting her fingers into her long, long golden-colored hair, Louis detonated her flaring impulse.

Not even for a single second could she remain without hurling it instead of simply stockpiling this impulse. The very instant she did so, Louis Arneb erupted. Erupting and scattering across in all directions, her mind was fractionated into tiny fragments.

“New… new new new new new new new new! New sense of values ~tsu!”

It had been her meeting with that.

Her meeting with an article which surpassed all imagination, which Louis had not known, had not seen, had not thought of.

Her entire body transfixed by lightning, she was unable to think of anything else but that. What else could this be possibly called, should it not be called destiny. What name, should possibly be affixed to these emotions.

“Onii-san, could it be you’re the same as us? Aren’t you a Sin Archbishop?”

‘—’

"Though we have never met directly, Petelgeuse said so! That the Factors were supposed to have reached. That since the positions of Sins were filled, eventually everyone would gather! That vacant seat is the seat belonging to onii-san… belonging to me, is it not?"

'—!!'

"Ahahahahahahahahaha! Don't get angry, don't get angry please, onii-san! Don't make us perplexed, any more than this, onii-san! At this point, our mind is at its absolute limit, this small chest is about to burst open it really hurts. Ah, ah, ah! Amazing, amazing, amazing!"

Tapping continuously, striking the temple of her own forehead with her fingers, Louis chewed the Memories down to its very bones.

Difficult to believe in. Unable to be believed in. The margin of having it believed in, existed only in a fortuitous meeting with none but Gluttony.

Since Louis could jointly own the same Memories, she could believe in Natsuki Subaru's progression. —No, she could not believe in it, but savvy it as fact.

For this was the journey, Louis Arneb had traversed as well.

"Ah, what Pride !! Unfair… unfair unfair! Unfair unfair unfair unfair unfair unfair unfair unfair unfair unfair!! —Mm, wonderful ~tsu! Onii-san, you really die again and again, again and again and again, isn't it!"

'—'

"Wa~h, amazing! You're really dying! You're dying so miserably, onii-san! Again and again, you're dying without any method of succeeding, onii-san! Even something like this is possible, right, onii-san!"

A round of applause, a standing ovation, congratulations for taking birth.

Gratitude for the miracle of meeting you, the train to future which shall advance with me.

“Welling forth inspiration! Receiving stimulus and innovation! Onii-san, so you came from a place not here, not anywhere huh! Ah, we can’t even think, anymo… re.”

Spouting sentiments without confining her momentum, Louis, who was unreservedly immersed by it making no effort for resistance, suddenly recognized that potentiality. —No, she inclined her ears towards her inner voice.

To know a scenery unknown, to have taken birth in a world untold, all were finest quality full courses which would fulfill the hunger called the inquisitiveness of Louis’ ■.

However, the specialty of Natsuki Subaru which was deserving of utmost attention was—

“—Memories of Death.”

Not supposed to exist. Absolutely unattainable, there existed the memories of Death and beyond.

This was principally dissimilar to something like near-death experiences, which were like cheap test tours. A phenomenon established due to the Soul shattering, life slashed into a thousand fragments, the lifeline terminating in its true essence.

The other side of the River of Three Crossings, the border of the living world and netherworld, which was impossible to rebound from. Neither swimming through it nor striding across it, the Memories of redoing the life supposed to have been robbed away—.

“— Return by Death.”

That was how Louis read the greatest showpiece of the Memories blossoming within herself.

Accumulating the experiences of sundry Deaths as memories, that which could not be carved into Memories even once he handed over to his next self as something certain.

And that Natsuki Subaru had surmounted all kinds of hardships.

“Amazing amazing, onii-san! Truly amazing! We’ve been moved deeply. We admire it from the bottom of our ■. You really can do something like that. Overcoming Death, with complete freedom!”

‘—’

“No no, no need to be modest. We are serious, you know? We really do find onii-san to be enviable. After all, something like the memories of Death, nobody possesses it no matter what ~tsu.”

‘—’

“Also also, why is it so? Why are you all composed despite getting Memories stolen by us? What specialness is it? Soul’s save? Backup? Invariance? Makes no sense makes no sense!”

Within the struggling, writhing Natsuki Subaru existed numerous, multitudinous Memories of the time of dying.

That was stimulation Louis, by no means, managed to acquire. Furthermore, to continue to die interminably, the power with the ability to stockpile Death was the target of her jealousy.

“—Want it.”

She desired the power of Return by Death.

Not for it being capable of repeating Death. Naturally, that fresh stimulation was also a factor eternally captivating Louis, but what was further momentous was the ability to Redo.

—Louis Arneb was searching for the greatest life.

And, the conclusion derived by Louis, having indulged in diverse lives, was that what was termed as the greatest life was neither being affluent, nor being loved by many, nor being blessed with a high status.

What was termed as the greatest life, referred to the life which “went as one wished”.

Anything and everything, would occur as one believed, as one expected, as one wished.

Without any flaws, without any incompletion, without any irrationality, the perfect world view.

She had always searched a method for its realization. The answer to that was an endlessly unbearing darkness within Louis, but finally, she understood.

Should she procure that, she would be able to recover from conflicts, from failures.

Should she know what shall happen in future, she would be able to cope with it. If only she can know, what failure shall occur, what irrationality shall await, what incompletion shall she come across.

“We can, live the greatest life—!”

‘—’

“What should be done? What should be done in order to steal it? If onii-san’s Return by Death is an Authority, then it can’t be stolen by just eating. It’s different from things that come attached with Memories and Names. Witch Factors are the antithesis of Od Lagna, after all! It won’t come detached easily! That’s why…”

That is why, was an Authority to be stolen, there was no choice but to steal the Witch Factor itself.

However, even Louis was unaware of a method to steal as far as Witch Factors. Until now, never had she wished for an Authority belonging to other Sin Archbishops. That kind of a bunch was disgusting to even come in contact with.

However—

“Onii-san, the Authority of the killed Petelgeuse, you’re using it…?”

The Unseen Hand present within the Memories had weakened in both numbers and range from the original, but indubitably was the power utilised by that lunatic. In other words, that was none but proof that several Witch Factors were being stocked in the interior of Natsuki Subaru.

Stocking Witch Factors, if that was possible then—

“We will absolutely, no matter what, get our hands on Return by Death. Onii-san’s Authority, is our hope. If that can be obtained, we will…”

‘—’

“We will, be able to live our own life ~tsu!!”

Want to become, happy.

Want to become happy. Want to become happy. Want to become happy.

Want to become happy. Want to become happy—.

“The method for that, is right there… the method, for that… ~tsu.”

‘—’

“—~hk! How arbitrary! Something like Return by Death is nothing so good? A person possessing it can’t understand the feelings of a person who doesn’t possess it ~tsu!”

Something like allotted persuasion which had seemingly been heard somewhere else was nothing but tedious.

One who had continued using that power as per his contentment, disliking using that power seemed foolish.

That is why, she shall definitely obtain it. Absolutely, definitely, with certainty.

What shall be done—.

“What shall be done, in order to steal the Authority… wrong. That’s wrong, it’s wrong anyway, as it’s wrong, certainly it is wrong, as it’s too wrong, we’re saying it’s wrong, because it is wrong ~tsu! Gluttonous drinking ~tsu! Gluttony ~tsu!”

Clapping her hands mightily, potently, Louis widened her eyes.

Unraveling her sharp fangs, she applauded suggesting how clear-headed her self was.

Before one could notice, the means and objective switched positions.

However, that wasn’t the case. That was not the case.

Louis’ objective was not to plunder because she wanted to Return by Death, because she could amusingly live the greatest life by obtaining Return by Death.

It was no good to have the bad habit of considering things hazardously remain clinging, because of having played something like Sin Archbishop representing Gluttony for a long period of time. Problematic. Imprisoning in fixated notions. That was a cause of defeat.

It was simple. If it was not to plunder, but to obtain—

“—It’ll be fine if we, just become.”

‘—’

“It’ll be fine if we, just become onii-san. If we become onii-san, and have him be consumed by the Authority of Gluttony … we can integrate Witch Factors. Since if it’s onii-san, then they can be stocked.”

Saying so, Louis plucked her cheeks with both her hands, continuously, forcefully, tempted into violence.

Not an endearing gesture, but excruciating, she did so wielding the intention of injuring. For what purpose. To tear apart her flesh and blood, and dividing herself, that was the purpose.

“You know the Three Great Witch Beasts? It’s said that those, are monsters created by the owner of the Witch Factor long before us. We too, can do something similar. We didn’t do that because there wasn’t really any meaning in doing so… but, you see.”

‘—’

“—If we think of doing it, then we can do anything.”

—If we think of doing it, then we can do anything.

That was, what is called the monster of potentiality.

That was, what is called the potentiality of a pure existence, prior to taking birth.

That was, one affixed with the destiny of living the greatest life, hereafter in the future.

—That was, the destiny of the utmost joyful being, named Louis Arneb.

” “—That is, the existence known as us.” “

The speech of the slowly spinning Louis, was overlapped and enunciated.

The phenomenon of hearing the same voice doubled, was not some kind of auditory hallucination or mishearing. That was in accordance with the occurrence happening, for there appeared two of the same people, with the same voice, with the same tone.

“Got surprised by onii-san’s Memories but, Arneb is a star of the constellation of the hare, huh? It was also astonishing that onii-san and the others were the ones to destroy the Sizeable Hare too.”

“But, if that’s the case then it doesn’t become too much of a surprise? How come we multiplied, or is it onii-san’s great delight that cute Louis-chan multiplied? No, huh. No, eh. So onii-san is the type who doesn’t sexually desire little girls. Hmm, is that so?”

Observing the opponent who was frozen in place, with his eyes widened in astonishment, Louis linked her shoulders with the existence standing immediately beside her— namely, the same Louis. Within this place, called the Hall of Memories which was separated from reality, Louis was merely an existence of a Witch Factor possessing no flesh body and a Soul joint together, other than that, it rather seemed that the respective names of the three siblings corresponded with the Three Great Witch Beasts, though that, well, did not matter.

Anyhow, separating the Witch Factor into two, Louis Arneb multiplied into two.

This was a stunt perhaps Lye and Roy, who feared losing their selves upon the utilization of Solar Eclipse, those two were not capable of. To know it was possible to duplicate oneself, also tied together with forfeiting the true essence of one’s real self.

However, that did not apply to Louis, whose self had been established as vague from start.

It was possible to have one Louis, two Louis, and so on.

With this, Louis Arneb obtaining Natsuki Subaru’s Authority was.

‘—’

“Eh? What?”

The juvenile, the receptacle of the Witch Factor, declared some words.

Upon glancing at the juvenile, aside from the glamour called Return by Death, simply feelings of love welled up. Finding that annoying, Louis abandoned the Memories emerging to the surface.

Upon peeling them off of her own Soul, she discarded and abandoned them with the notion of them being useless.

—No, that was not simply a notion. Truth be told, they were indeed useless now.

All of the Memories had been mere fillers until the greatest life was discovered, naught but side dishes. However, Louis Arneb had finally reached her full course.

” “—If we think of doing it, then we can do anything.” “

That is why, she shall tread onto this path.

Eating into Natsuki Subaru, from the interior. Chewing the eaten into Natsuki Subaru, from the exterior, sparing not a single bit—Louis Arneb, shall obtain Natsuki Subaru.

‘—You’ll, ■ ■ ■.’

Until the very end of the end, the receptacle continued saying something.

However, what had it been saying, something like that no longer held any relevance. Licking the sediments stuck onto the Soul with her tongue, Louis inherited the Memories.

And, within the receptacle which had forgotten anything and everything, Louis personally had herself appended to the Witch Factor.

As for the rest—

“As for the rest, it’s fine to simply wait for completion.”

Unremittingly waiting in the Hall of Memories, was something she had grown all too accustomed to.

Problem lied in the usage of the Memories. There was a scheme for stealing Memories once again from an opponent who had already been eaten once. The gourmet Authority did not deem the menu of the same name, the same taste as a separate article in its judgement.

That is why, there present was a need to alter the flavor from the Soul.

Into an article separate to such an extent that it was not possible to recall that it had once been atop the tongue of Louis, of Gluttony.

Anticipating it proves to be the taste of the finest quality, that which Louis Arneb had fervidly awaited.

Hoping it achieves completion into the greatest, utmost, supreme dish.

Looking forward to that moment, whilst licking her lips, and longing—

8

???: “So. Did you get to see what you wanted to see. —Louis Arneb.”

Louis: “Huh?”

Upon the sudden accost, Louis, who had gained awakening of her consciousness, rounded her eyes.

Blinking a few times, she made certain of her location. White environs, white ground and white skies, standing within the world blanketed white, Louis had been making a stupefied expression.

Louis: “…”

Having her hand touch her face, making contact, she made certain of the sensation.

Since there was no mirror in this place she could not take a look, but this sensation was irrefutably her own face. With there not being even any moderate amusements in this place, speaking of things touchable, only her own face, own body counted as one.

That is why, she had touched her face to an extent one would grow sick of touching it. That is why, upon touching her face she had grown sick of touching, she could immediately know in what state her face, her body was.

Just as before. Yes, just as before. —This was, Louis’ own body.

???: “Did you get to see what you wanted to see, huh?”

Slowly, stupefied, making certain of herself was Louis.

With that behavior reaching a point where it could pause, abruptly, the accost now overlapped once again. Lifting her face, Louis looked at the personage who had been standing before her, in front of her eyes all along.

Rather short black hair and stabbing sanpaku eyes, with legs the same length as his body, wearing a shabby appearance was the juvenile.

His name, Natsuki Subaru. The existence Louis herself had become one with as a Witch Factor, and—

Louis: “—Ah.”

—And, the being of unimaginable insanity, wielding the Authority which had the ability to Return by Death.

Louis: “No, NOOOOOooooooOOOOOooOOoOOoooo— ~tsu!!”

Louis opened her mouth, and roared.

As long as the strength remained, as long as the possibility remained, with complete devotion she roared.

Should she have not done that, she would get crushed by the pressure. By the terror, by the menace, by the despair.

She would get snared in the insanity of a lunatic, who repeated and resumed continuing Death time after time.

Louis: “Don’t want to die! We, don’t want to die! Hate it, hate it hate it hate it hate it, hate it hate it hate it hate it hate it hate it! Hate it! Hate i~t ~tsu!!”

Swinging her head, collapsing onto the bare ground, Louis frantically appealed while drawing back.

Assimilating with that existence, Louis had personally experienced Death. She had tasted it. By being taken in by the Soul who practiced Return by Death by her own volition, she had experienced Return by Death first-hand, which turned back even time.

The memories of Death that had been incomplete as merely Natsuki Subaru's Memories.

After all, memories were naught but memories. The sensational impact of never returning again upon letting go even once of that instant, of that juncture, of that moment, could never be obtained.

That had been, why she thirsted for that. She had thirsted, for what flavor Death had.

Even if Death had been something less vivid than what Louis had expected, using the Authority that goes by the name of Return by Death, she could gain sufficient change with the right to walk a life in which redoing was a possibility.

That, is what she believed. —Until she herself, tasted Death that is.

Louis: "Something like that… something like that, can never be withstood! That anguish! Sense of loss! No way can it be withstood! Impossible! Impossible impossible! Absolutely impossible! Hate i~t!"

Not even once, had she possessed a way to die comfortably.

Not even once, had she felt Death to be luscious.

Not even once, had she wished to die on her own volition.

Natsuki Subaru had tasted that greater than twenty times, and had replayed that.

Louis: "Someone who can withstand that, is not human! Monster! A monste~r ~tsu!"

She could not. No way she could.

Louis had indulged in a great number of lives, affronted all kinds of Souls, and had searched a life of her own.

She believed she had possessed the right, the privilege, to do so.

That is why, she stretched her hands even into the Soul of Natsuki Subaru— the consequence, she got her naive ■ shattered.

Because—

Louis: "—The human heart, cannot withstand something like itself dyi~ng ~tsu!!"

Want to become, happy.

Want to become happy. Want to become happy. Want to become happy. Want to become happy.

Want to become happy. Want to become happy. Want to become happy. Wanted— to become happy.

Wanted to become, happy.

That was, the wish Louis Arneb had envisaged all along, for the whole time.

Trampling upon all aspects of everything, she possessed the right to exercise her power for the purpose of acquiring the greatest life. Louis had remained, believing so without any pangs of conscience whatsoever, until today.

That, that, that, that premise, crumbled.

Wanted to become, happy. However, right now, the wish right now, was different.

Louis: "Don't want to die."

Don't want to die.

Don't want to die. Don't want to die. Don't want to die.

Don’t want to die don’t want to die—.

Subaru: “That is why, when you were trying to eat me, I told you.”

Her arms hugging her head, cowering, shaking her head in fear, desperately trying to protect herself was Louis.

In close proximity to that Louis, immediately above Louis, who did not raise her face, onward came a voice descending.

She did not want to listen to even that. Listening was terrifying. However, something which may befall upon her due to not listening was terrifying. —Dying was frightening.

That is why, she had no choice but to listen.

And, whilst looking down upon Louis curling herself in fear, the voice continued.

It’s preface, saying you had been warned—

Subaru: “That you’ll, definitely regret it.”

Chapter 76:
The Hell Named Oneself

1

—With the young girl who had experienced Return by Death and was sobbing with her hands on her head before his eyes, Natsuki Subaru intently stared at his own palm.

It was not as if he was feeling hurt after having been called a monster, after having been spoken ill of.

That he was crazy. That it was impossible to withstand, he agreed with those notions as well.

Subaru himself, had died countless times until now.

He was aware of something as basic as those experiences being unordinary. But he had simply gritted his teeth, and endured it.

Believing with all his heart that it would be better for him to suffer than the death of someone aside from himself, a friend or an acquaintance, people whose names and faces he did not know, his precious comrades or the people he loved.

That was—

Subaru: "—Yeah, I sure am amazing, right, Natsuki Subaru."

Tightly clenching the fist he had been gazing, Subaru Sang His Own Praises from the bottom of his heart.

He had been commended, through loose-lipped logic impossible to be held true. Such words had been used as if to console oneself, or for encouraging oneself.

However, the Singing His Own Praises just now had been different.

The Memories and Real Experience which had observed the existence named Natsuki Subaru terribly objectively, were commending the path oneself had walked until now.

Subaru: “Dang. I’m unexpectedly a pretty big deal, huh.”

And that was something which ‘Natsuki Subaru’ , who had lost his Memories and had returned to the starting point of being summoned into the different world, and ultimately reached this point after taking a deep read of the Books of the Dead, could also be told.

Starting from being ignorant with regards to the different world, accumulating personal experiences of Death sufficient to equal the single year Subaru had lived through, and had returned without letting his heart shatter into pieces, impressively.

Thanks to that, the lost Memories and the Memories thereafter had been unified.

Subaru: “Meili, Shaula, entrusted to me, and I will take responsibility for them.”

Meili, for whom murder had become a habit, and had locked herself into a dark future.

Shaula, who had been liberated from a vain wait which lasted for four hundred years, and wished to continue the blessed present.

Subaru: “Ram and Julius, both of them sure act unreasonably. For those two to be doing that, that’s quite a feat.”

Ram, who already knew the best possible option, and displayed prudence more reliable than anyone.

Julius, who had lost his own resort, yet embraced faith and still resumed holding the sword.

Subaru: “Beatrice and Echidna, I’ve really been a bother to them as well. Geez, I’m such a…”

Beatrice, who dedicatedly supported Subaru, and noticed the limits of his heart before anyone else.

Echidna, who was utmost suspicious regarding Subaru's amnesia, and had granted him forgiveness at its extremity.

"…"

And, no matter if he lost his Memories, no matter how many times he redid, he ultimately returned to the path of being drawn towards you.

He wanted to do that. He must do that. He could not think of any other path.

That is how much, you are—

Subaru: "—EMT."

With love and certain tranquility on his lips, Subaru raised his face.

And looked at Louis, who still had her face covered and was shivering.

Subaru: "Hey."

Louis: "Eek ~hk!"

Subaru: "…You're too scared."

Subaru scratched his cheek with a single finger upon her being excessively frightened by a single call.

She was a young girl with an outward appearance which could unobjectionably be called young. The form of that young girl shivering in fear, desperately rejecting the world was a sight heavy to the chest. It seemed she had been endowed with something akin to fleeting fragility which would make one thoughtlessly extend a hand to her, by birth.

Surely, an attainment of the nature to undo the opponent's vigilance and crawling into their interior. —That could perhaps be, a crystal pure like a child that had been coercively refined.

That Louis Arneb, who did not know of the world, was like an innocent, pure child.

However—

Subaru: "—Louis Arneb, you lose."

—Natsuki Subaru shall not forgive Louis Arneb, who was sobbing like a child.

"…"

Louis widened her eyes, frozen, upon the verification of defeat that had been slammed right before her.

Whilst witnessing fear fill her eyes like ink spilled on a white sheet, Subaru's heart yet remained peaceful like the calm at sea.

The world was not filled with problems that could be ignored simply because of not knowing. And the deeds Louis or her siblings had committed were countless inhuman and demonic atrocities.

It was not as if she did not get a chance to know. Through the Memories of others, she must have also had a chance to come in contact with human emotions, likes and dislikes and learn from them.

However, what she absorbed from there was not something akin to affection for others, but a further dusky, grisly desire, and the conduct of trampling upon and spitting on the effortful lives of others.

Perhaps the fault was that of her teachers. Her elder brothers, had been bad role models of her life.

However, it was her decision to never use any chance to return back from the mistaken path.

Subaru: "You may know as well if you were a part of me. But the ranks which you all… Sin Archbishops name yourself as is common with the seven deadly sins. "Seven deadly sins" is a pretty English term for chuunibyou purveyors, but there also exist the "Seven heavenly virtues" which are something close it."

The seven deadly sins, Pride Envy Wrath Gluttony Sloth Lust Greed.

And the seven heavenly virtues, Chastity Humility Temperance Patience Diligence Charity Kindness.

If the seven deadly sins were karma impossible to be sundered from humans as long as they live, then these were seven conventions which mustn't be forgotten in order for humans carrying the burden of those sins to live with others.

Because they respect that, humans can live with other humans.

Subaru: "But, you all… you, violated that."

That is why, the Sin Archbishops, Louis Arneb had become an unforgivable great evil.

Louis: "Eek, eek, eek…"

The frightened, curled up Louis was struck with Subaru's words and was shivering as if she had experienced agony.

The slightest effort of others, of the world connected to fear. Subaru was also aware of that sensation.

Having tasted the other-worldly sensation called Return by Death, in a situation of not knowing how to surmount the obstacle however much one may Die, even the sound of dry leaves swaying in the breeze seemed fatal to life.

Because he remembered that feeling akin to the soul being frozen, Subaru closed his eyes.

And,

Subaru: "Louis Arneb, you lose."

"…"

Subaru: "So, recognize that and release anything and everything."

Once again, Subaru repeated her defeat such that she could hear it herself. On top of that, he pushed a firm demand toward the young girl, who remained silent upon hearing that.

The return of Subaru's own Memories was due to the chance meeting between Natsuki Subaru, who lost his memories, and Natsuki Subaru of the moment immediately previous to his memories being robbed— since his advance through the different world was replayed in the Books of the Dead, he was able to restore his own memories in the from of tracing them back.

In the form of re-experiencing the stolen Memories by utilizing the Books of the Dead.

And fulfilling the unification of Subaru before and after losing Memories, the result was the successful second advent of Natsuki Subaru.

As it's byproduct, Louis, who had gotten into Subaru in the form of a Witch Factor, had been forced out as a foreign substance. However Subaru had witnessed with his own eyes, her self-indulgent treatment of the stolen Memories of freely bringing them out and peeling them off.

If that was possible then a method to save the people who had their Memories, their Names robbed would be—

Subaru: "If we think of doing it, then we can do anything is what you said, right. Then…"

From being conceited and bragging about her own abilities, she had even succeeded in a stunt like splitting the Witch Factor into two.

Since she had achieved that, then surely it wasn't impossible for her to cancel out the effects of her own Authority. If that, that alone, could come true, then perhaps——It would be possible to recover the people who got their Memories and Name stolen, to recover Rem.

Subaru: "Then, release all of the people you've eaten up until now. If you do that…"

Louis: “…Do that, then what?”

“…”

Subaru articulated powerfully, but Louis shortly intercepted that voice.

Louis remained on white floor in the posture of pulling her knees towards herself, making her long, long golden hair spreading out on the floor blanket herself, she was glaring at Subaru through the gaps of her hair.

What dwelled in her eyes, was the sole unquestionable hue of fear.

Louis: “Do that, then what?”

Repeating, Louis piled up the same question yet again.

Subaru had been caught off guard by her retort for a moment, but got a hold of himself immediately after she displayed her stance of conversation. Far better than her not talking due to fear.

He must accept the words head-on and fumble around for a compromise plan that could change the situation.

Subaru: “Release the great number of people, you have eaten. If the Names return, then even the honor of the people who’ve already died can be restored. The people who are alive, can even reunite with their families. If you would do that, then I will let you…”

Louis: “—Off the hook, you say? If we do that, then onii-san will let us off the hook? Off the hook, you say?”

His words intercepted yet again, Subaru felt daunted.

Viewing that reaction of Subaru’s, Louis said “Hah” and opened her mouth bearing sharp fangs,

Louis: “That can’t be, isn’t it! That isn’t possible!”

Energetically lifting her face, Louis shouted with a blazing glint in her eyes.

Her two eyes glaring at Subaru, they immutably remained soaked in fear, twinkling darkly.

With those dark twinkles in her eyes, Louis forcefully rocked her body back and forth,

Louis: “It isn’t! It really isn’t, it isn’t after all, it indeed isn’t, we’re telling you it isn’t, as it isn’t, as we know it isn’t, that’s why! Onii-san will not let us off the hook! Absolutely certainly! After all”

“…”

Louis: “Onii-san, destroys his enemies! Absolutely crushes them until the very end of the end! Without any exception! Completely thoroughly! Closes it with a perfect game! He can do that! Then there’s no way he wouldn’t do that! There’s no point in him not doing that!”

As if having heard a first-class joke, Louis ended her silence and let her emotions explode.

And to Subaru, Louis’ outbursting form was visible as terribly distant, minute.

Louis’ facial expression was disordered, trying to laugh, trying to be angered, trying to be doleful, and baffled by the notation of fear not present in any of those, she was perplexed and was imploring.

“…”

The gateways of all of Louis’ surging emotions, all directly connected to Fear.

Regardless of whether they began with delight, rage or sadness. Knowing that all would ultimately lead to Fear, for what should she be delighted, be enraged, be saddened.

Even if she were to believe, that conclusion led to Fear as well.

Subaru was more than sufficiently aware of the ingrained nature of Louis’ rejection. Cursing the entirety of the world, being flung into a storm of suspicion and distrust, becoming trapped in a sensation of being forbid into the slightest movement.

That was, the hell named oneself which Natsuki Subaru had also experienced.

What pulled Subaru out of that hopeless hell, was surely because there had been someone who held his hand, and that warmth never let go of Subaru.

That was, the silver-haired young girl who had saved Subaru's life, his heart when he had first arrived in the different world.

That was, the dressed young girl who strived to protect Subaru when he had been betrayed by anything and everything.

That was, the blue-haired young girl who gently made Subaru realize when he sought to abandon everything.

—That was, the reason why Natsuki Subaru had remained without being prisoned in hell.

"…"

That foundation of heart was not possessed by Louis Arneb, who was drowned in fear before his eyes.

That is why, she did not possess the ability to conquer Fear. —She could never think of Return by Death other than being a nightmarish curse of being dragged into an inescapable hell.

Though quite a clichéd expression, humans cannot live by themselves. That is why, for her to be saved, she, who was caged in Fear, it was necessary for someone to extend their hand to her.

Someone offering their hand, just as Subaru had been offered once.

However—

Subaru: "—I will, not save you."

—Subaru shall not extend his hand, to Louis Arneb.

Louis: "—Ah."

Subaru: "I will, not save you. Neither will I pity you."

Louis Arneb, the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, the blasphemer of Souls standing in the white world.

Not matter how sweet an appearance, no matter how miserable and transient an ambience, no matter how luring an attitude of craving being sheltered by adults were she to possess, Subaru shall not forgive her.

The Sin Archbishops had committed sins difficult to forgive. —That was the conclusion, Natsuki Subaru had derived.

Subaru: "I'm sure no matter what I say, it'll never prove to be salvation for you in the first place."

Louis: "Eek."

Louis' distended eyes were filled with naught but terror toward Subaru.

In this place though only Subaru could understand the fear she bore, the very reason for her fear was Subaru himself. In other words, her labyrinth couldn't possibly be opened up.

And upon Subaru's head-on declaration that we won't save her, that he detested her, Louis stabbed her claws into the shapeless white world and whilst desperately distancing herself away from Subaru —

Louis: "We know… we know onii-san's ploy! We had been onii-san after all! That's why, we know what onii-san is going to do… however, we won't let you ~tsu!"

Subaru: "You…"

Louis: "Return what was eaten! Absolutely never! After all, this is our lifeline! If we lose this, then onii-san will be able to kill us! As long as this isn't returned, onii-san won't kill us! Its the other way around, the other way around, completely the other way around! In order to not be killed by onii-san, we, cannot return this! That’s why you kno~w!!”

Howling with a loud voice, Louis turned her palm towards Subaru. Its not as if something was being fired from the fair palm held out. However, Louis’ aim materialized in a different form.

Subaru’s field of vision steadily distorted into white, a change was yielded in the Hall of Memories. It commenced constricting the world, having detected the presence of a foreign substance and seeking to eliminate it.

As a result, Subaru’s existence was extracted out—

Louis: “Enough, we don’t want to be in the same place as onii-san for even a second! Impossible in terms of physiology! Impossible in terms of life! Impossible in terms of destiny you see! That’s why, disappear! The ones who will eat onii-san, will be onii-chan and nii-sama! Either of them can do however they please! No thanks from our side!”

Louis’ decision, infuriatingly enough, was the best possible option for her.

Banishing Subaru from the Hall of Memories and sending him back to reality. And entrusting opposing him to her siblings Lye and Roy instead of herself.

If the Sin Archbishops of Gluttony could choose to share or not to share a meal, then Louis would be able to part ways from the worst platter named Natsuki Subaru. Whether her siblings would bear the same anguish as herself or not, that itself was something her current self did not know.

Subaru: “—Gh.”

It was difficult to hold out.

With not a single thing to latch onto, and with even the ground to stand firm on becoming vague, Subaru was hopelessly the weaker side in this Hall of Memories.

Subaru: “If you, don’t like me doing it… then if you settle this, by yourself…”

Louis: “We won’t go along with that ~tsu! Even if you try to make us kill you, it’s futile! You intend to take us to task through Return by Death ! We won’t let you! Onii-chan and nii-sama, will utterly eat away onii-san! That is, the condition for our victory ~tsu!!”

Unraveling her fangs, Louis scowled at Subaru who tried to hold his ground. He could no longer oppose her will. Comprehending that, he let in a deep inhale.

Afterwards, Subaru’s black eyes directly pierced through Louis—

Louis: “—Eek.”

Subaru: “If your siblings, are your final rope to rely on, then I understand. —I will slash that rope and make you pay. You’d better remember this, Louis Arneb.”

With a single finger pointed towards the frightened, cowering Louis, he resumed.

Subaru: “Everything distressful, everything painful, bear all of it by yourself. —Don’t run away, from the Memories.”

Humiliation and repentance, were all Memories necessary to shape the current oneself.

It’s entirety had become food for the human named Natsuki Subaru, and the Natsuki Subaru constructed by its entirety had reached this point after having stockpiled many a Death.

If Natsuki Subaru was amazing, then that was because humiliation and repentance let him be so.

Subaru: “With that being said, I don’t really want even a part of that shame.”

That was what Subaru whispered whilst being expelled out from a space to its edge, which wasn’t present in the world, with his field of vision turning white as if nothing had been there.

And, the Hall of Memories came untied—

2

And, within the Hall of Memories wherein the form of the dreadful lunatic had been erased, Louis Arneb took in a deep, deep shivering inhale, and confirmed her own pure life.

Louis: “Ah, ah, a~h…”

Her throat, shivering, her lungs, shivering, her heart, shivering, her soul, shivering.

Even Louis, who had indulged in every possible variety of Memories, couldn’t comprehend an existence that repulsive. What was truly frightening about that thing, was it’s inconceivable spirit.

Louis: “Wh, y…”

Whether she could remain as per ordinary, she did not know.

Louis had become a part of that thing, and prior to that had eaten that thing’s Memories thoroughly down to its roots. Slowly crunching the Memories without exception, she had masticated them.

That deed itself was roundabout, as if peeling off the layers of an onion’s skin one by one, a code of action separating that which yielded new life upon each instance of Death into greater than twenty sections.

Before having experienced Return by Death, that deed of dividing those Memories into several portions then eating them was something that made her heart pound with the notion of it being a new experience, but now all she found was incomprehensible fear.

In the first place, why couldn’t the Memories prior to the occurrence of the Summoning Into the Different World or whatever be robbed.

Originally, the power of the Authority of Gluttony was supposed to eat away all of the Memories of the subject until the moment of birth. Yet, what could be robbed from that thing were merely the Memories of this one year.

As if Od Lagna did not assess the Memories previous to that, abhorred them, or otherwise—

???: "—Listen listen, um, isn't this a bit from what was supposed to be?"

Louis: "…"

Suddenly, a voice echoed in the Hall of Memories supposed to have been left alone, and Louis turned around, astonished. However, her doubts were immediately dispelled.

The one who stood before Louis' line of sight, who had turned back, was—

Louis: "Us…"

'Louis': "That's right, us. Because we got the short end of the stick, its us who had been waiting here in vain. Which one will play the trial version of the greatest life by becoming onii-san, was the play environment properly arranged? Came here to report that, is it?"

Whilst saying so, smiling at Louis was the existence exactly the same her— Louis.

Dividing the Witch Factor originally supposed to be one into two, having segregated the Soul despite being the same personage, in the utmost correct sense, another one of herself.

The greatest factor which made that possible must be that Louis did not fear the deterioration of her self, an existence of mere Soul devoid of a flesh body.

That Louis, who was one more of oneself, did not share that personal experience unlike Louis. That is why, Louis found the genuinely smiling form of Louis, to be unordinarily distant.

'Louis': "—? What happened, us. Making such an expression huh. First of all, what about onii-san? Being here means, got into this place by reading the Book of the Dead again, no?”

Louis: “…”

‘Louis’: “Besides, what’s with this being all crouched since earlier? Why be so curled up? Hey, hey hey, the goal was properly accomplished, right? Though we failed on this end, we were supposed to have fulfilled the role, isn’t it. Amazing amazing, got in pretty cleanly huh. Onii-san geez, didn’t take notice at all. Of the us inside of himself!”

Clasping her hands energetically, Louis reminisced the forbidden tryst.

Of course, unneeding of a necessity to mention it, Louis was aware of that affair.

It referred to back when the Hall of Memories got connected to when thinking of investigating the way of capturing the atrocious swordsman, Reid Astrea. Louis then once again came in contact with that thing, which had forgotten anything and everything, and had the circumstances permitted, intended to eat that thing including Louis, who was a Witch Factor.

Though it was an experiment to see if that thing’s Authority, including the integrated Witch Factor, could possibly be successfully plundered by doing that, it failed due to an unexpected hindrance.

She surely never mused having to taste a counterattack by one of the eaten Memories.

However, reflecting on it now, had the hindrance not entered there, then Louis might have become one with that thing by this time.

With that thing—

‘Louis’: “Hey hey, what happened, us! Talk about various more stuff, let us hear it! Saw it, right? Heard it, right? Scented it, right? Touched it, right? Tasted it, right? —Natsuki Subaru’s Authority eh!”

Louis: “—Don’t mention that thing’s name!!”

‘Louis’: “—~tsu.”

Resuming her merry words, Louis stretched her hand. The moment that arm attempted to touch her own shoulder, Louis shook off the arm in accompaniment of exasperation.

Violently, powerfully, with as much rejection as possible, she did, to the arm of her literal other half.

‘Louis’: “…Huh?”

Naturally, unbeknownst to the meaning behind her other half’s action, bafflement was yielded forth in Louis’ facial expression.

However, Louis did not possess the leeway to look back onto that expression of Louis’. Louis hugged the shoulder Others had tried touching, and stepped backwards whilst shaking her head in rejection.

Louis: “No! Nonono! Don’t touch! Don’t come near!”

She was astonished, by her own cognizance.

However, it was her own sensation. It would not turn traitor, like the hell named oneself.

She comprehended. Louis before her eyes, who possessed the same face as herself, who had undergone the same experiences as herself.

The existence supposed to understand her Soul — at present, it was someone other for Louis.

It was unknown, what others will do. They will not protect Louis.

They could become Louis’ cause of death. Baleful enemies who would naught but kill Louis, who did not want to die.

Louis: “Don’t come! Don’t come near don’t come near don’t come near don’t come near ~tsu! Don’t come close! Don’t touch u~s!”

‘Louis’: “…”

Hugging her own body, she was unable to do anything but react in exactly the same way as when she had confronted that thing.

For Louis, who had continued molding her self through the Memories of others in this space devoid of the freedom to even look at a mirror, the sense of foreignity she felt towards Louis, who possessed the same face as herself, was stronger than the unskillful others.

Witnessing Louis repeat denial and rejection like this, Louis reciprocatively shifted her gaze along with the hand that had been shaken off. And,

‘Louis’: “Huh? What’s with that.”

Pertaining to Louis’ rejective response, Louis clenched her hand that had been shaken off. She then looked down onto Louis with a terribly thirstful voice, biting and clanking her fangs.

‘Louis’: “What’s with that. What’s with that what’s with that, what does this mean. With what purpose, with what idea, with what plan with what thought, hey?!”

Louis: “Ee~k ~tsu.”

‘Louis’: “This is different from what was supposed to be ~tsu! What happened, us?! What’s, with that reaction! Attitude! Response!”

The rejected Louis enraged, closing in towards the huddled Louis. Crouching down before Louis, who knelled her throat upon the vigor, Louis grasped the hair of her cowering other half.

Subsequently making her raise her face through sheer force, the two with the same faces glared into each other at a distance that their breaths entangled.

‘Louis’: “It sure is strange. Strange, how strange, isn’t it strange, pretty strange, it is strange, as it’s strange, quite strange, as it’s too strange, as we’re saying it’s strange!!”

Louis: “…”

‘Louis’: “What about the strategy? The plan went well, didn’t it? The plan was to become a Factor and get inside onii-san, and put wickedness to work, wasn’t it? It was a job really well done. Onii-san was frightened, after all! Onii-san completely thought, that ‘Natsuki Subaru’ was the closest person to him!”

Louis made no response to the plan which Louis recited and its progress.

The truth was, Louis and Louis’ plans had transitioned smoothly. Louis experienced Return by Death inside Subaru and stimulated the separation of Subaru and ‘Natsuki Subaru’ by putting wickedness to work.

And whilst staying behind in the Hall of Memories, Louis shall eat Subaru who had differentiated himself from ‘Natsuki Subaru’ and make the Authority her own belonging. A single step had remained.

And even if that had not went well—

‘Louis’: “—No matter how many times, tens of times, hundreds of times! The arrangement was to challenge until the Authority of Return by Death has been looted, isn’t it! What’s wrong after failing a bit! It’ll be fine by stealing onii-san’s Memories again and trying again no matter how many times it takes. Let’s mutually exchange roles and challenge, no matter how many times how many times it takes! Failures, can be recovered from!”

The one to assimilate as a Witch Factor, and the one to stand by in the Hall of Memories, she had intended to accomplish the complete extortion of the Authority by exchanging roles and regardless how many times it would take, without getting tired of it.

And yet—

‘Louis’: “—And yet, to do something like rejecting us, what happened huh!”

Louis: “NOOOOoooo— ~tsu!”

‘Louis’: “Wo, ah!”

With strength poured into the arm which had grasped her hair, Louis gave rise to a screech in agony and fear. Afterwards she shoved the chest of Louis who was before her eyes, making her other half rumble in pain and fall onto her back.

Mutually glaring at each other with eyes of disbelief, a painful silence fell upon the white world. And, whilst Louis remained silent, Louis widened her eyes and,

‘Louis’: “It can’t be… aiming to monopolize the Authority?”

Louis: “…”

‘Louis’: “Since the Authority of Return by Death was obtained successfully, erasing onii-san immediately and aiming to enjoy it by oneselves? Leaving us as is, too.”

Louis: “Th-That’s wrong ~tsu!”

Louis bellowed before the frozen Louis, who had painted a picture of repulsive misgivings in astonishment, in shock. That was not true at all. It was improbable. She had not thought in the slightest bit, to monopolize this.

Something like this, if it was possible to throw it away then she wished to throw it away. However, she could not do so.

For these were the Memories of nobody, but Louis Arneb. Oneself’s own Memories were impossible to be erased. Impossible to be stolen. Impossible to be taken in and out.

‘Everything distressful, everything painful, bear all of it by yourself. —Don’t run away, from the Memories.’

Louis: “Eek.”

So she had been told by that thing just previously.

What was experienced by oneself, what path was walked by oneself, could not be erased. Having certainly taken birth within Louis, that was the history of Louis Arneb herself.

‘Louis’: “This is no joke ~tsu! Something like this, as if it can be excused…!”

She had wanted to become happy. She had wanted to attain a joyful life that was hers alone.

However, the life solely belonging to her which she had attained in an unexpected form smashed Louis’ ■— Heart into pieces, and wounded her to an irrecoverable extent.

Louis was unable to comprehend, Louis fearing the wounds and abrasion of her heart.

‘Louis’: “As if we’ll let someone like you, monopolize our means to become happy!”

Louis: “That’s wrong! That’s wrong that’s wrong that’s wrong that’s wro~o~o~o~ng! That’s not it! That is not it! That’s definitely not i~t!”

‘Louis’: “As if we can believe that! We never thought, that we’d be betrayed by us. As expected of us, isn’t it, us! That’s right. We get it, we get it. Hm hm, we do get it!”

Louis: “No! Don’t get it at all! Don’t get it at all! Don’t get our feelings at all ~tsu!”

‘Louis’: “No, do get it indeed! After all, it is about us. That’s right. If it’s for the sake of becoming happy then we’d be willing to do anything, and must do anything! Joyfulness, is something which keeps on keeps on declining by the slightest thing!”

Louis bounced and joined her hands before her slim chest. And with a magnificent, broad smile, she directed a sidelong glance towards Louis who articulated her rejection in a tearful voice.

‘Louis’: “What if, we carelessly schemed wickedness? If that’s done to us by us, who have attained Return by Death, then no matter how much the struggle we can never win, isn’t it! Amazing! Really put thought into it, isn’t it!”

Louis: “Don’t want to die! We don’t want to die! Don’t want to die don’t want to die don’t want to die~e~e~e~!”

‘Louis’: “Don’t say such utterly obvious lies! Don’t want to die? Why? How come? If it’s unneeded then hand it over to us! What a filthy desire to monopolize… can’t even think that it’s us!”

Louis: “…”

From Louis’ words, she was repudiated being the same existence.

At that instant, Louis felt like she heard the note of something inside of her thirsting, cracking, shattering. She did know, what had been present inside of her which shattered.

Though she did not know—

‘Louis’: “—Natsuki Subaru belongs to us. This, thieving cat.”

Despite not knowing what that thing was whatsoever, it was condescendingly called as a belonging.

Even though the only one who truly comprehended what thing was, was only herself, how arbitrary a thing to say.

—The only one who truly comprehended that thing, was herself alone.

Louis: “—The only one who understands Natsuki Subaru is us. This, foolish girl.”

That thing was fearsome. That thing was repulsive. That thing, was abhorrent.

That is why—

‘Louis’: “—Let us taste it too— ~tsu!!”

Louis pounced, advancing in order to purloin the Memories which made Louis, Louis.

To hand that over, would resort to give the meaning of it being the Death of Louis Arneb.

Giving the meaning, of Death. —Giving the meaning, of the world witnessed by that thing.

Louis: “Ah, a~a~a~a~a~a~h— ~tsu!!”

Screamed. Screamed. Screaming, screaming, screaming, she screamed.

Continuing to scream, whilst screaming, whilst resuming screaming, whilst continuing to raise a screaming voice—

“—Don’t want to die.”

An exceedingly fierce, meaningless conflict commenced in the Hall of Memories.

A conflict with nobody watching, nobody interested.

Commenced, and ended. —A conflict, devoid of victors.

3

???: “—Ice Brand Arts!!”

The instant those words were fired, she tightly gripped to sensation born within her palm and swung it completely. What had been generated in her hands was a longsword shaped with ice and it’s cutting ability was far greater than that of some incomplete iron sword.

Though she had only just begun practicing the sword, moving her body was her specialty. Swinging the ice sword atop the extended line, she attempted to land a fatal blow upon her opponent whilst sealing off his routes to escape.

However—

???: “Hahaha~! You’re doing i~t! But, this is far from too far from being enough to land, gee~z!”

???: “—~hk!”

The enemy, with his long hair waving about, evaded her fatal strike by seemingly crawling on the ground.

Glaring with his sharp cuspids unraveled, was the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony who named himself as Lye Batenkaitos.

Upon hearing the name of Sin Archbishop, something akin to dislike swelled up within her.

That was because approximately a month ago, clashing with a great number of Sin Archbishops in the Watergate City Priestella had led to a large number of settlements, as well as a large number of settlements being delayed, at any rate, led to mountain worth of grave happenings.

Plentiful emotions of sadness or bitterness had been born forth.

Their elimination or solution had yet not been achieved, that is why everyone was doing their best, and yet.

???: “Why, do you all act like this and—!”

Lye: “Why? Why indeed? Why we wonder? Why is it why? Why must it be why we wonder? Why is it what we certainly wonde~r? Why must what be why? Why is what why is why is why eh!”

His teasing words possessed no echo of seriousness, her opponent did not intend to give a proper response.

Sensing that, she powerfully stiffened her cheeks. Being able to converse would be the best. However, should the opponent not comply with conversation, then she shall not hesitate any further.

That resolute exchange, certainly occurred with clarity during that moment.

???: “—Icicle Line.”

Lye: “Wow.”

Accompanying the chant, a sound of freezing space echoed from her rear. Countless ice stakes with sharp tips were born in the air, signifying they were ready to be fired.

Gazing at that, Lye’s composure, yet, remained unchanged. With no strong feelings for that, she merely commenced the offensive abiding by her frozen fighting spirit.

“…”

The count of the fired ice stakes was close to, but no greater than, a hundred.

Submerging the aisle seemingly constructed of stone, the dust of the ice which had impacted the floor, the walls, the ceiling fluttered about and the space frozen white brought immense damage upon the one who had been immensely hit.

However—

Lye: “Sorry, onee-san. We’re tired of seeing that… is something we won’t say, but we have seen it. See, because we are genius after a~ll, we don’t think an attack that has already been seen once will hit!”

Swinging the daggers fastened to both of his hands, Lye laughed, having outdone the terrific attack of ice.

She inhaled in astonishment, witnessing his talent and skill, and having withstood and outdone it as a matter of fact, as he stood completely unwounded. However, if he had outdone it once, then twice, thrice, if that still won’t work, then even more.

Lye: “You’re thinking you’ll be able to win if you do it a hundred times? It will not reach through even after you do it a thousand times, you know?”

???: “Then I’ll just do it ten thousand times! I won’t let you go where everyone is!”

Lye: “Ahaha ~tsu, well that sure is a large scale! Good gracious, how outrageou~s!”

Putting his hand on his forehead, Lye let out a sigh divided into disgust and irritation. Whilst viewing that, she quietly abided by her own words.

Though she had pronounced those words whilst simply going with the flow, she must abide by them.

Thus, the moment she attempted to step ahead and fulfill that—

???: “—Lye Batenkaitos!!”

“…”

From the rear echoed a voice in the aisle that was neither her’s nor Lye’s, leading her to thoughtlessly halt her feet. Upon looking back after being immediately lured by the voice, a shadow showed itself by the corner of the path and leapt into her field of her vision.

That was a black-haired youth with a somewhat nasty look of eyes.

He rushed into the battlefield with a gallant expression, and was looking at Lye and herself, who were sparring in the aisle.

???: “Ah…”

Suddenly, “oh no” was the thought which surfaced in her innermost mind.

Though she must say something, a vacuum was born in her words. This was due to the various emotions which overflowed in face of the rushing youth.

However, before Bafflement was yielded in front of the youth, she hurriedly moved her lips,

???: “Its dangerous so wait! Um, you may not, know about me, but he is the enemy! Leave this place to me! Even though you may not, know about me!”

She wished for him to leave this place, and for him to not think of herself much.

At the very least, right now at the present instant, should she begin considering things aside from fighting, she would certainly burst into tears and cry.

She did not wish to show her weak side like this and trouble everyone.

And yet—

???: “—Its alright, Emilia-tan.”

The youth who had rushed in called her name.

Emotions she could not concern herself with, like anxiety, like sorrow, strummed and sprang within her chest due to simply that, for which she tried her best to make sure they did flow out.

After all—

Subaru: “—My name is Natsuki Subaru. Emilia-tan’s one and only knight!”

Right now, Emilia’s heart was beating with such warmth, such warmth.

Chapter 77:

1

Abiding by his warm emotions, dashing with the entirety of his might, he stepped foot into that place.

Opposite to his heart sending out hot-blooded pulses within the depths of his chest, the outside air had become chilly enough to whiten his exhales, and within this glaciated world, he discovered the back he was looking for.

"…"

His gaze plunged towards the slim, supple back, and his heart voluntarily came on the verge of bursting.

Though affection lighted his chest, he narrowly managed to suppress his impulse. This was no time for him to let his heart explode and die.

Powerfully gnashing his molars, he looked at the face of the enemy opposing on the other side of the struggling back.

Long hair of a dark brown hue, and a crude outfit as though being wreathed in rags. What was the most impressive, outstanding of all, was the revolting glint in eyes that trampled upon the lives of others, and had turned them into literal food articles—

Subaru: "—Lye Batenkaitos!!"

Roaring at the absolute top of his voice, he asserted his existence, and attracted the attention of the opponent.

Even gaining his attention for this singular moment alone, was beneficial. Of course, there lay the possibility of his side sustaining equal blows, but it was nothing if it meant reducing the damage being inflicted upon her.

With affection filling his heart as fuel, he could even fly in the sky right now.

???: “If that could increase our chances of winning, even slightly.”

Halting his feet before the frozen floor, he poured strength into his abdomen and glared at Lye. He maintained a watch at his movements with all of strength, and no matter what move should he make—

???: “Ah…”

Such preparedness of Subaru’s was robbed and shattered by the amethyst eyes that suddenly turned backwards.

“…”

His black eyes and her amethyst eyes intermingled with each other.

The wave of emotions that appeared in her eyes at that instant was enormous, almost washing him away. Her eyes had always, always, gripped his heart and sought to drown it within themselves.

Because he wished to somehow save the entirety of the multiple emotions levitating in her eyes.

Thus—

???: “It’s dangerous so wait! Um, you may not, know about me, but he is the enemy! Leave this place to me! Even though you may not, know about me!”

His eyes twinkled upon seeing her call for vigilance whilst swaying her hands in panic.

Delayed by a beat, he gulped down the meaning behind her words. —The Memories of being told this very same thing were certainly present within him. At the same time, he comprehended the turn of events.

And, he truly thought. —That he was glad to have been the first one to reach this place.

He knew what he ought to say, how he ought to call out to her.

Furthermore, the thought of how he wanted to call out to her arose.

Subaru: "—It's alright, Emilia-tan."

Sorry for causing problems for you, for making you worry, for making you wait.

Wielding those sentiments, though unbefitting for this place, he nodded whilst loosening his lips. And whilst looking at the young girl, whose eyes grasped comprehension by the few words he had said, he resumed.

With a finger of his right hand pointing towards the heavens, he posed with one hand on his waist.

Though there was no need for him to be doing this, doing this enabled him to solidify his resolve. For that purpose—

Subaru: "—My name is Natsuki Subaru. Emilia-tan's one and only knight!"

Emilia: "Subaru— ~hk!!"

Subaru: "Bah?!"

The instant he declared so with a determined, smiling expression, the silver haired young girl— Emilia dashed towards Subaru with fearsome velocity.

Colliding, Subaru was thrown backwards but he somehow supported Emilia's frame. No need for concern, she was light as an angel's feather. No problem at all.

But if there were to be something labelled a problem—

Subaru: "E-Emilia-tan?! This is so sudden I'm freaking surprised, and you're also super light and smell so nice! Did you change your shampoo?!"

Emilia: "Stupid Subaru! Geez, you're rea~lly so stupid! I was so, so worried! Yet just like that… stupid! Stupid stupid!”

Subaru: “Wow you’re really calling me stupid an astounding number of times! Well, I can’t make any excuses…”

Subaru was overwhelmed as Emilia pressed him with widened eyes within his arms. Since he was meanwhile also glued together with Emilia, Subaru’s heart was a total mess and even his vocabulary crumbled.

Putting all this aside, Subaru reluctantly parted, grasped Emilia’s slender shoulders and distanced her body.

Subaru: “I’m sorry for making you worry. But, I’ve returned… I’ve been revived? Restored? Or should I say, I’ve become the complete Natsuki Subaru, either way, it’s alright, so.”

Emilia: “Ah…”

Subaru: “I’ll leave all of Natsuki Subaru in the past. —This is Natsuki Subaru’s explosive birth.” “1”

Energetically talking on and on, he forcefully attempted to exert Emilia’s relief. However, in the midst of this plan of Subaru’s, Emilia blinked and lay a single finger on his chest.

A ticklish, gentle sensation. Subaru involuntarily shivered.

Emilia: “Did you, properly become one?”

“…”

Emilia: “Because, even the Subaru who didn’t have memories, was Subaru. So, even if Subaru remembers everything now, that Subaru, who worked his hardest and put his life on the line even for the short while he was here for, was…”

Subaru: “—Yeah, hm. It’s alright.”

Whilst touching his chest, Emilia affirmed Subaru’s footsteps with faltering words.

There existed a Natsuki Subaru who, due to the unification of Memories, could be interpreted as having become one or even having disappeared, and a time wherein their hearts were touched by him also existed within them.

'—Yeah, thus, it was simple.'

Subaru: "The fact that I was within myself, and within Emilia-tan, certainly remains even now. So, it really is alright, Emilia-tan."

Emilia: "…Hm."

Subaru: "So please expect great things here onward from Perfect Natsuki Subaru. With all the frustration piled up in this time of turmoil as the trigger, let's & go towards a bright future!"

Emilia: "Sorry, I have no clue what you're saying."

Emilia shook her head and responded, as Subaru smiled with a single finger upraised.

This unkind attitude of her's was also so lovable and something he eagerly looked forward to, Subaru would prefer to spend countless minutes, countless hours, countless days just messing around with Emilia like this, but—

???: "—About time you kno~w, had enough of your moving conversation?"

Saying so, raising his voice and calling out to the timidly touching Subaru and Emilia, was the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony with a devious, malicious, vicious smile.

But Subaru raised his eyebrows, in response to the fact that he did not launch an attack in this interval.

Subaru: "Yeah. I didn't think you'd wait so conscientiously. Did you become contrite?"

Lye: "Become contr"eat" you say, that would be outrageous ~tsu! It's just that, you know, we are Gourmet you see~. From onii-san's perspective that'd be what you call gourmet? A~s one who knows the delight of meals, wanting to be pro~perly attentive to the setting of the table is what it's about. If the table is untidy then it's a kill-joy. Isn't that right?"

Speaking of table manners difficult to apply practically, Lye laughed with a shrill voice in a strange and frivolous manner. Whilst listening to the ear-hurting voice of his laughter, Subaru gave a deep nod.

And,

Subaru: "I see, makes sense. I completely thought…"

Lye: "Completely thought?"

Subaru: "That you got all afraid, considering how ugly of a shape your little sister was left in."

Lye: "—~tsu."

The next instant, Lye's expression completely changed from that of having a smile of leisure.

His smile disappeared in an instant, what appeared instead was scorching rage. Abiding by that intense fury, Lye's body kicked the frozen aisle and plunged ahead in the blink of an eye.

Lye: "What would 'you', know about our Louis— ~tsu!!"

Subaru: "I know nothing. I just arbitrarily had my body be entered by her. I have no idea what she was thinking, nor do I want to know."

Seemingly truly possessing sentiments and love for his younger sister, enraged Lye's dagger inched closer towards Subaru. However, Subaru did not fear the approaching footsteps of Death.

Controlled by violent emotion, if Lye was not viewing anything but Subaru then that was precisely what he was aiming for—

Emilia: "—I'm also here, don't, forget!"

Lye: “Gah, bgh ~tsu.”

Accompanied by a brave voice, Emilia’s beautiful, long legs drew an arc. Energetically rotating it to a large degree, she intercepted Lye’s face as he plunged straight ahead.

The instant of the direct hit, Emilia’s ice battle technique Ice Brand Arts activated and reinforced her toes, which were striking the enemy, with boots of ice as bonus.

Emilia: “U, riya~a~a~a~!”

Pouring strength into her fair leg, Emilia completely swung the leg which had struck the enemy’s frontal teeth. Despite somehow defending against direct damage, Lye’s petite stature was unable to withstand that force and was pushed away, as he slid on the frozen floor and landed towards the interior of the aisle.

Emilia subsequently pointed her palm towards that direction, and the generated stumps of ice mercilessly pursued Louis’ elder brother, having collapsed, icicle dust then engulfed the aisle, seemingly succeeding in inflicting enormous damage onto Gluttony.

Subaru: “That did it! This was a mixed attack of my instigation and Emilia-tan’s adorable intent to kill!”

Emilia: “Is that supposed to be a compliment?”

Subaru: “It is a compliment indeed! The best! So cute! I wanna marry you!”

Emilia: “Marr… geez, no messing around.”

With her cheeks slightly red, Emilia’s reaction as she fixedly looked towards him was unexpected. He thought her refute would be more powerful, so the embarrassment rebounded onto Subaru as well.

Subaru: “No no, I’m acting way too merry since having met with Emilia-tan. All messing about comes after the problems have been solved.”

Emilia: “Subaru! I don’t know when another attack will come! So don’t let your guard down!”

Subaru: “I know! Though I’d openly welcome it if this makes for his defeat…”

Straightening out their minds at once, Subaru and Emilia turned towards breaking the deadlock of the situation— Emilia concentrated on Lye Batenkaitos before her eyes, whilst Subaru concentrated on the problems encircling the Pleiades Watchtower.

The five obstacles— even after Natsuki Subaru’s identity problem had been solved, they still remained and exposed this watchtower and all of Subaru’s comrades within it to hazard.

But some conditions had changed. For example, the menace of the shadow that descended as though symbolizing a time limit, swallowing the entire tower and bringing ruin to everything.

If that was—

Subaru: “If that is, the penalty as the way I’ve imagined it till now…”

The event of the shadow swallowing everything, was the reappearance of the catastrophe he had formerly encountered in the Sanctuary as well.

The story behind why that happened was because he had spoken to Echidna within the Graveyard and had unburdened himself by telling her everything about Return by Death. If the happenings occurring in this tower were also of the same kind, then that shadow resetted everything in cases when Return by Death had been largely leaked outside.

In other words, it was surely because Louis Arneb had been within Subaru.

Now that Louis Arneb had been eliminated, and her existence had disappeared from Subaru’s interior, there was around a 50% chance that shadow would swallow the Pleiades Watchtower.

Hence he did not possess the option to rely on that and let the circumstances proceed slowly.

Subaru: “Emilia-tan! I have a plan!”

Emilia: “—! Got it! Then, let’s follow it!”

Subaru: “I haven’t said anything yet though?!”

Subaru arranged the options in his mind and accordingly called out to her, and the next instant came Emilia’s ready consent flying towards him without him having said a single word of explanation.

Subaru was surprised, as Emilia said “It’s fine!” in response,

Emilia: “Subaru’s plan must be one he came up with after thinking with all his might! I can trust it far more than having to think about a lot of things and coming up with an answer here!”

Subaru: “—Ah, damn it! Makes me so happy you’d say that!”

Scratching his head, Subaru powerfully stomped the floor as though in response to the faith that made him feel uneasy. Afterwards, Subaru pointed towards the interior of the aisle, the space filled with icicle dust,

Subaru: “For now, Emilia-tan, another shot at him!”

Emilia: “Aye!”

With an explosive, dynamic sound, Emilia dropped the floe of ice onto the interior of the aisle.

It would be great if this merciless strike made for the finishing blow for Lye, but that would be a dim prospect. In reality, Emilia spilled out a note saying “Ah!” as she widened her eyes upon the impact,

Emilia: “Subaru! The Sin Archbishop from earlier…”

Subaru: “Tch, he’s a tenacious bastard. But there should be no way he took absolutely no damage.”

When Emilia turned backward, Subaru understood from her expression that Lye had erased his form from the course of impact.

He had gotten fed up of that tenaciousness, on the same level as that of a cockroach, but his characteristic of judging the situation to be unfavorable and ejecting accordingly was different from Petelgeuse of aggravated diligence and tactless frankness, or Regulus who did not possess the word "Humility" in his dictionary. —Amongst the Sin Archbishops, Lye Batenkaitos had the greatest survival instinct.

However, it was inconceivable that he would withdraw from the tower.

Subaru: "Emilia-tan! For now, we meet up with everyone else! We need to re-allot the deployments of our personnel! Everyone needs to do their best or this situation won't be broken through!"

Emilia: "Right! But, is it okay if we let him escape like that?"

Subaru: "I'll be honest, I would've preferred if the one from earlier would've finished him off but…"

Having retreated once, Lye would surely make the best use of this time to catch up on his breath as well. In that case, it would be difficult to calculate the necessary time and certainty for striking Lye.

Then they might as well prioritize planned movement in this situation, and take custody of his life.

Subaru: "No need to worry, he won't leave the tower or anything. As he's stimulated a lot because of Louis… because of his little sister. The misunderstanding siscon bastard won't back down."

Emilia: "Sisskon…?"

Subaru: "It means one who is affectionate to their younger sister. Though in their case, it'd be being affectionate to the little sister in a negative sense."

At the very least, it did not seem as though Louis deeply loved Lye or Roy, her true elder brothers, very much on her end. To devote themselves for the sake of Louis without even knowing that, they were either pitiable victims or just role-playing maniacs intoxicated with that duty.

However, ironically, only the unbending distorted ways of the Sin Archbishops could be relied on.

Subaru: “Someone who can adapt to circumstances and flexibly change methods to deal with something, wouldn’t become something like a Sin Archbishop in the first place.”

That was Subaru’s Sin Archbishop evaluation, having unwillingly repeatedly come in contact with the Sin Archbishops.

Hence, it was not easy to track down the dirtily living Lye Batenkaitos. Meanwhile, situations Subaru could not interfere with continued to head towards ruin.

Before that happened—

Subaru: “Emilia-tan! We go where everyone is!”

Emilia: “Mhm, got it! But, I don’t know where everyone is…”

Subaru: “—It is my duty, to SubaNavi ‘em.”

Natsuki Subaru Navigation System.

—SubaNavi for short, referring to Cor Leonis, he activated.

“…”

Queer, deep emotions came to his mind upon the activation of the Authority wherein coexisted familiar and unfamiliar sensations.

Concentrating the whereabouts of his beating heart, he magnified everything within the close range of his radar with his beating heart at the center. That was close to sonar, which grasped the surroundings based on the reverberation of sounds.

But, what he could feel was his comrades’ warmth and fleeting lights, thus it was a restrictive sensation.

—However, that which specialized solely in feeling the existence of his comrades, rather than being an omnipotent might, was presently the Authority of the most worth for Subaru.

Figuring the location of those fleeting lights, Subaru lifted his face.

Just as he had first hurriedly met up with Emilia, next, they shall prioritize meeting up with the members she had earlier enabled to run away.

In other words—

Subaru: "—First, we retrieve my cute partner!"

2

—Through the sensations being conveyed from Cor Leonis, Subaru grasped large sections of the happenings occurring in Pleiades Watchtower.

What he understood through the effect of the Authority was, at maximum, the individual respective conditions of his comrades and a vague sense of distance with Subaru at the center. His comrades' fields of vision could be shared, but he could not grasp their state with clarity.

But still, should they sustain an injury he could substitute for the injury, and should they be burdened with recoil, he could take over the recoil. That was the effect of Subaru's Authority of Greed, and various usages could be mused for it

Emilia: "Subaru, are you okay? You look pale…"

Subaru: "Mhm, yeah, I'm good I'm good. Well, I'm acting strong a bit, but I'm still alright. I can still work hard at this level."

As they dashed through the aisle side by side, Emilia worried for Subaru whilst he let out a heavy sigh. Her voice, like a silver bell, and her amethyst eyes tickled his heart, and Subaru revealed his honest thoughts.

It was agonizing. But he could still endure it. Those were his true thoughts.

"…"

As pointed out by Emilia, Subaru's paleness was also of course due to the chaos that had unfolded with Louis in order to recover the Memories. Mental abrasion is quite difficult to heal, and it is not an easy task to make a worn down heart stand up again.

But, what was presently making Subaru suffer was a much more simple, clear cause. —Ram's inferior physical form, because he had been preliminarily taking up the anguish she had always been experiencing on a normal basis.

Subaru: "Taking up her wounds without permission, Ram is sure not going to be happy…"

It would never sit well with Ram, who actually possessed a strong sense of responsibility, to let others substitute for her own recoil. Should he propose to her saying "I want to shoulder your pain together with you" at her face, she would simply laugh it off with a snort, and in the end stuff steamed potatoes in his nose.

So, he shall arbitrarily shoulder Ram's inferior physical form. He shan't let her refuse.

That is why—

Emilia: "Subaru!"

By the shattered angle of the aisle, as she saw clearly ahead Emilia called Subaru. The meaning behind her call was known by Subaru, whose Lion's Heart was beating.

The comrades that had escaped from the battlefield and taken distance, whilst Emilia preoccupied Lye.

The jet black Ground Dragon, and the blue-haired young girl on its back. Holding its reins was her elder sister possessing an identical face like two peas in a pod, and standing beside her was a little girl in a dress—

Subaru: “Beako!!”

Emilia: “Beatrice!”

Beatrice: “——~hk, S-Subaru and a god-knows-who girl are here, in fact?!”

Beatrice turned behind to look at Subaru and Emilia, who were energetically dashing towards them.

Paying no heed to her astonishment, Subaru and Emilia reached her at almost the same time.

At the same pace, he hugged and picked up the young girl as she shouted “Wakya~”,

Subaru: “Oh, Beako! Beako, you’re so light! You’re so cute! You’ve got such an intelligent look!”

Beatrice: “Wa, wa, wa, wa…”

Emilia: “Look, Beatrice! Subaru remembered everything! Ah, wait, you still don’t know who I am, isn’t that right… but, Subaru remembered! That rea~lly made me so happy…”

Beatrice: “W-Wait, I suppose! Wait, in fact! It’s like both a known occasion and an unknown occasion have arrived, so Betty’s mind is all topsy-turvy, I suppose!”

Whilst being swung around, Beatrice was mutually knocked down by Subaru and Emilia’s words, as she darted her eyes about in confusion. However, she immediately pointed her palm forward, making Emilia shut up, and,

Beatrice: “…Subaru.”

Subaru: “Yeah.”

Beatrice: “Do you, truly, remember everything, in fact? About Betty, about the time you’ve spent with Betty as well, everything?”

Subaru: “Yeah, that’s right. Don’t make such an anxious expression.

I remember everything, and if anything can just make up a lot of the stuff too. The historia of everything that happened and didn't happen between you and me."

Beatrice: "No need to make up what didn't happen, I suppose! Agh geez!"

Raised up in his arms, Beatrice sandwiched Subaru's face between her hands. Looking at the silent Subaru from an inch's worth of distance, Beatrice let out a deep sigh.

Her eyes, with a peculiar pattern on them, subsequently quivered,

Beatrice: "Truly, all Subaru does is swing Betty around, in fact."

Subaru: "The contract's condition was that I'd be a contractor who'd never let you get bored, after all. And, you said that I'm no superman…"

Beatrice: "—?"

Subaru: "Looking at it objectively, I'm pretty superman-ly, am I not?"

Closing an eye, Subaru winked and smiled at Beatrice. For an instant Beatrice widened her eyes at his response, but then immediately pouted.

Beatrice: "Don't get carried away, I suppose!"

Subaru: "Let me get carried away. I'm the type who gets things done when I get carried away. Along with that…"

"…"

Glancing sideways, he noticed Ram standing there with a dazed expression. She narrowed her light crimson eyes and looked at Subaru with a piercing— no, stabbing gaze.

Subaru: "Ah, nee-sama?"

Ram: "That was quite the fast snowmelt, isn't it. Ultimately, a pointless fuss befitting of Barusu.”

Subaru: “…Well, in essence, I guess it did last only for a day.”

Subaru couldn’t do anything but smile wryly, upon it all being labelled as a pointless fuss.

In reality, close to twenty deaths that Subaru had experienced, upon thinking of the mental recoil he had undertaken for the purpose of accepting them all as his own, it would be impossible to think that all of the happenings had been a matter of a single day.

From Subaru’s perspective, it felt as if the amnesia had lasted for several years.

Subaru: “But, I’ve come to terms with everything and made it back. The man who gives 150% of his strength for everyone, Natsuki Subaru, pleased to be in your company.”

Ram: “Hah! How nice. Kindly say whatever you would like. However, Ram’s exceedingly benevolent self shall overlook it…”

Subaru: “Overlook it? …Bangladesh?!”

Beatrice: “Kya~, in fact!”?

Ram spoke deeply meaningful words and subsequently paused, and just as he tilted his head upon her words he was blown away by a tail whip that targeted his blind spot coming from the Ground Dragon, together with Beatrice.

As Subaru and Beatrice twirled around, they were caught by a soft sensation. Upon looking, it had been Emilia who halted their spinning. She softly supported Subaru’s body from his back’s side and smiled,

Emilia: “It looks like Patrasche-chan is also rea~lly happy that Subaru came back.”

“…”

Ahead of Emilia’s line of sight stood a jet black majestic figure, exhaling from its nose.

Having gotten a taste of one of its powerful tail strikes, Subaru readjusted Beatrice, whom he was carrying in his arms and,

Subaru: “You’ve always been such a tsundere… no, my bad. I made you worry a lot too. In the first place…”

“…”

Receiving Emilia’s support, Subaru fixed his stance and faced Patrasche, who was looking at him with a sharp glint in its eyes. And, thinking back to the unchanging devotion of the affectionate dragon during the time he was devoid of Memories,

Subaru: “Really, you save me so many times. I love you.”

“…”

Subaru: “…So you’re not going to slap me away like usual, right?”

Every time he made a flimsy confession of love to her, it was standard that Patrasche’s lady-like self would discipline him, but that wasn’t the case with this time’s confession of his. Otherwise,

Beatrice: “Even this Ground Dragon can tell when you’re joking and when you’re being serious, is what it means, I suppose.”

Subaru: “…Yeah.”

Nobody knew when she had gotten so close to it, but Beatrice spoke for Patrasche’s true heart. The fact that she didn’t get struck by another tail whip meant that her interpretation was correct.

Now if Beatrice were to also learn the ability of deciphering and translating, then Otto could finally be dismissed of his duty.

Subaru: “—Rem.”

On Patrasche’s back was Rem, her body leaning on the saddle.

Of course, it shan’t be possible to hear her eternally asleep self’s voice of delight upon the return of Subaru's Memories. However, the emotion that arose within Subaru's heart upon looking at Rem's side profile was different.

"…"

What if, in that white world, persuaded by Louis Arneb's cajolery, the instant he was truly going to fall into Gluttony's poison fangs, had there not been the voice which kicked the hopeless weakling up.

The existence known as her, truly, shan't let Natsuki Subaru loose, even should he forget himself.

That is why, once again, after overcoming a totality of 40 Deaths, he ended up coming back.

Subaru: "I'll save getting lost in thoughts for later. Anyway, my memories are back. I appreciate all of you wanting to celebrate it, but let's clean up the situation at once."

Ram: "Celebrate you say, truly, what an overestimation of oneself. Wonder what happened in this short duration… besides."

Emilia: "—. Ah, me?"

Snorting her nose upon Subaru's lowered tone, Ram then turned her gaze towards Emilia. Levitating in her eyes was usual arrogance, and an equal sense of unease.

It was clear from Beatrice's reaction, but indeed—

Emilia: "I'm Emilia. You don't remember, I guess, yeah…"

Ram: "…The person who let Ram and others escape earlier, that is known. But, that is all, nothing further can be remembered. How do things stand for you, Beatrice-sama…"

Beatrice: "Same for, Betty, in fact… the effect of the Authority of Gluttony, is what it is, I suppose."

At Ram's assent, Beatrice identically lowered her face.

What had occurred to Julius's person in Priestella, had descended onto Emilia's person within this tower as well. With this forming an omnipresent excruciating wound—

Emilia: "Right! I am Emilia, just Emilia. There's lots of stuff I want to say, but I am family who is looking in the same direction as both Beatrice and Ram!"

"…"

Emilia: "If you can just understand that much, then for now, I will be fine. Ever since I got to know that Subaru remembered, I'm feeling rea~lly good."

Emilia flexed the biceps of her fair arms, and stout-heartedly— no, she was not merely acting strong, but truly seeming to fear nothing, smiled. Not only Subaru but Beatrice also came at a loss for words upon her exceedingly confident conduct. Unusually enough, even Ram widened her eyes, unable to suppress her astonishment.

Emilia: "Huh? Did I say something weird?"

Subaru: "…Well, rather than weird, it was super-duper cool."

Scratching his cheeks, Subaru answered upon Emilia's slightly flustered reaction. Subsequent to Subaru's response, Ram said "Indeed" and took a deep inhale.

She steadily affirmed Emilia's conduct and,

Ram: "Emilia, was it. Enigmatically enough, upon looking at you Ram feels the nooks of her mind be awfully uneasy… The same happened, on Rem's instance."

Emilia: "That's…"

Ram: "Everything about you disappearing from the mind and being replaced by a void is difficult, is what it surely means. Though it is difficult to consider that Ram had someone like that other than Rem."

Narrowing her eyes, Ram touched her head with a finger as though tracing Emilia’s disappeared existence within herself. Her words made Subaru remember something out-of-place.

Though Ram may say so, it was unmistakable for Subaru, who had been witness to the two’s relationship from the sidelines, that she cherished Emilia. Although with the vanishing of those spans of time, it was only natural that it would not come to Ram’s mind.

However—

Ram: “The throbbing and aching of the mind Ram feels upon looking at you, is the answer for the relationship between you and Ram. So, rest assured. —Ram, dislikes remaining defeated.”

Emilia: “—. The same, goes for me. We’re going to strike back, absolutely, no matter what.”

Ram: “Indeed, let the payback be a hundred million times greater.”

Emilia: “That many times?!”

Subaru felt Emilia and Ram to be reliable, as the two exchanged fearless smiles.

After all, originally, once the Name was plundered, the victim drowned in isolation as all relationships around them collapsed. However, Emilia did not give in against isolation and managed to retain the core of her heart. Thanks to that, the collapse supposed to commence from her, could not destroy the foundation of Subaru as well as that of Ram and the others.

On top of that—

Ram: “Barusu, kindly give suggestions. However, do not think that just because your forgetful self managed to remember again, all of the missteps so far can be salvaged.”

Subaru: “I know without you having to point it out, but how many things do you plan to point out!”

But, he was grateful that they were willing to be cooperative without having to be convinced.

Anyhow, the dilemmas laid within this tower of the sand sea were far too impending for accumulating trust, explaining the situation, and confronting each one of the problems whilst tying bonds.

Hence—

Subaru: “Let’s obliterate this overeating festival those utmost worst three siblings started with the power of our bonds.”

Emilia: “Yes!”

Beatrice: “Naturally, in fact.”

Ram: “Hah!”

The three parties gave their three respective answers directed towards three of Subaru’s greatest enemies, as he gave a deep nod to all of their words.

And,

Subaru: “—It’s still all over the place, but it feels like I’ve come back home!”

Saying so, he vocalized first and foremost a quiet, yet a valuable and definite deep emotion.

Chapter 78:
The Four Corners

1

Subaru: "…Are you ready? The tower's in pretty bad shape right now. If I were to go out and say how bad it is, it's nearly as bad as playing Othello with all four of its corners taken away from you."

Ram: "That… must be pretty bad."

Ram's expression clouded over as Subaru launched into his explanation, holding one of his fingers up in the air. Quite the solemn look had appeared on the latter's face. Albeit, Ram wasn't the only one who was taking this seriously. Emilia and Beatrice, who were listening in as well, were like that too.

Othello — more commonly referred to by the name Reversi — was a board game in which two players competed on an $8 \times 8 = 64$ board using black and white pieces.

Naturally this was knowledge Subaru had brought with him from his original world. But since it had been relatively easy to recreate the game here, he'd introduced it to the Roswaal mansion fairly early on. It brought a huge stir, with it being extremely well received, especially from Emilia.

That's why he was able to properly convey the gravity of the current situation to them. Having all four of your corners taken away from you in Othello meant that you were already completely lost.

Furthermore, though she hadn't partaken in it much, Ram had literally been as strong as an Oni in the few occasions she'd played, as one would expect from her.

In any case…

Beatrice: "Losing all four corners, an utterly outrageous situation, I suppose… That’s going too far, even as a handicap, in fact.”

Emilia: “I guess even I’d end up becoming as busy as a bee and winning if I got ahold of so many of them…”

Subaru: “Who even says “busy as a bee” these days…”

Emilia: “…! Subaru, can you say that again?”

Subaru: “I will, but later. Later.”

Emilia snapped onto Subaru’s traditional retort, looking somewhat dejected at having her request denied. Although he felt a bit guilty seeing her like that, the flirting would have to wait until later, just like he’d said many times.

Their first priority was to find a way out of the situation they were in. And for that…

Subaru: “The four corners… They’re the two “Gluttonies” inside the tower, as well as the swarm of witchbeasts they’ve called with them. Also, it pains me to say this, but our companion… Oh yeah, I guess it’s sorta debatable if I can call them that…”

Everyone: “…?”

Subaru had been about to mention the fourth corner, but for a split second he’d faltered on what to say next.

Namely because not even he had come up with an answer that would both be simple to understand and properly describe the woman who unintentionally stood in their way as the fourth corner.

He wasn’t so distant with her to call her an acquaintance. That, and their connection wasn’t weak enough to be called bitter enemies either. But, did they share enough of a destiny such that he could call her a companion? At the very least, he could perhaps leave it at them having sort of like a clueless, but very much unsanctioned teacher and student relationship.

Still, how did Emilia and the rest of them view her?

But, as Subaru fell prey to his hesitation…

Emilia: “You said companion right? What’s happened to Shaula?”

Subaru: “…”

Emilia: “…? Subaru?”

Subaru: “No, it’s nothing. That’s right, I do mean Shaula.”

Subaru immediately acted like nothing was up and nodded back at Emilia. It hadn’t been just her; Beatrice and Ram also hadn’t seen anything wrong with how Emilia had recognized her.

The way they’d perceived her had been the same as Emilia, regardless of whether they had memories of the latter or not. In other words, it served as proof that they viewed Shaula as someone friendly to them.

Subaru: “Was I being an idiot…? Yeah, of course I was.”

Stumbling over the obvious was a bad habit of Natsuki Subaru. Yet, he would reflect hard on things, leveraging them so that he could give it his all; and this, was one of his strengths.

A compliment, for each time he put himself down. Ideally he would give himself a hundred for each time he did.

That much would do. Though the true ideal would be giving himself ten thousand compliments without putting himself down even once.

Subaru: “Anyways, about Shaula… Well before that, do you remember the tower rules? The ones that mustn’t be broken. They were explained before, right?”

Ram: “Yes, they were. We can’t leave without completing the Trials, we can’t break the rules of the Trials, we can’t disrespect the libraries, we can’t damage the tower… I think those were all the violations.”

Subaru: “Yeah, precisely.”

Subaru snapped his fingers at Ram after she'd readily laid them out. Then he pointed down at his feet and swung his arm around, indicating the entire tower.

Subaru: "So, with those rules… The fourth corner shows up when one of them is broken. I don't know which one specifically, but one of them will. Then, after that…"

Ram: "She'll bare her fangs at us, just like she said. —How annoying."

Ram, assuming her typical pose with her arms crossed together, batted one of her eyes shut as she imagined the worst.

Shaula's insane combat prowess was well known to Subaru of course, considering he'd gone through many loops where she'd killed him. But other than him, the rest of them were also well aware of it after they'd been showered by sniper-fire from afar, back in the sand sea.

Beatrice: "That vapid girl is quite strong when she uses those things of hers, I suppose. Even if we're better off than before, where we couldn't do a thing due to being attacked from afar, it's not going to change the fact that things are going to get grim if she turns into our enemy, in fact."

With their arms folded, both Beatrice and Ram frowned, their brows wrinkling up.

The fact that they were so quick on the uptake was a huge help, since he could cut down the time he spent explaining. From all those sullen faces, it was only Emilia that raised her hand. Her face, which was the cutest in the whole-wide world, was still free of wrinkles,

Emilia: "But we'd be going up against Shaula, no? Can't we somehow persuade her by talking to her? Shaula's suuuuper attached to Subaru, so if he tried his hardest, maybe…"

Subaru: "I'd love a peaceful resolution to this, but getting Shaula to the negotiating table seems like a tall order. In regards to her being attached to me…, I guess nothing about that's changed, in a broad sense."

Ram: "Meaning she's going to be primarily targeting you, Barusu. The fact that she's got her targets narrowed down is going to be extremely useful."

It could be perceived as her targeting the weaker members in their camp, but regardless, Subaru agreed with Ram's thoughts.

Rather than facing a situation where they wouldn't know who'd be targeted by the enemies indiscriminately lurking in the tower, it would be easier to come up with a plan of counterattack that involved having Subaru recklessly targeted.

So, putting the issues they were facing in a nutshell…

Beatrice: "…The four corners are: the two Gluttonies, their swarm of witchbeasts, as well as Shaula, who'll come to attack us, I suppose."

Subaru: "Though two of these corners are already being dealt with. All thanks to Beako taking command."

During the time Subaru had spent cowering in the "Taygeta" Library, the smart and adorable Beatrice had taken everyone with her in turn, and got them busy dealing with the damage that had struck the tower.

She'd sent Meili to the balcony, where she could overlook the swarm of witchbeasts. Then, as part of that, she'd also joined up with Ram and Emilia after they'd taken Rem out of the Green Room — Unfortunately though, they'd encountered Lye en-route, which had led to them falling into this situation where Emilia's name had been taken away from her.

Emilia: "Mhmnh, it's okay. Subaru still remembers me, so I'm completely fine with it. Even though he often ends up forgetting about our promises, it still makes me reaaaaally happy that he remembers me properly."

Subaru: "Nnh, what's with stabbing me in the back all of a sudden?"

Beatrice: “It looks to me like it’s just her usual, in fact. That girl seems to know you well too, I suppose. Though not as well as I do.”

Subaru: “No need to fight over me my sweethearts.”

Subaru gave a few nods as he stroked Beatrice’s head, basking in their affection for him. Then, while still steeped in emotion, Ram called out to him with a “Barusu”,

Ram: “You said that two of the corners are being dealt with, right? I know that one of them is Meili holding back the swarm of witchbeasts, but what about the other one?”

Subaru: “…Julius.”

Subaru grabbed his chest in reply to Ram and turned his attention to the beating of his heart.

His “Cor Leonis” power was still going strong. He was naturally taking Ram’s burdens from her. Also, the whereabouts of his companions were being broadcasted to him in real-time.

From those, there was a light that definitely seemed to correspond to Julius. And the place he was at was…

Subaru: “…He’s on the second floor, locked in battle with the enemy.”

Emilia: “The second floor… you can’t mean that…”

Subaru: “Yeah, I do.”

He nodded back at Emilia as she quickly turned pale, before sneaking a furtive glance up above.

He couldn’t see it firsthand, since the ceiling was in the way, but he could most definitely feel the signs of the furious fight that was taking place beyond his gaze.

—Julius Juukulius and Reid Astrea’s rematch had begun.

Subaru: “…”

In the end, it looked like he hadn't been able to avoid a conclusion to it.

After Subaru had fallen to his knees earlier, unable to pick himself back up, Beatrice had taken charge of their companions. The opponent Julius had ended up waging battle with had been Reid Astrea, even under Beatrice's command.

That naturally had been influenced by the fact Roy Alphard — Or rather, Reid, who'd taken over the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony's body and gained his freedom, actively sought its conclusion.

Nevertheless, Subaru had gone through many "deaths" and crossed through many possibilities whether he'd wanted to or not. And that had made him understand something.

—As annoying as it was, fate existed.

No matter what road you followed, the firm, unchangeable reality that lay there was called fate.

The fluctuations of history were so unyielding, to the point it really made you believe things were predetermined. It was almost like the results had already been determined by fate, with all the branches converging there.

That had been the outcome of all of their wills coming together to try and achieve their respective goals. However, precisely because of that, they'd become so closely entwined with each other, that they'd never come apart.

Yet, couldn't it also be said that meant there was no hope ahead?

Considering that the conclusion between Julius Juukulius and Reid Astrea was inevitable, it could only mean that…

Subaru: "Reid should have assimilated with one of the Gluttonies, his take-over should be almost done. Though we'll let Julius settle things with Reid. We're going to deal with the remaining three."

Ram: "Is that really going to be okay, Barusu?"

Subaru: "…? What do you mean?"

Subaru cocked his head earnestly in response to Ram's question. But on seeing him react like that she just muttered out a brief: "Nevermind,"

Ram: "I already know how Barusu goes about things. Looks like I'm losing my edge as well. I suppose we have no choice but to rely on Barusu's proposal."

Subaru: "I don't really fully get what you mean, but you do know I can tell you're making fun of me?"

Emilia: "Huh? No, no, she's just complimenting you. Ram's saying that she relies on you a loooot, Subaru. Hehe, now I'm gonna need to work hard."

Ram: "…I will be having a word with you later, Emilia."

Emilia replied back to the mortified Ram with a "Yessir", a slightly happy trill in her voice.

Despite the situation they were in, Emilia was most likely glad, and found it refreshing that Ram wasn't using honorifics to address her. Now that their master-servant connection was gone, the attitude she was showing Emilia was one of perhaps friends, or maybe a little sister that was always quite a handful.

Ram didn't have the opportunity anymore to play the part of the capable big sister now that her actual little sister didn't require much to handle. Nevertheless, she seemed that way now thanks to the bizarrely happy-go-lucky Emilia.

Subaru: "Anyways, that's it for what's going on in the tower. What we need to do next is sort out the best people for each place. This sorting business is where Natsuki Subaru really shines!"

Ram: "You sure are really humble…"

Subaru: "Humble or not, it's still important work! This is what they mean when they talk about unsung heroes! This is something only I… That's right, this is something only I can do! This is my battle…

Owowowow!!"

Ram: "Just hurry up and start sorting."

Ram slapped his face for spending too long on the preambles. Feeling the pain of the damage he'd received, Subaru looked around at all three of their faces— as well as the earth dragon's, and said: "Are you all ready?"

From here on out, it would be all out war, in its truest sense. It barely made any difference whether you were a human or earth dragon; and in the first place, Patrasche was typically far more useful than Subaru himself.

But if you added Super-Subaru into the mix, their possibilities would explode ten-fold, and then double.

Subaru: "One for all, all for one. All for one, one for all. We can't win without having everyone on board. We can't have even one of us missing. We will start winning if we've got everyone, because we…"

Emilia: "…Because we came to this tower to get back what was taken from us, we won't allow ourselves to lose them."

Subaru: "Exactly."

Subaru gave Emilia a nod with a snap of his fingers before regaining his composure.

Subaru: "So, first things first, Lye Batenkaitos' opponent shall be…"

2

???: "…Barusu."

Subaru: "Huh?"

They began to head to their posts after they'd finished their discussion. However, someone grabbed him by the scruff of his neck and forced him to a halt before he could. Though, there hadn't been enough force in it to throttle him.

There'd probably been a reason why they'd shown such consideration.

Subaru: "It's really not like you to care enough to not hurt me, nee-sama."

Ram: "It's not like I would bother using too much of my strength when looking at a fly trapped in the palm of my hand. This is the same as that… Though, it's not like I would purposely put one there. That'd be disgusting."

Subaru: "Don't just say it and then deny it!"

Subaru shrugged his shoulders at Ram's Ram-like phrasing. Standing in front of him, Ram softly clenched and unclenched the palm of her hand, checking its feel a few times.

Her gestures carried faint traces of bewilderment in them. This was quite the rare sight for Subaru, so used was he in seeing Ram always acting aloof.

It was quite a perk to witness her acting so perplexed and unsure of herself. It was only thanks to this that he could put up with the levels of exhaustion that were threatening to crush his entire body.

Subaru: "…"

Ram's body was constantly tormented by the burden of being "Hornless". Subaru took over this burden when he used his Cor Leonis, which in turn gave her the extra strength that let her operate to her fullest. Cor Leonis was one of their most essential tricks for beating this tower.

Subaru had already given Ram a brief summary of what was happening to her, albeit setting aside the fine details.

Simply put, Ram's burdens were flowing into him, making Ram's body a lot lighter in those respects. However, since it strained him terribly, he desired a speedy settlement to the situation they were in. That was it, more or less.

Ram: "Now that I think about it, since it's just going to be you who's suffering Barusu, I don't really care how long it'll last."

Subaru: "But this is a joint effort between you and me, nee-sama. You must want to get this over as soon as possible when you think about it like that, right?"

Ram: "Yeah. You repulse me."

Subaru: "Don't you think using repulse is going a little too far…"

Though, well, throwing abuse at me is so typical of her.

Subaru accepted that, all the while suppressing the urge to vomit. Ram stared at him, assuming her familiar pose with her arms folded in front of him.

Ram: "…Barusu. I won't be taking it easy."

Subaru: "…"

Naturally, the more Ram moved using the full capabilities of her body, the greater the burden he would need to take, acting as its counterbalance. Even so, if he wanted to keep Ram in this state, he'd need to be prepared to take on all of that extra burden.

Just her standing there breathing was already plenty to make him groan. And that was just the pain she experienced in her typical daily life.

Subaru: "Nee-sama is too kind, huh."

That was how the still sleeping Rem would frequently assess her. He hadn't really gotten it back then, but now he finally understood what she'd meant.

If he were to let himself preface it in typical Ram fashion, it'd be something like: "That's how Ram goes about things".

Ram: "Barusu?"

Subaru: "It's nothing. —Definitely don't take it easy of course. I can tell whether you're in serious-mode or not by how much pain I'm in. What torture it is.”

Ram: “So, you’re saying your plan is the kind where the better I feel, the more you’ll suffer?”

Subaru: “I feel like I’ve just handed the switch to the nukes to the one person I shouldn’t have.”

Then again, if Subaru was going to hand over the switch to the nukes to one of his compatriots, Ram was the only one he’d consider for it.

Subaru: “Otto would be a good bet as well, if not for the fact I’d worry he’d probably slip and accidentally push it… You’re the most reliable in the sense of who’d use it properly nee-sama.”

Ram: “Hah! Flattery will get you nowhere… Listen, take good care of Emilia and Beatrice-sama. I don’t care what happens to you Barusu, since I know you’re always a mess whatever the case.”

Subaru: “Yeah Yeah, I know. And about Rem…”

Ram: “—The one who cares the most about Rem in this world, is me.”

Ram declared that as if she were stating a matter of course. Her crimson eyes narrowed as Subaru’s breath was taken away by the sheer intensity of her words.

Ram: “Let’s just say that it’s enough that you, in your own Barusu-like way, are the person who cares about her the second-most in the world. Leaving it at that shouldn’t unsettle even a single hair on Rem’s head.”

Subaru: “…Yeah, or it’d make me want to die.”

Ram turned her back on Subaru after they’d exchanged their feelings.

There were probably so many things that she wanted to say, words that she wanted to leave him, but she’d quickly changed her attitude, putting an end to them there.

That was truly how Ram went about things.

Ram: “Kindly take care of yourself as much as possible, Barusu. Otherwise, if you die, you won’t be able to see Rem again.”

Subaru: “Yeah, love you too.”

Subaru likewise replied jokingly to Ram’s facetious concerns.

And so, Subaru watched her run off into the distance saying nary a word, before then planting his feet firmly down onto the corridor and regrouping with Emilia and Beatrice who were waiting for him.

Subaru: “Sorry to keep you waiting. Let’s head out as well.”

Emilia: “Yeah, let’s do that. Will Ram be okay?”

Subaru: “Yeah, most likely; she’s Ram after all, so she’ll be fine… If I’d told her to do something really dumb, there’d be no way she wouldn’t have said anything about it.”

Beatrice: “You’ve gone and put a lot of trust in Ram again, I suppose.”

Subaru: “I trust you just as much, and on top of that, I love you way more. Don’t pout.”

Beatrice puffed out her cheeks as if she were saying: “I’m not pouting, in fact!”. Subaru took her outstretched hand and then looked over at Emilia, standing by his side. He wondered if she was worried about Ram going out on her own; however, her face in profile looked only slightly anxious.

Subaru: “Emilia-tan?”

Emilia: “No, it’s nothing. I just find that reaaaally reassuring.”

Subaru: “—. Coincidence as it may be, I actually feel the same.”

Emilia’s words didn’t really have any foundation to them, but for Subaru her words served as a great boost.

Their expectations far surpassed their anxieties. It was far more reassuring to have someone you could entrust, rather than have someone trusting in you. You could better face up against what lay ahead by believing, rather than clinging. Though it wasn't like they'd solved any of their problems yet.

Subaru: "It's only natural to believe in your companions; what's more, you can believe in yourselves relying on them as well. Now's the clearest our view's gotten ever since we came to this sand-filled tower."

Beatrice: "—That look of yours, it's my favorite kind of Subaru, I suppose."

Beatrice looked at Subaru, who'd encouragingly taken over things, and gave him an audacious smile. And then at Beatrice's comment, Emilia brought a hand to her lips with a "Hehe", causing Beatrice to point out Emilia's reaction with a "What's up with that, in fact."

Emilia shook her head and then spoke up:

Emilia: "It doesn't look like you remember, Beatrice, but I was thinking the exact same thing as you."

3

A huge creature was caught by its hind-legs and savagely swung around before being smashed against the walls and floor without relent.

???: "…"

This creature, that was on the receiving end of these monstrous, unfathomable blows let out a hideous wail. A cacophony grated through the air that sounded like the wails of countless babies.

???: "—))"

What was letting off those wretched cries was a repulsive, bizarre-looking witchbeast— One, which in accordance with his own knowledge, Natsuki Subaru had called the Centaur. However, that girl who'd been well acquainted with this kind of witchbeast had once called it by a different name. —The Hungry Horse King.

The Hungry Horse King: “—ッ ッ”

The Hungry Horse King’s massive body was hurled away, causing it to somersault through the sand-tower’s balcony. Having been knocked about by the impacts, the King of the Sand Sea instantly picked itself back up with flames spewing from its mane.

Its human upper-half brought forth two swords wreathed in flame. Using this completely un-witchbeast-like dual-wielding sword art, the Horse King tried to fire off a scorching red blow at the being that had been piling on attacks at it.

However…

???: “…”

A white ray of light pierced the Hungry Horse King as it tried to swing its swords of flame, its fiery mane billowing. The impact caused this massive creature to falter back a fair few steps. However, it withstood it. It had withstood it. And just like that, the Horse King stepped forward again, preparing to launch its counterattack. —But the very next moment, the white ray of light exploded inside its body.

The ray of white light turned into a plethora of white rays that shot out of the Horse King in all directions from the inside out

No matter how resilient a creature was, it could not escape death if all of its vital organs were destroyed within. The Hungry Horse King was no exception to this rule as it brutally perished to the white rays of light.

???: “…”

The slaughter of the woman who’d been behind its death — Shaula — didn’t stop there.

Swinging her braided brown hair about, Shaula powerfully kicked off the floor and leaped across the balcony floor. With light coming from her outstretched hands, she grabbed ahold of two enemies that were obstructing her path — they were witchbeasts that had lizard scales over their ape-like bodies. From there, the light coming from her hands welled forth.

If Subaru would have seen her blow, he would have probably dubbed it a Pile Bunker. The heads of the two monkeys she'd grabbed by the face were obliterated by the white light she'd shot, not even giving them a chance to fight back. She followed up by spinning around on the spot and using her long legs to knock down the monkeys that were bounding towards her. Her toes slammed into their faces, whacking them down to the floor with their heads caved in.

The stage where the battle between Shaula and the witchbeasts was taking place was the fourth floor of the Pleiades Watchtower. Although the outer-wall balcony was built hundreds of meters above the ground, there were quite a few witchbeasts there that had wings, or could easily climb the wall.

She shot down the ones climbing one by one, the balcony soon becoming a sea of blood.

Shaula: "…"

Even after carrying out so much carnage, Shaula wasn't the least bit out of breath.

The total number of witchbeasts that were swarming towards the Pleiades Watchtower was so massive, that it'd be pointless to count them. However, the fact that the tower hadn't succumbed to their avalanche was in no doubt thanks to her overwhelming fighting strength.

Even so, the precarious equilibrium that Shaula was keeping was about to…

???: "…Shaula!"

Shaula: "Ghhhhhhhh…!"

A shrill voice called out her name, but she didn't answer back. With her face contorted in pain, she grabbed a winged witchbeast that was flying towards her and smashed it down at her feet.

She followed up by piercing it with a white ray of light, giving bloom to flowers of red mid-air, successfully putting an end to its pursuit. However, the state Shaula was in didn't change as she drove them away. She clutched at her own face and stamped her feet down onto the floor.

Through the gap between her fingers— Her large-pupiled eyes were beginning to split apart and pulse a brilliant red. Her compound eyes were making their appearance, meaning Shaula was transforming.

Shaula: "Someone… Someone broke a rule…"

With her face covered by the palm of her hands, she met the looming witchbeasts in this destitute state. She fought off their attacks with her long legs, pulverizing their bodies with sharp back-kicks.

???: "This is bad. She's at her limit. Meili! How's it looking on your end…"

Meili: "It's exactly how it looks, I've got my ha~nds full dealing with these flying young'uns! If my naked onee-san becomes unable to fight too, we'll definitely, definitely be running short of ha~nds!"

???: "Guess so. This is looking fairly grim."

Gazing at Shaula's anguish, was a girl with wavy light-purple hair sporting a bleak look on her face; Anastasia — Or rather, Echidna, who was currently borrowing her body. Standing beside her was Meili as well. Her dark blue ponytail was swaying about as she somehow kept the scales tipped in their favor by using her Divine Protection.

The trio of Shaula, Echidna and Meili were the team resisting with all their might to keep the witchbeasts from approaching the Pleiades Watchtower. However, unlike Meili with her Divine Protection of Magic Manipulation and Shaula with her predisposition for pure firepower, Echidna's presence was pretty much worthless.

She was reluctant to go back to Taygeta, but at the same time, she wanted to avoid retreating further into the tower which was in a state of unease, where she'd only end up being an unnecessary burden.

Echidna: "Calm down, now's not the time for that…"

She moved her slender fingers and focused her awareness at the Od inside her — Though strictly speaking it was the Od inside Anastasia's body. Anastasia's Gate had a defect in it, where it couldn't take in any mana. That's why she could only cast magic with her natural Od.

In other words, it was tantamount to cutting Anastasia's lifespan. Therefore, a measure that not even Echidna wanted to take, other than when her life was truly in danger.

But better to take action than just sit around waiting for death. At least, that's what the Anastasia she knew would think.

Everyone had to use the cards they were dealt with, and thus, victory was determined by the way you played your cards.

Echidna: "…"

The change afflicting Shaula was most likely due to something that was rooted in her core. Something that definitely couldn't be overturned, existing as a kind of shackle on her. As an Artificial Spirit, Echidna understood that all too well, considering she was in similar shoes. There wasn't anything anyone could do about one's force of will.

If what she'd said before was true, then the rules of the Pleiades Watchtower had been broken. She needed to act as the Watchtower's keeper to remedy that.

The reason she was resisting so hard was because, in the depths of her heart, she didn't actually want to harm them— Or rather, she probably didn't want to harm Natsuki Subaru.

Echidna: “…It’s ironic.”

Thanks to her staying on as the keeper of this Watchtower, she’d been able to reunite with the one person she’d wanted to meet. Yet because of her continued presence as its keeper, she couldn’t go against the orders to harm him. —Truly the sorrow of being a creation.

In its truest sense, Echidna thought that probably only she and Beatrice, with her also being a creation, could comprehend the pain she was in.

That was why she…

???: “…DRYHAAAAAAA!!”

Echidna caught a glimpse of the silhouette of a person leaping out from the corridor that led from the balcony to the tower, letting out a vigorous yell. Her eyes mutely widened in surprise, her breath taken away from her.

4

Subaru felt shocked the moment he’d leapt out onto the balcony, witnessing the differences between what it usually looked like and now. He immediately realized that a fierce battle was taking place here.

Subaru: “…”

The fourth floor balcony had turned into a sea of blood, with countless witchbeast cadavers scattered about.

This best seat in the house, where you could enjoy an unbroken view of the sand sea, was now dyed in blood thanks to the countless witchbeasts ceaselessly charging at it. If left unchecked, they’d get into the tower and mayhem would ensue.

And, the biggest contributor in preventing this damage from spreading was…

Subaru: “…Shaula!”

Shaula: “Master…?”

Shaula turned around at the sound of Subaru’s yell — Her eyes were about to split apart and divide into her six compound eyes; three on the left, three on the right.

He’d already witnessed this transformation process of hers with his own eyes. It meant that the rules of the Pleiades Watchtower had been broken and Shaula’s time had come to take up her duty as the watchtower’s keeper.

This would culminate in Shaula transforming into the giant scorpion against her will, where she’d then set about annihilating the challengers inside the tower — i.e. Subaru and his group.

That’s why…

Shaula: “Master… Please… Please order me…!”

Subaru: “…”

Shaula: “Someone broke the rules. At this rate… Master… I’ll… end up ki…! If you can’t, you know, before I do that, I’ll… I’ll…”

Shaula clutched her body tightly as she sought Subaru’s orders with a look of desperation set on her face.

Her capacity for self-suicide seemed to have been instinctively robbed from her. What she was beseeching for here was one final push to kill her.

Shaula would throw away her life without any hesitation if Subaru were to say it. You could safely say that the threat of the giant scorpion would be gone, so long as he gave the command.

Thus, Subaru nodded his head firmly,

Subaru: “Shaula.”

Shaula: “Y…es… If it’s for you Master, I’ll…”

Subaru: “I’m getting sick of telling you this, but I ain’t got a clue why you're calling me Master."

Shaula: "—hk"

The instant Subaru replied back to her, Shaula's compound eyes became tinged with despair.

After four hundred years of waiting in vain, she'd finally been able to meet him again. But to have that denied by him, and after all that, even have her last wish trampled on, led to her feeling as frightened as a child.

Subaru took a deep breath, and then let it out as he gazed on at her trepidation.

Subaru: "That's why we'll talk about whether I'm your Master or not later, as well as if I'll admit to it."

Shaula: "Eh…"

Subaru: "I'm not going to tell you to die. There's no way I'm going to let you keep crying. There's absolutely no way I'm going to let your four hundred years end here."

He'd spent quite some time scraping up the "Memories" he'd temporarily lost, so he knew all too well.

The patience people had in this world was insane. Four hundred years they'd spend waiting in earnest for someone. He really needed to drag out these people they wanted to meet, even if it meant grabbing them by the scruff of their necks.

Subaru: "I'll just do it myself! As if I'm going to willingly do what someone else tells me! Bring it on, oh inevitable fate!"

Shaula: "…"

Subaru raised his fist up above him while he firmly declared that, leaving Shaula speechless. Yet at the same time, the unbearable urge going on inside her seemed to be about to burst.

But, at least in that precise moment for her, that which mattered weren’t the rules of the tower or the explosive urge to swell up from within.

Shaula: “Master… I love you.”

Such it would seem were her emotions of uncontrollable love she held for the person she’d longed for all these four hundred years.

Shaula: “…”

Shaula’s transformation truly began straight after she’d proclaimed her love.

Her pale, slender hands swelled up, and morphed into giant pincers. Her feminine, voluptuous body burst open, scattering flesh and blood which then formed back, like the rewind on a tape, re-molding her body anew. A jet-black shell grew there as her bright red compound eyes glared down at the world. Her many legs pierced into the floor, and so the warden of the sand-tower was completed—.

Shaula: “—))”

The foreboding figure of the giant scorpion let out a shrill warning cry at the rule-breakers who’d violated the tower rules. The first thing its compound eyes settled on was, ironically enough, the black-haired young man that the previous version had obsessed over.

It aimed at him, ready to unleash its devastating blow…

???: “—HIYAAAAAAAA!!”

—Yet a thunderous flying kick drove into the giant scorpion’s body from the side.

The kick carried a tremendous amount of power, enough to lift the giant scorpion’s huge body up from the floor and blow it back. It hurtled across the stone floor, collecting witchbeasts on its way, before flying off the edge of the balcony out into the skies over the sand sea.

However, the giant scorpion wasn’t going to just do nothing about it. She hurriedly thrust her outstretched stinger into the wall of the watchtower, tossing its massive body up, twisting its body midair as it desperately tried to get back to the balcony.

Subaru: “…Murak”

A single chanted word was what prevented it from making its way back.

This direction-imbued mana interfered with the reality around them, bringing about effects into the world that wouldn’t normally occur on their own. This time, its effect had been to block the giant scorpion’s return.

The scorpion was caught by a gust of wind as it desperately tried to land on the balcony. Its body was swept back by the sandy breeze, sending it far off trajectory.

How strong a turbulence would it have to be to blow away the scorpion’s colossal body? It was utterly massive, weighing at least several hundred kilos. Though, things weren’t like it seemed.

Murak was a kind of Yin Magic that changed the gravity of its target.

To put it briefly, it was quite natural that its body had ended up unable to move as it normally did, considering it now weighed as much as a speck of dust. That’s all there was to it.

Shaula: “—ッッ”

The giant scorpion let out a pained cry before being thrown back once again from the balcony. It quickly swung its stinger in an attempt to snipe those in the tower, having given up on getting back.

But that came a step too late.

Meili: “Hanemogura-chan!”

The girl’s imposing command gave way to a rush of blows that hurtled towards the giant scorpion as it blew away in the breeze. witchbeasts, with what seemed to be bird feathers sprouting from them and most of their heads morphed into a horn, dove towards her.

One by one, they shot themselves straight at the scorpion's shell. And although they didn't damage it, they were still able to push her further and further away with each impact, keeping her away from the tower.

Shaula: "…"

Even as great of a scorpion as she was, she wasn't going to be able to shift her body weight around without something to support her. Just like that, after the wind had blown her away, the magic was canceled, making her fall head over heels towards the ground.

They were hundreds of meters up from the ground, but she wasn't the kind of opponent who'd be done in by something like that. Though, it sufficed as a means for buying time, thus he would make use of this brief reprieve.

Subaru: "Meili! Echidna!"

Echidna: "Natsuki-kun! You've pulled yourself together… yeah?"

Echidna looked up with a frown as Subaru rushed over to her. Then with a pensive look adorning Anastasia's face, she continued her words,

Echidna: "Have you perchance gotten your memories back?"

Subaru: "This is going to save me a lot of time! Though how did you know?"

Echidna: "It's obvious. Otherwise Beatrice wouldn't be sporting such a proud look next to you."

Echidna jerked her chin at Beatrice, who was looking rather smug as she held Subaru's hand.

Indeed, it was plain as day that Beatrice's mood had lifted for the better. Plus, the fact that she couldn't hide this show of emotion of hers was really lovely.

Of course Echidna's insight was superb as well, make no mistake about that. Following from it, she shifted her gaze to look behind Subaru — at Emilia — who'd given the giant scorpion a flying kick earlier.

Echidna: "And this girl I don't recognize is…?"

Subaru: "It's due to Gluttony's authority. She's a victim to it, just like Julius is… They're all forgotten, other than by the person themselves. Her name is Emilia. My tough yet adorable princess."

Echidna: "I appreciate you getting me up to speed so quickly, even so, the tower, both inside and outside, is an utter mess. Would you mind if I were to ask you what we're going to do about it?"

Subaru: "You can, I've already got an answer ready for that."

Subaru gave her a deep nod. Behind him, Emilia spread her arms out and sent countless shards of ice up into the air. She waited a moment and then unleashed them all, their ferocious power tearing through the witchbeasts soaring through the skies, as well as those on the ground.

Although Subaru couldn't see it from where he was, they must have also pierced into the giant scorpion who'd fallen beneath. Yet her attack had only been a drop in the ocean with all these witchbeasts they had in front of them…

Subaru: "Echidna, you're going to take over inside! First, you're going to meet back up with Julius on the second floor where he's fighting! I've told Emilia what to do after that!"

Echidna: "—. I have no issues leaving together with her, but what are you and Beatrice going to do?"

Beatrice: "Our role is already set, in fact."

Echidna hesitated for a moment before giving her answer. Beatrice replied back to her before raising her eyes up in admiration to look at Subaru's face in profile, firmly giving his hand a squeeze.

Beatrice: "We're going to deal with that giant scorpion here, I suppose. We're going to have to go easy on her, so that we don't accidentally kill her. Jeez, what a bother, in fact."

Subaru: "She sure talks big doesn't she. That's my Beako for you."

Beatrice: "Thbptttttttt, I suppose."

After voicing out her boasts, as if trying to rouse both herself and her contractor, Beatrice stuck her tongue out.

Echidna's eyes grew wider as she witnessed their exchange, followed by a shake of her head. Rather than wasting time arguing, it'd better for her to believe that this was the best way to go about things, and commit to it.

Indeed, it was so typical of Anastasia to have that instinct that allowed her to make split second decisions.

Echidna: "There's no doubting that your opinions have come as a great help for us pretty much everywhere inside this tower. That's why… it seems to me that handing this place over to you would give us our best chances of winning."

Subaru: "I feel honored. Though I can't help but feel bad that you've ended up with Echidna's name."

Echidna: "Regarding the matter of the deep influence my Creator has, I'd like to find an opportunity to have a proper discussion about this after we settle things. …Is there anything you want me to pass on to Julius?"

Subaru: "…"

Echidna tacked that question onto the end, just before she turned her back to leave.

Subaru could still sense Julius fighting a floor above them using the effects of Cor Leonis — Now that he thought about it, this meant that he'd met back up with all of his friends inside the tower, bar him.

Given that Julius had also been really worried about him when he'd lost his memories, Subaru wondered whether he needed to tell him that he'd gotten them back. However…

Subaru: "Nope, not really."

He had no words that he needed to tell Julius Juukulius who lay locked in combat with Reid Astrea.

After all, Subaru's plan had been to assign the best people to their most suitable posts amidst this dismal state of affairs. That's why he'd gone around talking to them, after all he'd needed to reshuffle their roles. However, he didn't need to do that for Julius.

…Because his post lay nowhere else but against Reid Astrea.

Subaru: "At this point, I can literally only say attaboy to him. He'd still end up going to Reid, even if I didn't mention anything."

Thanks to that he'd been able to talk with Shaula before transforming into the giant scorpion.

The familiar words of love she'd uttered in the end had provided Subaru with a boundless strength. A fire had been lit in his heart when he'd told her that he'd definitely, definitely help her.

So, that was why…

Subaru: "…Everything I needed to say has already been said by the previous me, as well as the me a little before that. I don't have anything else to add now. He is Julius Juukulius after all."

Natsuki Subaru fully acknowledged that an unyielding fate existed in this world.

The many problems shrouding the watchtower were impossible to avoid, they would always rear their ugly heads at them. But, being unavoidable and unsurmountable were two completely different stories.

If it was fate for Reid Astrea to stand against Julius, then what came beyond that was also inevitable.

The one who was going to slay Reid Astrea reborn was Julius Juukulius.

Echidna: "—. I see. I'll just tell him as it is then."

Subaru: "Oh wait, there is something. Since everyone's having a hard time here, tell him to hurry his ass and settle things there, then come give back up to the others."

Subaru waved at Echidna as she began to rush off to her duties with a strained smile on her face. After seeing her off, he turned towards Emilia, who was busy cutting down a pair of witchbeasts with a sword of ice, over by where Echidna was heading to.

Subaru: "Emilia-tan! It's going to be just as we discussed! I'm counting on you Emilia-tan!"

Emilia: "Mhm, leave it to me! You're the one who mustn't die here Subaru!"

Subaru: "Of course I won't!"

Emilia's words were only natural, however, they'd made Subaru raise his fist, feeling more overwhelmed than usual.

He didn't want to die. —The reason for that remained unchanged, but now he had more of them why he needed to avoid it at all costs. The dangers of Returning by Death in this situation were nigh unspeakable.

If his restart point hadn't changed, then he'd go back to the stage before he'd separated Louis Arneb, along with her Witch Factor, from himself. As for what kind of trouble that would bring, neither he, nor anyone else, could know.

Would Louis vanish from Subaru's body or not? The Hall of Memories lay somewhat out of the normal scheme of things, so he didn't know whether it would avoid the effects of his Return by Death. Everything was so unclear.

So, that meant…

Subaru: “…This time, we’re going to settle things here!”

Following Subaru’s affirmation, Emilia grabbed ahold of Echidna and left the balcony. The girls would be going to their respective field of battle, and likewise, so would Subaru and his group.

Meili: “Wha~t now? All of that sounded like gibberish to m~e, any chance you could explain things to me pro~perly?”

Meili had been patient and not interrupted his conversation with Echidna. But she’d called out to him when she’d noticed that only he and Beatrice had remained on the balcony.

Subaru gave her a thumbs up and flashed her a devilish smile, showing all of his teeth.

There’d been only one reason why Subaru hadn’t called out to Meili in these last moments — Like Julius, she was already in her ideal field of battle.

Subaru: “I’m sorry Meili, but you’re going to be joining us. Me, you and Beako are going to be holding down two of these corners — the giant scorpion and the swarm of witchbeasts!”

Meili: “That’s really not much of an expla~nation!”

Beatrice: “…She’s coming, in fact!”

He didn’t have the time to give Meili a more detailed explanation as she gave a swing of her braided hair with a puff of her cheeks. The very next instant, a massive creature jumped up from the outer-wall of the tower, onto the balcony, as if in response to what Beatrice had said.

The creature had a jet-black shell, red compounded eyes and ferocious looking pincers…

Subaru: “So, you’re a four hundred year old hikikomori, yeah?”

Subaru let out a quick sigh before nimbly picking Beatrice up from his side, and snuggling her into his arms. Then, along with Meili who'd rushed over to join them, they came face to face with the giant scorpion.

Faced with their enemy who was still silently glaring at them, he gave a small smile,

Subaru: "This is a hikikomori showdown. Her over there clocks in at four hundred years, whereas us two over here clock in at four hundred and one."

Meili: "Isn't four hundred and two more co~rrect when you count all three of us?"

Subaru: "In other words, we're gonna win!"

Beatrice: "I don't get what any of this means, other than the part you said about winning, I suppose!!"

Held within his arms, Beatrice shouted at Subaru and Meili for joking about together. And just like that, surrounded by just the right amount of tension, he glared at the giant scorpion and let out a sigh.

Now things had shaped up to become his foreseen match-ups. All that was left now…

Subaru: "…I'm seriously counting on you, Emilia-tan. You're the key to everything."

…The battle against the Four Corners enclosing the Pleiades Watchtower had officially begun.

Chapter 79:
Ready, Steady, Go!

1

The giant scorpion was the one who fired off the first blow to start the battle.

“…”

Its red compound eyes glittered brightly, and immediately afterwards, a white ray of light gushed forth from its swinging tail. What was terrifying about that, was that its blow, meant as a fatal one for them, had been fired off without even one of its typical cries. With nary even a hiss, the giant scorpion nonchalantly rained death down towards them.

Subaru had tons of bad memories associated with that white light. Specifically, he’d been killed by it in around half of his fifteen plus attempts inside the tower.

Nevertheless, given that he’d been killed so much by it, he did learn a thing or two, despite how much he despised it.

Namely…

Subaru: “The time it takes to charge up and the signs it shows when it’s about to attack…!”

The scorpion’s compound eyes and stinger both glowed a smidgen more when it was about to unleash an attack. These signs were so subtle, to the point he’d thought he was just seeing things, but this eye for survival was what Subaru had developed through his mortal trial and errors.

Making full use of it, Subaru ran with Beatrice in his arms, taking it upon himself to close the gap between them and the giant scorpion. Reason being…

Subaru: “Its charging speed is pretty damn slow…!”

With a twist of his body, he dodged the white ray light that had welled forth as he said that.

Even if he’d called the ray of light slow, it was still much faster than a pitch from a shoddy high-school baseball player. Fortunately though, he was confident in his ability to tell whether a pitch was good or not. And in any case, there was no way he was going to stay alive without being able to do that.

A great man had once said that life was all about trial and error. Though, he probably hadn’t been envisioning these life or death situations when he’d said that.

Even so, you learn by making mistakes. That was an immutable truth. Subaru “luckily” had the ability to go through trial and error in life or death situations.

He’d made full use of that to find his eye for survival. —Thus this was Natsuki Subaru’s arena.

Subaru: “I’m sorry for not being able to live up to all your expectations, other me!”

Subaru dished out a heartfelt apology to his other self who’d sought out an almighty Natsuki Subaru. It was like he was saying to them, “I’m sorry for only being able to fight dirty.” Beatrice though reacted with a snorted “Hmph”. She was still held tightly in between his arms, dancing this jig of life and death with him.

Beatrice: “What are you talking about, in fact. You’ve never failed to live up to our expectations, I suppose.”

Beatrice spoke up, then raised her hand up in a flash. From her thin lips, she chanted the word “Murak”; a kind of Yin Magic that tampered with the law of gravity.

The giant scorpion had once been hit with its effects and pushed far away below them. So this time, the scorpion braced its jet-black shell and planted its legs firmly so that it wouldn’t go through the same thing again.

However…

Meili: “You’re just playing into my hands if you’re going to stay sti~ll!”

A barrage of witchbeasts began to assail the unmoving giant scorpion.

The strange-looking witchbeasts Meili had ordered the attack from were called “Hanemogura”. They looked like what you’d get if you crossed wings and horns together. And just like bullets that held no fear of death, they shot towards the giant scorpion and unhesitatingly struck its tough shell with their horns. The sounds of them crashing against it overlapped with the sounds of shattering.

The giant scorpion writhed in pain and raised its large pincers in retaliation.

???: “…ヲ ヲ”

What followed the attack in their stead was the bizarrest of all bizarre-looking figures. A being that was the very manifestation of a nightmare-ridden night, the Centaur that was a cross between man and horse: the “Hungry Horse King”.

The terrible wail of babies swept through the watchtower’s balcony. Along with it came a grating roar that made him want to cover his ears up, and then a burst of flames which violently filled the area around them, almost all the way up to the sky.

Hungry Horse King: “…ヲ ヲ”

The Hungry Horse King didn’t hesitate and thrust its fiery spear right into the heart of the flames. Its red-hot tip was going to land a critical hit that would burn through even the scorpion’s iron-like shell.

The giant scorpion was overwhelmingly strong when it came to plain fighting strength. However, that didn’t mean attacks wouldn’t work against it. It felt pain if struck, just like any living creature.

It felt pain if struck. If struck.

Subaru: "…"

Thus the giant scorpion embodied the "Then everything's hunky dory so long as I'm not hit" sort of mantra.

It caught the fiery spear with one of its enormous pincers and severed the Hungry Horse King's arm in one swoop. The Horse King tried to regenerate its wound, but it had been ruthlessly cauterized by its own fiery spear. The squirming, bubbling flesh of its wound trying to regenerate itself stopped in its tracks.

Subaru had been able to obtain an unnecessary tidbit from this; namely, that it wouldn't be able to regenerate its burnt wounds. The Hungry Horse King was now stopped in its tracks, but then, the giant scorpion's stinger went off with a bang into the Hungry Horse King's body, causing its large body to burst open from within.

"…"

The Hungry Horse King's flesh and blood scattered everywhere, and along with it went its life.

Even the Hanemogura who'd been smashed against the scorpion's shell ended up dead when their horn, which was fused with their head, broke. The way they fought by tragically throwing away their lives was one that could naturally be cursed as utterly barbaric.

It would be wrong of Subaru to close his eyes to this and dismiss it as "There's no problem with that since they're a witchbeast." However, he also wasn't planning on glossing things over by saying "All lives are created equally."

Life had value to it, and without a doubt, there were differences in their values.

There were clear differences in the way he felt about the weight of the lives of those who were precious to him and those who weren't. He wasn't going to hide that behind any deceptions. That's why he was going to make full use of the witchbeasts' lives to win this fight.

Therefore…

Subaru: “Though you’re doing the right thing overlooking me, you’re still making a big mistake!”

With the witchbeast vanguard repelled, Subaru confidently stepped through the floor which was now coated red. Carrying Beatrice in his left arm, he drew out his whip with his right and swung it up.

Dubbed the Guiltywhip, its blasphemous finishing touches had been done using the corpse of his former foe— Natsuki Subaru cracked it through the air, his super-quick whiplash scored a direct hit on the giant scorpion’s shell.

The scorpion let out a thunderous cry and glared at Subaru with its red compound eyes. There were no signs that he’d caused any damage to it, nor that it was feeling any pain.

But he was fine with that. His aim hadn’t been to inflict any damage on it. That had probably been why it had put off dealing with Subaru until last, after the other witchbeasts.

The great scorpion’s decision was both right, and wrong.

Subaru: “WHRAAAAAAA—!!”

Beatrice: “We caught a big one, in fact!!”

His whip had snared itself around the scorpion’s shell. With that, the scorpion’s massive body would shoot up when he tugged with all his might, thanks to the recoil. This was made possible by the fact that the effects of Beatrice’s Yin Magic were still in play, drastically decreasing the weight of the titanic beast.

The giant scorpion immediately tried to plant itself firmly on the ground. However, the vast quantities of blood and entrails at its feet made the conditions extremely poor for getting a firm grip. Subaru reeled the scorpion up in one swoop as it tried to cling onto the floor with its sharp talons.

From an outsider’s perspective, the situation almost looked like Subaru was swinging the giant beast about using some form of superhuman strength. But this grandiose spectacle on display had only been made possible thanks to Beatrice’s help. And so he kept swinging the giant scorpion's body as much as he could with his whip, until finally, he hurled it away.

Subaru: "BOOON VOOOOYAGE—!!"

The giant scorpion's body spun around in midair, carrying its super-giant swinging momentum.

As it spun around uncontrollably, it tried to hit Subaru with a white ray of light, showing pinpoint targeting. However, Beatrice raised her hand up to knock it away.

She materialized glowing purple crystals in midair, and used them to shoot the white ray of light down head-on. As their coordination sprung to life, Subaru released the giant scorpion from his whip and it flew away towards the sky once more.

Subaru: "This should buy us more…"

"Time."

Subaru found a reprieve out of this mess with this precarious attack, although he had to allow some concessions to win out in the end. However, his eyes widened in surprise before he could finish what he was saying.

Right before his eyes, the giant scorpion began to perform an astonishing feat of acrobatics as it hurtled away.

"…"

With a slash from its enormous pincers, it severed its own tail at the root. Just like that, its tail flew away, scattering dark-red bodily fluids in its wake. Yet, a white ray of light was fired off from the very tip of it.

It slammed against the now tailless scorpion and blew it back towards the balcony of the watchtower with tremendous force. All that work in making it lighter and practically weightless— and now it had made it back to the balcony, bringing a shockwave with it. It dug its enormous pincers into the floor to stop its momentum, before then pointing its glare at them.

Subaru: “Th-Those were some acrobatics you did. But if that means you’ve lost your tail, then all the better for us…”

Scorpion: “…”

Subaru: “Like, I mean, hey, wait a sec, wait a sec, wait a sec, wait a sec!”

The giant scorpion had landed and lowered its body, putting itself on guard as more darkish-red blood poured out from its tail. But its wound hadn’t gotten any deeper. Quite the opposite in fact. —Its severed tail was regrowing from its stump.

And it wasn’t only its tail. The cracks in its shell that had come from firing the white ray of light at itself, so to blow it back, were also bubbling away. He could see those wounds filling in as well.

Subaru: “It’s tough, smart and heals; aren’t we just getting more and more of these un-Shaula like features?!”

Healing aside, Shaula’s body was soft, and she wasn’t in the least bit smart. Nevertheless, the giant scorpion had shed all of these traits and was now coming at them with its overwhelming killing power.

It haphazardly swung its newly-grown tail about, releasing its stingers all around into the surroundings. Its attack was a ranged one, that showed no signs of its typical tells; so it was safe to say that it was the worst kind of attack for Subaru and Beatrice to be subjected to, given how much they fell short in strength.

Subaru: “Whoooooaaaa—?!”

Beatrice: “Gh… Subaru, we’ll have to fly, I suppose!!”

They had no means to escape from the white rays of light the scorpion had fired off, at least on terra firma. That said, a means of escape had presented itself in the skies. Beatrice quickly released her magic from the scorpion and called back to Subaru.

Subaru kicked off from the ground and jumped up into the air with all his might, trusting in his partner, regardless of whether her magic was actually going to work. The white rays of light began to shatter the balcony, with one of them just barely grazing his feet.

Subaru: “That was really close…”

Beatrice: “Don’t speak so soon, in fact…!”

They’d literally jumped over the possibility of death, but they had no time for relief.

The same thing had happened as before when Subaru and Beatrice had laid their attack onto the giant scorpion. Escaping up to the skies meant that they’d lost both their foothold and escape route. — All that was left for them was to be destroyed by one of the scorpion’s attacks.

Subaru: “Beako! Original Spell, Part 2—!”

Although this trump card could only be used three times a day, there was no way they could risk messing up by not using it and dying as a result. The moment Subaru squeezed her shoulders tightly, Beatrice came to the same conclusion as well.

She’d have their special technique ready for deployment in a jiffy, which would make Subaru invincible for a set amount of time…

???: “…ﾐ) ﾐ)”

Subaru: “Whoa?!”

Beatrice: “Whaaa?!”

She and Subaru were grabbed from the side before she could cast the technique. A white ray of light passed through the space which they’d been in a moment ago, almost evaporating them.

The only thing that had saved them from that demise, and was keeping them from being pursued by the great scorpion was…

Subaru: “Th-That was close. What even happened… Ghe?!”

Beatrice: “I suppose?!”

Subaru checked to see what was going on as he clinged to something rubbery. His voice caught in astonishment; likewise Beatrice also had quite the frown on her face.

This was because the one who'd saved them from the giant scorpion's attack, and was still giving it their all to protect them, was a mauve-colored, vicious-looking witchbeast: a Hungry Horse King.

Subaru: "I never thought we'd be here fighting together at the climax when I first saw you down in the underground!"

Hungry Horse King: "…))"

The Hungry Horse King let out an ear-splitting cry in reply to Subaru's bluff. His face tensed up at that; then, another Hungry Horse King pulled over next to them. Clinging to that Horse King's back was Meili's small body.

Meili: "It looked to me like you were about to pull out your trump card, we~ren't you? Try to be a li~ttle more careful. Onii-san's and Beatrice-chan's trump card is a lifeline for me as well after a~ll!"

Subaru: "Nice save! Nice support! You did well Meili! Can we change the field of battle at this rate?"

Meili: "You mean, you want us to cha~nge locations? I sure can, bu~t…"

Subaru: "Then please go for it! We have too few escape routes here for starters!"

Scanning the surroundings, Subaru decided to beat a retreat from the balcony, since there weren't many places left to stand on. Tons of witchbeast corpses were already littered about there, and with how things were, weird accidents would be prone to happen.

Meili gave some thought to the efficiency of his decision and then nodded. She clapped her Hungry Horse King on its back and gave the two of them their orders. As soon as they heard her words, the two Horse Kings picked up their pace and jumped down from the balcony, onto the wall of the watchtower. They began to run down it without wasting any time, at breakneck speeds.

Subaru: “WHAAAAAA—?!”

Beatrice: “WABABABABABABA, IN FACT?!”

Subaru and Beatrice yelled out in tandem, hugging each other as they faced this unexpected hard ride. At the same time though, he could only take his hat off at Meili, for being able to tame Hungry Horse Kings of all things, and have them be part of their troops.

Subaru: “…”

With the supremely-powerful Hungry Horse Kings at their head, the Hanemogura flying through the skies, the colossal sandworms, courtesan bears and other countless witchbeasts on the ground as their allies, they had quite a wide range of strategy available to them.

It could be said that they were the ideal partners for Subaru, since his plan was to keep stalling for time by dishing out one delay tactic after the other.

Subaru: “We’re really being spoilt for choice with how many ways we have to attack! You and I may be way more compatible than I’d ever thought Meili!”

Meili: “Do~n’t say that, Onii-san. I really wouldn’t want Petra and Beatrice-chan gla~ring at me!”

Subaru exchanged shouts with Meili as they galloped down the watchtower in vertical fashion. The latter gave Subaru a sullen frown in response to his casual chit-chat as she clung onto her Hungry Horse King’s back. Her reaction slightly hurt his innocent male sensibilities, but right now was the time to ignore such trivial wounds.

Subaru: “Round two’s gonna start when we drop onto the sand sea. She’s gonna come after me! So for the time being, she shouldn’t interfere with anyone inside the tower…”

Meili: “Bu~t, we’re still stuck without a way to beat her, yeah? No matter how much time we spend running around, we're not gonna be able to grab a win, ri~ght?"

Since they were in the Augria Sand Dunes, they had witchbeasts in endless supply. Thus their witchbeast ammo. wasn't ever going to run out. However, all that gave them was the ability to continue waging their battle, rather than a surefire way to beat the scorpion.

Subaru: "…"

He glanced over at Meili. Sweat was dripping from her forehead, which she was wiping away at, and her breaths were slightly labored.

That was in part due to how strained she was, being caught smack dab in between the hammer and anvil that was the battlefield. However, he couldn't help but think that it was also in part due to the toll which controlling witchbeasts had on her. Though this was something which Subaru couldn't really comprehend, since he didn't hold a Divine Protection, there was enough of a chance for a Divine Protection to become toxic when overused.

Subaru: "Otto did joke about this, saying stuff like the world was hellish back when he couldn't control his Divine Protection…"

Maybe those words that Otto had spluttered out when drunk were nothing to sneeze at.

If Divine Protections became burdensome like Otto had said, then there'd be a limit to how much Meili could fight as well. Their defeat would instantly be set in stone were Meili to fall in battle.

In other words…

Subaru: "Indeed, this battle will be decided by how much I coddle Meili as a princess—!"

Beatrice: "What an inexcusable plan, I suppose!"

Right after Beatrice raised her eyebrows in response to Subaru's declaration, a shock ran through their entire bodies. It served as a sign that the Hungry Horse Kings had reached their final stop after running down the tower at breakneck speeds.

Meaning they'd broken past the vertical wall of the watchtower and arrived back at the sand sea.

Subaru: "It's not like it's gone anywhere at the end of the day… But when you drop down to it like this, it feels way more different."

Beatrice: "How does it feel, in fact?"

Subaru: "Absolutely awful, I hate how deserts are just full of sand. It reminds me of how I never liked the desert stages you often got in games as well."

Sometimes, depending on the game's system, the HP of his character would start ticking down by doing nothing but walking in the searing heat. This sand sea had nothing to do with the scorching sand you got in those, but even so, he didn't have any fond memories of it.

Made all the worse by the fact that they were surrounded by countless swarms of witchbeasts.

Subaru: "Though, I know they aren't going to attack us…"

A sickly-sweet aroma that made him want to wrinkle his nose was floating about, accompanied by a far worse beastly stench; he could pretty much say that the air around the sand sea was one of the crummiest in the world. Though with the environment being filled with tons of witchbeasts, some familiar, others not; perhaps witchbeast Researchers or whatever would drool over that?

Unfortunately it only made Subaru and his team feel uneasy.

Meili: "S~o, what's your answer to my question?"

Meili rode her Hungry Horse King over to Subaru and Beatrice as the former shuddered. She wanted an answer to her question. Subaru glanced up at the tower, and then replied,

Subaru: "It's as you say, we can't do anything about the giant scorpion… about Shaula. That's why Emilia-tan holds the key to everything.”

Meili: “Are you talking about that silver-haired Onee-san from earlier?”

Subaru: “Yeah. Emilia-tan and the fifth rule are the key to everything.”

Subaru gave the puzzled Meili a nod before sticking his palm up in front of her. He spread out all five of his fingers, marking the rules imposed on them as challengers of the Pleiades Watchtower.

Subaru: “We can’t leave without completing the “Trials”. We can’t break the “Trial” rules. We aren’t allowed to disrespect the “Libraries”. We mustn’t damage the tower. And finally…”

Meili: “Hm?”

Meili should have heard the first four rules.

But she didn’t know the fifth one. Shaula had been trying to hide it, so only Subaru, who’d “Returned by Death”, knew what it was. As well as Shaula herself of course.

The fifth rule that Shaula had zipped her lips shut and refused to tell them was…

Subaru: “…It is not forbidden to destroy the “Trials”. Meaning we can destroy the rules of this tower.”

As challengers, the “Trials” constrained their actions. At the same time though, the rules also constrained Shaula’s actions since she was one of their examiners.

Shaula was bound by the rules of the tower. So, even though she didn’t want to kill them, she couldn’t escape from the fate that bound her to try and do so through her giant scorpion transformation.

If those shackles had been binding her for over four hundred years, then…

Beatrice: "…tch. She's coming, I suppose!"

A great plume of smoke rose before their eyes just after her warning.

An accompanying shockwave came from the giant silhouette that had leaped down from the balcony without any hesitation, rather than running straight down the tower.

He could hear the heavy grating sound of its large pincers coming from the thick of the smoke. The giant scorpion slowly emerged from within, its compound eyes were pointed directly at Subaru instead of at the countless enemies around them.

Subaru: "Beako, Meili! We need to buy some time! Emilia-tan's victory is the condition for our's!"

Beatrice: "I get you loud and clear, in fact!"

Meili: "And exactly how long is she going to take to achieve tha~t?"

Subaru: "As fast as she possibly can."

Emilia was always earnest and extremely hardworking.

Thus, there was no way she was going to compromise or slack off with the problems they were facing. The results she delivered were always the best she could give, and with it came the highest firepower she could muster.

Subaru believed in that, he loved that, he cherished that. That's why he was going to be able to stand his ground here.

Subaru: "Now then, let's do this. We're gonna break fate… No, we're gonna break the tower's system!"

2

???: "I see, so that's why you're…"

???: "Yeah, it's like that! Subaru told me that I'd definitely find a way to rewrite the situation we're in if I go up to the very top of the tower!"

Emilia focused on running as fast as she could, giving her only a brisk reply. She was holding Echidna in her arms as she ran, with the latter trying to make her body as small as possible.

At first Emilia had taken her by the hand as they ran; but being slowed down by her, she'd ended up picking her up partway through, and she'd remained like that ever since.

In fact, it was much faster this way and it strained her body far less, so it was a huge help. Even so…

Echidna: "Shouldn't it be you who needs to save their strength? You haven't got a clue what's lying in wait for you, right?"

Emilia: "Huh? Oh, you don't need to worry! Anastasia-san's body is reaaally light, and it's not like it's gotten any heavier even with you in it. It's no sweat off my back!"

Echidna: "My presence doesn't really have anything to do with Ana's weight… Like, not at all."

Faced with those slightly amiss answers, Echidna looked at Emilia, rather, at the beauty of the unfamiliar half-elf as she felt the struggles within herself.

This unfamiliar half-elf was one of her companions who'd had her very "name" stolen away by the authority of "Gluttony". Her circumstances were pretty much like Julius', but the way she was behaving was far different compared to him. Were their intrinsic personalities different? Or was it perhaps a difference in the people who were there to support them?

Echidna: "Doesn't it terrify you that you've been forgotten?"

Emilia: "It's reaaaaally scary, and lonely. But I don't have the time to sit down and curl up in fear, wouldn't you think?"

Emilia gave a brutally honest reply to Echidna's hushed question. The strength behind her change seemed like a testament of her mental fortitude, or perhaps it was down to some other factor.

Emilia had said before, “I’m not worried because Subaru remembers me.”

They’d been awfully simple words, the stuff you’d see in dreams. Yet, at the same time, they seemed to be the truth.

Echidna: “…”

It wasn’t clear what made Natsuki Subaru impervious to the effects of the authority of “Gluttony”. Though strictly speaking it wasn’t like even he was completely impervious to it. In fact, hadn’t he said that the reason he’d lost his “memories” had been due to an unexpected encounter with “Gluttony”?

So Echidna couldn’t definitively say that Subaru’s specialness was the main cause behind everything that occurred. Meaning, there should have still been a certain possibility.

As in, couldn’t they have protected their “names” and “memories” somehow?

If they could have done that, then both Anastasia and Julius…

Echidna: “…”

When she stopped to think about how Julius felt, having been forgotten by everyone, could anyone even blame him for faltering? Though, when she looked at Emilia’s strength after she’d been placed in the same situation, she couldn’t help but wonder what was different between the two.

The difference must have come in who was at their side. The difference must have been in who was beside them, supporting them.

Likewise, wouldn’t Julius not have collapsed if he’d had some support? And shouldn’t someone have been there like Natsuki Subaru had for Emilia?

Echidna: “What should I…”

"What should I do?" Echidna couldn't find an answer to that question within herself.

It was so bad that she felt like this may have been the first time in her life as an empty Artificial Spirit where she'd been at such a loss with herself.

Emilia: "Echidna?"

Echidna: "…It's nothing. More importantly, is it true? That you managed to find a way through Reid Astrea's violence… and passed the Second Floor's "Trial" before?"

Emilia: "Yeah, it is. It's reaaally hard to explain now that you've forgotten."

Emilia gave her an adorable puff of her cheeks. But, the fact of the matter was, she was embarrassed by how she'd beaten the "trial" of that man, who was the very picture of "violence" itself.

Echidna never for one moment imagined that she'd be lying in this situation. Despite only knowing her for a short time, Echidna could tell that her nature wasn't suited to telling fibs. So everything must have been true. It'd only been for a few moments, but judging by how she'd stood up against the giant scorpion on the balcony, there was no doubt that she was quite the capable fighter.

So, the only remaining issue was…

Echidna: "So, you can find a way to fix this situation if you go up to the very top of the tower. What's your basis for that?"

Emilia: "Subaru told me that he heard what the fifth rule was from Shaula. Plus, Subaru's thought long and hard about this before coming up with the idea, so I'm pretty sure it's the right way to go about things."

Echidna: "To me that seems like an idea based on excessive blind faith, but…"

Emilia: "If you're still full of doubts, we can address them, but I don't think now's the time for it… That, and didn't you come here with me because you believe in Subaru as well?”

Echidna was lost for words as Emilia turned her crystal-clear eyes over to her. Seeing Echidna’s reaction, Emilia gave her a smile that was tinged with delight, even if it seemed a tad out of place.

Emilia: “You see, my esteemed knight is reaaaally giving it his all for us.”

Emilia showed with her attitude that she was proud of the fact that their hard work was being appreciated. In response to that, Echidna likewise felt an odd pang of emotion. She placed her palm over Anastasia’s flat chest and breathed out a sigh.

Echidna: “…”

“These sorts of emotions are dangerous”, Echidna warned herself.

They were completely irrational and out of place. At the very least, it wasn’t something she ought to feel at a time like this. She needed to forget them if she could, and if not, then at the very least she should forget them for the time being.

Emilia: “…Subaru’s relying on me!”

Echidna felt, amongst other things, envious of her. She, who believed so, so much in her companion, who was that much closer to her.

“I need to forget this present moment and focus on overcoming the situation we’re in”, Echidna thought to herself.

Echidna: “…”

Emilia’s long legs moved gracefully as she flew up the stairs. Then, after they’d climbed up what should have been quite a lot of steps, a tremendous flash of silver came into view, scattering sparks everywhere.

With their vision now unobstructed, they saw a battle unfolding wherever they looked. With his lilac hair aflutter, and white uniform stained with blood, stood Julius Juukulius.

And, the person he was up against was…

Julius: “Gh, khh…!”

???: “Whoawhoawhoawhoawhoa! Doesn’ look like ya can do anythin’ about me like that, ya prick. Don’t go underestimatin’ me, ya prick. Did ya come here to mess about? If ya wanna mess about then go put on some makeup. When ya do, I’m gonna step on ya, bully ya and ruffle ya about, ya damn prick.”

The very embodiment of violence, Reid Astrea, let loose a nightmarish slash with the pair of chopsticks he held in his hands as he swore. He was dancing a danse macabre, with the second floor as his stage.

Theirs was a battle that transcended what humanity could fathom; even so, the fact that Julius was far inferior in strength to him was something that was so sadly obvious, that it could be grasped instantly, even to the untrained eye.

Julius: “…tch”

Dealing with the flurry of slashes and kicks coming from Reid, Julius countered by spinning his Knight Sword around and thrusting it into one of the gaps.

His sharp thrust derived from extraordinary technique seemed to be nothing more than a blur of light. Yet Reid easily avoided it with a yawn, and that was with his eyepatch blocking part of his sight.

Reid: “RRRRHAAA!!”

Julius looked on, stunned that Reid had avoided his thrust. Immediately afterwards, a casual-looking kick slammed into Julius’ torso, with the soles of his zōri digging straight into his abdominal muscles. Julius took a few steps back and let out a pained cry.

Then, a blow from one of his chopsticks dropped down towards his head…

Reid: “Get pulverized, ya prick.”

With a vertical flash, his slash, which came with a shockwave, cut through the air, space and reason itself.

His sword slash was so overwhelming that ways to even express it no longer came to their minds. It was so beautiful, that even though his weapon had been a chopstick, one couldn't help but be captivated by it, even if they were an amateur at swordplay— It was the pinnacle of swordplay, the very culmination of it which was what was being manifested there.

"…"

A slash so beautiful, that you would probably die from just admiring it.

Julius leapt aside, dodging it. The hem of his cloak didn't make it in time and was swallowed by Reid's blade, evaporating. A vertical groove was left carved into the second floor of the watchtower, which was made of unknown materials, as if it were all a jape.

And to make matters worse…

Reid: "Heyheyhey, arent'cha bein' naive if yer thinkin' you've escaped with that?"

Julius: "…hk"

Giving him a mocking smile, the air he'd cut through in the room warped and bent, with a gust of wind starting to roar.

Julius, who should have managed to jump aside, gulped, and then was instantly dragged back to his feet, as if he were being pulled back towards the torn space – back into the range of Reid's sword slashes.

To their disbelief, this was due to the force of gravity from the torn space restoring itself. It was pulling Julius back after his narrow brush with death straight into the range of the next blow.

Reid began to throw a punch at Julius, unable to move due to what was happening…

Emilia: “…That’s enough.”

A split second before he released his punch, the sound of a chiming silver bell interjected between the two swordsmen.

However, in contrast to the beautiful chime of her voice, the way she’d joined the fight was rather audacious. Echidna became lost for words, faced with that extreme spectacle in front of her.

Reid: “Haah?”

Julius: “…”

Reid looked up above him, unable to conceal the suspicion in his voice. Julius on the other hand opened his eyes wide in surprise, utterly speechless.

They were looking at the strange thing that had appeared above them— A block of ice that was so big that it covered the ceiling.

This block of destruction that could instantly shatter even a Dragon Carriage into smithereens fell down towards the two swordsmen.

Reid and Julius’ reactions were contrastingly different. Julius leapt away to avoid the hurtling ice block, while Reid curved his lips up into a smile and laughed.

Reid: “Hah!!”

With a fierce smile on his face, Reid thrust up one of his chopsticks at the falling block of ice. His raised chopstick collided with the point of fall of the block. By some miracle, the forces between the two points stood at an equilibrium with each other, causing Reid’s chopstick to bend, but preventing its fall.

Reid stamped his zōri down firmly onto the floor; the force of it travelled through his chopstick and flowed into the ice block which was still being held up by said chopstick. A crack began to run up the block as his chopstick snapped in half.

Reid: “…Now wasn’ that somethin’”

Reid spat those words out, and a split second later, the block of ice with a crack running through its center, shattered in the blink of an eye.

Chunks of ice began to rain down, and while basking in them, Reid slowly turned himself around. Receiving the piercing gaze from his blue, uncovered eye, Emilia pointed her palm at him, with a look of resolve setting in on her face.

Their gazes crossed each other's, causing Reid to ogle at her in surprise.

Reid: "Yer a real feisty one, ain'tcha. It's not like I dislike women like you, but… Huh?! What the hell, ya twat, yer really damn hot ain'tcha?! One helluva smokin' hottie! Why the hell's there such a smokin' hottie in the middle of this sand sea! C'mon, yer gonna be my opponent, ya twat"

Emilia: "My apologies, I didn't mean to interrupt, but I do need to get Julius to beat you…"

Reid: "Wha?"

Emilia paid no heed to Reid's egoistic talk, and instead continued with a troubled look appearing on her face. Reid frowned at what she had said, but Julius was the one who was far more bewildered, having just been rescued.

Though he'd managed to escape from the block of ice that Emilia had unleashed, he couldn't hide his suspicion towards the fact that she'd suddenly appeared. Keeping himself at a distance from Reid, he turned his yellow eyes to look over at Echidna, who was standing beside her, and spoke,

Julius: "I get that she helped me, but… who on earth is she, Echidna?"

Echidna: "It's kinda hard for me to explain her identity. But, if I may put it simply, she's someone who's in the same boat as you Julius."

Julius: "What the…?"

Julius stared at Emilia once again, with his eyes widening slightly, probably because her features coincided with a being he knew about.

Julius: “A silver-haired, amethyst eyed elf… No, I find it hard to believe that such a distinctive being would have suddenly turned up in the tower. Then, could it be that she’s…”

In light of the situation in the tower, as well as the peculiarities of her appearance, and the fact that her presence was nowhere to be found within him, Julius felt, out of his own accord, that something was not quite right.

Julius came to the answer by himself. Seeing his startled eyes, Emilia gave him a firm nod.

Emilia: “Julius, right now I know exactly how you feel.”

Julius: “Then you indeed are…”

Given that they’d both had their “names” snatched away by Gluttony, Julius immediately grasped what was going on. And as soon as he did, his conviction that Emilia was their ally appeared to grow.

He stood in front of both Echidna and Emilia, protecting them, once again pointing his sword at Reid.

Julius: “You have my thanks for helping me out earlier. But I still don’t quite get why you two have come rushing here considering what’s going on in the tower. What’s happening with the “Taygeta” library, and with Miss Rem and the situation outside?”

Echidna: “There’s an attempt underway to try and bring all these matters together so to deal with them all at once. The idea is Natsuki-kun’s, and the ones helping him with it are all of us in the tower.”

Julius: “It’s Subaru’s? But he’s…”

A puzzled frown appeared on Julius’ face as he heard Subaru’s name wedged in the middle of her explanation.

As far as he knew, Subaru should have faced Reid's "Book of the Dead" in the "Taygeta" library, and his consciousness should have been in a state of disarray from his return. Beatrice had told him that his return had been difficult, thus, Julius had continued to fight against Reid so that they could overcome the turmoil in the tower in his own way.

Therefore, even if she was saying Subaru had woken up and came up with this idea, you could say it was only natural that there was no real link between spontaneity and recognition. Nevertheless…

Reid: "I haven' got anythin' against y'all gettin' all chummy with each other, but don't ya pricks go jabberin' away while ignorin' me!"

The floor exploded with a loud bang, resulting in Julius receiving a blow from the intruding Reid's chopstick. Although he'd lost one chopstick, he still had another one left. And it wasn't like he had to use them. Even if he just fought empty handed, it wasn't like his strength was going to diminish.

Julius: "Kh!"

While buffeted by Reid's sharp attacks, Julius rallied himself and focused on keeping his desperate defense up. Seeing that, Reid unleashed a blow with one of his hands that could have literally felled even a dragon. At the same time, he stuck out his spare hand at Emilia as she searched for an opening, thrusting his fingers out at her.

Reid: "I ain't got a clue what yer tryin' to pull off, but I don't think I'm gonna let you do as ya please, ya twat. I'm gonna be your opponent after I'm done dealing with this novice… Huh?"

Reid abruptly tilted his head in doubt mid-sentence. He then brought his fingers of his spare hand to his eyepatched left eye and spat out a venomous tirade of: "HeyHeyHeyHey"'s.

Reid: "The hell, ya twat. For some reason my hand ain't movin' to stop ya. Unless I've like suddenly become smitten by ya… No way, ya must have passed the "Trial"!"

Emilia: “Yeah, I did! You lost because you touched my chest with your chopsticks!”

Reid: “Kah! Now that’s one way of losing that I can really get behind! What a huge waste that I can’t even remember it, ya smokin’ hottie!”

Reid clucked his tongue. His words indicated that there was some shackle on him that wouldn’t let him stop Emilia. In other words, it meant that the obstruction standing in between her and her duty was now gone.

Emilia: “Julius, I…”

Julius: “You may go my lovely lady; you, who like me, are of unknown name.”

Turning only his head around, he interrupted Emilia as she was about to say something. Seeing his Knight Sword now held at the ready again, Emilia kept her silence at his words.

Seeing the surprise on her face, Julius gave her a gallant smile,

Julius: “You have your duty to carry out. I know it’s something I won’t be able to help you with, but that’s fine with me. —I pray everything goes well.”

Emilia: “…Yeah, for you too!”

Receiving Julius’ encouragement, Emilia nodded at him and then broke out into a run. Reid didn’t make any attempt at stopping her. The one-eyed red lion let her pass by him and saw her off.

Then, as Emilia reached the front of the staircase in the innermost part of the second floor that would lead the way up, she stopped in her tracks and turned around,

Emilia: “It’s Emilia.”

Julius: “…”

Emilia: “My name is Emilia, just Emilia. —I’ll definitely see you again later!”

Leaving her name behind, Emilia ran up the stairs with an air of elegance about her. Echidna let out a long, long sigh as she watched her disappear from sight.

From here on out, Emilia’s duty was to head to the top. So, Echidna’s duty was to…

Julius: “You’re not going anywhere? Are you planning on watching me fight?”

Echidna: “Only if you’ll let me do so… Well, no, I suppose not. I’m the one who’s decided to do that.”

Julius: “…”

Julius glanced towards Echidna, who was standing by the wall, and then pursed his lips together. She took a quick gasp of air as she witnessed all kinds of emotions flitting across the profile of his face.

Echidna: “It’s not like I can do anything, but if Ana were here, she would have probably done this. No matter where I am in this tower, I will always be subject to danger. Given that, I shall stand behind you out of my own volition. Because…”

Julius: “…”

Echidna: “…Because you are Anastasia Hoshin’s knight. Isn’t that right?”

It took a tremendous amount of courage to believe in something that didn’t feel real.

It was nigh impossible to grasp just how much strength it took to believe in something that had no concrete basis, to the point that it would make her feel relieved; at least when compared to believing in something that was actually tangible.

Regardless, Echidna spoke those words to the man before her eyes, his back facing away from her, while believing in that uncertainty.

Julius: “…”

Julius lowered his long-lashed eyes in response and softly let out a deep, long sigh.

Julius: “You’re able to give me more strength than you give yourself credit for. Merely from the fact that someone went and summoned their courage to believe, and hold expectations, in a me who may not be anyone anymore.”

Echidna: “Julius…”

For Julius, the footing he’d lost had become uncertain.

For Echidna, the bonds which she was supposed to know had become ambiguous.

The two of them had to rely on something so shaky to build this relationship which altogether differed to the one that they should have been bound by. Nevertheless, at this very moment, the two of them must have surely been seeing the same thing.

So for that reason…

Echidna: “…Julius, I have a message for you.”

Julius: “A message?”

Echidna: “Yeah. Everyone’s fighting all over the tower, so… he said to “Hurry your ass and settle things here, then come help the others”“

Julius: “…”

Echidna could tell that this was his kind of encouragement, thus she conveyed it to him exactly as she’d heard. Julius’ slender shoulders tensed slightly after he heard it.

He digested the contents of the message and took it on board. His response following it was loud and clear.

Julius: “Hah”

It almost seemed like he'd let out a short, sharp gasp of air, but it wasn't like that at all.

He'd let out a laugh. He'd breathed out a single gasp of air from the pit of his stomach to wheeze out that laugh.

The fact that Julius Juukulius was facing battle with a smile on his face would have been a thing to marvel about, had there been anyone here who knew Julius.

Julius: "…If he's broken out of his shell, then I mustn't lose here either."

His expression of determination was quiet, yet full of hidden zeal.

Julius raised his Knight Sword in front of him and faced his foe, reflecting himself in his blade. Reid had been lodging a bored look on his face for a while… But now, he was grinning like a shark.

Reid: "Ya really kicked into gear, didn't ya, ya prick."

Julius: "Pardon me, but when it comes to fighting, I always take it seriously."

Reid: "Nono, that ain't what I mean. You get it right? Even if I don't spell it out for ya, ya prick."

Reid lifted his left hand up with a grin still plastered on his face. He flipped his eyepatch up and uncovered his eye. Thus, with his perfectly functioning blue eyes, the peak of all swordsmen pointed his cheerful murderous intent towards his challenger.

His sword spirit was so formidable that anyone faint of heart would have been killed by the glint in his eyes alone. However, Julius met that sharp glint of his head-on, and Echidna behind him likewise braced herself and endured it.

Seeing the two of them endure the raging storm of his sword spirit, Reid loudly clacked his fangs together.

Reid: "I am the "Stick Swinger" Reid. Remember only my name, before you disappear."

Julius: “…”

Exchanging one’s name in battle before crossing swords was a sign of recognizing a warrior as their equal. There was no knowing how much Reid really cared about that norm, but regardless of what he thought, the considerations of the person who’d basked in that had changed dramatically.

Julius took a breath and prepared himself, stilling his raging heart.

Julius: “I shall give you my name once again. I am Julius Juukulius. One and only knight to Anastasia Hoshin-sama, who stands as a Royal Selection Candidate in the Kingdom of Lugunica. —It’s time for me to give up acting the part of a nameless knight.”

He magnificently proclaimed his “name” so that it would be engraved in both he, and the world itself.

3

Leaving behind Julius and Echidna downstairs, Emilia continued to run up the steps.

Her long legs were moving as fast as she could muster, skipping up the stairs two or three steps at a time. Though the speed she was going at was inordinate, her own thoughts were screaming at her to go faster and faster.

Emilia: “…gnh”

Emilia strongly gritted her teeth; a look of desperation was adorning her beautiful face in profile.

She was worried about the two she’d left behind downstairs on the second floor. Reid was extremely strong, foulmouthed and a thug to boot. The two of them could easily get hurt both physically and mentally dealing with him.

Naturally Emilia’s worries didn’t just stop at Julius and Echidna. Would Subaru, Beatrice and Meili manage to keep Shaula in check? Would Ram be able to play her part too? Would Patrasche keep guard over Rem?

Her anxieties, such as whether she was going to have to rebuild all her relationships from scratch with her “name” eaten, were never-ending. She felt like she was going to burst into tears if she took a moment to stop.

However, she didn’t stop. She didn’t shed any tears either. She endured the tingling-sensation at the back of her throat.

Emilia: “Nothing is over yet after all…!”

The fact that they believed in her, and that they were able to believe in her, was what was propping Emilia’s entirety up right now.

She was full of worries, brimming with anxiety, but she was also full of “I believe in you”‘s, which trumped over those emotions.

Emilia: “…hk! There’s a light!”

As she continued to pour her heart and soul in running up the stairs, Emilia’s amethyst eyes caught a glimpse of a white glow at the far end of her field of view. She realized that it was coming from the end of this extremely long staircase, and that it would lead to the unknown first floor.

The moment she comprehended that, she firmly kicked off from the floor and sped up even more.

Then, finally…

Emilia: “…I made it out!”

Emilia broke through into the light, where the staircase had ended in front of her. What unfurled itself before her eyes that instant wasn’t an area that you could call a “floor”.

Emilia: “Huh…?”

Emilia stopped in her tracks, completely flabbergasted, and unintentionally let out her surprise at the scene she was faced with. Reflected in her amethyst eyes, was not the next part of the familiar watchtower she’d come to expect.

The walls had disappeared, as had the ceiling; spread out all around her lay the vibrant blue sky— Emilia wasn't standing inside the building, but rather, she was outside. She'd ended up emerging right on the rooftop at the top of the tower after running up the second floor's stairs.

Emilia: "The first floor's outside…? This place is up even higher than the clouds…"

There was a vast, circular floor at the summit of the tower with no other partitions or anything that looked like a handrail at its edge. Therefore, she could easily look down below by going over to the edge of the floor.

Clouds which should have been far above in the sky were brushing against the tower. Emilia's breath caught as she realized she'd come all the way up to the clouds, or was even above them.

It was the first time Emilia had ever come to a place as high as this. However, despite receiving such a shock, she was quickly distracted by another profound emotion.

???: "…"

…There was a presence there, that she hadn't been able to notice on account of how still and grand it kept itself.

Emilia: "…Ah"

Emilia had been busy looking at stuff like where she was, the height of the clouds and what the situation was like on the first floor. She'd been late in noticing the being that had swept past the corner of her eyes. She slowly turned around and let out a large gasp.

Even though Emilia had almost fallen into despair from being forgotten by the world with her "name" being taken from her, her heart had still stood firm in the end. —But even that Emilia was lost for words in sheer awe.

The "being" that had appeared before her eyes was utterly beyond the pale of her imagination.

Because that being was…

Emilia: “You’re…”

???: “—Thou, who hath reached the top of the tower. Step forth through the first floor, almighty petitioner.”

Its voice was solemn, and it felt like it was being roared directly into her soul. She realized that her voice was trembling.

Was there anyone who could fault Emilia and call her weak-minded? No one would be able to. It would be impossible. Because all living creatures had no choice but to prostrate themselves before this being.

Because this being’s name was…

???: “—I, am Volcanica. In accordance with the ancient covenant, I ask the will of thee who hath reached the summit.”

With his huge body covered in glittering blue scales, the “Divine Dragon” Volcanica looked down upon Emilia and declared that while exerting a presence that seemed like it would blow even her very soul out of existence.

4

Outside of the tower, commenced the battle of Shaula, who had transformed into the titanic scorpion, against Subaru and the rest.

In the second floor of the tower, the sword play of the grinning wielder of violence, Reid Astrea and Julius reopened.

On the first floor of the tower, Emilia achieved an unforeseen encounter with the mighty existence awaiting there.

And, on the spiral staircase connecting the fourth floor and sixth floor of the tower—

???: “A~h, damn it ~tsu! Even after stealing it and everything, it just feels like not having put it to decent use, doesn’t it, gee~z us!”

Spitting away in irritation, the young boy clicked his tongue whilst tearing at his dark brown hair. Upon swinging down the hand scratching his head, what had been generated therein was a beautiful, ornate sword shaped with ice.

With the stolen “Name” as the foundation, it was a special power which he had reconstructed, but contrary to its appearance its regulation of Mana was exquisitely arduous, and was quite difficult to use jointly with other “Memories”. In the first place, combining the skills of multiple others required a suitable sense, and that was something which Roy and Louis were maladroit at.

???: “We~ll, it’s because we excel in it that we are so able, but you kno~w.”

Even within the trio of siblings possessing the Authority of ”Gluttony”, each one’s way of using the Authority subtly differed. Amongst them, as one who took pride in being “Gourmet”, the points he would like to object to in his younger brother and sister’s ways weren’t few. —Fortes connected to sense of superiority. Though something like advice, was unbefitting of him.

???: “The message won’t get across to dear cute Louis, or that chap Roy… a~h, it can’t be helped ~tsu! If the two of them are saying they can’t do anything then it can’t be helped! That means that we can thoroughly lick the feasts present inside this tower down to the roots ~tsu! How nice, so nice, quite nice, very nice, as it’s nice, it certainly is nice, surely it is nice, surely it must be nice, as it must be nice! Gluttonous drinking ~tsu! Gluttony ~tsu!”

Crunching the sword of ice in his hand, with his sharp fangs unraveled, “Gluttony” — Lye Batenkaitos decided to itemize all of the targets inside the tower for his own platter, without leaving a single one.

Fortunately, the situation had been served. What remained was to simply select the order, and what was to be the main course—

???: “—Do you think you have the privilege to be choosing that? How very easygoing.”

Lye: “…”

Upon the voice descending from the top of the spiral staircase, Lye seized chewing the ice, and raised his head. Overhead, on the fourth floor were light crimson eyes looking at Lye, who was standing on the staircase between the fourth floor and the fifth floor.

With the same hue as blood or blaze, eyes with terribly icy heat, were looking down upon Lye’s ferocious hunger as if pitying.

And—

Ram: “From what was said, it seems you were the one who tore apart Ram and Rem’s sisterly love, isn’t it. —Kindly die whilst baying like a pig.”

Chapter 80:
Death of the Mind

1

—It smelled of rage.

Fragrant, sweet-smelling—it reeked of pure rage. It felt irresistible, and his slender body could not help but squirm with excitement. He had a feeling it would push him to greater heights.

“Ha-ha-haaa.”

Looking at each other from the top and bottom of the spiral staircase, Batenkaitos sneered at Ram’s defiant words.

Looking at the girl with powerful emotions in her light crimson eyes, Batenkaitos experienced ecstasy as he inhaled all of the rage, hatred, and murderous intent that was being directed towards him. For a lack of a better word to describe it, it was no exaggeration to say that breathing in this one breath was his life’s purpose.

“How nice, so nice, quite nice, very nice, as it’s nice, surely it’s nice. We don’t usually see people who give us such an angry look. It’s a very precious feeling. Understand? Do you understand, how happy we are now!”

Batenkaitos licked his lips as he stepped on the ground to express his feelings of excitement. Encountering someone who could make him experience this emotion is something that would usually be too much for him to hope for.

The memories and names taken away by the Authority of Gluttony were removed from the world, and no one except Roy and Louis were capable of recognizing them. The grief of losing a loved one, the anger of denial, the empty feeling of loss—everything ceased to exist and there was nothing that could be done about it.

“So of course it’s natural, that’s natural. So we never really paid attention to it."

Due to his affiliation with the Witch Cult, it was only natural for him to meet many people who directed their hatred towards him due to who he was. However, there was no one who remembered what Lye Batenkaitos had done, nor anyone who harbored hatred for him personally, and none who aimed to kill him. This was the natural order of things—however, this natural unwritten rule created by the Authority of Gluttony had been overturned.

—Batenkaitos was no longer the only one who was not influenced by the Authority of Gluttony. The existence of a third party had emerged—

"Natsuki Subaru…!"

Murmuring the name of the man that Louis had so steadfastly obsessed about, Batenkaitos felt a sweet tingle deep inside his thin chest. It hadn't been because of Louis, either. She had known him since long before that. She had thought of him much more strongly and deeply than Louis had.

That is—

"Sister, you understand, riiight?"

The cause of the sweet tingling in his chest and the girl looking down at him were deeply connected. —No, it wasn't quite right to call it a deep connection. It was no wonder that he felt like they were of one mind and body, and this could be called their other half. He was sure she would understand these sweet, light, and strong feelings. —This love-hate feeling mixed with the tingling inside his chest that was just waiting to burst forth.

And so, with a sense of conviction and expectation, she spoke with her mouth formed into the shape of a half-moon and—

"I told you. —Die, squealing like a pig."

"—!"

In the next moment, Ram flew down the stairs like a missile and unleashed an attack that sent Batenkaitos flying backwards in retreat. He quickly evaded the attack by moving backwards, but the tip of the wand that had been thrust towards him was zooming in on his right eye. If he hadn't pulled his head back in time, he would have had his brain ripped out from his eye socket and tossed into the air.

"Forgive us, Sister! If we had eaten that attack, we would have only been able to squeal like a pig and die!"

"I am having second thoughts now. If a lesser pig were to mimic a real pig, real pigs would feel insulted."

He then jumped off the spiral staircase but was delayed by the time it took for him to reach the ground. With her cold murderous intent locked on to the back of the fleeing Batenkaitos, Ram went on the pursuit and began a fierce assault.

As she turned her slender body, Ram thrust her wand, unleashed a powerful kick, and shot an iron elbow at him. Batenkaitos evaded them all by moving his body perfectly, but the powerful gusts of wind that whipped past his ears had the potential to rip off one of his body parts if he got hit by them even once.

"Ha-ha! Scary, scary! I'm so scared, but bring it on!"

Batenkaitos laughed as he ducked and weaved in the face of that unrelenting attack. There wasn't time to spare, but his mood was uplifted. —No, there was a little room.

Ram was strong. She was merciless and didn't hesitate to kill, but Batenkaitos was still able to easily avoid her. Why? It's easy to see why—

"I know you are even more amazing than that, Sister."

The limitless amount of trust and expectation of Ram, in the Memories he possessed, accurately conveyed the unfortunate difference between the Ram in front of him and the other one. In short—

"—Sister without a horn is nothing but a fake who can be replaced by Rem."

"…"

"Ah, are you angry? Are you furious? If you're angry, it's okay to be angry, Sister. When I think about it, I've never had a proper quarrel with my sister before."

Batenkaitos had flaunted her memories as his own. In response, Ram's cheeks hardened at his words, but she didn't let up on her assault. He suddenly felt as if he had taken it too far with her and admired himself inwardly.

It was unclear just how much suffering they felt, but it was famously known that hornless Oni's couldn't keep their bodies under control. Ram had been suffering from the side effects of being hornless for a long time.

Batenkaitos wasn't sure just how many times he wanted to take over her pain, but, at the same time, he knew he mustn't bear the brunt of her suffering. If the pain that came with the loss of a horn depended on the strength of the Oni, then Ram must be dealing with such a large amount of pain that no other Oni in the world could match her.

Therefore, Batenkaitos could only commend her for daring to live her own life despite living each day in such agony. And, with a distorted face, he wanted to thank her for her hard-working attitude.

Batenkaitos wasn't sure who he should congratulate for being able to witness this moment of richness when the best, greatest, and finest delicacy was about to mature and to be consumed.

—Batenkaitos could only be extremely grateful for the miracle of having encountered this gourmet meal.

"Really! Sister is so fantastic!!"

A dance of death mixed with love and hate began to unfold on the spiral staircase. Batenkaitos felt blessed by Ram's existence and savored it to the fullest. And he leaned, diverted, bent, and avoided just as the Memories instructed him—

“Ta-dah! Counterattack time—”

“Shut up.”

Batenkaitos moved around to the outside of Ram’s vision, who had her wand out, and tried to aim for her white neck. Although he thought he had surely entered her blind spot, she quickly turned around and intercepted his attack. In an instant, he felt frightened, stopped his attack, and then leapt sideways to escape. However, the moment his right cheek felt the wind, it began to bleed.

“…”

Then Batenkaitos stroked his roughly torn cheek and took a ragged breath. It was an unbearable wound for him. At least, according to the Memories he had—which knew about the old Ram when she was a prodigy—there was no way for him to be hurt by her.

And yet—

“I told you to squeal miserably, but your voice is also very unpleasant to hear. I can’t get along with you anymore, so just die.”

“Sister, this is...”

“If you were evaluating Ram on the basis of those Memories, then you are still underestimating me.”

She looked at Batenkaitos, whose cheeks were soiled with blood, and then stroked her pink hair. Then she sent a cold gaze his way—

“Did you think you had uncovered the extent of Ram’s potential? So funny. —The possibilities of Ram are endless. Because—”

“…”

“Ram is Rem’s sister.”

Her baseless rhetoric had an extraordinary ring of persuasion because that’s what the Memories inside of Batenkaitos thought of her. Recognizing that fact, he erased his smile and distorted his cheeks. It’s not fun. It’s boring. I don’t understand, he thinks.

“Anger and hatred are spices that increase the flavor of the dish, you know. But if the spices are too strong or too assertive, the dish will be ruined. I wonder if that analogy sounded strange to you, Sister, since you can’t cook?”

“Not really. I have nothing to hide. Ram’s specialty is steamed potatoes.”

The Memories that vividly reminded him of that came back to life, and his stomach rumbled. Deliberately ignoring his hunger, Batenkaitos gave up on his playfulness.

Ram had not yet shown the true value of her power. That meant she hadn’t even revealed everything to her younger sister, who was her other half.

In other words—

“Sister can’t even believe her own younger sister, so you’re the ultimate in individualism, isn’t it?”

“…Such a shallow view on things. I don’t know how many human lives you’ve savored, but I’m not concerned with them either. They are all trivial except for Rem.”

Ram’s pale crimson eyes narrowed as she dismissed Batenkaitos’ views on food. And then, while she stroked her thin chest, she—

“Try harder and do your best, Barusu.”

She had called out to the boy who was not there with a cold look of ruthless determination on her face.

“This common destiny thing is pretty horrifying, isn’t it?”

2

Subaru pulled his dustproof cloth over his mouth and took a deep breath in order to avoid breathing in all the dust in the air. He would really like to get some goggles, but that would be pretty difficult to do at the moment. His only option was to stare directly into the sandstorm and get used to the sand flying into his eyes.

"Beako! Meili! Keep going!"

"I know!"

"Oh, you're such a slave driver!"

Crossing their field of vision blurred by the sandstorm was an evil presence with a jet-black shell. If they allowed it to get close to them, they would be chopped in half by its pincers. If they tried to outrun it, they'd get zapped by its deadly stinger and die. There were many other ways that it could kill them. In their current situation, due to all of the ways they could be defeated, they were only capable of keeping it at a stalemate.

"But that's how it always is...!"

The battles of Natsuki Subaru had always been like walking on a tightrope.

The reason Subaru was having such a hard time even though he knew the future due to his Return by Death ability was that the strength of the current enemy and his current fighting strength were unbalanced.

Subaru was almost always short of cards in his hand. He believed in everyone's power and hoped they could fight flexibly, and in response he himself would struggle to meet their expectations.

"This isn't so much my battle as it is mine and my merry comrade's!"

"What are you saying in this situation?! Oh! Keep at it, Hungry Horse King!"

In response to Subaru's meaningless cries, Meili, who was riding next to him, ordered the witchbeast known as the Hungry Horse King. Two centaur-like witchbeasts, both carrying Subaru, Beatrice, and Meili, ran through the sea of sand with all their might making noises that could only be described as baby cries. And, right on their tails was a gigantic scorpion that was attacking them with its multitude of legs, scraping out clumps of sand and kicking up a cloud of dust.

“—!”

Just like what Subaru had experienced before, if they moved far enough away from it, then the rays of light from the stinger would try to vaporize them, and if they got close enough to it, its large pincers would try to chop them up. It was simply a matter of maintaining a balance between being too far away and being too close, and coping with its attacks as they did so.

Compared to the number of defeat scenarios they had counted, the victory scenario would only become available at the end of their battle. It depended on Emilia conquering the first floor of the tower and rewriting the rules of the tower. In fact, it was not even certain whether it was possible or not.

“If you can't do that, then it's strange that it was built into the rules of the tower in the first place, I suppose.”

“Exactly, Beako. The fact that the rule says, “It is not forbidden to break the rules of the Trial,” means that this rule is supposed to be broken.”

And if that is really possible, then it would be a reward for the challengers of the tower. If Subaru thought about it, the right was only given to those who cleared it using proper means. He was really glad that Emilia beat Reid’s Trial. If she hadn’t won, a way to save Shaula would not have come into his grasp.

“I will NEVER forgive him for sexually harassing Emilia-tan…!”

Thinking about that really got Subaru’s blood boiling, but the person who was sent to take care of Reid for that was Julius.

With the hope that he would beat that violent man into a pulp, Subaru kept his eyes on the tall watchtower and surrendered himself to their current struggle with Beatrice and Meili.

"Mister! It's a bit difficult to move around in here! Don't you think it it'll be easier for the witchbeasts to move around outside of the tower?!"

"Ugh…! I know what you mean! I know, but I can't! I can't leave the tower. If we go any further, I won't know what's going on!"

Subaru, who dismissed Meili's suggestion, grabbed his chest and clenched his molars.

The effect of Cor Leonis continued, and the whereabouts of his friends in the tower were still within Subaru's sphere of control as dim lights. However, there were still many things about this Authority that were unknown, and it was not yet clear what will cause it to stop working.

Distance probably had the most effect on the Authority. In fact, Subaru couldn't sense the whereabouts of his friends who were outside of the Augria Sand Dunes. The real question is how far can he get from the watchtower without it turning off? Not being able to confirm the whereabouts and safety of his friends was one of his biggest fears.

But the biggest issue was more than just confirming their safety, it was not being able to shoulder their burdens himself. Emilia and Julius, for example, were strong and were about enter into hard-fought battles. But, more than that, it was Ram, who was facing a dangerous enemy, who had grabbed Subaru's heart the most.

"…"

Subaru was confident that everyone had been sent to the place that suited them best. From the beginning, Ram's battle was expected to be especially difficult. That was because her opponent was Lye Batenkaitos, the one who turned Rem into a Sleeping Beauty and was responsible for Ram's current condition.

It was impossible to compete with Lye Batenkaitos without a perfect Ram. And on top of that, Subaru wanted her to beat him up to her heart's content. However, in order to do that, it was necessary for him to shoulder the suffering that had constantly tormented her every day. That’s why—

“I can’t just carelessly leave the tower! I know there are lots of handicaps, but please just follow me!”

“—! This will absolutely, positively, come back to bite us later!”

Meili, with her lips pursed and face turning bright red due to Subaru’s plea, shouted that from the back of the Hungry Horse King. Then the girl glared into the sky and clapped her hands at the circling entity flying in the cloudless sky.

“Winged Mole! It’s time!”

After her high-pitched command, a small shadow that had been flying in the sky descended into the sea of sand. When Subaru saw it aim at the gigantic scorpion on the sand, he instantly exclaimed, “Beako!”

“I want you to go with them!”

“—Oh, I understand! Vita!”

Beatrice raised her little palm into the sky, having guessed Subaru’s true aim.

The effect had been activated, but it hadn’t been aimed at the giant scorpion, but at the winged moles flying towards it. A ring of light formed in the path of the falling winged moles, and the moment the winged moles dove through the ring, the witchbeasts accelerated rapidly.

“…”

The impact of the attack pierced the outer shell of the scorpion, and a loud noise rang out. Up to this point, the gigantic scorpion had taken the attacks of the winged moles as if they were nothing, but this time, the attack stopped it in its tracks after suffering powerful direct hits to a few of its legs, which could not be ignored.

“That… Beatrice, what did you do?”

"Did it make the witchbeasts you control heavier before impact, I wonder? The speed and hardness are the same, but the result changes just by making it heavier, I suppose."

Beatrice answered Meili's surprised question with that.

The reason behind the sudden power of the winged mole is: its power is the product of its weight and speed.

The life-threatening attack of the winged mole, a witchbeast that flew freely through the sky and dived deep underground with its strong horns, managed to stall the gigantic scorpion with its unbelievable destructive power. Although the gigantic scorpion was impressive in its ability to reflexively respond to attacks, it wasn't able to respond to this attack very well. And, to get around its great reflexiveness, Subaru's head was spinning at full speed trying to find a solution.

"Bad for the witchbeasts, but it's a trade-off between sacrificing lives and staying alive longer. There are many types and quantities of witchbeasts you can use, and if you have Beako's assistance, the possibilities are limitless…! In this way—"

Sure enough, Subaru had clenched his fists and grabbed Beatrice's hair at the same time. Stuck in his grip, Beatrice gave a cry of protest, "It hurts, in fact!"—That was the moment—

"—Ah?"

Subaru looked up at the watchtower and said that, hoping to buy time with it. When Beatrice heard his empty response, she turned around and said, "Subaru?" but got no answer.

Subaru's consciousness had been taken elsewhere, not because of what was happening outside the tower, but because of what was going on with his friends inside the tower, where he could feel dim lights in various places. One connection seemed to have disappeared from those who were supposed to be fighting a fierce battle—Emilia's, who was supposed to be at the summit.

"…"

At that moment, Subaru's heart began to beat out of his chest. Feeling Emilia's connection disappear like that made him very confused. How could Emilia have disappeared so suddenly?

"Ah—Calm down, you dumbass."

When he had been falling into despair, Subaru scolded himself and stopped it from continuing. It was too early to feel despair about the current reality. He believed that he should have more faith in his Cor Leonis ability. Even if it came from the worst man in the world, that power was his ally, even if it was still in an early stage of development.

Judging from the reaction of Cor Leonis up until this point, Subaru deduced that the intensity of the light and the intensity of the warmth of the light were indicators of the current state of his comrades. The intensity of the light and warmth changes when it was excited violently, and the opposite was also true. Therefore, does the disappearance of Emilia's connection indicate her death?

"If that's the case, the connection will disappear in a second."

If Emilia had met a powerful enemy who had annihilated her existence in a single moment, it wouldn't have vanished without any resistance, even if she had fallen into the hands of that enemy. Subaru didn't think that had happened nor wanted to think that had happened. He believed that something else had happened instead.

It was also plausible that when Emilia ran up the tower and got to the first floor, something happened that pulled her out of Cor Leonis' influence. Therefore causing Emilia's connection to disappear from Subaru's perception in an instant. That is what Subaru wanted to believe.

"Subaru!"

"Mister! This is no time to be staring into space!"

The two little girls called out to Subaru, who bit his cheeks and clenched his molars in order to get back to reality using pain as a gateway. When he heard them speak, he let out an "I know" for all to hear—

“I don’t know where she is or what she is facing, but I have faith that she will return.”

3

—At the same time Subaru uttered a prayer on the sands far below.

Subaru thought he had no idea what Emilia was facing right now, but even with his imagination, there was no way he would have been able to guess what was going on with her situation at this moment.

Following Subaru’s instructions, Emilia headed up to the first floor of the tower to rewrite the rules of the Pleiades Watchtower. There she encountered a mighty being covered in shimmering blue scales. In the kingdom of Lugunica—no, there was none in this world that did not know its name.

If the Witch of Envy was a symbol of fear, it should be called a symbol of hope and trust. That was the type of work that entity had done for the world.

The name of that mighty and great being—

“The Divine Dragon, Volcanica.”

As Emilia ruminated on the name she had spoken, she felt as if her whole body suddenly became cold.

Although it was difficult to say, Emilia had a constitution that was not associated with nervousness. Of course, when she stood in front of people or had important conversations, she may have felt a little tense, but whenever she geared up for action, she would quickly leave those effects in the dust. She was often praised by Subaru and Ram for being a kind of big shot. However, Emilia, who was thought to be a powerful person, could only cower in the presence of the Divine Dragon.

It felt as if even breathing required permission from the other party in order to be done. The presence of a real dragon was so powerful that it seemed to have taken control of the entire world.

"…"

While holding her breath, Emilia took another look at the whole body of Volcanica.

The blue, deep-colored scales shimmered like jewels, and each one seemed to be sharper than a masterfully forged treasured sword.

The thick forefeet and hindfeet were equipped with black rock-like claws, and the look of the dragon made it seem as if it was long-lived. Its head had two thick, large horns, which were white like freshly squeezed milk.

The body of the Divine Dragon was perhaps 50 to 52 feet long (15 to 16 meters.) Emilia didn't know the exact size since she couldn't just go measure it on the spot. However, due to its size, it was natural that it would not be able to fit into the tower.

The first floor must have been made especially for Volcanica due to his need for an open floor.

"The third one was the Sage, the second one was Reid, and the first one was Volcanica."

"…"

"Perhaps all three ancient heroes are involved in the Trial of the tower?"

Looking back on the Trial so far, Emilia found a common trait.

The Three Heroes—The three heroes who made an effort to seal the Witch of Envy and made history in the Kingdom of Lugunica—Shaula, Reid, and Volcanica.

However, Shaula attributed everything to Flugel, Reid was a very violent and badmouthed man, and Volcanica was a dragon, not a man. Still, if everyone involved was here—

"It's really nice to still be good friends even after hundreds of years.”

If promises, unity, and that kind of thing connected the three heroes, that seemed like a really nice thing to Emilia.

Originally, Volcanica was an entity that had a Covenant with the Kingdom of Lugunica, and in fact, even when the black dragon rampaged in Lugunica decades ago, it offered its aid.

Emilia liked a person who placed an importance on keeping their promises. She thought that it was very good to keep promises. Subaru was very important to her and she trusted him, but she thought it would be no good if he didn’t keep his promises.

Then she suddenly began to wonder what she would do if even Beatrice started imitating such behavior. In the end, she didn’t want to scold Subaru or Beatrice for breaking their promises.

“Oh, no. Now isn’t the time to think about that… Hey, Volcanica! I came to complete the Trial. The Trial of the first floor! I’ll give it a try!”

“…”

“I don’t know what kind of hard Trial I’ll have to go through…but I’m asking you to please hurry! If I don’t do my best, then Subaru and the others will be in trouble. Whatever it is, bring it on!”

After striking her cheeks with both of her hands, Emilia regained her composure.

Emilia’s sudden thoughts about Subaru and Beatrice caused her to feel anxious. If they were to break their promises and she had no choice but to reprimand them, that was something that would happen tomorrow and in the future. It was here that she had to hold steadfastly in order to greet the future.

“…”

The Divine Dragon stared at Emilia with his golden eyes in silence. His eyes were so deep that she felt as if she were about to be sucked in, and that was no exaggeration.

He had fought the Witch of Envy and made a covenant with the Kingdom of Lugunica 400 years ago—but the great dragon was probably older than 400 In the years that may have well approached 1000, those twin eyes had gazed at the world. There was no telling what Emilia looked like to the Divine Dragon. She didn't know—

"I'm used to being scorned by others. There have been people who hated me because I was a half-elf, and there have been people who were mean to me like Echidna... But there are also people who have expectations of me, like Subaru, Ram, and Beatrice."

As she spoke, Emilia touched the crystal stone on her chest with her finger. Even now, her precious family member, who was the first to accept her, and who often looked at her though rose-tinted glasses, was still in a deep slumber. In this tower, including her family, there were friends who recognized her.

"That's why, I don't care how you look at me!"

Emilia deplored that in the face of the Divine Dragon and had once again become overwhelmed by its presence. The existence of Emilia, whose soul that had been crushed by the difference in presence, whose limbs seemed to tremble and become smaller, who had been swallowed by that eternal existence, could no longer be defeated.

—Never, I will never lose.

"…"

Emilia stood there with her fists clenched and her violet-blue eyes shining brightly.

Volcanica blinked slowly as he gazed at Emilia. Then he swung his magnificent dragon jaws open, and—

"—Thou, who hath reached the top of the tower. Step forth onto the first floor, almighty petitioner."

"…"

"—I, am Volcanica. In accordance with the ancient covenant, the will of thee who hath reached the top shall be questioned."

"…Huh?"

Emilia, who had been holding her breath and was prepared for the difficult questions that Volcanica would ask, tilted her head as she heard the words that had been spit out of the dragon's mouth. She already knew what they said.

"Well, that's the same story you told me earlier, right? I'm the one who came all the way to the first floor, and you are Volcanica…is that correct?"

"…"

"…Ah! Is it because I didn't introduce myself? I'm sorry. I'm Emilia, just Emilia. Hey, and it just so happens that there are a lot of people who don't remember me right now, so if you ask me to prove it, I'll be in trouble, but it's Emilia!"

"…"

"…Is this still hopeless?"

Emilia had thought that skipping her introduction had made him displeased, but even when she greeted him again, Volcanica's reaction was still lacking. If this was Subaru, he would have felt pessimistic and thought that by skipping the first greeting, he would have been disqualified from the Trial, but Emilia did not think so. Even if something were wrong, she believed that as long as she apologized, the other party wouldn't be so ruthless.

Therefore, Emilia did not believe that her rudeness was what caused Volcanica to remain silent. She speculated that he was not angry, or perhaps it was worse than being angry. Because—

"Perhaps…"

Emilia walked forward timidly as she stared at his golden eyes.

She took one or two steps closer to the sky and closed the distance between her and the Divine Dragon, Volcanica. Emilia boldly approached the majestic dragon that even breathed majestically. Then, she reached out her hand and gently touched the scales on the dragon's forelegs.

"—Cold."

The scales felt as cold as ice or cold steel. She wondered how long it had taken to lose so much heat simply by lying down. It did not mean biological "death." Physical vitality wasn't the only thing that long-term inactivity robbed.

"—I, am Volcanica. In accordance with the ancient covenant, the will of thee who hath reached the top shall be questioned."

Volcanica repeated this once more, and looked down at Emilia, who was still touching his paw. The words of welcome had been repeated frequently on a certain interval, and Emilia's lack of greetings was not to blame.

Volcanica's eyes, which stared deeply at Emilia, seemed to reflect her, and yet didn't.

The reason was obvious.

"Maybe you are too old and forgot about the Trial…?"

It was the "death" of the spirit, not the physical "death," that plagued the long-lived dragon. And it presented itself as a separate Trial for Emilia, and may have even been more challenging than the main Trial of the first floor.

The Trial of the First Floor, Maia, of the Great Library of Pleiades.

Chapter 81:
—Pleased to Meet You

1

—The spirit of the Divine Dragon, Volcanica, had “died” after being neglected for so many years. To put it simply, after being left alone for so long, he became senile.

“But, I can’t afford for you to be behaving like an old man! Hey, Volcanica!”

“—Thou, who hath reached the top of the tower. Step forth onto the first floor, almighty petitioner.”

“Jeez! It’s no use!”

Emilia desperately called out to him by hitting his forefoot, but the only response she got was the feeling of his hard scales and the barrier around his spirit that made him senile and seemed like it would never end.

Like Reid, the Trial where the dead were revived as they originally were was also a difficult task, but when Emilia thought about it now, it seemed much more cute. Oh, and saying that the violent person named Reid was cute was just a joke—

“Reid was at least able to talk and tell me what I needed to do...”

But that wasn’t the case with Volcanica.

For Emilia, who needed to break through the Trial, it was the absolute worst thing for the Trial Overseer to be completely senile. She wanted to bring good news back to Subaru as soon as possible.

“Uhh… What should I do, what should I do… There’s no way I could defeat Volcanica by negotiating with him like I did to defeat Reid…”

Even so, it was expected to be a difficult Trial, but the differences between the Trials of the third and second floors made Emilia put her ideas on hold for now.

The Trial of the third floor, Taygeta, required challengers to use their knowledge to answer the questions that were asked. They were lucky enough to beat that Trial due to Subaru's knowledge from beyond the Great Waterfall, and it would have been seemingly impossible without it.

The Trial of the second floor, Electra, as was already known, was overseen by Reid Astrea. Even so, Emilia managed to win because she had gotten the better of Reid, but some say she succeeded because it was her first challenge.

In any case, there was no doubt that both Trials of the first and second floors had been hard-fought victories. So it was hard enough to just take on a challenge normally—

"I can't believe I can't even get the question out of you..."

"—I, am Volcanica. In accordance with the ancient covenant, the will of thee who hath reached the top shall be questioned."

"Jeez! I got it already! I want to hear rest of it!"

Emilia was hoping that she could get him to talk to her properly after a few tries, but she soon discovered that she had been wasting her time trying. She then looked around while resisting the urge to stomp on the ground in frustration.

The Trial of the third floor was set in a white room, with black slates that had questions on them—something that Subaru and Julius had happily called a monolith. Perhaps there were hidden things here. While Volcanica was in an unreliable state, it would be best for her to figure things out by herself.

"I have to do everything I can do now...!"

While keeping her eye on Volcanica, Emilia began to investigate her surroundings.

First of all, the top floor of the Pleiades Watchtower was located in a position that was too high to be seen from below. There were six pillars placed around the floor and a huge pillar in the center of the space—which Volcanica was leaning against. The size of the space also seemed to have a 330 feet (100 meter) radius.

It felt like a much larger space than the other two floors, but Volcanica also seemed to make it seem less big than it actually was due to his sheer size.

"Down below… Is it possible to see what's down there?"

Email grasped one of the pillars on the perimeter of the first floor and then looked down. Subaru and Ram were fighting hard in the tower and outside, but thick clouds obstructed her view and she could not see what was under them. It almost seemed like she could just hop into the clouds and join up with her companions—

"I'm sure I would be scolded if I tried climbing up here from the outside... Er, in the first place, I don't think it would be possible to get to the top of the clouds so quickly even if I tried reaaally hard."

Emilia didn't think her motor nerves were bad, but she knew how high the clouds and sky were. When she was little, she tried reaching out and touching the clouds, but it wasn't possible, and when she grew up, she tried it again but still couldn't do it. It might be possible for Reinhard to jump up into the clouds, but it wasn't possible for her.

Therefore, she concluded that a magical force must have brought her to the top of the tower.

"If so, then it wouldn't be unusual for the Trial to be here!"

Encouraged by her thoughts, Emilia looked around at the six pillars, and then hit and tried to climb them. However, she was unable to experience any sort of strange phenomenon or see any writing on them.

And, if there was one possibility—

"—The large pillar in the middle, where Volcanica is sitting."

If the surrounding pillars have nothing on them and don't react in any way, then the most likely culprit is the central pillar. Unlike the other six, the central pillar extended even higher. It was possible that there was another floor above this one that could be called floor zero. If that was so, then there seemed to be a way to change this place where nothing ever changed.

However—

"—Thou, who hath reached the top of the tower. Step forth onto the first floor, almighty petitioner."

In order to get to that pillar, it was impossible to avoid Volcanica, who kept repeating the same words over and over again.

"…"

Although she had decided on challenging the Trial, dealing with Volcanica was in a whole different ballpark. Even so, Emilia approached the central pillar where Volcanica laid.

"Volcanica, what do I need to do for the Trial?"

"—I, am Volcanica. In accordance with the ancient covenant, the will of thee who hath reached the top shall be questioned."

The answer from Volcanica had remained the same.

Emilia felt more relieved than disappointed or disheartened. If Volcanica's reaction remained the same, then he should remain indifferent to her, like when she touched his forefoot. Believing that to be the case, she started walking to the other side of him to examine the central pillar—

"—Eh?"

Just as Emilia was about the touch the pillar, she heard the sound of the wind. She then instinctively created an ice wall above her head before she even knew what was happening. After a single moment, something smashed through the ice wall and into her slender body, flipping her into the air.

"Oof."

The impact of that attack went straight through her back and into her chest, and Emilia coughed as she rolled violently on the floor. She stopped the momentum by placing her hand on the floor and managed to come to a stop. She then slowly raised her face and realized what had happened.

—The Divine Dragon, leaning against the pillar, slowly lowered his tail to the floor.

"Was I hit by his tail?"

In other words, it was a very simple attack.

Dragons often used their tails to express their emotions. The relationship between Subaru and Patrasche was one example. When Subaru would go too far with one of his pranks, Ram or Patrasche would compete to see would could hit him more. However, the blow that came from Volcanica's tail could not be compared to the expression of affection between a person and an animal.

Emilia was okay since her defensive measure had been deployed immediately, but if she had not reacted in time, the blow would have broken her neck or blown her head off.

For Volcanica, it was akin to unconsciously stepping on an insect. Or as if they were little insects at the feet of giant creatures.

"…"

Understanding that fact, cold sweat started forming along Emilia's neck and back. But it also brought up one possibility—

"Just as I thought, there must be something on that pillar."

"…"

"You're here to oversee the Trial. You haven't forgotten about that, even though you've forgotten about the Trial itself. That's why you keep saying the same things over and over again."

Volcanica looked as if he had no idea what he was supposed to do.

Still, the fact that the Divine Dragon was here was a testament to how strong his will to keep the promise he made before his “death” was.

The Sage, the Sword Saint, and the Divine Dragon were meant to test their wisdom, power, and ambition, respectively.

If that’s the case—

“—Don’t feel halfhearted. I’m also seriously serious.”

Emilia also firmly declared that she would use force on the condition that the other party interfered. In a matter of seconds the atmosphere around Emilia screamed and the world slowly began to freeze. An ice warrior was born one after the other, as if following Emilia as their queen. —This was a new possibility for her born from further developing her Ice Brand Arts. She hadn’t been able to try this in the narrow watchtower, but with the size of this space and the opponent she was facing, she couldn’t show mercy.

Emilia hadn’t told Subaru about it, so he hadn’t been able to give it a name for her. Therefore, she named it—

“Ice Brand Arts: Ice Shoulders….!”

The seven ice soldiers, that had been created in the shape of a humanoid, held their respective weapons and were brave companions who would fight to the death with Emilia.

“I’m going, Mr. Sleepyhead! If you’re going to wake up, I hope you wake up sooner!”

That consciousness was still buried in the same stupor as before.

2

—At the same moment, Emilia was not the only one who was taking on a mighty enemy that was far stronger than them.

The clash between two swordsman on the second floor, Electra, which was one floor lower than where Emilia was fighting the senile Divine Dragon, started to heat up in intensity.

However, the one-sided nature of the battle had remained unchanged.

“Heyheyheyhey, what’s the matter, what’s wrong? Ya think losin’ one chopstick will be enough for ya ta win? Ya still can’t reach me, you, this ain’t a game, you, you!”

“Ugh…!”

A man with long red hair threw a powerful kick while swearing at and taunting his opponent.

The knight with a graceful profile got thrown back after receiving the blow with the handle of the knight sword in his hand. He wasn’t able to diminish the shock the blow and could only move at fast as he could. But the next strike came before he could move.

This exact sequence of events had been repeated over and over again on the battlefield of the second floor.

This had happened many times—the knight was blown away by the swordsman’s attack, and when he was constantly on the defensive, the swordsman would spit out “Good grief…”

“Your sword will change when your mood changes. You, I was hopin’ for that explosion, ya know? But, when the hell do ya plan on explodin’, you, or…”

Saying that, the red-haired swordsman—Reid—bent his lips while twisting his neck. In an arrogant and taunting manner, the uncommon swordsman glared at the knight.

“Are ya just gonna lose because of your fixation on manners, you? Are ya happy with that, you?”

“You can say whatever you like about me.”

At Reid’s suggestion, the knight loosed his lips and spoke freely. The knight stood solemnly under Reid’s sharp gaze, and checked the feel of his knight sword while still feeling numb from his kick.

Julius Juukulius decided to give up his Nameless Knight persona and resist his fate.

“You have said those words to me many times. A boring fight, well-mannered sword skills, lack of play… I also remember these words.”

“Ha, right. Even if it ain’t as good as mine, no matter who sees it, they will get the same feelin’. Your sword is desperate.”

“...Desperate?”

Reid’s proclamation would not have come from a noble point of view. He probably was just saying what he thought. It captured the essence that even if one eye was covered, he could see everything through those blue eyes. And he may have been able to see Julius’s true character through his flimsy ideals.

“…”

There was a woman watching the battle between Julius and Reid. And to Julius, she was the most precious woman in the world, although her identity wasn’t exactly the same as it was before. Although it had been an irresistible force, two months had passed since the event that happened in the Watergate City occurred—and they continued to have an empty master-servant relationship as a result.

“Now that I think about it, you and I should have spoken to each other more openly.”

“Julius...?”

“If we had been able to do that, I would have been a good friend to you. Because we adore and cherish the same woman.”

With his words full of zeal, Julius once again challenged the Sword Saint.

Reid held a short, thin chopstick in his right hand and greeted

Julius's assault from the front.

Cut, pierce, slash, swing, swing down, it was a continuous attack.

Sometimes Julius set up feints and tried to confuse his opponent with his footwork, but Reid easily prevented it with an attitude of not even seeing it as a being serious.

“This again? I already told ya many times that this won't work…”

“Even if you say it's boring, this is my sword!”

“Jeez!”

The unimpressed scoring was interrupted by a yell, and Reid unleashed a kick to intercept Julius's sword attack. The kick caused him to lose his balance, and Reid's chopstick instantly struck diagonally into him, who had shown an opening in his defenses.

“HAH!”

Reid laughed at his movements and tried to cut the cloaked Julius in two. However, by the time the cloak had been blown away by the power of the strike, Julius had already jumped backwards horizontally and escaped his attack.

“Oh, that's it!”

“No, wrong!”

“Ah?”

Reid had praised Julius for wearing white to blind his opponent and throwing away his righteous ways.

However, Julius immediately cut him off and ran over to the cloak that had been blown off. Then he picked up the cloak that had been torn by the chopstick and put it back on.

He fastened the fasteners firmly and put on the white cloak over his white unform, which was the embodiment of a knight. Even if he were to stop being Nameless, he couldn't stop being a knight.

Seeing Julius's attitude like that, Reid clicked his tongue.

"You, I was expectin' you ta change when that dazzlin' gal and the other dazzlin' gal came, ya know? They came to win regardless of their appearance. That's what I'm sayin'. You don't know who ya are, do ya?"

"…"

"You pretend to be a righteous knight, but that's not the real you. You're just like me, a Stick Swinger. Ya just can't see it cuz you're too stuck in your ways, you."

Pointing his chopstick at Julius, Reid spat that out with a sour face.

Julius was blind to Reid's remarks, and after a pause, he murmured, "Alright."

"I feel like I finally understand."

"Yeah? What did ya find out?"

"I figured out why you're being so relentless with me."

Reid was frustrated but didn't stop talking to Julius. His methods were certainly violent, and he didn't seem like the kind of person who would do something like that at all, but Julius felt as if he were a master who was teaching and guiding him.

Then, the reason as to why Reid had been constantly giving Julius a hard time had finally been realized—

"—Did you see yourself in me?"

The reason he had laughed so much at Julius for his boring fighting and well-mannered swordplay was because he thought he had been a lion sleeping in his shell. Although, he may have been just overestimating himself by calling himself a lion—

"I dunno the details, pale-faced weakling. I just do what I wanna do. That feelin' of mine is crazy. It's more interestin' to peel your mask off bit by bit, you."

"…"

"That's why I'm tryin' ta peel it off. Understand, you? That's why ya can't reach me, and ya can't even look good for the dazzlin' gal behind ya."

Julius laughed wryly when Reid pointed at Echidna with his chin. Indeed, Reid had great eyes, and could see perfectly.

—Julius Juukulius knew that he was a man who just wanted to look good.

"That's why I won't change who I am."

"What?"

"Your words are correct. There are a lot of things that come to mind... In a world where everyone forgot me, I did not speak about it, but I am not a legitimate son of the House of Juukulius."

Julius had begun to speak in an audible tone to Reid, who frowned, and to Echidna, who looked forward with a determined expression on her face. This was the true history of Julius Juukulius, which only Natsuki Subaru could remember.

"My father, who ran away from a house of nobility, married my mother, who was a commoner, and I was born between them. And so my origin is that of a commoner. Until my parents died and my uncle took me in, I had nothing to do with the culture of the nobility... So, I forged my own path."

"You're an ugly faker."

"Might be so. My true essence is probably that of a crude child who doesn't know his ideals who is running around a field laughing with his friends, and wearing plain clothes instead of formal attire."

Without knowing etiquette, without ideals to aim for, working hard to live every day. This was the future promised to Julius. However, that future was swept away by the flash floods along with his parents, and disappeared.

That’s why—

“That is why I pretend to be a knight. I will stick with that appearance and keep my true self hidden.”

“You...”

“I was ignorant and didn’t know anything, but I met my ideal. —I longed to be a knight. I longed for the image of a knight who was dignified and clean. Therefore, I will stick to that longing.”

Julius’s cloak made a sound as it was put on once more, and his gaze was full of strength.

Reid had been put into a bad mood, and the expression on his face went from frustrated to suspicious. He had been surprised that his words had been denied, but he couldn’t even make a rebuttal. And then Julius continued with a loud voice—

“I am a clumsy man. Things began to take shape on their own, and I came to believe that as long as I had a good sword, wore fine clothes, and used the correct words, that I could be like that. That’s why I have to be stubborn. I must hold on to my vanity.”

Julius knew that some people hated vanity and that kind of language. One person that came to mind was Natsuki Subaru. But Julius thought—

“It is used as a crutch to carry out my will by straightening my back, adjusting my tastes, and pretending to be that way. That is the fake appearance I decided to suffer with forever.”

“…”

“Some will make a fool of my vanity. But I believe there are others who are just as dazzling as that. —Let me continue to long for the Way of the Knight.”

Julius couldn’t remember who first made him long to become a knight, but he became a knight regardless. He was called ‘The Finest’ not only because of his refined swordsmanship and spirit arts skills, but because he was gifted with great ability. Because he was made to think that the way Julius Juukulius should be is the way a knight should be. When he pretended to be The Finest of Knights, it made him feel as if he dazzled.

Julius then relaxed his lips and turned to Echidna. He lightly shook his head at her—who borrowed the appearance of his beloved lord—at her who deeply regretted that she couldn't remember him. There was no need for him to feel guilty about it.

"There is no need to fear, regret, or mourn being forgotten. Because I exist in the chivalry that I yearn for that everyone knows."

And the same thing could be said of the girls who were here—

"Sorry about this, my buds. I held onto the bonds that had been lost, however, not letting you go only made you all uneasy. Now I will release you all from your restraints."

Followed by Julius's whisper, visible pale lights made up of vivid colors could be seen—beautiful spirits bearing six attributes, Julius Juukulius' quasi-spirits. They were inseparable beings that had been with him since before he became a knight. But they had also forgotten him, who had lost his Name due to the Authority of Gluttony.

However, they had been attracted to the everlasting contract between the Spirit and the Contractor and Julius's Divine Protection of Gathering Spirits, so they had continued to linger.

Julius also believed that if he could regain his Name, the relationship could be regained, and so he refused to let them go. Oh, how foolish that was. Due to everything that had changed, he probably didn't want to lose anything else. But—

"The buds who have always been with me. You were so dear to me that I refused to let go of your warmth and kindness. I was hoping to be able to return to the old days without issue, but nothing happened. —Oh, how weak, pathetic, and ugly I am."

In a state of bewilderment, the six quasi-spirits swirled around Julius. Then he softly held out his arm to them. After seeing the arm that looked like a perch, the quasi-spirits gathered there slowly. And Julius smiled at the dim lights that hung upon his arm.

“I was afraid of change. However, there are some things that cannot be obtained without the willingness to lose them. For example, it is the flowering of a bud called love. A future where buds that have been around for a long time can see with their own eyes what kind of flowers the buds will bloom into.”

“…”

The girls did not respond, however, they seemed to be expecting something to happen. Therefore, Julius went along with it and—

“My buds! I will let all of you go now. I’m sorry I clung onto our bonds for so long.”

At the same time he said that, the quasi-spirits surrounding Julius’s arms were blown away. It seemed to have been accompanied by a shock, but it was a violent sensation like being struck by a bolt of lightning, and it only seemed to have pierced Julius and the quasi-spirits.

The connection, the bond, the spirit-to-spirit contract that had certainly been there, was broken. The pain and grief that came from losing a spirit-to-spirit connection was only something a spirit arts user could know.

Julius did not yet know, but Emilia had once experienced the same pain and cowered in anguish. He himself had just experienced parting with the six quasi spirits at the same time, which damaged his soul. He then felt a strange sensation in his chest, as if something had been separated from his soul.

This was a pain that was fundamentally different from being forgotten by his buds due to the Authority of Gluttony. Julius and the spirits themselves must have experienced the same pain and regretted it. The spirits may have even cursed the wounds inflicted on themselves and wondered why they had ever made a contract with a human in the first place. But—

"—On top of all that, I will call you all again."

"…"

"I love you all. If you accept this vain man's courtship, then let's reconnect. —A new contract between me and you all!!"

Julius shouted loudly and stretched his arms out to the heavens. Hearing his cry, the quasi-spirits scattered about and flickered for just a second.

However, their hesitation and indecision only lasted for a moment.

3

A warm light enveloped Julius Juukulius. It gently seeped into the wounds of his soul that had been caused by the severance of the contract. There was joy; there was anger; there was sadness; there was love; and there was also hatred. These were the emotions that each of them had accumulated for over a decade. He then decided to just let bygones be bygones and forge a new path into the future. He wasn't sure if that was the correct answer, but he wanted to get it right this time.

Julius knew that it may go wrong many times, and that he may not choose the right path every time and make mistakes, but he vowed that he would shape himself every time. Even if he made a mistake, he was not alone. He was never alone.

If he moved forward, there were the ideals created by many great predecessors.

If he stopped, he would feel the warmth of the buds who had been lovingly watching over him.

And if he looked to his side, there was the profile of his lord who he had pledged his faith to, which had shaped him.

What on earth could Julius Juukulius fear from now on? Nothing.

"—That's right. My beautiful flowering maidens."

The six buds answered in a unified voice—no, it was the answer of the flowering maidens.

Light was born—

4

“I will continue on this deep, kind, and thorny path.”

The pain of breaking the contract had been healed by the bond that had been reformed.

Wrapped in six more mysterious lights than before, Julius Juukulius looked ahead. There was a figure at the apex that he longed to reach as one who devoted himself to the sword.

However, the envy of Julius Juukulius was pointed at a different place from the apex in front of him. And so, he did not hesitate to express that longing with the light of the rainbow.

“—My apologies for keeping you waiting, Sword Saint Reid Astrea. —Nice to meet you.”

He shook his knight sword aside, grasped his cloak in his hands, and bowed gracefully. Then he raised his face , became the ‘It’ that he most admired in the world, and announced his name.

“—I am the Finest of Knights, Julius Juukulius. The sword of the Kingdom that will slay you.

Chapter 82:
Shackle Accompanying Battle

1

—She slowly and gradually removed her ‘shackles’ and increased the amount of heat in her body.

There was a sensation as if her blood were boiling, and the muscles of her thin body were tightened. The body of this girl was soft to the touch and seemed fleeting and weak, however, the blood that flowed in it, the flesh that made it up, and its very bones came from the best race in the world.

The Oni God, which was the most supreme being among them, had returned.

“That’s my sister! Oh, how lovely! You’re on fire! No matter how far she goes, Rem will never reach you. She is no match for you, Sister!

“Stop spitting when you talk. It’s sickening. And don’t compare Rem to anything.”

“What do you mean by that?”

She said that in a bemused tone as she twisted her body and bluntly rejected his words by unleashing a gust of wind. It was a very powerful skill that ripped through one’s skin if it were grazed, crushed one’s bones if they were struck, and penetrated one’s internal organs. It was a skill that had been used generously, and a series of attacks that used both her hands and feet equally had been released. And it wasn’t just pure physical prowess or skill.

If this were due to pure technique, then Batenkaitos would have been able to bring out all of the techniques in his arsenal, which came from East to West and from all ages, relying on the Memories of the opponents he had eaten. However, Ram's current tactics were anything but straightforward.

"…"

The attacks that Ram released, such as elbow strikes and knee strikes, could be freely sped up or slowed down when she was in the middle of an attack. That was due to the fact that she was proficient in the use of Wind Magic which she could combine with her movements in the midst of battle.

The speed of the wind sped up or slowed down, confusing Batenkaitos' perception as he tried to fight back. In fact, Ram had dispersed gusts of wind in all directions in order to mask her movements, which allowed her to get into her enemy's blind spot, and unleashed attacks with the intent to kill many times.

"Wow! This is the best!"

Batenkaitos cheered with delight as he dodged Ram's attacks. While bleeding from his torn right cheek, Gluttony, with his long, lightly parted dark brown hair with highlights at the ends, enjoyed tasting his opponent's abilities.

"This spicy taste is irresistible! It's strong and really does the trick! It's so dynamic with a joyful explosion of flavor! Sister is a perfect treat for our Gourmet!"

Batenkaitos smirked as they flew around the spiral staircase and switched their original positions. The daggers attached to his wrists struck against Ram's wand, and when he gained some distance from her, his mouth opened and began drooling.

"How nice, so nice, quite nice, very nice, as it's nice, surely it's nice, isn't it nice. Gluttonous drinking! Gluttony!"

"…"

"Above all, the scent of anger is great. With such a person who personally hates us so much...what kind of Gourmet can we enjoy if we taste it on our tongue?!"

"…"

Then Batenkaitos clapped his hands and trembled after having a premonition that he would experience incomprehensible pleasure in his future. In the face of that, Ram took a deep breath and checked the condition of her body.

"It's far from the real thing, but…"

Ram had been truly amazed, although she hadn't shown it on her face. There was a common saying that said people did not understand themselves best, but unlike those fools, Ram knew herself perfectly.

Ram's body, which had lost the horn of the Oni's and became Hornless, had been crushed by a huge load every day. As a result, Ram put shackles on her consciousness. She had usually kept all of her shackles on while working as a maid. However, there were times when there was an emergency and she had to use magic to get through the situation. In cases like that, she would remove a single shackle in order to use a little bit of her magic. And if that wasn't enough, she would remove another shackle and bring out 20% of the power she had originally.

She had a battle with Garfiel in the Sanctuary around a year and a half ago. Ram had been convinced that that had been the absolute best she could do as a Hornless Oni, and that releasing any more would be fruitless since her body wouldn't be able to handle the strain. However, at this very moment, Ram was trying to remove her shackles, which were a double-edged sword, one shackle at a time.

"…"

Ram had experienced a rare moment of hesitation in her heart. As had already been mentioned, she had a perfect grasp of herself. The last time she hadn't felt any side effects of unleashing her power when she was in battle had been when she was less than ten years old. However, in the battles that occurred after that time, every time she unleashed too much of her power, she would experience a terrible migraine, with nosebleeds and tears of blood flowing endlessly, and she wouldn't be able to move her body for a while. She would have to be prepared for that if she decided to go through with it.

That's not good. —Because Ram and Subaru shared a common destiny.

"…If I take too long, Barusu will die."

As was already known, Subaru was still scrambling to deal with Shaula and the hordes of witchbeasts. Beatrice and Meili were probably with him. —Was Emilia, who made her memories ache, heading up to the top of the tower and struggling on her own?

For some reason, Ram had been worried about the fate of that silver-haired girl. She was sure they had been very close before her Name had been stolen.

None of them could rely on Ram without him.

Therefore—

"Do your best not to die, Barusu. —Rem would cry."

And so, after whispering those words, Ram released the third shackle for the first time in 10 years.

2

—At that same moment, the reaction of Cor Leonis rattled Natsuki Subaru's teeth.

"—Guh."

That had marked the arrival of a burden which might—no, would, cause him to vomit blood. For a moment, Subaru had felt as if one of the faint lights in the tower had gotten bigger, and immediately after that it seemed like he had been attacked by it.

"Subaru!"

"—Ugh."

Beatrice had immediately supported Subaru in her bosom, who had been coughing up blood and was on the verge of collapsing. They were unfortunately not being carried by Patrasche, but a witchbeast known as the Hungry Horse King, who was not accustomed to carrying other creatures.

They did not have a lot of experience riding without the Divine Protection of Wind Evasion, and there wasn't a saddle to sit on either, nor stirrups to put their feet in, so if they relaxed for even a second, they would get thrown off. The reason why that hadn't happened is because of Beatrice's weight-control magic , and the fact that she wrapped Subaru's Guiltywhip around the upper body of the witchbeast to serve as the reins. And so, he could not afford to ruin her painstaking efforts to keep them on the witchbeast.

"Has a reaction from Ram arrived, I wonder?"

"That's right… Sorry, I will bear with it somehow…ugh."

As he grabbed the whip again, Subaru responded to Beatrice, who was a woman of understanding. The taste of rust filled his mouth as vomit tried to escape from his insides, and he had no idea which part of her body was being burdened. Perhaps her internal organs were being overworked, or something inside her body had ruptured, or there was some other kind of damage to her body that he couldn't think of. Either way, it only meant one thing: Ram had started getting serious.

"If Ram can take out one of the Gluttonies..."

Subaru couldn't claim that it would instantly make things easier. In the first place, he wasn't sure if it meant that by taking out Gluttony, that the Names and Memories would be returned. However, it would at least reduce the amount of burdens that were being placed on him.

"Hah, hah...!"

She clung onto the upper body of the Hungry Horse King and was working hard to give orders to the witchbeasts. In order for Subaru to fight against the pincers and the light from the stinger, it was essential for Meili to work hard. They had been able to make up for their lack of military strength by using the power of witchbeasts, which created a grace period that had not existed before. Therefore, Subaru wasn't playing around when he said that they needed to love Meili like a parent loves their child.

At this moment, in the Pleiades Watchtower, which was targeted by five obstacles, the power of Emilia, Ram, and Julius were needed to break through each obstacle, but the key to their success or failure was Meili Portroute, who was keeping the battlefields in a state of balance.

Therefore, Subaru had already been taking on Meili's burdens for a long time.

"Winged Mole! Courtesan Bear! Go together!

Speaking in a high-pitched voice, Meili looked at the battlefield with a birds-eye view and ordered the witchbeasts to charge to their deaths. She clapped her hands, snapped her fingers, or said the orders aloud. The way in which she ordered the witchbeasts varied from one to another, but her Divine Protection was in a perpetual state of use.

Subaru was feeling the effects of taking on her burdens, as if his brain was expanding and about to pop out of his skull—essentially a migraine.

"…"

Otto's Divine Protection of Soul Language and Meili's Divine Protection of Magic Manipulation were more like human abilities rather than magic. In other words, they were more of a supernatural power, not magic. In which case, the strain their users felt was larger than others, which meant it would take a bigger toll on Subaru. That meant that the object of the Divine Protection was not focused on others, but on the users themselves.

"Divine Protections and Authorities are part of a system that I just can't wrap my head around…"

Powers that were supposed to only be able to be used by Sin Archbishops and the Witches, for whatever reason, were able to be used by Subaru. And the Divine Protections were given to people in this world at birth in a random manner. However, he admitted that it's true that Authorities had their own uses—

"Because of that..."

Subaru couldn't stop thinking about the possibility of a tragedy occurring as a result. There was no doubt that the Authorities of the Sin Archbishops and Witches played a major role in why people feared them so much and why they were so powerful. There were many people who would not have had their fates changed if such things didn't exist.

Meili, for example, was a victim of the negative side of having a Divine Protection. She had been abandoned by her own parents due to her natural ability to communicate with witchbeasts. —Subaru was not sure if there were actually negative sides to having Divine Protections, but it made sense in his mind. It seemed obvious. That was at least the truth in Meili's case.

That's why—

"Me, I'm really a double standard..."

Subaru didn't really want to rely on Authorities or Divine Protections, but he didn't hesitate to use them if it was necessary. He believed it was true that weak people didn't have a ton of options, but that didn't mean they needed to be humble too.

Subaru had forced himself to walk an immoral path, and to be able to laugh, he didn't want to forget that.

"Mister! Are you concentrating?! If you and Beatrice get killed, it's all over, you know?!"

"I know. —Hey, Meili, when this is all over, will you become my child?"

"—Uh! What are you saying over there, stay focused!"

While holding her head up, Meili yelled back at Subaru, who had just asked that question. But they couldn't afford to play around with each other. If they lost their concentration, they would get swept away in an instant.

However—

"I'm experiencing a lot of pain right now, so I don't think it'll be worth it unless I think tomorrow is gonna be a good day."

Really, that was what Natsuki Subaru thought as he spat blood.

3

As she continued to fight on the sand, Meili murmured "Something's wrong" out of her mouth.

Of course, there were many reasons why something felt wrong. There was the case of Shaula, who had turned into a gigantic scorpion, who was right in front of her, or the half-elf with radiant and healthy silver hair, or Ram and Julius who were fighting various enemies in the watchtower, and especially Subaru and Beatrice who were fighting together with her.

However, what felt the most wrong was—

"Who am I?"

Meili herself did not really know why this had happened. In the first place, when Subaru and his friends started their journey to the Augria Sand Dunes, she began to feel as if she wasn't in control of her own actions. As her own autonomy had been swept away, as had been requested of her, she obediently did as she was told, not worrying about whether it was right or wrong. Because that was what she had always done before, she intended to do that same here as well. And yet—

"—There was a thing known as a Book of the Dead."

When Meili heard that she could relive the memories of the dead, her own curiosity got the best of her. She felt as if she had no choice but to go search for Elsa Granhiert's Book of the Dead, who she had deeply cared about for a long time, which ended up being the number one mistake in her life. Because of that, she had been reproached and lectured at by Subaru. And she couldn't help but laugh at his complaints.

After that, she had somehow been forced to promise to cooperate with them. Subaru had told her that he would always have her back, but she thought he was the type of guy who regretted saying how much responsibility he intended to take. And there was a part of her that felt as if he would easily forget about his promises.

However, what was different between Subaru and Meili was not just what came out of their mouths. Subaru would always try to do what he said he would do, and he would always show up to keep his promise—and if Beatrice were on the scene as well, she would assist him in keeping his promise. When that happened, she felt bad about being spoiled so much, and she felt like she should help them out in return, but she had not gotten around to doing that yet, or rather, she had not had an opportunity to do that yet.

"…"

Even now, a group of winged moles that moved in response to Meili's gestures had just been vaporized by a ray of white light that came from the stinger of the gigantic scorpion and their corpses had been scattered over the battlefield. The winged moles were originally very timid witchbeasts that would never even dare to attack an enemy that was stronger than them, but Meili, who was capable of commanding them to fight regardless of what their instincts told them, could not make these witchbeasts stronger than what they originally were.

"Aaah! I was attacked?!"

Swinging its massive pincers, the violent gigantic scorpion that had been raging on the battlefield tore through witchbeasts one after another. The blood of the witchbeasts that had been torn, crushed, and pierced soaked the parched sand, and the sea of sand that had originally looked yellow was transforming into a reddish black color.

“—Ugh!”

While biting into that fact, Meili quickly looked around and searched for signs of witchbeasts in the sky, on the sand, or even under the sand, and tamed ones that were capable of being tamed. Now was not to time to care about quality. What she needed now was an inexhaustible supply of soldiers to use.

“La, lalalalalalalalalalalalala! I’m definitely going to get you to listen to me later, Brother, whether you want to or not!”

There wasn’t even any time for Meili to wipe the sweat accumulating on her forehead as she cursed at Subaru and kept a close eye on the rampaging gigantic scorpion. On the back of the Hungry Horse King, Meili did not feel comfortable at all riding on it in these conditions. However, her solution had been to stick a knife into the back of the witchbeast through the cloak that was wrapped around her body so that her body could be forcibly fixed onto it. It was a witchbeast that was under her direct control, so it had no choice but to accept this kind of treatment without complaint. The problem was that her situation was much more dire than that of the witchbeast she was riding on.

In the first place, the original Meili would never have taken part in a last-ditch effort battle like this. Her way of fighting had always required preparing in advance by getting the surrounding witchbeast’s under her control, placing them on the battlefield, and watching the battle from a high vantage point. That was what the witchbeast Master, Meili Portroute, was all about.

Of course, having direct command on the battlefield would improve the accuracy of the witchbeasts’ attacks and would help her get them to attack and defend when they needed to, but the downside of that was that it would put herself in danger. Due to making the wrong choice, Meili lost the battle against Subaru and had been taken prisoner.

“Elsa…”

Elsa had died because of such mistakes as well. Of course, she wouldn’t want Meili to blame herself at all, and Meili sometimes thought that she hadn't even died, which made her feel nervous.

Just like she didn't know how Elsa felt, Meili didn't know how she herself felt.

Meili had been fighting a slow battle with the gigantic scorpion, and devoted a lot of time to buying time for the witchbeasts so they could stay alive, however, she had never really done this in the past.

Meili Portroute was an assassin. She made a living by taking the lives of others via orders, instructions, or request. So this was the first time—

—To save and protect the lives of others.

"This isn't my way!"

What Subaru had said earlier made Meili very angry. How dare he ask her to be his child? She believed the way he behaved as if he had no idea people would find it hateful was disgusting. Garfiel may have been her direct enemy, but Subaru was the architect behind the whole situation. Even now, in the Pleaides Watchtower, he was the cause behind the whole situation itself.

"…"

It was true that she thought negatively of Subaru's words and actions, but Meili herself noticed how she followed his instructions and moved like a piece on a game board like everyone else.

If it had been a result of Subaru's deeply thought out plans, then it would be much more convincing. However, no matter how Meili looked at it, he wasn't capable of something like that. All he had was desperation, crazy expectations, and a way to make her trust him to the point that she would leave her life in his hands—

"For some reason, I feel like I'm an idiiiot."

While saying that, Meili brought out a witchbeast that she had gotten from beneath the sand and told it to go after the gigantic scorpion.

“…”

A giant sand earthworm popped out from beneath the sand and into the battlefield that had been painted red. Its body was at least 33 feet (10 meters) long, and it wiggled over to the gigantic scorpion before it rose up, expanded itself to its limit, and then boldly fell onto the gigantic scorpion. If it had been crushed and pushed into the sand, it would have been like defeating an undefeatable opponent—but it did not work out so well.

A ray of white light poured out from the stinger of the gigantic scorpion and cut through the massive sand earthworm in an instant. While the sand earthworm—which had been cut in two—made a strange sound as it plopped onto the sand below into its own body fluids, the attack that came from the stinger did not stop and continued to break the body of the dead sand earthworm into even more pieces.

However, it was just an opening created by using the life of the sand earthworm.

—Three Hungry Horse Kings, which were her favorites, emerged from where the sand earthworm had come from.

“—ッッ.”

A screech that sounded like the cry of a baby had been raised, and the burning half-human half-horse’s attacked the gigantic scorpion.

Although the Augria Sand Dunes was home to a variety of witchbeasts, it was the Hungry Horse King that had the most firepower out of all of them. Meili had preserved her favorite witchbeast by sacrificing a large number of other witchbeasts that wouldn’t have been enough to turn the tide of the battle. She had sacrificed courtesan bears, that had a poor amount of stamina, and sand earthworms, that could only try to crush their prey with their large bodies.

The Three Hungry Horse Kings had been attracted by the battle taking place.

Although they were inferior to the gigantic scorpion when it came to fighting power, the enemy was very cautious around this witchbeast. That was proof that they had felt threatened by their power.

"I think I'm in pretty good shape now."

Moving herself, along with Subaru and Beatrice, as well as getting the three Hungry Horse Kings ready for their attack all at the same time must have put quite a burden on Meili. However, the current her didn't seem to notice it at all. As to why, there was a possibility that the battle had exhilarated her to the point that she no longer noticed the burden that had been placed on herself. And she didn't think she'd be able to kill it. However, for the sake of achieving Subaru's goals, damaging it a bit would be acceptable.

"…"

—In a sense, it may have been the third time that a little girl named Meili, who had always done what she had been told, had wished to do something of her own volition.

The first time had been when she had walked around the watchtower at night to seek help from the Book of the Dead.

The second time had been when she had approached Subaru's back from the corner, who had been standing near the spiral staircase.

And the third time had been when she went above and beyond for the purpose of earning a little bit of extra time during the battle.

"—Meili!!"

As soon as the three Hungry Horse Kings had begun approaching the gigantic scorpion, a bloodcurdling scream could be heard calling out to Meili. It had literally been the cry of Subaru, who had blood flowing out of the edges of his mouth.

She had been puzzled due to it containing no hint of exultation, joy, or admiration. She wondered why he had sounded so angry when everything had been going so well. But—

"—Huh?"

The three Hungry Horse Kings, holding spears of fire, fiercely pounced onto the gigantic scorpion. No matter how well the gigantic scorpion was able to use its pincers and stinger, it would have been impossible to avoid this attack—but then they saw a change in the body of the scorpion, and it collapsed. It was as if it had been cooked in flames, or had taken in all the blood that had been soaked up by the sea of sand.

The outer shell, which had been as dull and shiny as dark steel, discolored as if it had been awakening from its slumber. In the next moment, the color of the jet-black scorpion changed to bloody red.

—There are some witchbeasts that changed into a Warning Color when they felt threatened or like they were in danger.

When this happened, there was a clear change in behavior, and they became more aggressive and ferocious. A change in appearance was also a good indicator for seeing if they had changed. For example, when the Hungry Horse King changed, it's flames swelled, and when the White Whale changed, it would create many clones of itself.

And that was also applicable to the gigantic scorpion—no, it was also be applicable to the Red Scorpion.

More aggression, more destruction—complete annihilation—

"—Ah."

Rays of white light had been emitted in all directions, and the three Hungry Horse Kings who tried to get away had been vaporized. At the same time, the ray of white light raged through the sea of sand, slaughtering everything in its path. And—

"…"

Swallowed by the exploding rays of white light, Meili's small body flew through the air as droplets of blood fell from it.

—She had hated the feeling of her blood boiling and the feeling of exhilaration that came from it ever since she was a child.

She used to have a sense of omnipotence that made her feel as if she had control of everything in this world. If enough time had gone by where she had believed in that illusion, no matter how rich in spirit she was, she would have gone down the wrong path.

She had a good awareness of herself, but it wasn't like she was overconfident in her abilities. As far as making mistakes was concerned, she just wanted to have the will to make no mistakes as well as the character to correct the mistakes she made. She had been able to maintain that attitude because she had not gotten drunk on her own power.

It was because she didn't assume she was wonderful just because the people around her told her so, and she refused to be obedient to the people who valued old conventions and ancient mysteries.

And what was the reason why she hadn't been crushed by those external factors? She knew it was something that she couldn't remember.

Because—

"—Ram is not only beautiful, but intelligent."

Putting aside her own words of praise, Ram's step shattered the steps of the spiral staircase. At that moment, a pink-haired Oni wrapped in the wind brought out her arm and smashed the arm of the enemy who was about to catch her. She had twisted and broken her wrist, elbow, and shoulder in a matter of seconds.

"—But…"

Now wasn't the time to scream in agony.

Ram's fist had then been shot into the side of his screaming face and her white fingers turned into shrapnel. A myriad of blows had been shot all over his body, and Batenkaitos spat blood as he was blown away. Chasing him, Ram rode on the wind that had been generated on the soles of her feet and then jumped high into the air.

“Hee-hee.”

Batenkaitos then launched himself into the air and swung his legs around to meet Ram.

Immediately after, the distortion of space that occurred made contact with Ram’s shoulder and sliced through her clothes and skin. —That had been where an invisible blade had been placed as a present, a cheeky trap created using Wind Magic.

“This is nothing to me—”

“You thought you could blow it away with the wind? No good no good, it’s useless! It’s in a fixed position in space! It’s regretful that not even you can get rid of it, Sister!”

Batenkaitos kicked himself into the air with a blood-stained smile on his face, anticipating Ram’s intentions. He hadn’t actually kicked the air, but had jumped off of the invisible blade that had cut through Ram’s shoulder, which would be a very difficult feat since he would have needed to know where it was in the air near the spiral staircase.

But, even so—

“—Clairvoyance.”

Even if it wasn’t something that could be perceived with one’s perception, if it could be overlapped with the vision of the person that had set it up, a small change in consciousness would reveal its whereabouts.

Then Ram saw the trap by overlapping her vision with Gluttony’s, kept that in her mind so she could use it in the same way, and finally chased after him by jumping up and using it as a foothold.

“Hah! Ahahahahahaha! Sister, are you serious about that? Seriously?!”

“That’s sounds like something Barusu would say. —I’ve been saved since the hesitation to beat you up has disappeared.”

The astonished Batenkaitos leapt into the air quicker than he had before and Ram glared at his gloomy face from below. And then she mercilessly slammed the sole of her shoe into his open-mouthed face that had his fangs protruding.

“Ugh.”

“Now, how many times do you need to taste the soles of Ram’s shoes before you’ll kindly fall down?”

The surface of his nose had been crushed, and Batenkaitos’ dwarf body was flipped into the air. The momentum of his ascent had finally been stopped, and Gluttony was then kicked downwards by the power of Ram’s kick. Following that, Ram raised her hands above her head, swooped down with the wind from her palms, and threw a second kick—no, third kick, and then a fourth kick into the face of the plummeting Batenkaitos.

Ram mercilessly struck his nose, front teeth, chin, and forehead with her heel with each kick. She had been so annoyed with his smiling face and his mouth, which had kept calling her Sister. So she continued to mess them both up as their descent continued.

By the way—

“If you fall into your own trap, it’s not Ram’s fault. You reap what you sow.”

“Gah! Gya! Ugh!”

While being kicked downwards, the invisible blade that had been anchored in the air tore into Batenkaitos’ body. Blood gushed out, and some of the cuts were quite deep, but Ram didn’t care about that. She didn’t have a hobby of wanting to hurt others. However, that was only the case when she could sympathize with the other person, but if she truly hated the other person, she had no issue with making them scream like a pig.

“Well? Do you regret it?”

Stopping skillfully in the air, Ram asked that, with her feet on his face and chest.

However, Batenkaitos did not answer the question, leaving his face covered in blood, and instead tried to swings the daggers he had on both arms. At that moment, Ram's knife-like hands shot into his shoulders and forcibly pulled his arms from his shoulder joints.

"—Ugh."

"Well? Do you regret it?"

No matter how skilled he was, there was no way he could move his arms when his arms had been ripped from their sockets. And Ram had asked that question again as she opened her eyes and looked down at his shocked face.

"…"

Ram tried to find fear in the eyes of Batenkaitos as he looked at her. The purpose of that was to engrave it into his mind. Fear, pain, a sense of defeat. It was for vengeance—not a trivial reason at all.

"Rem—"

To get them back. A large number of victims, not just Rem, had been victimized by Gluttony so far. The purpose of doing this was to regain the Name's and Memories of those who had lost them and everything they had ever had contact with.

If she had wished to kill him, she could have gone ahead and done it now.

With the same effort she had used to kick his face in, she could have created a wind blade on the sole of her foot and stepped on his neck. It had already been proven that even Witch Cultists, who were famous for playing dirty, would die if their neck and torso were separated.

She had learned that in the process of responding to the people that had destroyed the village of the Oni's by burning it to the ground. After all, she knew that Witch Cultists were just a bunch of weak and stupid creatures with horrible natures. And so, the reason why Ram had asked questions first was to kill their spirits before taking their lives.

"Well? Do you regret it?"

"—Ugh, Solar Eclipse!"

When he heard the third question, a hint of fear had been mixed into his bloody expression. But it had disappeared in the blink of an eye in front of Ram. It wasn't like his dimensional leap earlier. The feeling of the face and body of the person she had just been stepping on had disappeared. However, where Batenkaitos had run off to would quickly come to light.

"—Clairvoyance."

It was impossible for anyone to run away from Ram as long as she had her eyes set on them.

"…"

She had followed the visible field of view and located the spiral staircase where her enemy was. When she had caught up using her Wind Magic, she saw a bald old man wearing something like a monk's robe standing there. If it hadn't been Ram, the change in appearance might have worked, however, by sharing their vision, she was convinced that they were Batenkaitos, no matter what they looked like.

"I heard that this was one of Lust's tricks, but what other tricks are there?"

"Ah, Ahhhhh, shit! I didn't mean to use it… No, I shouldn't have used it… Ugh."

"—? What are you talking about?"

When she had reached the spiral staircase, the old man—Batenkaitos—who was kneeling there, groaned in anguish. She raised her eyebrows at his unseemly attitude but instantly threw her doubt away. The only thing that mattered was that the other person was still breathing and his spirit was not broken.

And—

"—I don't have much time left."

It was only a murmur, but Ram had already removed her shackles for over a minute—and there was a slight burden on herself, but most of it was going to Subaru. She had told him to fine-tune it, but just as she had expected, he had been taking on all of her burdens. Such a showoff. She believed he only needed to do it for his loved ones and Rem.

"—. I'm not sure what's going on with you, but are you willing to accept our demands? You need only restore everyone you have eaten so far as Gluttony. And if you do that—"

"...And then what? Are you going to miss us?"

"No. Then I'll kill you right away. Not a bad deal, right? I will forgive you at once in exchange for your life."

"Hah."

Batenkaitos, who had aged into an old man, laughed the way he usually did with the voice of an old man. Observing his behavior, Ram speculated that a change in shape was perhaps necessary in order to unlock the full potential of a person's abilities. The technique he had used before when he had disappeared in front of her was called the Leaper technique. And even the bald old Batenkaitos could use it.

"But it's strange. If you have a trump card like this, you should have been able to pull it out earlier. So why did you choose to run away and hide?"

"…"

"…Is it also the reason why you don't want to use it? Like being pulled by a vessel."

"You know…I've really never come across such a scary girl before... No no. Really, you are really scary, Sister.

The figure of the old man slowly turned back into a dwarf, probably due to the possibility of losing himself while in that form. It had been an affirmation of Ram's point, and at the same time it proved that transforming did not heal the wounds he had suffered. Batenkaitos was still bloody and his face was still in terrible shape.

"How's your shoulder?"

"I bumped it into a wall. Now it won't even work at all… it hurts, aah, it hurts."

Batenkaitos then popped his shoulders back into place, and to make sure everything was working properly, he rotated them a bit. Seeing this, Ram regretted that she hadn't just cut his arms off from the shoulder rather than just ripped them out of their sockets. Or perhaps if she had just crushed the ends of his limbs, she could have crushed all his silly little tricks.

"Everything I do, this and that, has been seen through…amazing, Sister. Maybe you are using that guy's Authority, Sister?"

"How regrettable. This was Ram's excellent insight. Don't mix it up with Barusu's nonsensical intuition. It's unpleasant. Just die."

"Ahahaha, so bitter. But, I see I see, that's right."

Batenkaitos had a bloody smile on his face with his torn tongue hanging out of his broken mouth. That eerie gesture could only make Ram widen her eyes, and her shoulders tensed up in response. If he made a strange move—no—

"Before you make any other movements, eat this."

Before he could pull off any strange movements, Ram made the decision to just blow off his other limbs with a wind blade. There was a way to stop the bleeding. However, there was no way to stop the pain, but if he did not die, the interrogation would continue. With that in mind, she shot a wind blade without hesitation. But—

"—The bets are on our victory!!"

A plump, bearded man flew backwards while taking the full brunt of the wind blade. His skin was extremely thick, and the wind blade that would normally have been able to cut into his body had been repelled, and only turned the fat man's skin a little red.

"I wonder if you misunderstood us a little, Sister. —You know, you're not the only one doing the observing, right?"

Ram heard him say that as she was about to move forward in order to not let the giant man escape. Immediately after that, Ram was cut by the invisible blade that had been left as a present and was stopped in her tracks for but a moment. Seeing that opening, Batenkaitos rushed into the gap.

"From our approach, a blow of ours!"

In the blink of an eye, the image of the old man disappeared, and the feeling of pressure behind Ram increased. She didn't have time to look behind her, and a powerful palm pummeled into her side, blowing her slender body away.

With a "Huh?," Ram was blown away by his strike, and after a quick glance, she noticed that the strike she had received had come from a man with a strong physique that gave off a rough aura. —He had instantly changed into three different people and perfectly took advantage of their unique characteristics and abilities.

"Even so, if the skill I used before works—"

"We don't think so. We don't believe so. Because we don't imagine it to be so. As we don't think so. As we really don't think so. We can say with certainty that we don't think so!"

The barking Batenkaitos turned back into the old man and covered one of his eyes with his hands. Fearful of what her enemy might do, Ram stretched her long legs out and kicked up onto the wall to put herself in a position where she could quickly jump at him. But she hadn't done it fast enough.

"We know. —Rem's sister can't keep moving like that without using tricks."

"…"

Rem's knowledge, rather than her movements, gave him the answer. Seeing the movements of Ram who had gone beyond the limits of a Hornless Oni, Batenkaitos confirmed his own suspicions, and when she had returned to the steps of the spiral staircase, he let out all of his malicious intent.

That is to say—

"—Sister, we don't want to compare our strength with yours."

And so, the cunning smile that had been plastered on his face disappeared.

Instantaneous movements through space using the Leaper technique. —If he were to use it continuously, it would have been easy to escape, but she had a feeling that there was a limit to how much he could use it without dying.

"His decision to escape came rather quickly. No, anyway—"

If he knew about Ram's Clairvoyance, then he wouldn't have been foolish enough to think he could escape so easily. The reason he had run away from her was because he knew about her time limit. And so she had unfortunately been deprived of precious time as a result.

The burdens being placed on Subaru increased by the second. And she needed to find the whereabouts of Batenkaitos who had escaped into the tower as soon as possible.

When she thought about it, she suddenly realized something.

The deadly Sin Archbishop, who was an accumulation of maliciousness, fled into the tower just to get away from her. And he knew what would get under her skin the most.

It was—

"—Rem."

Finally, by connecting her vision with that evil being, what came into her view was the tail of a black ground dragon, carrying the Sleeping Beauty on its back.

Chapter 83:
Ram

1

—Red, red, all she could remember was everything being wrapped in flames.

The calm, stagnant, and self-indulgent days had suddenly come to an end.

In the face of that senseless violence, the title of “Strongest Demi-human Race,” the position of the most feared village chieftain, and the universal law of parents protecting their children all held no meaning.

It had been a pity that she had been late in noticing the mayhem that was going on around her. —No, perhaps in this case it would be appropriate to praise the cleverness of the other party. They had been hated, alienated, repelled, and persecuted by the world. Therefore, they were very good at hiding in the darkness, masking their presence, staying silent, and being sneaky.

At the time of the first surprise attack, the outcome of the battle had already been decided. It had already been too late when their horns finally sensed that there had been a slight peculiarity in the mana in the atmosphere.

First of all, half of the villagers had been eliminated with the first attack, and less than half of the survivors were capable of fighting at that point. On top of that, half of the survivors felt like something was wrong but did not see the urgency of the situation. In short, being in a state of peace and harmony for so long had made them soft-hearted and weak-minded.

It had once been said that if the Oni Tribe—once called the strongest demi-human race—had participated in the Demi-human War, the situation in the Kingdom of Lugunica would have changed drastically. —However, even if an historical ‘what-if-scenario’ like that had happened, they wouldn't have been able to do much.

In any case, the first attack had halved their fighting forces, and their fighting forces were again reduced by half by the second attack. At this point, many parts of the village had already been engulfed in flames, and by the time the death howls of the Oni's had begun echoing in the night sky illuminated in red, every Oni in the village noticed something wasn't right. However, there were only two people who had realized that this was going to be the end of the Oni Tribe.

"—Ram! Escape the siege! All you need to do is survive!!"

The Elder barked that at her as his two horns grew larger and his body increased in size.

The Elder had said that to Ram, who had been cutting down the enemy with her Wind Magic, as he jumped out of the house. And he had said that not because he cared about her, but because he believed she was the future of the Oni Tribe.

To restore the former glory of the Oni Tribe, it was imperative to bring back the Oni God who had been an unstoppable force during the era of the Witch. That had been the role that had been forced upon the child prodigy named Ram, and that had most likely been the last wish of the Chieftain of the Oni Tribe, who seemed to have forgotten how to fight.

"Ha!"

Ram felt like that was the most ridiculous thing in the world, and scoffed at the thought of it.

In these current circumstances, was the only desire of the representative of the Oni's really only to entrust the realization of his unfulfilled dream to her? There were many more important things he could be doing, such as rallying his people and trying to fight back against the enemy. However, Ram had no intention of advising the Chieftain about such things. —And the events of this night weren't the cause. She had forgotten about her tribe a long time ago.

“The glory of the Oni’s…”

It’s stupid. It’s worthless. It’s absurd.

The fact that the pure blood of the Oni’s was flowing through her veins terrified her to no end. If she desired power, her blood would boil, feelings of excitement would fill every pore of her body, and she would feel as if she were invincible and could do anything she desired. In fact, if Ram had grown up normally, that omnipotence might have become a reality. However, she had no desire for it.

Ram wanted to choose her own future instead of pretending to be the child of a god in a tiny world. That was far more valuable to her than being seen as the second coming of the Oni God, or being the portable shrine of a relative who continued to obsess about the glory of the Oni’s that was already a thing of the past.

—Living as the ■■■■■■ of ■■■.

“…”

Then Ram focused on her forehead and absorbed hot mana from the atmosphere into her body through her white horn. After getting into a state of deep concentration, her perception was greatly expanded, and she was able to sense all of the living people around her, and was also able to get a good idea of what was going on in the small village. There were many enemies, and they had surrounded the village so that none could escape.

Their response had been delayed at the beginning, half of them had perished, and the other half had put up a great resistance, but the current number of fighters left was so small that they could be counted on one hand, and the Oni’s seemed to be losing the desire to resist.

There was an Elder struggling in battle, but their enemies were also quite skilled, and the Elder, whose defeat was imminent, seemed to be wrapped in an aura of Death.

“—■■■.”

Ram wrapped her body in the wind and flew through the village like a strong gale. The only person that occupied her mind and whose name came from her lips was her one and only ■■■■■■. It wasn't that she was heartless, she had only changed her focus. Her parents had been killed during the first attack, so there was nothing she could do for them now.

—Ram had never hated her parents.

However, both of them had been born in this village, for better or worse, grew up in this village, and chose to die in this village as Oni's after unconsciously accepting the destruction that occurred. And so, their deaths had been inevitable on this night.

However—

"—That doesn't mean I won't retaliate in kind."

Ram then saw her enemy that looked like black shadows and wore robes that covered their bodies from head to toe, and unleashed a powerful gust of wind at the fools wielding cross-shaped daggers.

Were they underestimating her because she was a child, or were they just lacking in ability? They were unable to handle Ram's countless wind blades, so the black shadows were cut down one after another, and their corpses began to litter the ground. After that, Ram wrapped herself in the wind and continued to massacre them as if she were dancing in the flames. It might have even looked like a beautiful dance performance to an onlooker. However, the reality was that every time she swung her arm, a life was taken, and every time she made something with a form disappear, dark pleasure filled her immature heart and shouted for joy.

It howled at her to kill more and more. That inner self desired blood, flesh, bones, souls, and lives. And that hadn't been the first time she'd heard it make demands.

—At all times, ever since she had been born, that voice tried to coax her into doing its bidding at every opportunity.

For it needed blood, flesh, bones, souls, and lives to awaken itself from within. It told her to kill more and more, and destroy more and more. And Ram didn’t understand what was so great about that. Neither the Elders nor her parents understood either. Those who wanted Ram to be something other than herself did not want to see that reality.

It was as if the horn had been controlling her. Without a firm grasp of herself, she would have been easily swallowed up and destroyed, and the Oni God would have returned just as everyone around her had hoped. But that never happened. Because—

“—■■■■■■!!”

A high-pitched voice called out to her, and as she turned, ■■■ was lit up by flames. A moment later, a powerful gust of wind blew away the swarming black shadows, driving them away in a single breath. And then Ram ran over to her ■■■■■■.

“■■■...”

■■■ stared at her with fear in her eyes, and she seemed to have no strength left in her legs. Then she reached out to her beloved ■■■■■■ and tried to get her to stand up. She thought that she needed to survive just as the Elder wished. However, not only Ram, but ■■■, too—

—That was the moment.

She confirmed the safety of ■■■ and was able to relax for a second. However, by the time she noticed what had happened, she was surrounded, and it wasn’t going to be easy to find a way out of there. She could have easily saved herself, but being the only one to survive would be the same as dying.

She needed to break through the current situation somehow. And to do that, she decided to remove all of the shackles placed on her power that had been sealed, and directed a raging gust of wind towards the enemy.

“…”

Perhaps it had been brought about by the feeling of omnipotence she’d been feeling at that moment, but a black shadow managed to weave through the gust of wind and struck her forehead, which split her field of vision.

Ram looked at it, which made her feel a great sense of loss and greatly shocked her. Twirling and twirling, the white horn twirled round and round into the red night sky, which had been lit by the flames that engulfed the village. She understood that it was her horn, and a pained scream came from her thin throat due to the loss of it. But while screaming, she noticed something.

Ram could no longer hear the voice that had been inside her ever since she'd been born. Realizing how easy it really was, she went crazy due to her own stupidity.

Looking at the horn that drew a parabola in the red night sky—

—Oh, it's finally been broken.

Yes, that's what she thought at that moment.

2

—A black ground dragon could be seen desperately running away in the field of vision shared using Clairvoyance. The girl on its back was supposed to be Ram's other half, but she couldn't remember that missing other half and only felt a sense of loss—

"—Rem."

Ram's heart trembled with anger when she understood what it meant.

It annoyed her to admit it, but with Subaru's help, she'd been able to regain the powers she had when she was in her prime, and she managed to overpower the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, Lye Batenkaitos, as a result, which put him in a tough spot. She could easily declare that there had been countless opportunities to kill him if she wanted to do so.

However, due to the presence of his troublesome Authority, which had the power to eat the Names and Memories of others, she hesitated to take his blasphemous life so carelessly. She didn't make that decision because she was warm-hearted, but because it was necessary. And the outcome was the outcome.

As a result, Batenkaitos used his Authority to escape from right from under Ram's nose, and set out to capture her other half, Rem. The purpose of such an action was obvious—he knew he couldn't beat her by fighting fair and square.

He had fought her head-on, and when he realized that he wasn't going to win, he escaped and changed his fighting tactics. The archbishop was no warrior. He had no reason to fight fair and square, and he was only concerned with fulfilling his own greedy desires. Therefore, his retaliation plan against Ram for humiliating him was to waste her time due to the time limit in her Oni form, which had been based on the memory he had stolen from Rem.

This strategy was infuriating to her, albeit a good choice of action for him. If Rem got captured, then Ram would be easy to neutralize.

Even if that doesn't happen, their fighting strength will be greatly reduced if she takes more time. The odds of winning will decrease as time goes by.

Therefore—

"—I'll catch up to Patrasche as soon as possible."

Fortunately, Patrasche, who was in charge of looking after Rem, was the most clever ground dragon in the tower, second only to Julius in terms of cleverness. Subaru and Beatrice were on opposite sides of the spectrum, and she didn't know about Echidna and Meili. What was even more outrageous was the atmosphere that Emilia gave off that made Ram hesitate to want to rely on her.

And though it was complex, Batenkaitos was clearly playing around with Patrasche. He would deliberately let up on his attack and let her gain some distance so that he could enjoy hunting his prey—prey that he could cut down at any moment if he so wished.

Ram had had enough and wasn't going to let him play his games any longer—

"—Ugh."

It had been at the moment she sped up and tried to fly forward while wrapped in the wind. When she tried to go upstairs via the spiral staircase, her vision blurred, and her Clairvoyance had come undone for but a moment. Her right eye was still linked with Batenkaitos', but her left eye had been unlinked and her view was blurred as a result.

But that wasn't all. A heavy feeling of fatigue, which she had not felt before, and a feeling of pain and discomfort, as if invisible hands were caressing her internal organs, had just been thrown upon Ram. This was undeniably the fatigue that she usually felt when she used her powers to their limits.

The price that every Hornless Oni had to pay, which Subaru had promised to pay to a certain extent, had just been returned to Ram. The first possibility that popped up in her mind was that Subaru had died in a careless manner. However, she judged that that wasn't the case due to how light the effects of the rebound were. Only a few minutes had gone by, but given the amount of power she had used, this was nowhere close to the price she usually paid. Normally she'd be in an extreme state of suffering by spitting up blood and rolling around in pain.

In other words, whatever unforeseen circumstances he'd been dealing with that made this happen didn't mean he was completely out of commission. Or perhaps it meant that the exact opposite happened, and another person in their group had suffered more damage than Ram did, and Subaru was currently undertaking their burdens.

"Lady Beatrice or Meili, or perhaps Julius the Knight."

That was what she came up with, but there was no point in trying to figure that out right now. The only thing that mattered at this moment was that Ram could no longer exert the same amount of power as before which could overpower Batenkaitos. —There was only one that could be removed, as far as shackles were concerned.

It may have been possible for her to remove the second one if she overdid it, but it was another story when it came to keeping it active for ten or more seconds. So, is it even possible to defeat Lye Batenkaitos now?—

"Now isn't the time to get weak-kneed. —I have no choice but to do whatever I can to win."

In the meantime, the camp's chances of winning was going down little by little.

Then Ram once again took a step and started running up the spiral staircase.

—Ram's breath caught as she felt the pain of loss, as if she had always rushed to her side like this when she was being chased in this way.

“—ッッ.”

“Ha-ha! Hey, It’s pretty nice! Keep at it, you’re a ground dragon, after all!”

He praised the ground dragon that was currently running through a narrow corridor, whose scales had been damaged by a dagger he threw earlier. Bleeding painfully from the gouged wound, the ground dragon, who had made the wise decision to escape, was determined not to let this victory go to waste.

The Divine Protection of Wind Evasion was something that all ground dragons had. As long as the ground dragon continued to run, it wouldn’t need to worry about wind resistance or its footing, and could keep running as much as it needed. And it’s range extended to the dragon carriage attached to it and to the person on its back.

In other words, it was largely due to the Divine Protection of Wind Evasion that the Sleeping Beauty, who was firmly fastened to the saddle, did not fall off. Without it, the Sleeping Beauty would have already fallen into the hands of Batenkaitos.

“Amazing, so amazing, so brave, so courageous! Although I’ve tried to stop you from running so much, you’re still doing your best to keep running with those legs of yours. Well, if you stop, your Divine Protection of Wind Evasion will be cancelled, so we can see why you’re so desperate!”

“—ッッ.”

“This ground dragon is great. It’s tenacious and loyal to its master. I’m sure that if it were a human, it would have become one of our most coveted dishes as Gourmet! But, butbut, butbutbutbutbutbut! Alas, a ground dragon won’t fill our belly!”

There was a Will, a Soul, a Memory, and a Name.

Despite that, the Authority of Gluttony can’t eat That which is not human. Therefore, Batenkaitos cannot love the ground dragon that was fighting so desperately, so hard, and so courageously against a tough enemy, in the best way. It looked so delicious and made him drool, but he could not eat it.

It was like a painting of a meal that had been drawn by a master painter. —He had heard an expression that people could not live off of the sticky rice cakes they drew in a picture.

“Ah, that’s it! That’s totally it! When our belly gets smaller and smaller and smaller and smaller, and we can’t help it! The picture of such delicious food is just making us suffer on purpose. Isn’t that a form of child abuse?!”

His face had been crushed in the battle he had just been in, and the eyeball in his left eye socket was on the verge of falling out, probably because the fundus had been crushed. His sharp fangs had been broken and his tongue had been torn apart, and blood was flowing endlessly onto his lower jaw, but it didn’t matter to him.

—Just the thought of Ram watching him right now made him giddy with excitement.

“Sister—”

A pure, noble, perfect, and flawless complete being. It was what the Memories that slept in Batenkaitos thought of her, and he also believed it was a good evaluation of her after being nearly killed by her without being able to put up a fight.

A serious Ram would make short work of Batenkaitos. —No, no matter who the deadly Sin Archbishop was, a serious Ram would squeeze them to death. Well, perhaps Regulus would have been able to compete with her due to the invincibility of his Authority, but—

“Well, there’s no way that idiot could kill Sister. Anyways, if she can’t kill him, then she wouldn’t try to kill him, and would just throw him over the Great Waterfall instead.”

Even if they couldn’t be killed, there are many other ways to keep them contained. Just like how the Witch of Envy wasn’t able to be killed by the Three Heroes but was still confined in the Evil Sealing Stone Shrine. In the end, that’s how it is—

“In order to entertain our best and perfect Sister, we must prepare accordingly, otherwise it would be rude!”

With his wobbly left eye open, Batenkaitos smiled gruesomely with blood dripping from his face.

The speed of the ground dragon was impressive, but its mobility indoors was a wasted treasure. Moreover, Batenkaitos could even cross the space easily by using a skill from a Memory, even if there was no open space in front of him.

“As Sister’s little sister, we have to grow up without shame.”

With a growing sense of mission, Batenkaitos pulled out the Memories in his possession.

One of the Authorities of Gluttony was a skill called Eclipse. It could be divided into two categories, Solar Eclipse and Lunar Eclipse, but finding a good way to use it was quite challenging.

Lunar Eclipse was the phenomenon where the moon appeared to be missing. —It drew out the Memories of the people he had eaten and reproduced them in Batenkaitos’ own body.

One of the main advantages of Lunar Eclipse was that Batenkaitos could look at any of the Memories in his possession, combine them, and create any sort of synthesized super-class technique he desired.

Solar Eclipse, on the other hand, was the phenomenon where the sun appeared to be hidden. —In other words, it was a skill that not only used the Memories of the person but also the body of the person themselves, and the body could be operated just like the original owner used it.

Naturally, using the body of the person that mastered the skill would strengthen the skill itself since it was originally theirs. However, when they transformed into another person, there was a fear that the influence of the other person’s mind would become too strong, and it could have major repercussions later on. For this reason, Batenkaitos and Alphard did not use that skill often unless something extraordinary happened.

Lye Batenkaitos and Roy Alphard favored using Lunar Eclipse.

Louis Arneb, however, favored using Solar Eclipse—a hand that could be easily used because she had no physical form and no fixed ego.

However, in the battle with Ram, he almost died, and in order to survive, Batenkaitos broke out of his shell the moment he turned into ‘Leaper’ Dorkell using Solar Eclipse. He had found a way to maintain his sense of self while in his Solar Eclipse form that he had originally been afraid of losing. Now he could enjoy the main dish of their Life without being wasteful.

“Growing up in the midst of a battle is something that would never happen to an old guy like me. Ha-ha! This is a masterpiece! Sister!”

Having established a stronger ego, he felt very refreshed.

He wanted his wonderful sister to take a good look at him while he was still awake, and to do that, he would have to find a way to incite her hatred even more.

He wanted a full-course meal with the scent of anger, the taste of anger, and the texture of anger and hatred. What on earth would a Gourmet be without enjoying everything that could be experienced by a loved one? He would use his other self on the back of the ground dragon for that purpose.

“Come to think of it, I’ve never done it before. I wonder if I can discover new values by killing myself?”

“—ッッ.”

In the blink of an eye, the world warped with the activation of his Leaper technique. The ground dragon emitted a groan from its throat and was startled by the sudden appearance of Batenkaitos, who should have been far behind it, and ran as fast as it could without looking back. It was brave, very brave, however, that braveness would only spice up the future tragedy.

“—Palm of the Fist King.”

A palm strike was unleashed and pierced into the side of the ground dragon. Normally, that would have been an attack unleashed by the dwarf form of Batenkaitos, but that was no longer the case with a Batenkaitos who had awakened from his shell and gained more power.

Then the original form of Neiji Rockheart pierced the body of the ground dragon with a powerful strike. That was The Palm of the Fist King, which had even killed countless opponents with giant bodies on the Gladiator Islands.

The ground dragon bathed in it and let out a deathly groan before being slammed violently against the wall of the corridor. However, as it fell, it continued to protect the girl from his strikes, the wall, the floor, and from its own giant body. It then gently grasped the falling girl's body with its long tail and lowered her to the floor of the corridor. It was supposed to be a female, but the treatment was so gentle that it could serve as a model for all gentlemen. Involuntarily, even Batenkaitos applauded.

"Ta-da! Even if you gently lay her on the floor like that, I'll still be beheading her and giving her head as a present to Sister."

"—ッッ."

"Yes yes, don't act violently, don't struggle, here's your reward for all of your hard work."

He kicked at the ground dragon that was lying on its side trying to bite him. Their hard work would normally have brought tears to his eyes, but this time, it was hate. Batenkaitos and the ground dragon were enemies. He could praise his opponent for the good fight, but they would not be able to look up at the same sky as victors. If one side won, the other side lost. Alas, that was the way reality worked.

"That' it! Do! You! Understand! Hey!"

A single word, a single pause, one word at a time, he drove them each carefully into the black ground dragon. Its cheekbones and forefoot were crushed, and the ground dragon that had been hit should have learned its lesson with pain by now. Fortunately, Batenkaitos could not eat the Memories of the ground dragon, so there was no reason to take its life. It was something he wanted them both to remember.

After that—

“For Sister, for Sister’s precious Rem, with Rem’s own hands…”

“—Don’t say anything weird.”

Immediately after hearing a dignified voice, the face that was hovering over Rem was powerfully repelled. What the face saw when it was raised due to hearing a voice came in the form of a direct hit from the soles of her shoes that had come from the front. As it was, Batenkaitos had been thrown backwards onto his back and was skidding on the ground. And—

“Aha-ha-hahahhaha… You finally caught up with us, Sister. We…huh? We… We…? —Our Rem has been waiting for you.”

He slowly got up from his position on the ground with only the strength of his feet. When he looked at his beloved other half from the front, Ram had an expression on her face that he had never seen before.

“…You’ve become considerably more ugly looking in a very short time.”

4

“…You’ve become considerably more ugly looking in a very short time.”

That had been Ram’s honest impression after catching up with them. While linking with Batenkaitos’ vision, Ram had forced her incompletely transformed body to move and rushed to the scene, believing that Patrasche could get through it.

In the corridor of the fourth floor, a bit far away from the spiral staircase, she found a ground dragon that was hurt and in tatters, with Rem lying beside it. And the one that was hovering over her was—

"You think we're ugly… Sister is so cruel...to us, like this, in this way! We were thinking that Sister sh-sh-sh-sh-shined and is so important to us."

The way in which he spoke and acted was indecisive and his way of thinking was extremely uncoordinated. Ram felt like he was suffering from a mental disorder—no, anyone could tell he was with a quick glance. Since Batenkaitos' appearance looked so distorted.

"…"

This must have been the secret technique of Batenkaitos that he had showed her earlier where he could transform into another person using their Memories. However, it seemed to be preventing him from doing it, and the current appearance of Gluttony standing in front of Ram contained none of the Memories he had pulled out before. They had all been jumbled up together instead.

There was a part of the old man who could seemingly teleport; there was a part of the fat giant who defended against Ram's wind blade with ease; a part of that martial artist who had seemingly divine fighting abilities, and various other physical characteristics of human beings that made up his unearthly body.

The length of his right and left hands were different, and his face seemed to be made up of different people. The only characteristic of the original Batenkaitos that remained was the way he looked, but that too may have just been a borrowed appearance. And it appeared as if he was unaware of his own distorted appearance.

"—?"

Batenkaitos was becoming something that was no longer anything. Batenkaitos, who specialized in taking the Memories of others, may have actually had a weak sense of self, and because of that, he completely broke. And so this thing was born—

"—You're just a monster pretending to be Rem. If I'm being honest, this is the first time I've felt so angry."

Looking down at the broken pieces of his face where she could see some of her little sister’s features, Ram absolutely hated Batenkaitos, who had added her features to a part of his face. How is he so good at getting on people’s nerves? She thought Subaru and him could have a good match to see who was better at irritating people.

“Thank you for your hard work, Patrasche. Take Rem and get out of here.”

“～～ッッ.”

The sound of the reply was very weak, and she sheltered the bleeding Patrasche behind her. And then Patrasche grabbed Rem by the collar and dragged her away with her large body. Ram hoped they could get away from the battlefield—

“That’s no good, Sister. That’s an important appetizer… Isn’t it absolutely essential to eat it before the main dish?—”

“—Kindly die.”

He had stepped on the ground with a foot that was bigger than a person’s head and tried to rant at her with a palm on his face. In response, Ram unleashed a wind blade that was as powerful as a small storm and capable of ripping her enemy’s neck to pieces. —At this point, she was no longer messing around.

As a result of trying to find a way to restore everyone’s Memories without killing him, Ram’s mission had been jeopardized, and had led to Patrasche getting seriously injured. She then firmly decided to start being serious. —And she needed to deeply apologize to Subaru for this.

And so, Ram began unleashing attacks with the intent to kill so as to not make that same mistake twice. It was unlikely that Batenkaitos would give a straight answer, even after giving that confusing remark earlier. All in all, this was the right choice.

Ram needed to defeat Batenkaitos and take back the burdens being placed on Subaru. Then Patrasche and Rem needed to be taken to the Green Room, and she needed to hurry and help the others. That was what she had been thinking about.

"…"

Just as his face was about to be torn apart by the torrent of wind, Ram gazed in amazement at the changes that occurred. Nothing happened, and only Batenkaitos' appearance had changed. However, that change was what was hard to overlook for her.

—A white horn appeared on his forehead, which was a conglomeration of features of many different people.

"That's…"

She had no choice but to take her hat off to him if he really was acting according to his instincts. Because the actions of Batenkaitos were all about making a mockery of Rem.

"—Sister."

For a moment, Ram felt like she had been called by a voice that sounded like Rem's, with a face that looked exactly like Rem's. And then a punch from Batenkaitos' giant arm flew into her rigid face.

5

It hadn't been fatal. But it hadn't been a light blow at all, not one that she could be optimistic about. It had shaken her brain and caused blood to drip out of her nose. The fact that her feet had become unstable even though she hadn't been taking on all of her burdens meant that she had taken quite a bit of damage. And it had come from a pretty girl with blue hair and a lovely face—three faces lined up that gave off the same atmosphere. What kind of joke was this?

"Please cry, Sister."

His fist was thrown with tears in his pale-blue eyes, as if he were pleading with her. The impact from each strike reached the marrow of her very bones or even deeper into her very soul.

"Please be angry, Sister."

She got hit in the stomach, causing her to lower her face, and then her chin was struck with an uppercut from below. She managed to avoid biting her tongue, but she was forced to eat a few elbow attacks to the head before being struck in the gut again, making her take a few steps backwards.

“Please smile, Sister.”

The deep affection in that voice plucked at Ram’s heartstrings with every word.

Rem had been sleeping in Ram’s view for a long time. Her Memories had been wiped away, and she could not recall her at all, despite having been together for their whole lives. She had been looking forward to hearing her call out to her when she woke up.

At that time, Ram wasn’t sure if she would regain her memories of her. Regardless of whether or not they came back, the first word out of Rem’s mouth would be as a special as the sound of a baby’s first cry.

That was—

“Please cry, get angry, laugh, worry, smile, feel pain, get worked up, be in a bad mood, be shy, sleep, blush, get surprised, be congratulated.”

“Sister, Sister—”

“Stop—Ugh.”

As she was about to respond, her mouth was forcefully closed by his palm and she could no longer speak. This was the monster that Ram had created by driving him into a corner. —His power was overwhelming.

There was no hesitation and no limits on how much he took out. He didn’t even seem to recognize that he had lost his sense of self, and so he did not change out of the form of Ram’s other half.

Despite the Sun and Moon being hidden, the darkness painted Gluttony perfectly.

Of course, Ram wasn’t going to let things stay as they were, either. She was going to fight back. She removed as many shackles as she could, but only as many as Subaru could handle, and then went past the limit she had placed on herself where could only stay in that form for ten seconds. This time, she would try her absolute best to kill him. But, he was a little too hard to defeat right now.

“Sister, Sister, I think it’s unlike you to look like that.”

“—Ugh.”

With pursed lips, the form of her lovely little sister corrected her mistake with her fist. Although her face had been punched and smashed into the wall behind her, Ram managed to keep up with that blasphemer. However, that was the best she could do for now.

How long had it been since the battle with that monster started? There was no doubt that she had already exceeded 20 seconds of the original 10 second time limit. She had no time to count in her head, and her perception of time had been warped. However, the most important thing she needed to think about was whether she could escape or not.

She had probably been trying to help Patrasche escape with Rem, but she couldn’t remember possibly due to getting hit in the head so much. Her body felt heavy; she was out of breath; her head hurt; her throat was swelling up; her limbs felt numb; and she was bleeding from her old forehead wound. And blood was spilling out from where her horn used to be, covering her entire face.

And then her blood-covered face was hit again by his palm. The blow pummeled into her body until her knees could no longer support her own weight. And when she was about to fall over, a quiet voice broke in and said “Oh no you don’t” before a kick was unleashed.

Then Ram was smashed into the wall, her sternum creaking. Before long, the material that made up the Pleiades Watchtower, which was supposed to be quite strong, lost its strength and turned into a material that could be easily broken. In other words, the wall finally shattered after that relentless assault.

Then Ram broke through the stone wall and rolled into the other side of the corridor. A thick fog of dust filled the air around her, and she coughed as blood and dust formed a powdery texture on her tongue. And her broken bones and crushed flesh immediately began to scream and shriek in pain.

Ram then craned her neck and tried to figure out where she had been kicked into.

“—Ah.”

A small, breathless sound leaked out from her mouth. It may have been due to her own disappointment or had been disappointment mixed with dismay.

Ram could see Patrasche and Rem in her sight at the end of the corridor. The distance couldn’t be more than 40 feet (12 meters) at most. —And the time she had earned was a dozen seconds that felt much longer than it should due to how much pain she was in.

“Sister, Sister, are you safe?”

As she relished in her momentary safety, Batenkaitos did not jump over the wall that he had broken, but instead tried to get over there by finding another way into the corridor.

In the meantime, Ram managed to get to her feet by pushing herself off the ground with her arms. Leaning her body against the wall, she exchanged glances with Patrasche, who was in a tattered state.

“—ッッ.”

"…Yes, I know. When all is said and done, let's punish Barusu together."

She actually did not even know what Patrasche had said. However, the fact that the black ground dragon did not try to correct her answer meant that her answer was not wrong.

"…"

Ram had to admit that her decision had backfired on her. Not killing Batenkaitos first was the trigger for all of this. In an attempt to correct her mistake, her next step was to quickly take his life, but Batenkaitos, who survived being half-dead, was able to develop an eye for finding the best possible solution to his problems.

Ram had used up all the cards in her hand, and had been betrayed by all the cards she drew. She had been aware of her own superiority, but there was one thing she was unaware of and could do nothing about.

—Luck.

It hadn't changed since the day she lost her horn and ceased being a proper Oni. However, she had not been interested in being a proper Oni, anyways, for it was Ram herself who hated the white horn that had been on her forehead. And yet, ironically, she now wished she had the horn she had lost.

—No, that's not quite right. To be precise, the horn itself was still around.

The horn was still in Ram's possession. Her broken horn served as the base of her favorite wand, which she always carried around with her.

The horn, which assisted in the collection of mana from the atmosphere, was a very important part of an Oni's body, since their strong bodies needed a constant supply of mana to function properly. Therefore, as a catalyst for using magic, there was nothing that Ram was more familiar with. As a result, Roswaal went out of his way to find the broken horn and had it used as a piece in Ram's wand.

The horn didn’t operate differently when she compared how it was used on her forehead and how it was used in her wand. It’s like this —

“…”

Ram suddenly had a thought in her mind as she was thinking about the horn. It was the same whether the horn was there or not. This was due to the fact that she had overpowered Batenkaitos. Then she mobilized her collection of knowledge in order to overcome the situation and connected all of the possibilities.

Ram had a broken horn and Rem was sleeping.

The latter was simply a consequence of what had happened, but what about the former? —Why did Roswaal retrieve Ram in the first place?

Ram knew what role Roswaal wanted her to play, and she knew he was planning something as well. She had heard that he needed her to do it, but she would only find out about it in due time, so she decided not to pry until it was necessary to do so.

However, at this moment, Ram was trying to come up with a plan so that she could survive with Patrasche, who was protecting Rem, and Rem, who continued to sleep.

It was a terribly absurd possibility, but at the same time, she couldn’t help but feel proud of her reasoning.

If it were Ram’s beloved Roswaal L. Mathers—

“It’s really something he might do even if he were to be verbally abused and thought of as a brute.”

Spilling that out, Ram pulled out the wand that had been strapped to her thigh with trembling hands. She then gazed at the wand she had used for ten years and slammed it against the wall. From the inside of the shattered wand, she saw something she hadn’t seen in a long time.

—It was just like that time when it whirled around and around so much that it became unpleasant to look at.

6

Batenkaitos slowly cleared the white dust from the corridor by hand and then moved forward. It was the Way of the Maid to be gentle, move with neat gestures, and to not make unnecessary noises, and that was the bare minimum they had to do in order to not feel ashamed.

Beyond the smoke was where his sister should have been. He wanted to see her various faces. He wanted to look straight into her crimson eyes that held powerful emotions and burned brilliantly. It was a desire that was so innocent that it felt like an awakening of love.

“Oh.”

“—ッッ.”

Once he got past the smoke, the first thing he saw was a black ground dragon writhing in pain. During the time he had been in contact with and speaking with his sister, the ground dragon had disappeared. He was not really interested in it, but he had to do something about the existence the ground dragon was carrying. He wanted to erase the existence that carelessly attracted his sister’s attention. He believed that only he could call his sister his sister and that his sister belonged to him alone.

“Ah, I found her.”

On the other side of the writhing ground dragon was the figure of the Sleeping Beauty leaning against the wall. She had been placed there in the perfect position, so perfect that he could easily aim at her neck or heart. He firmly decided that he must make her breathe her last breath and then move on to his sister, who was the main dish.

And then Batenkaitos noticed something as he was getting closer to the Sleeping Beauty.

—The drooping forehead of the blue-haired girl was shining with a dim light.

He wondered for a moment what that light was, but it couldn't be possible, and his own self-awareness made him deny any answers he came up with. How could a sleeping girl do something like that?—

"I'll make it right."

"—Huh? Sis-."

"I thought I had been out of luck. —But, I wasn't."

He tried to call out to the voice he heard, but couldn't. An attack much faster than that had struck Batenkaitos' face. There was a sense of astonishment, and in the next moment, he felt a shockwave and was blown into the opposite direction of the corridor he had walked through.

"Huuuh?!"

The force of the attack had been so strong that Batenkaitos did not stop until he had broken through two walls. A feeling of surprise preceded the feelings of pain and suffering, and after trying to stand up, he immediately fell into onto his knees due to how much damage he had taken. It had been a blow that smashed his body to the core.

And then Batenkaitos wondered what on earth had happened with a look of astonishment painted on his lovely face—

"It appears that even the heavens have fallen in love with the loveliness of Ram and Rem."

A plumb of smoke rose from the hole in the wall that he had been thrown through, and just as he was about to look beyond it, his face was grabbed by a hand faster than the speed of sound. And then, with his cheeks and jawbones creaking in their grip, he saw the person behind it.

It was—

“Si…ster...”

“Unfortunately for you, Ram’s sister is sleeping over there. Synesthesia makes that clear.”

“Syne…thes...?”

“Synesthesia. It appears that Ram and Rem were good sisters. We could share joy and anger; sorrow and pain, and so on. —The broken horn was reactivated, and the burden too.”

The meaning of her words were not clear, but what Batenkaitos had seen with his own eyes was affirmed. Before he got beaten up, what he saw on the forehead of the Sleeping Beauty leaning against the wall was a white horn. —The only thing that the daughter of the Oni’s had that allowed her to surpass her older sister.

Because it was there, because it was glowing, because it was working, what was it?

“Although it annoys me to admit that it was a hint from Barusu’s strategy, that’s okay.”

“Subaru? What...”

“—Don’t call Barusu’s name with that face and voice.”

“—!!”

In a single moment, Batenkaitos was lifted up by the face, which had been in her grasp, and slammed into the ground. Trembling, trembling, Batenkaitos’ arms and legs were involuntarily shaking. In front of him, Ram opened and closed her hands just to make sure, and was bleeding a lot from the old wound on her forehead.

However, instead of being bothered by the bleeding, Ram loosened her lips as if welcoming it. As if the blood and the pain proved that their lost bonds were real.

“If you were born in a dark place, return to that dark place. If you were born crying, die while crying.”

Then she gently wiped the blood off of her forehead with her palm and looked down at Batenkaitos with her pale crimson eyes.

Everything that Batenkaitos had done so far had been for this moment. He wanted to see that look of fury in her eyes.

—Ram looked down at the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony with cold, icy eyes.

“The second coming of the Oni God. It’s not something I’m fond of, but I’m going to perform my role, at least for today. —I’m going to tear the fake version of my lovely little sister into eight pieces this time.”

Chapter 84:
Heave-Ho! Heave-Ho!

1

—It was important to construct an Image in her mind in order to make the ice turn into the shape she wanted.

At first, when Subaru brought up the idea of "Ice Brand Arts," Emilia thought it would be very useful, but she felt anxious about whether or not she could actually do it.

"It's alright! Don't worry about it! You can definitely do it, Emilia-tan!"

When Emilia felt anxious at that time, she remembered how Subaru smiled at her as he gave her a thumbs up. When she thought about it now, she felt like it was a bit ungrounded. —Actually, no, it was more like he had been encouraging her because "He loved her."

In the process of learning to create a weapon using an Image, Emilia studied drawing really hard. Unlike singing, she wasn't very good at drawing, but even so, she made a good amount of progress after drawing a lot of pictures with Subaru.

While they were studying, when they saw Emilia drawing pictures with Subaru and Beatrice, Ram was shocked, Otto smiled bitterly, Frederica and Petra would occasionally join them, and Garfiel would offer advice. Even Roswaal would occasionally see her, from a distance, drawing next to Beatrice from time to time.

Emilia thought that these were very, very precious, and unforgettable memories. Although it had disappeared from everyone's memories, Subaru stilled remembered it. And when she thought about that, a warm feeling appeared in the back of her chest.

"I'll change it into courage—!"

Inspired by her rising emotions, Emilia took the ice weapons and seven ice soldiers she'd created with her and began moving forward in order to challenge the Divine Dragon, Volcanica.

As had been mentioned above, forming an Image in her mind was very important in the shaping of ice. It was the same for the ice weapons and soldiers she'd just created. She'd made the ice soldiers by picking someone she could easily imagine in her mind. In short, she'd made seven Natsuki Subaru's to fight by her side.

"But, he's soooo much more powerful than the real Subaru, and he's a lot more agile too!"

As far as liveliness and naughtiness were concerned, Subaru was superior, but he was still a lot different than the ice soldiers. The strength of the ice soldiers depended on the amount of mana that Emilia used when making them, which could hardly be compared to making a simple ice sculpture. Much like her ice weapons, they would be as tough as steel.

"Go!"

Following Emilia's order, the ice soldier in the front moved into the range of Volcanica. However, Volcanica did not move an inch while leaning against the central pillar in the middle of the watchtower. His tail's attack range was around 20 to 22 feet (six to seven meters) from where he was sitting.

Shortly after, however, the blue tail of the dragon moved at an extremely high speed, probably due to sensing that it wanted to approach the central pillar. A strange sound could be heard, as if a hole had been cut into the air, and immediately after that, the upper body of the ice soldier at the front shattered and was turned to dust. It'd been near the chest where the ice soldier had been hit and cut in half, and the evil-eyed Subaru-like head could be seen flying through the air.

"I'm sorry! But, that means he's not just going after me."

It had been bad for the ice soldier used as a test subject, but now Volcanica's aim was clearly understood. Although the Divine

Dragon was senile and had forgotten about the Trial, he still seemed to have the intention of preventing anyone from approaching the central pillar. Then, whether there was life or not, there was a way to do it.

“Mr. Soldiers, if you would!”

In response to the voice of Emilia, the ice soldiers zipped forward to get past the silver-haired girl. The first one was easily crushed, however, and the remaining six managed to scatter in different directions, creating a slight opening to the central pillar.

“—Thou, who hath reached the top of the tower. Step forth onto the first floor, almighty petitioner.”

Sensing the presence of an approaching ice soldier, the Divine Dragon uttered that once again.

The appearance of a doll that could not hear anything, and who had become something that could only utter meaningless words, scratched at Emilia’s heart and made her remember feelings of loneliness and sadness.

Even with the way he was currently acting, Volcanica was trying to protect that Something. Emilia didn’t know what kind of promise was made, nor who it was made to, nor why it was made in the first place. But—

And with a shake of his tail, two ice soldiers holding weapons were crushed in the blink of an eye. Although each of them quickly got into defensive positions, one was cut in half at the waist and the other lost the right side of their body, and they shattered without being able to put up any resistance. Even so, the four remaining ice soldiers immediately tried to grab the tail before it returned to its original resting position.

At least for now, Volcanica’s attack methods were limited to a single tail swing. Perhaps it could be said that he wasn’t just senile, but his legs and hips were also quite weak. If he couldn't even stand up, then she would only have to stop the tail.

"Brace for impact!"

Three ice soldiers stood shoulder-to-shoulder in order to try and stop the tail in its tracks. However, they were swept away all at once, and the tip of the Divine Dragon's tail once again left a sound behind. It seemed similar to how Subaru's whip worked, but its speed and power were on a different level. His whip could be grasped by Emilia, but not the tail of a dragon.

The Divine Dragon used the equivalent of every living beings power put together to essentially swipe away some insects. It was pushing against the three ice soldiers, who were sitting side-by-side, with its tail, but the sound of ice shattering was not heard this time. The three ice soldiers had been sitting down on the ground and were propped up against a wall of ice.

If she knew when his attacks would come, then there would be a way to deal with them.

With its whole body cracking, the ice soldier who resembled a boy with evil eyes lifted the corners of its mouth and rose. And from behind the three ice soldiers that had stopped the attack, the last one that had been entrusted with a separate job jumped.

The fourth ice soldier was wielding a so-called spear fork weapon. At the end of the long spear-like handle, there was a U-shaped metal fitting that was used to hold down an opponent instead of stabbing them, and made it seem as if it was used to capture people.

The ice soldier then pushed it down on the poorly behaved tail of the Divine Dragon until it reached the floor. The dragon's tail, which was as thick as a log even at the tip, would be impossible to keep in place with only one spear fork, so the three ice soldiers on the floor grabbed one as well and thrusted it into its tail in different places.

Now that the Divine Dragon's tail was held down by four of them, it would be stuck there for a little while—

“—Thou, who hath reached the top of the tower. Step forth onto the first floor, almighty petitioner.”

Immediately afterwards, the sound of the world being scraped by something could be heard, and the four high-fiving ice soldiers holding the tail down were scraped out. Only the lower half of their bodies remained, and then they collapsed onto the ground. It had been an attack with his claws this time, and not an attack with his tail, which had been restrained to the point that he deemed it too serious to be left alone.

Volcanica, who had been lying on the floor, had swung his left forefoot instead of his tail this time. And that was the reason why Emilia’s ice soldiers had been destroyed so easily. She had almost been deceived due to being careless.

“If your tail and feet are both healthy… Jeez! Why is your body normal but not your brain?!”

“—I, am Volcanica. In accordance with the ancient covenant, the will of thee who hath reached the top shall be questioned.”

“Did you even understand that—?!”

If it were someone other than Emilia, they would have been much more upset. However, despite getting that response, her determined and resolute spirit was unbreakable. The only things that broke were the ice soldiers, though that did hurt her a bit.

“It’s okay! I just didn’t understand everything yet.”

Emilia then went into the range of the tail, and promised the ice soldiers that they did not die in vain. However, the spear forks that had been holding down the tail were still there and doing their job, and the sacrifice of the four ice soldiers was worth it as a result. As a matter of course, the paw was being aimed at her instead of the tail, now. —

“The reach of his forefeet is shorter than the tail, right? And…”

Another ice soldier had been created right behind Emilia. She could create up to seven ice soldiers at a time, and they could be remade every time they were destroyed as well. In other words, she could keep creating ice soldiers until she ran out of mana. It was just like the real Natsuki Subaru.

"—Thou, who hath reached the top of the tower. Step forth onto the first floor, almighty petitioner."

"Eeeek?!"

Ice spears had been rained down upon Volcanica from out of his attack range, however, he swiped at them with his front paw. The attack tore through the space, leaving behind claw marks that would forever remain, and created a shockwave that threatened to swallow the entirety of the first floor along with Emilia and the ice soldiers as powerful gusts of wind erupted.

"…"

Emilia squinted at it with her violet-blue eyes as the shockwave stopped her in her tracks. The central pillar that Volcanica was protecting was quite solid, but she hadn't been able to carefully observe it yet. It looked just like the other six pillars from a distance, but it was too early to say. However, what Emilia was most interested in was not the central pillar itself, but—

"—The top floor of the tower above it!!"

In spite of the wind, Emilia kicked off of the floor with vigor. There was still a long way to go before she could do anything about Volcanica and the pillar, however, she believed this was the correct answer. The ice soldier from before had already regenerated and was currently on the ground holding out its linked hands. And then it caught her foot to serve as a foothold and helped her jump as high as possible.

Holding down his tail and drawing his attention to the central pillar were both necessary in order for Emilia to reach the top floor as per her own intuition. This wasn't something that usually happened, but after arriving here, her intuition told her that she had to get to the top floor of the tower.

With the help of the ice soldier, she jumped over Volcanica's head and tried to reach the top of the pillar. Now, if she could get to the top floor from there—

"—?"

Immediately after that, feeling a lot of heat under her feet as she tried to grab onto the top of the pillar, Emilia felt as if the room became quiet. —No, it was not quiet. The heat had been so powerful and hot that it killed all sound. If the concept of sound itself was killed, it was no wonder why it became so silent.

And Emilia sensed that her ice soldiers had disappeared due to the destruction on the first floor as well. The one that had helped her jump, the four who had been throwing ice spears to support the others, and the other two who had been running around and adding spear forks to his tail all had disappeared at the same time. And it hadn't been Volcanica's forefeet or tail that did it.

"—I, am Volcanica. In accordance with the ancient covenant, the will of thee who hath reached the top shall be questioned."

She could hear those solemn words coming out of his mouth as the flames began to dissipate. Emilia realized that the concept of sound that had been killed came back to life when those words reached her ears once again, and at the same time, she managed to grab onto the top of the pillar.

Trying to stabilize herself on the pillar, Emilia looked down. The entire first floor had been burnt white. White smoke was rising from various places, and the ice soldiers that should have existed were seemingly erased from existence. There had been so much heat, so much power, and so much annihilation—

—The dragon breath of the Divine Dragon, Volcanica, had burned everything to the ground.

"His tail, hands, and feet are all healthy, and he can even breathe fire!"

"—Thou, who hath reached the top of the tower. Step forth onto the first floor, almighty petitioner."

"I've got it! I understand! I reaaaally got it already… Ah."

In the middle of her strangely short answer, despite everything that had just happened, Emilia was shocked by something. Slowly, the golden eyes of the Divine Dragon looked up at Emilia. And—

"—I, am Volcanica. In accordance with the ancient covenant, the will of thee who hath reached the top shall be questioned."

As he spoke, Volcanica spread his wings and stood up.

2

"Oh my gosh—!"

Recognizing the danger of the events unfolding below her, Emilia hurriedly made her way to the top floor of the tower. In the meantime, Volcanica was freeing his tail from the spear forks and trying to flap his wings. It seemed like he was trying to fly.

Due to him being the Divine Dragon, Volcanica, it only seemed natural that he would be able to fly. —But Emilia had never seen a flying dragon before, so she wasn't sure if it was actually possible. In the first place, was it even possible for a creature with such a large body to fly in the sky?

"The only people I've seen fly are Puck and Roswaal…"

It wasn't surprising that Puck, a spirit, and Roswaal, an eccentric mage, could fly.

She'd heard about there being flying dragons called Sky Dragons in the southern Vollachia Empire, similar to Earth Dragons and Water Dragons. So is Volcanica similar to a Sky Dragon? Or would it be wrong to think of a Sky Dragon and a Dragon in the same way?

"Oh! No-no! Ah! Ahh!"

Emilia climbed to the top floor of the tower as fast as she could while crying that out. It had been so fast that if someone saw it from a distance, it would appear as if her mouth never closed, and even if her unconventional power were used, it wouldn't have been enough to escape in time.

"—Thou, who hath reached the top of the tower. Step forth onto the first floor, almighty petitioner."

The fact that his voice was closer than before was not her ear's tricking her. Because it was a sentence that had been uttered after flying into the air, not from down below.

—His blue wings were stretched open and an incredible being was flying in the air.

The Divine Dragon, Volcanica, was proudly exerting his presence over the sand dunes while flying in the air.

From the intimidation he was oozing, to his eye-catching glare, to his tail and forelegs, to his powerful breath, none of them betrayed the fact that he was the super-class dragon that had been described in the legend.

"Me! I'm going to go up to the next floor, so maybe I'm reaaaally not your enemy!"

"—I, am Volcanica. In accordance with the ancient covenant, the will of thee who hath reached the top shall be questioned."

Emilia clung to the pillar as Volcanica unleashed an attack, completely ignoring what she said. Gasping for breath, she grinded her molars, and with the help of a Non-Existent Foothold, she jumped over the approaching tail.

"Hiyaaa!!"

That had been an application of her Ice Brand Arts. —It was faster to add footholds to the side of the pillar than to try and climb up by hand.

"I wonder if my limbs are free?… Kiyaaa!"

Two swords made of ice were pulled out and flashed boldly at the oncoming tail before colliding with it.

That had been an attack that had relied on guesswork. Emilia's arms were numb from her wrist's to her elbows, and she wouldn't be able to hold onto her new weapons until she recovered after a few seconds.

However, unlike the damage Emilia took, Volcanica had only shook his tail.

The Divine Dragon, who continued to fly at the same altitude as the challenger, swung his tail and tried to knock down—no, crush—the challenger trying to climb the pillar.

"—Hic."

Emilia choked as she faced that swinging tail. Once it was flicked, she didn't feel like she'd have enough energy to get back onto the pillar. If he were to strike her with that scaly jagged tail, the whole area around her would be in trouble too. She couldn't afford to be hit by that tail attack.

"More and more...soooo much more, I will try my best!!"

She couldn't use her hands anymore, but she could use her legs and aim for the top of the pillar. And so she created footholds and started making her way up to the top. However, it wouldn't be enough. There was a limit to how much ice she could create at once. This process could not be wasted. She needed something that could act as a foothold but wouldn't stay stationary—

"—I got it!"

"—Thou, who hath reached the top of the tower. Step forth onto the first floor, almighty petitioner."

Emilia once again faced another strike from his tail as it approached her in a flash. However, Emilia managed to avoid the strike with the help of the footholds she'd made. After that, she created the new foothold she'd just thought of, and grabbed its Hand with her outstretched hand.

“Please give me a hand, Mr. Soldier!”

In response to Emilia’s voice, the creaking arm made of ice burned away, disappeared, and rebuilt itself into the form of a Subaru-like ice soldier—but only the upper body.

It wasn’t just a foothold, it functioned as a foothold for Emilia and also as a reliable ally. —That was known as the Ice Soldier’s Road, and their upper bodies were currently forming on the pillar one after another.

Since she only needed to form their upper bodies on the pillar, she didn’t need to make the legs, so she could create more than seven of them in total. Emilia could create 10 helpers at a time, and she went up the pillar with their help.

“Heave! Ho! Heave! Ho!”

Emilia climbed up to the top of the pillar, literally with the help of the upper body of her ice soldier’s that had been formed on the side of the pillar. During that time, Volcanica tried to interfere with Emilia’s climb, but the ice soldiers on the pillar got in its way from the side.

Volcanica, who was obsessed with protecting the pillar, couldn’t leave the ice soldiers alone on the pillar. The ice soldier’s that’d been born threw ice swords and axes at Volcanica in the air, and while they were playing with him, the Divine Dragon hunted the ice soldiers on the pillar one-by-one with his tail and front legs.

But in the meantime, Emilia had been on the pillar, climbing higher, and higher, and higher.

“This is a biiit difficult to do!”

Crossing over thin ice was a bit daunting, but with the power and sacrifice of the ice soldiers, Emilia’s hand finally reached the top of the pillar.

It should be possible for her to reach the top floor of the tower in about 33 feet (10 meters) or so, but the upper part of the pillar extended around the edge like a rat guard, and so it was extremely difficult for her to climb up from here on out.

Even for someone who was good at mountain climbing, this would be very difficult for them, but Emilia was fortunately good at climbing trees. When she was young, she had been scolded by Fortuna and Arch for working so hard at it.

“This looks fine in spite of some numbness in my fingers…!”

Regaining the feeling back into her numb fingers, Emilia challenged the mean, curving pillar. She grabbed the hand of an ice soldier hanging upside-down, and hung in the sky with her feet hanging in the air. However, thanks to the ice soldiers, climbing up was a stable process.

And even with Volcanica’s interference—

“—Hic.”

Something unlucky happened right as she was starting to feel relaxed.

“—I, am Volcanica. In accordance with the ancient covenant, the will of thee who hath reached the top shall be questioned.”

The strong tremor that had just occurred was caused by the tail of Volcanica smacking against the pillar, who had just said that once again. It sent a shock through the entire pillar, cracking and crushing the ice soldiers down to their roots that been formed up and down the pillar. And the ice soldiers helping Emilia get over the extended part of the pillar were no exception.

“—Ah.”

The hand she’d been grasping stopped supporting her as its arm broke off from the shoulder, causing her to start falling. The wide-eyed ice soldier desperately tried to stop her from falling, but his other hand couldn’t reach her in time.

Emilia felt as if she were floating as the air wrapped itself around her as she fell, ruining all of the hard work she had just done to get to the top of the pillar, and tried to pretend as if it wasn’t happening. —But it was.

“Eeeeek!”

The height of the pillar she’d climbed was quite high, and Emilia was supposed to have been falling hundreds of feet (tens of meters.) However, she unexpectedly fell on her butt as she was falling and thinking about what was about to happen.

It hadn’t been an ice soldier. If she thought about it, all of the ice soldiers on the pillar had been destroyed. In addition, her hand was touching a hard and rugged object this time—

“Could it be…”

“—Thou, who hath reached the top of the tower. Step forth onto the first floor, almighty petitioner.”

Emilia knew that the voice was very close to her as she confirmed the feeling of the wind up in the sky and the feeling under her butt. She took too long to realize because of how close the voice seemed. —She had fallen onto the back of the Divine Dragon, Volcanica.

“—Hic! Don’t let up! I can still get there from here.”

She could also get back onto the pillar by using Volcanica as a foothold. That’s what Emilia thought, but it would be very difficult to do so.

Flapping his wings, Volcanica rose, spun around, and tried to shake her off.

“—Ah, aaahhhaaahhh!”

Emilia desperately clung to the back of the dragon while enduring the strong winds that smacked into her body. These were physical winds that she’d never felt before—and, clinging to his large, strong, and rugged scales, she knew she wouldn’t last long like this. Moreover, Volcanica was just freely flying through the sky.

It wasn’t even a strike from his tail, a blow from his forefeet, or even his dragon breath. He was just trying to shake Emilia off, who was clinging on for dear life, and flying around as fast as he could. This was too much for her to handle—

"—I won't be able to see Subaru and the others now."

If she tried to open her mouth for any reason, the wind could rush in and might cause her lungs to burst. Behind her closed eyelids, Emilia thought about the important people in her life, biting down on her back teeth. It felt like she was preparing for death, yet she wasn't. Then she thought of the important people she looked forward to seeing again. She did so in order to give her the courage to raise her face and push herself forward.

"…"

While being blasted by the strong winds, Emilia pushed her eyelids open as far as she could. If she wasn't even going to do her best, then she wouldn't even be able to open her own eyelids. However, she dared to open her eyes in order to find a way out, and did not lose the fire that had been in her violet-blue eyes.

It was common for people to close their eyes when they were about to be crushed by fear or anxiety. But the important people she saw behind her eyelids never closed their eyes and always looked forward. She needed to keep her eyes open.

To reach something, to take someone's hand, and—

"—That's strange."

—It was a view dominated by blue on all sides—above, below, to the left, to the right, everywhere. This was probably due to the fact that Emilia was above the clouds and the Divine Dragon that she had been clinging to was clad in dazzling blue scales.

Everything else was going by so quickly that Emilia's perfect vision, which could even see the seams of a ball that had been thrown, couldn't capture the world. Therefore, her consciousness did not see anything outside of the world of blue in her vision.

"—I, am Volcanica. In accordance with the ancient covenant, the will of thee who hath reached the top shall be questioned."

Volcanica was flying while twisting and weaving through the air. And, apparently, Emilia had been clinging to the base of his wings. It was strange how the dragon wasn't moving his wings at all. Birds and insects needed to flap their wings to fly, but the principle behind dragon flight seemed to be a bit different. She was sure it was similar to how Puck and Roswaal flew.

If so—

"Roswaal used magic… And Puck did it using a mysterious power."

She hasn't tried Roswaal's method, and she didn't think she ever would. However, Emilia had spent a long time with her family, who she thought was the only one she had for a long time. She hadn't seen him in a year, and she missed him very much. There had even been times where she felt like crying at night, but her memories of him kept her going. And the recollection of those memories gave her hope even at times like this.

That is—

"Maybe you don't like when you get tickled under your chin either?"

The violet-blue eyes that had been pushed open looked his body up and down. Under the chin of the great dragon, there was only one white scale among all of the blue scales.

—The days she spent playing with Puck came up in Emilia's mind.

"Please dooon't, Lia. My concentration is broken when you tickle me that much, you know?"

"—It suuure is, Puck."

In response, Emilia focused on concentrating. The wind was still quite powerful, and Emilia had no way of getting to the white scale directly. However, she had learned on the pillar that her partner could be used even if the other party changed from inorganic matter to organic matter.

"—Mr. Soldier."

At the end of where Emilia's consciousness was focused on, the ice soldiers started forming around the white scale. The ice soldiers supported each other with only their upper bodies, and the one that had been born in the center slowly extended their hands towards the white scale—

"—Huuuh?!"

—For the first time, Emilia heard a sound that wasn't just the repeated words of the Divine Dragon.

3

—There was something known as "Inverted Scales."

The word originated from an ancient Chinese story. There was only one scale that shouldn't be touched on the neck of a dragon, which was a mythical existence. If a dragon's inverse scale were to be touched, it would become furious and supposedly kill the person who did it. Because of that, the expression "touching the inverted scale" came to be used to describe touching a part of someone that shouldn't be touched. And of course, there was no way that Emilia would know something like that that originated in a different world.

The reason why she had tried to touch the white scale on the dragon's neck was to disturb the concentration of her opponent, who was flying like mad to shake her off, and also to create a gap.

But—

"Eeeeeeeeeek!!"

Emilia screamed as she was thrown into the air, and heaven and earth appeared to be spinning round and round. But the feeling of floating in the air was much shorter than when she had fallen onto the dragon's back earlier. She suddenly felt something hard, and then rolled her body in response. After that, she quickly stood up and looked at her surroundings.

"…"

While breathing heavily, Emilia took a look around. Fortunately, there was no sign of a sudden attack, but that was natural since Volcanica, who was usually so vigilant, was currently far above her.

"—Aaaah."

He clearly didn't like when his white scale was touched. Emilia involuntarily rounded her eyes as she heard his screams piercing through the sky.

"Puck reaaally liked that though…"

However, whether someone was happy or not depended on the person. Admonishing herself not to be too insensitive, Emilia checked the condition of her hands and feet. She had been flung around a lot while on Volcanica's back, and so the blood flow in her body felt a bit strange. In some cases, when one's blood flow was blocked, and blood could not properly flow to the brain, it caused a phenomenon where one would lose their vision, but she had managed to endure despite everything she'd gone through.

And, having confirmed that, Emilia discovered something.

"—Ah! It's here."

Looking around, Emilia realized that she was higher than she was before. The fact that the six pillars weren't there was a testament to the fact that she had reached above the tops of the pillars, and that this place was the top floor. She had managed to get here by falling off of Volcanica's back.

At the top of the Pleiades Watchtower, to a place that no one has been to before, at last—

"Wow! I did it! My efforts were sooo worth it in the end!"

With a small reaction to her accomplishment, Emilia immediately rushed to the center of the top floor after patting herself on the chest. If she were to wait, she would have to deal with Volcanica's anger. Before that happened, she wanted to find the Trial in order to help Subaru and the others.

“Pleeeease give me some questions that I can understand…”

Volcanica, who had forgotten all about the Trial, was also a huge problem, but the issue for Emilia was whether or not she could even solve the Trial of the first floor.

Fearing that, Emilia went to the center of the top floor, and from there, she went to the base of the pillar that extended up to the heavens, and then widened her eyes with an “Ah.”

She had found it. The six pillars of the level below this one did not have this feature. There was a feature here that could only be found on the central pillar on the top floor.

It was—

“—Someone’s handprints?”

The black monolith was at the base of the central pillar at the top of the Pleaides Watchtower. And it bore handprints.

—Six different male and female handprints had been left on it.

Chapter 85:
Good Loser

1

—It took courage for him to call himself the Finest of Knights.

He was called that by others and was proud of being praised so. However, he had never called himself the “Most” “Superior.” He could pride himself on his days spent diligently studying. However, in his inexperienced and immature life, he was surrounded by excellent elders, worthy companions, and amazing juniors. He thought it was a regrettable yet happy situation.

Being recognized by others should be in return for one’s efforts and dedication. If he wanted to be recognized by everyone, his efforts and dedication would need to be tremendous, and he would have to study in such a way that everyone would admire him for that alone.

—Have I made a good enough effort? He wonders.

It was true that he had been proud of spending his days studying diligently. But did he overcome his limits? Did he hone himself to the best of his abilities? Inspired by the efforts of others, did he vow to work harder towards his ideals?

These were the questions he had asked himself. And—

Julius Juukulius had already done that.

He had overcome his limits, honed himself to the best of his abilities, and, inspired by the efforts of others, worked harder towards his ideals.

—Therefore, he had been able to hold his head up high in spite of confronting the being said to be at the apex of the Sword.

“—I am the Finest of Knights, Julius Juukulius. The sword of the Kingdom that will slay you.”

“…”

Grabbing the hem of his cloak, Julius bowed at the Sword Saint, who remained silent. Then Reid closed his eye, the one not covered by the eyepatch, and did not even look at him. He simply crossed his thick and strong arms and went deep into thought.

However, he did not think for long. His nature was not one that was suited for thinking about things. And it was easy to tell even though they’d not known each other for long.

And so—

“Ooh, ooh, ooh, Ooooooh— It’s a contest!!”

Scratching his head intensely, Sword Saint Reid stomped on the ground with a great amount of force. With that one movement, the white floor of the second floor shook and then split open. Watching the confrontation between the two of them, Echidna flinched, but Julius stood upright without moving an inch.

When Reid saw that, he clicked his tongue with a “Tch.”

“Showy, showy, showy… Ah, just showy. Ya said the same thing as my follower, you. I don’t like ya, ya son of a bitch.”

“I’m afraid I don’t know him, but I can’t help but sympathize with him.”

“What? Who said my follower’s a guy? First of all, workin’ with a bastard is no fun. The follower I’m talkin’ ‘bout is a woman. She was a dazzlin’ gal, but she was way too logical.”

“Woman… What do I have in common with a woman?”

“Ah? Do I really need ta repeat myself?”

Wrinkling his nose, Reid smiled ferociously like a shark. Then he tapped on his cheeks with his unfolded hands.

“A pretty face, but too logical.”

"…"

"Ha, well ain't ya irritated? It's a shame since it's cute… But, that's alright."

Reid snorted at Julius' lackluster reaction, and then he cracked his neck loudly. Shortly after, he observed him with his blue eyes—no, not him, but what was surrounding him. The lights, which hovered around him, shined more brilliantly than ever. Above all, this had been the first time they'd shined like this in front of Reid.

"My buds…no, my beautiful maidens, you mean?"

"Haaah, it's nothin'. I'll take any dazzlin' gal regardless of race. But sorry, I ain't interested in a gal I can't bang. —You, ya became stronger when ya broke outta your shell, didn't ya?"

"If you say so, there may have a been a way like that."

Something like giving advice to his juniors was unfathomable based on Reid's personality. This only happened because Julius, who had no choice but to trust in his sword, was extremely desperate, and Reid felt like it was a total waste.

If he were to cling desperately to his sword anyways, then he should at least not care about his appearance. —What he desired from Julius was for him to show that kind of attitude and determination, and to see it as a path forward.

But—

"I've decided to go this way. Or, as you said, it's also possible for me to become stronger by breaking out of my shell and accepting my true self."

Julius himself was aware that if he was not strongly conscious of it, it would happen without him knowing it. At that moment, when he'd been fighting desperately offensively and defensively, and one mistake would've been the difference between life and death, Julius' true face appeared.

But that was only the story when he wasn't strongly conscious of it.

—He could waver no longer.

“I swear. I will master the chivalry I believe in. Moreover, rather than becoming the way in which you have tried to guide me, I shall become a better me in every respect.”

“Hah? What kind of reasons do ya have for doin’ that, you.”

“That should be obvious. The knight I believe in should embody an ideal. He should be pure, honest, and invincibly strong. Then, I also have to be like so, because I call myself a knight.”

“—Ha.”

This had been his own absurd reasoning, thoughtless words, and oppressive arrogance that naturally deserved to be laughed at. But when Reid heard it, instead of showing anger or contempt, he just smiled with his sharp teeth. And—

“I’m gonna make ya cry.”

While Julius was staring at him, Reid threw away the chopstick in his hand and jumped back. Then he slowly moved his hand to the side and picked up the Sword of Selection sticking out of the white floor with his big hand—

Reid Astrea was only supposed to be an existence that served as a Trial Overseer in the tower. However, for some reason, this mechanism of the tower was overcome with the power of his will, and by taking over the body of the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, he managed to somehow revive himself.

No longer being in a position where he had to obey the Trial of the tower, he pulled out the Sword of Selection for the first time, as per its original purpose.

That is to say—

“—Gain his permission, by hand of the Fool who has reached the Heavenly Sword.”

“That’s my line… Well, it completely slipped my mind, though.”

“I thought that would be the case, so I said it instead. —I challenge you.”

“I’ll never forgive ya, ya bastard. I’m gonna make ya cry.”

In front of Julius, who had drawn his knight’s sword, Reid pointed the sword he’d just pulled out at him. There was no chance. This was the ultimate swordsman who was a natural.

—The pinnacle of all swordsmen, Sword Saint Reid Astrea.

“Here I come—”

“Yeah yeah.”

“—Take this!!”

Believing in the chivalry that’d shaped him, Julius Juukulius took on the Sword Saint with all his might.

2

His mind and body felt light.

Without using an analogy, it was the power of excitement that wrapped around the body of Julius, wielding a knight’s sword. It went without saying that one’s mental fortitude played a major role in a fight.

Come to think of it, Julius had been in an unstable state of mind since he got to the Pleiades Watchtower—or, rather, since his Name was taken away in the Watergate City.

Of course, Julius had warned himself as much as he could, and had restrained himself and kept it a secret. This type of self-discipline, which could be called an iron will, was not something to be proud of.

The result of not revealing his own illness, and of deceiving his companions and even himself, led to the series of successive defeats since his arrival to this tower, and to that terrible defeat. Julius should have believed in the people around him in the beginning.

Overcome with the shock of having his existence being forgotten, he felt pity for himself, who had been removed from the world, and overlooked what he should have believed the most.

Were the people Julius cherished the most, whom he trusted, pledged his allegiance to, and entrusted himself to, the kind of people who would despise Julius Juukulius, who had been removed from the world?

—Absolutely not, is what he could say for sure.

If so, then Julius only had to do one thing. He should have appealed to them with sincerity and showed them his love. —Just like he'd done with his buds.

"I should have reformed the broken bond. What is nothing can become anything...because I myself have witnessed it!"

Julius, who was nothing, could have become anything. And—

"No matter how many opportunities I get, I will always look up at that fiery boy with admiration on that day, at that back that embodies the ideals of chivalry, and I will challenge you, who is at the apex of the Sword, again and again."

"Quit prattlin' on and on, you're a sassy little bitch, you!!"

Reid howled that at Julius, who was intent on killing him. With his whole body getting struck by the wind and the pressure of his sword, Julius, with his yellow eyes narrowed, admired him.

This was the fourth time he'd fought against Reid. He had been defeated immediately when he challenged him the other three times. However, on his fourth try, the entire tower had been in danger, and he had reformed his contract with his buds.

Out of all of them, this was the first time he had used a weapon other than chopsticks, although it was questionable whether chopsticks could be called a weapon. And now he felt as if the Sword Saint, who was at the apex of the Sword, was fighting at full strength with a sword.

“Compared with the chopsticks, the power of the sword doesn’t seem any different…!”

“I already told ya. I ain’t strong because I can swing a sword. I’m strong because I’m strong.”

Receiving a downward sword slash which had been thrown casually, his knees creaked under the pressure, and then he was immediately chased from below. Julius flew back in shock, barely evading it. Reid followed him, not by jumping or running, but by simply walking with big steps.

Julius wanted to believe that there was something special about the way he was walking, but there wasn’t. Reid was the only one who could create a walking style that would have taken many generations to perfect just by thinking about it during a battle when he wanted to catch up to an opponent who had retreated.

As Reid himself had said, he was just an extraordinary Being.

“You wanna cry yet?”

“—. No, it is quite exciting when I feel like I’m going up against a legend!”

It was just a bluff, but Julius answered him, driven by his own strength.

Yes, that’s right. Reid Astrea was right in front of him. How many times had Julius himself been excited by stories about him with sparkling eyes?

He had been surprised by his personality, but his abilities were the ideal he had dreamed of. And if so, how much time had he already wasted? There had been many opportunities to exchange words, exchange swords, and exchange ideas and beliefs—

“Ha.”

Julius let that out at the sudden thought of clashing swords with the Real Thing. Though it was out of place, that truly pleasant thought made his heart throb with excitement.

“What’re ya laughin’ at over there?”

“No, I just thought…that when I finish what I came here to do, I would challenge my friend Reinhard.”

When Reid asked that, that idea suddenly popped into Julius’ mind.

Julius had never competed against Reinhard in sword fighting. On the contrary, he never thought of competing against him until he’d already he’d joined an opposing camp in the royal selection.

—He regretted not trying to catch up to him before.

3

That was one of the reasons why Julius served Anastasia, who was involved with the royal selection. But even if he hadn’t had such thoughts, he would have been charmed by her great talent and stood in the same place as her, hoping to share the same dream.

Then, there had been no need for him to come up with trivial excuses or speak in a roundabout way from the beginning. The only thing he needed to do back then was meet up with Reinhard with two wooden swords in his hands.

There had once been a time where Reinhard had crossed swords with the best swordsmen of the Vollachia Empire. While everyone else had been filled with excitement on the training grounds on that day, Julius had been moved to tears. That was the kind of response he gave—

“Hm, I ain’t familiar with that name. Who is that nobody?”

“He’s your descendant. As well as the current Sword Saint, and also my friend.”

“Hah! Another person’s brat is already a stranger to me. Even if I met ‘em on the street, I wouldn’t even notice ‘em.”

With a combination of kicks and swordplay, Reid spat that out while snorting. When that declaration had been refuted, he spoke again as Julius was readying his sword—

“I’m getting’ tired of talkin’ ‘bout someone else. You, are ya talkin to me?”

“—. I don’t deny that I’d like to chat with you, but I can’t help but say no.”

“…”

“I’d like to talk with you for two or three nights if the time allowed it. But now is not the time for that. He told me to “Hurry your ass up.” Therefore—”

From a distance, Reid could be seen lifting his cheeks . In the reflection of his blue eyes was the image of Julius, who was becoming brighter by the second. Six colors were swirling around and blending together, which then slowly began to draw a halo and emit the colors of the rainbow.

And—

“—Al Clauselia!!”

—A light radiating the colors of the rainbow was let off and swept across the world of white towards Reid.

4

Julius himself was amazed by the power and range of the sixfold light he’d just released.

It had been transformed from a great spirit arts technique to a magic attack of an extraordinary scale, so it would be improper to treat it as the same thing as before.

“…”

His buds—no, they can no longer be called buds now that their talents have bloomed. Beautiful, lovely, brave, dignified, colorful, and perhaps even divine—they were now maidens, not buds.

Possessing the six girls, each of whom had their own charm, by himself alone might make him more sinful than a Sin Archbishop.

But—

“Even if you have forgotten me, I still love you all.”

Julius then moved forward to catch up to the light he’d just released. The rainbow-colored light made up of six elements was capable of breaking through any and all defenses and destroying the object it’d been released at. Therefore, the two things that an opponent could do before the sixfold light reached them would be either taking it head-on or ducking.

“—Ha.”

And as expected of him due to his nature, Reid Astrea didn’t try to duck or evade the sixfold light. As the colors of the rainbow flashed in front of his eyes, he waived his powerful arm and cut the end of the sixfold light off with the Sword of Selection in his hand.

A Sword Technique of pure violence that did not rely on any special magic or Divine Protections. —He erased the enormous amount of magic that Julius had fired with all of his might with a single stroke of his sword.

But Julius had already planned for that. Rushing out from behind the bright light that had been extinguished, he borrowed the power of his sword and his maidens.

“La! Aro!”

In an instant the red and green spirits, responding to his call, increased their strength, and the power of the wind combined with the power of fire, forming a blazing vortex beneath Reid’s feet. Feeling the heat beneath his Zori, or sandals, Reid escaped by jumping upwards before it could burn him. But this was where the Nameless Knight’s link with the Finest of Knights came in.

“Kua! Ik!”

The yellow spirit caused something to protrude from the white floor, pushing Julius’s body upward. At the same time, the radiance of the blue spirit froze the moisture in the atmosphere, stopping the rising Reid in his tracks. Then he clicked his tongue, kicked in the air, and reversed his position with what could be called an inhuman feat. While standing upside-down from a block of ice that had been created in midair, he glared at Julius.

All of a sudden, Reid began to increase the strength in his knees, but Julius quickly shot upwards to intercept him.

“In! Nes!”

As the Sword Saint’s counterattack approached, the black and white spirits interfered with the world with their own power. The white light that was emitted powered up Julius’s entire body, while the black light decreased the power of his enemies, even if only slightly. That small difference at that moment was the key to landing a blow.

“…”

The ice ceiling that had created a foothold in midair shattered, and the image of Reid as he pushed off of it was blurred due to his sheer speed. The Sword of Selection had a special function or ultimate form where vertical and horizonal slashes were prevented from being read. —Instead of seeing it as a threat, Julius took it head-on with his head held high.

It made sense to him that he’d have to trade sword strikes with a power that was out of his league. Therefore, Julius opened his eyes. —Eyes that have always looked up and always looked forward.

“…”

Breaking through the sound barrier and moving at the speed of light, Reid broke through the space with a flash. Whether he did it using his chopsticks, or did it with the Sword of Selection, the result was the same—everything in his path was cut down. Because that was a manifestation of the function of a Sword.

The Sword was created in order to kill things. And Swordsmanship was a general term that encompassed techniques used to kill things with a sword.

Therefore, a single flash that was capable of killing anything in this world was the true embodiment of the Sword and Swordsmanship, and the true meaning of that word. Those who have been cut by such a slash would never forget that fact for eternity.

And so the scar that Julius had received beneath his left eye would forever remain. That had been the price of dodging the Sword Saint that moved like a flash at a distance that was within arm's reach.

"…"

He gave up on the attitude that told him to accept his fate and watched his opponent's sword for but a moment during the battle. Blood gushed from beneath his left eye, but he refused to close that eye and simply swung his arms while he kept his eyes on Reid. Pouring in the power of a hundred into an offensive attack, he abandoned his defensive stance—

"—Al Clarista."

Julius Juukulius, letting off the best sword attack of his life, drew the colors of the rainbow. It smashed into Reid Astrea's ferocious shark-like smile, and—

—The eyepatch covering the left eye of the Sword Saint flew through the air after the knight's blow struck true.

5

"…"

As he landed toes-first onto the white floor, the sound of his shoes seemed unusually loud. As soon as his consciousness returned, his heart, which had seemingly stopped beating in the depths of Julius' chest, reactivated. The sudden flow of blood made him step back, and he took a deep breath and exhaled deeply. Then he turned around and looked at that strong back that was turned away from him.

"…"

His long red hair swayed in the wind and his back was completely still. He held the Sword of Selection in his right hand and covered his face with his left. There used to be an eyepatch where his left hand was, but it was no longer there. The Sword Saint's eyepatch had fallen beneath Julius' feet.

"—Did I do it?"

His eyes fell to the white floor, and, looking down at the knight's sword in his hand, his voice trembled.

"…"

It seemed as if he had forgotten how to speak, and the six lights fluttering around Julius praised him for what he had accomplished. A warm flower called deep affection tried to fill the void created in Julius' heart. And with the praise of his flowering maidens—

"—Julius."

A faint voice was heard, and Julius turned towards the direction it came from. There was a great man who had turned away from him, his maidens that were showering him with praise, and, overlooking the battle from a different viewpoint, and the one who had called out to Julius, was a woman with light purple hair.

She was the eternal spirit that had the same face as the lord he cherished, who he had sworn to dedicate his sword to, and who he had unknowingly hurt—

She had never revealed whether or not she cared about Julius because he cared for Anastasia, or because his Divine Protection of Gathering Spirits was at play. However, Julius Juukulius was extremely grateful that there was someone who had witnessed his resolve, and, feeling the load on his heart lighten, he raised his knight's sword in the air.

"…"

In silence, he raised his knight's sword to the heavens. The trail of the sword drew a rainbow with the remains of the sparkling lights, as if it were blessing the knight named Julius Juukulius.

"—If this were the damn Trial, ya would've won with that, you."

As he spoke, that great man casually stepped across the floor with his Zori. Reid's face was in one piece. The tip of Julius' sword had only reached his eyepatch, but he wasn't shameful enough to not admit that he hadn't been hit. Above all, his remark earlier wasn't a poor excuse, but was the truth.

If this had been a continuation of the Trial of the second floor, Electra, of the Pleiades Watchtower, then Julius would have won with that first blow and been allowed to challenge the first floor of the tower. But the battle between Julius and Reid had no longer been about the Trial of the tower. It had been the battle between a knight and a swordsman, in order to settle the score man-to-man.

"…"

Reid, who had lost his eyepatch, gripped the Sword of Selection with both of his hands. He gripped the handle of the sword with his dominant hand first and gazed at the sword with his eyes. —Indeed, the Sword Saint was ready. Instead of swinging it around carelessly, he held it properly this time in order to cut down his enemy.

"Don't complain even if ya disappear."

"Even if I wanted to complain, I wouldn't be able to do so if my mouth also disappears."

"Ha! Weren't ya the one who never laughed at jokes? You, what was your name again?"

When the legend himself asked him his name, Julius raised his eyebrows. He knew that he must have told him his name many times already, but he wasn't sure, and it didn't matter if he couldn't remember it. Because Reid asking him that question meant that he had finally accepted Julius.

"Julius Juukulius. It's an easy-to-forget name, so please remember it."

Julius pointed his knight's sword at Reid, uttering a joke he would not have been able to laugh at not too long ago. And he again requested the help of his six spirits who had just helped him out earlier. The current them would be able to make the power of the sixfold light even more powerful.

Al Clauselia and Al Clarista.

With the help of his six spirits, the six elements combined to release the light of the rainbow. —Clauselia, which released his maximum level magic, and Clarista, which imbued his knight's sword.

Beyond that, it had been a secret technique that had never been successfully performed due to his own inexperience.

"—Go."

"—Let's do this."

At that moment, that extreme light filled the white space, and the sixfold light once again challenged that godlike red-haired man.

The secret behind the rainbow spirt arts technique that was originally created by Julius Juukulius—

He did not imbue the rainbow light in his sword nor did he emit it, but instead clad himself in it, becoming the aurora itself that eliminated what it was aimed at.

"—Al Cranvel."

The ultimate attack of the Spirit Knight was met head-on by a flash of white.

6

From beginning to end, it had been too out of this world to follow with untrained eyes.

Not to mention the sword attacks that collided with each other, but the constantly changing positions and foot movements, whether they be superior or inferior, could not be seen by her blue-green eyes. And it had nothing to do with the fact that her body was not her own. It was just that there were people fighting to the death on such a high level, and compared to them, the world she lived in was way too normal.

If a person's value was based on how strong they were, then she was weak enough to be considered worthless. It was also evidence that she had spent hundreds of years doing nothing and had turned away from the path of self-improvement.

From the moment she first became aware of her own ego, she had a hunch. She knew that from the moment she'd been born that the purpose of her unnatural existence had already been fulfilled. If she had to explain it, the very act of being born had been her life's purpose, and she'd fulfilled it already. Therefore, she had been left alone and wandered around the world without a purpose, and was forced to live in a vacuum for 400 years.

She wouldn't mind dying, either, but she had no reason to die. So she decided to just procrastinate, and for a long time, she was quite lazy. But after some time, she met a girl.

She had been fascinated by the way that young girl lived her vivid life, and her cold life was suddenly filled with passion. She became eager and impatient to see what the girl, who had made bold claims with her tiny body, would become, or might not become.

At some point, such interests no longer mattered, and—

"I don't want to lose you or the children you cherish so much."

She knew that the passing of time could be kind or cruel. Time healed all wounds, but it could also make one stuck in their ways. For the first time in her long, long life, she thought—that she didn't want to leave this in the past.

"This is also an unreasonable wish."

Even if she begged it to stop, time would go on without stopping. A life that was supposed to be small and weak could show all kinds of changes in that time.

It was like the Nameless Knight, who had been deprived of his Name and was taken from everyone's memories, who wanted to prove that he was still himself, Julius Juukulius.

—A knight clad in the colors of the rainbow dove straight into that white light.

In contrast to Julius, who brought out his secret techniques, Reid Astrea's fighting style was very simple to understand. He simply repeated using the same downward sword slash that let out a light that cut through the world and destroyed everything in its path.

There was nothing special about it, and it wasn't even a special magic attack. Just by waving his sword, the world got burnt by the light. It was something she did not understand. Was Reid Astrea just beyond understanding, or were all Sword Saints like this?

What was certain was that—

"—Julius."

She wanted to do everything in her power to prevent the sixfold light from being overwhelmed by that overpowered white light. It was the truth, and she wouldn't even complain even if her soul were destroyed after charging in for one final suicide attack.

And she, Echidna, was already aware that she was powerless and could do nothing in this situation. What if, in this moment, Julius Juukulius, who had unleashed that sixfold light, could do something here?

"…"

She then put her hand on her thin chest and felt the existence sleeping inside. The original owner of this body was within, who was unable to wake up from her deep sleep, and this was the reason why Echidna came to this tower in the sea of sand. —But she had only been lying to herself. Echidna already knew why she wouldn't wake up.

She boasted about how greedy she was and how she wanted to take everything for herself. Once she had something in her hands, she wouldn't let go of it no matter what, and she was one who truly hated to lose, so she could only think of one reason alone.

"Having given up your body to me, you are now temporarily hiding in your own Od, unable to be interfered with by the outside world. —One’s Od is its own world in a way.”

And she had locked herself in there. The reason as to why was obvious. —If she left her Od, she would be affected by the horrible Authority of the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony. It was capable of making one forget what one didn’t want to forget, and making one let go of what one don’t want to let go of. Anastasia Hoshin didn’t want to forget about Julius Juukulius. And so she did this, but—

“It seems to me that everyone who came to this tower is extremely stubborn. —No one is cute enough to not end up getting lost.”

For the past two months, she’d tried to copy her in every way, but it was about time to put an end to that. Besides, she’d watched him run around as a Nameless Knight, and saw both the good and the bad, so she felt like she could go ahead and teach her about him, even if she’d forgotten him.

She was an artificial spirit without a purpose who had lived lazily after her creation. She thought that was the role she had to play, but that wasn’t all there was to it.

She needed to create a bridge between a precious girl, a precious knight, and everything the two lacked. This role requires a lot of responsibility, doesn’t it? It felt like such a large amount of responsibility that she thought she had been born for this.

Therefore—

“—You’re stingy, so it’s not like you to not want to see your knight acting cool.”

7

—A white light clashed with the light being released.

Even with the help of the six spirits he’d renewed his contract with, and putting his entire being into the attack, he was still being pushed back. He’d brought out his secret technique, while the other guy just swung his sword with a bit more seriousness. —He was amazed at how inhuman the guy was. And yet, at the same time, he couldn't help but get excited as his blood boiled.

The world got split in two by his sword. It was a Sword Saint skill that Reinhard was also able to use when he swung his sword. Suddenly, in the middle of this life or death battle, Julius had a thought.

If they were to fight, who would be stronger, Reid or Reinhard? Two legendary Sword Saints—he wondered what would happen if the two of them fought a hypothetical battle. Unfortunately, it would be impossible to find out.

"Then I have no choice but to confirm it myself."

The only people who could cross swords with Reinhard Van Astrea and Reid Astrea were those who had reached this tower. Only Julius and Emilia, who had reached the top floor, would be able to do so. —Julius had no intention of handing over that role to someone else. And so, all he had to do now was win.

He would get by that white light and kill Reid Astrea using that sixfold light. To that end, he would devote his entire being and the power of his sword—

With a little pride and power in the tip of the sword of the Finest of Knights—

"—Julius."

That had been a voice that should never have reached him. In the midst of a battle that slowed down the passage of time, it only took less than a second for their swords to clash. That had been the way they'd fought in that slow-motion world. There would be no way for a voice to reach that place, and definitely not when they were in the middle of a life-or-death battle.

"…"

But the voice managed to reach Julius. Or perhaps it had not reached his ears, but deeper into the innermost part of his chest.

Since he had chosen to continue pretending to be a knight, there was no way he would not respond to it.

So when Julius heard the voice that couldn't have possibly reached him, he turned to the person he could not possibly see, and looked at her blue-green eyes. The light in her eyes was clearly different from before. —

"Go, my knight."

And with these words alone, he let off one last thrust with all of his power—

"La! Kua! Aro! Ik! In! Nes!"

Giving himself one last push, he called out to the spirits who became part of that aurora of light. In front of him, beyond the white light, was the enemy he wished to defeat, and he needed to get past it. In order to get the point of his sword to reach beyond that light—

"Oh, oooooooooooooooh—!!"

He opened his mouth in a unsightly way and let out a blood-curdling cry. In the face of death, Julius stepped forward, not caring about whether or not he was being graceful, yet still refusing to allow his beliefs to be broken, and gave it his all.

"…"

And under the assault of the sixfold light, the white light increased in intensity. It grew so great that the sixfold light and the white light clashed violently—

"—Ah."

The clash, which seemed as if it would last forever, had come to an abrupt end.

8

"—Ah."

Julius was dumbfounded by the dismal sound that had escaped from his throat. The clash of their attacks going at full-throttle ended abruptly. However, the momentum of his strike did not stop, and his sword, still tinged with light, was stabbing through his opponent's vital area.

"Why…?"

"Tch, ah, shit. Is this is gonna be the shitty ending to this boring show?"

Julius, on the side that had done the stabbing, was in great turmoil, while Reid, who was the one who had been stabbed, was completely calm. Even though something had stabbed into his chest, he did not even grimace in pain. Was this due to his mental fortitude, or was it because of what had happened to his godlike body?

The hard chest of Reid Astrea had been wounded—or perhaps cracked as Julius' sword stabbed into it. And it wasn't just the chest. The cracks spread to his arms, legs, neck, face, and other parts of his body.

Julius had a hunch as to what it was too. Something that was not supposed to be there was being corrected. This is what he believed to be a sign that the process was occurring.

"In the end, that's how it is. There ain't no vessel that can contain me other than my own."

While looking at his cracked palm, Reid figured out what had happened.

Reid Astrea had been eaten up by the Authority of Gluttony and acquired a physical body by taking control of this one—but the body he was currently using belonged to the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, Roy Alphard.

In other words, the vessel of Roy Alphard could not contain the powerful soul of Reid Astrea. As a result, it started breaking down during the last part of the fight against Julius.

“You’re just so much better than me!”

“Ah, if I hadn’t been eaten by him, ya might have been able ta win in the end. If that was the case, it would’ve been over when ya removed my eyepatch, wouldn’t it?”

“Guh…”

“Ka-ka-ka. You’re a weak guy who can’t do anything. You wanna cry yet?”

Throwing away the Sword of Selection, Reid smiled maliciously, showing his teeth.

How can he laugh like that? Julius wonders. It was almost certain that he would disappear in the near future if he kept it up like this. Or, if he had just killed Julius, he might have been able to start a new life, but now even that possibility had slipped away.

“You’re an idiot, you. Livin’ forever? Who would wanna do such a troublesome thing? Besides, what if ya ran into me out there?”

“…Unfortunately, you already died of old age 400 years ago. Even if you go out now, you are still different from the person you were before.”

“Gah! And ya expect me to recognize the face of someone else’s kid? Get outta here with that bullshit.”

It seemed as if he truly did treat his descendants as if they were strangers, so his earlier statements were true after all. Expressing no real interest in living a second life, Reid cracked his neck.

“Ha, you really have no regrets…?”

“Ya know. My style is ta do things whenever I wanna do ‘em. I think it would be a lot easier for ya if ya did that, ya know.”

“…I appreciate your guidance. But, that path would be a lot more difficult for me.”

He willingly chose to wear that shell. Even if he was told that he just pretended to be something he wasn't, or that he acted differently from his true self, it didn't matter.

Julius, though he was dazzled by the carefreeness of Reid, could not choose that path, for he knew that it would have been better for him to choose it, and to do as he wished.

When Reid heard Julius' answer, he snorted. Then he pointed at the wound on his chest—on it were the cracks that had formed due to going beyond his body's limits, as well as the stab wound—

"You, ya aren't mistaken, are ya? It was just a stroke of luck that your sword reached me. If this were my body, ya wouldn't be able ta do shit."

"I wouldn't be able to do anything at all in that case..."

"Huh! That ain't exciting!"

After spitting that out, Reid struck Julius on the shoulder with the hand that had been pointing at his chest. Stiff as a statue due to his sudden movement, Julius took deep breaths.

He was not yet convinced of everything yet, nor had he been able to take everything in properly. But the thing occurring right in front of him was much more unnerving, and it would have been more unbearable for him to be upset and miss this moment.

The cracks were widening and the end was near. And so Julius brought his knight's sword up and held it in front of his face—

"I respect your swordsmanship from the bottom of my heart."

"I don't want your respect, ya bastard. —It was my win, and I'm 'bouta head out, Julius."

"…"

Hearing him call him by his name, Julius fell into a state of wonderment. However, since he had already decided to not be upset, he hid his surprise behind his smile and respectfully bowed once.

He had proudly declared that he was the Finest of Knights in the presence of this legend. So there was no reason for Julius Juukulius to be ashamed of the ideals and appearance he strove after.

“Yes, from beginning to end. —It was your victory, Reid Astrea.”

“Ha, that’s a good look on your face, loser.”

After he said that, the cracks on Reid Astrea’s body began to widen.

9

Contrary to its appearance, the cracks on his body continued to expand without making a single sound. Without even the sound of glass shattering, the red-haired figure vanished as the light flickered—and what was now lying on the white floor was a small, white-eyed boy.

A disgusting being known as Bizarre Eating who ate the Names and Memories of others whenever he wished. Roy Alphard, the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, had fallen onto the floor and let out a whimper before going silent.

“…”

Whether he was alive or dead, Gluttony didn’t move an inch from where he lay. However, the deep wound on the left side of his chest was proof that he had been fatally injured. Observing this, Julius lowered the knight’s sword that he had just lifted up as a sign of respect, put it into its scabbard, and looked behind him.

The sixfold light had returned to normal, and now their individual auras increased in intensity around Julius. Without the power of his girls, who had blossomed from buds into maidens, it would have been him, and not the other guy, who was lying on the white floor.

Julius wanted to express his gratitude and appreciation for what they had done, but for now, he could only apologize to them and postpone that until later.

He then slowly moved forward.

While walking, he could see someone else coming his way—a small, delicate woman with blue-green eyes. She was dressed in white, which didn’t seem to match the sand dunes at all, and had long, wavy pale purple hair. Under her feet was a white fox who was shaking anxiously. Her appearance, which was supposed to be in the form of a scarf most of the time, meant something big had happened.

Realizing this, Julius closed his eyes. And—

“—Nice to meet you.”

Just like how he did a little while ago as a challenger, he decided to restate the same statement he’d said to the Sword Saint to her. But the feeling in the back of his chest was different from the feeling he got when he was in a battle. And some things did not change.

It was like opening the first page of a new story about a boy with an adventurous spirit who longed to be a knight.

“I’m…”

She responded to Julius, who had knelt on the ground and spoken first. Staying in that position, he waited for her following words. He felt as if he could wait as long as she needed. He believed that if he simply waited patiently, he could hear that person’s words.

“—I am Anastasia Hoshin.”

“…”

"I want everything in this world… So, what's your name, good-lookin' guy?"

Halfway through, Julius could see how she smiled while tilting her head with her hand on her cheek. While kneeling, with his head lowered, he let out a quick "Ha."

"I am Julius Juukulius. —Your one and only knight."

"…"

"You may have forgotten it, but, I have dedicated my sword to you. I will do everything I can for you and support whatever you wish to do."

Giving the most respectful salute he could muster with his knight's sword on the floor, Julius finally looked up. No matter how his lord responded, he would not regret anything. Being upset, puzzled, and looking down was not how a knight should act.

Because it was none other than Julius who longed to look better and be better dressed than all others.

And, looking down at him, she narrowed her round eyes—

"Is that so? I don't remember that… However—"

"…"

"—With a single look, I had a thought. —I knew that ya just had ta be mine."

In his immediate view was his lord, with glittering, flaming eyes that sought after him, who was never willing to part with the things she desired.

Julius Juukulius again pledged his sword to that Greed that desired everything.

Like the king and the knight of that story, it had been a divine act—

The bond between the master and servant had been restored on the second floor, Electra.

One of the obstacles that Natsuki Subaru had told everyone about had been overcome.

The Second Trial of the Great Library of Pleiades: Finished.

Chapter 86:
Conversing of What Yesterday Held

1

She had long been suspicious.

Roswaal L. Mathers, the lord she swore to serve, needed to kill the Dragon that defended the Kingdom of Lugunica in order to achieve his ultimate goal. Ram was an important pawn in achieving his goal, and it had almost been ten years since he'd told her this.

Roswaal, who had saved Ram and ■■■ in the Oni Village engulfed in flames, asked this of her as a form of compensation. And so Ram made the decision to pay the price in exchange for getting retribution for the Oni's. It was for that reason that she chose to cooperate with him, even if his plan was to kill the Dragon.

The only thing he did not tell Ram was how he intended to kill the Dragon. It wouldn't be easy at all. Even if he were to try everything, and resort to any means possible, it still would not be easy. So when the time came, what could Ram possibly do?

"You will understand when the time comes. —This is the role only you and your ■■■■■ can play."

She felt as if she were given a very vague explanation. And, oddly enough, she'd never really thought about what it truly meant until today. But—

"I finally understand it… Master Roswaal's ultimate goal."

Everything that Roswaal had done up until now had been for his own long-term goal. It was for that reason that he had traveled deep into the Kingdom of Lugunica and saved Ram and ■■■, guarded the Sanctuary, and tested Natsuki Subaru there.

Even if he were forced to alter his original plan, the preparations he'd already made would not be in vain. —No, he would make sure they wouldn’t be wasted.

And so the answer suddenly appeared in Ram’s mind. The reason why Roswaal had taken in the youngest Oni ■■■■■■ to serve as his trump card.

■■■ had been taken in to serve as a replacement for Ram, who had lost her horn. Ram and her little ■■■■■■, ■■■, were supposed to serve as a single Oni in order to kill the Dragon.

Naturally, Roswaal was not able to escape the influence of Gluttony’s Authority. As a result, he must have forgotten why ■■■ was in his mansion in the first place. But even if he had forgotten, he would have figured out what he had been trying to do.

And while watching Ram trying to get ■■■ back due to what Gluttony had done, he didn’t even reveal that fact.

“His meticulous ways will never change.”

Even though his scheme had been derailed by the actions of Subaru, he still worked hard to accomplish his goals behind the scenes. His personality was very troublesome. Ram wondered what he was doing while he was out of her sight right now. But, she also thought—

—Perhaps Roswaal expected this possibility when he allowed Ram to accompany Subaru and the others who’d brought ■■■ with them on this journey. But perhaps she had just been overthinking things.

In the first place, the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony appearing at the Pleiades Watchtower was an unforeseen event, and there was no reason for him to assume that Ram and ■■■ would be in danger.

This might have been Ram’s own delusion due to overestimating the man she loved. But—

“—I’d much rather feel as if the man I love trusted in me.”

Perhaps he thought that by having Ram there, ■■■ and the others would be more protected. When it came down to it, Roswaal must have assumed that Ram would have figured out what he'd been hiding and willingly served as the trump card to kill the Dragon.

It felt much better for her to think that the man named Roswaal L. Mathers valued the decade of service of the woman named Ram. Therefore—

"—I'm in a great mood now. Kindly allow me to slap you to death."

2

The feats of the Fist King, Neiji Rockheart, was a bit of a legend on the Gladiator Island, Ginnunhive, of the Holy Vollachia Empire. —No, it was a legend.

But now that he'd lost his Name and Memories due to the Authority of Gluttony, no one knew about his achievements as a gladiator. Neiji had survived hundreds of battles to the death using only his bare hands as a weapon, which had been an amazing show of strength, and finally managed to win his freedom.

In the face of his fist, which had been filled with a refined fighting spirit, even swords and steel would be smashed to bits, and any obstacle in its path would appear to be as soft as a young maiden's skin. He could be said to be one of the greatest fighters in history.

The Carnivorous Beast, Beli Hainelga, was a rare serial killer, who in many brutal ways, terrorized the Kingdom of Gusteko. —No, used to terrorize it. Now that he had become a victim of the Authority of Gluttony and been deprived of his Name and Memories, no one could remember the tragedies and lessons he had left behind as a killer.

Once he'd been born, he grew abnormally large and gained a level of physical strength that no mere human could achieve. After that, he committed a number of brutal crimes, and killed the men he liked by hugging them to death. His body, and even his skin, was so strong that not even a sword could pierce or scratch it.

This serial killer, who'd sought contact and warmth from others, had been one of the most feared criminals, along with the Bowel

Hunter.

The Leaper, Dorkell, had an unusual backstory. Originally a mere merchant living in Kararagi, Dorkell strayed away from his merchant path after hearing a strange voice.

Now that he had fallen victim to the Authority of Gluttony, and been deprived of his Name and Memories, no one remembered the fact that he had been considered a lunatic and an outcast by many.

One day, he decided to throw away the life he had been living with his family and chose to believe in non-existent things and ideals. Soon after, he came into contact with the Witch Cult and developed a power that was different from magic. Differing from their doctrine, it was regarded as a heresy within a heresy, and he was expelled from the Witch Cult as a result.

In short, they more or less transcended even the level of monsters, eccentrics, and lunatics. Not only were they unrivaled when compared to normal human beings, they weren't even being used as they were, but were mixed with the Memories of Gluttony, turning them into even more exceptional beings.

What if Neiji Rockheart acquired the hard body of Beli Hainelga and the speed of Dorkell? That would end up being an existence that was rarely seen throughout history.

However, up to this point, the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, Lye Batenkaitos, had not done that. This was because he was afraid that by mixing all of the Memories into the same pot, he himself would be mixed into that pot.

However, the reality was that even if he swallowed the contents of that pot full of a mixture of Memories, he himself would not be sucked into it. —At least that was what he now assumed.

And now that he had accomplished that feat, he was not afraid of trying things that he had not tried before in order to break his own limits. For it was Lye Batenkaitos himself who, as a Gourmet, had consumed all of the great talents, from all backgrounds, and all of their possibilities, from the world, thus making him a true Gourmet.

Therefore, a monster was born in the tower in the sea of sand at the eastern end of the world on this day. It was a monster that combined all kinds of skills and high-level abilities, whether they be its own or from others.

It had arms that were capable of destroying anything, a body that could repel any attack, magic that could repel any technique, and the wisdom to control it all at once. No one in history had ever been so complete, and there would be none who could match this being even a thousand years from now.

This was the result of extracting all of the potential from the world, created due to the existence of a dreadful thing called a Witch Factor. It was the greatest form of Gourmet that came from melting countless excellent ingredients down in a large pot—

"—I'll kindly give you three chances."

Somehow, in the face of such a rare existence, a girl with pink hair said that while holding three fingers up. It had been a young girl, bleeding from her forehead, with a fierce light in her eyes. She had wounds all over her body that messed with her movements. And there were many other reasons why she couldn't keep up with him. He understood that.

The biggest factor wasn't even her wounds or the blood loss, but the fact that her petite body wasn't even functioning as a proper vessel for her very existence. —He thought it was such an awful thing.

"I'll kindly allow you to hit me three times. I'd like to try something out. Isn't that a wonderful deal?"

But the young girl, with three fingers up, said that as if she were trying to provoke him. Three opportunities to strike her would certainly be fatal. In the first place, he didn't believe she would be able to survive even one strike. But there really was no reason to reject her offer.

He did not believe it could be a trap, either. She was not the type of girl would offer such concessions for free. However, if someone were to be self-confident to the point of excess, then there was no reason not to sincerely let them know.

"—Sister, here I come."

He erupted from where he was standing with his powerful legs and zoomed in to strike a few blows.

"Well, first chance."

"—Gu?!"

At the moment he thought he had gotten her, she avoided his fist so narrowly that it grazed a few strands of her hair. And then after placing her hand on the arm he'd extended, she unleashed a knee strike on the elbow joint of his right arm, breaking it.

Such a thing was impossible. That impenetrable body, which could not even be pierced or cut by a holy sword, had been broken by a mere girl simply by striking the elbow joint of his extended arm—kneeing the only weak point on his body. But—

Still feeling the pain of his arm being broken, he quickly brought his left leg up to the young girl's face. He did not do so in order to get revenge for his arm, but it had been a knee strike aimed at her face. His long, slender leg and white knee smashed into the young girl's nose, ruining her beautiful face.

"Second chance."

Hearing these words come from her thin lips, he couldn't believe his ears. There was no way she would be able to speak in such a situation. But the young girl gently brought her hand up from the side and then pushed his knee away. His knee strike passed smoothly over her head, as if it were supposed to strike the air from the beginning. And—

"Third chance."

After she evaded the strikes from his right arm and left knee, he threw an iron elbow strike that had enough momentum to swing his body around. It was sharp and powerful, and if it had connected, would have crushed the young girls skull like a fruit and spilled its contents onto the floor of the tower. The iron elbow, which had been aimed at the girls head, only managed to graze a few strands of her pink hair.

And the young girl, who seemed to have known that the elbow strike was coming, once again grabbed his face with her outstretched hand.

“Such a fool.”

She said so coldly, as if she couldn’t bear to look at him anymore, and then slammed his head into the floor.

3

With three fingers wrapped around his face, Ram slammed the transformed Batenkaitos into the floor.

“You thought you could win since you were given three chances, but you lost three times in a row. If you play a game without really trying, your luck will eventually run out.”

“Ah, Gah… Ugh.”

“I give you my thanks. This is definite proof. —That even the luck of good timing is not the enemy of Ram.”

Ram’s greatest enemy had always been her unluckiness. But this time she’d managed to overcome it with her own two hands, and made it fall right at her feet. There was no reason for her to be afraid any longer.

“—Ugh.”

Lying on the ground, Batenkaitos swung his legs up, and, using the momentum of that movement, he got back on his feet. Ram quickly stepped forward and did not hesitate to strike her enemy with a broken right arm. Blood gushed out of the wound on her forehead, but the pain and sense of loss she was experiencing caused her blood to boil from deep within herself.

Oh, how irritating this was. She had always felt that this sensation, and the excitedness that came from it, caused her a great deal of annoyance.

Ram hated the natural instincts of the Oni's—the exhilaration that came from fighting, the exhilaration that came from wielding power, and the thirst for blood for the enemies that they wished to kill.

And she had always believed that she had been freed from it once she had lost her horn on that night.

"How ironic."

As he grumbled, Ram grabbed his broken arm and threw him onto his back. Now that he was on the ground, she punted him all the way to the back of the corridor by kicking his head.

This was done so that she could keep him away from the wounded earth dragon and the young girl leaning against the wall.

"…"

There was a girl who continued to slumber, declaring that she still existed with her horn shining with a faint light on her forehead. For her, who had unwillingly been stuck in a deep slumber, it was supposed to be impossible for her to use her horn, even if she was an Oni.

However, even if her feelings had been lost, Ram and the young girl were twin sisters. —There was something called Synesthesia, which was an ability that sometimes linked two people who shared the same blood together.

Her existence itself had been felt by Ram for the past year, during which she took care of the sleeping Rem. It was not just the fact that they shared a similar appearance, but also the gut feeling she got that said she was definitely her sister. But the Synesthesia that connected them had never been activated in the past year.

If Rem were to have nightmares, then the fear she felt might have been conveyed to Ram, but not even this had happened during the past year. In other words, Rem, who continued to slumber, did not even have dreams. —For all this time, she had simply looked at the darkness behind her eyelids and breathed in and out for eternity.

So it was only by accident that Ram discovered how to use Synesthesia in such a way. It annoyed her to no end, but it had been thanks to Subaru's idea. He took on her burdens thus giving her the power to fight, and so the idea to try the same thing had been born.

When they were connected through Synesthesia, they shared powerful emotions, and sometimes even injuries and pain. She did not understand the principle behind how it worked, but she had read a hypothesis about it in a book in Beatrice's Forbidden Library.

—Synesthesia referred to the way in which the Od's of two different individuals were connected and functioned as one.

The Od was also referred to as the source of a human beings power that existed deep inside of them—in other words, the soul. There were times when it also served as an energy source for magic instead of mana, but originally, one's Od was the life-energy that made a human a human.

The theory was that Synesthesia was the result of being born in the same womb and being connected in a world that could not be entered by any others.

However, in the end, it was dismissed as being just a theory that could not be proven. So it was no surprise to her that it had been locked away in the Forbidden Library. Above all, Ram really liked this theory. It was really nice to think that one could naturally be connected to someone else.

"That annoying horn has really caused me an endless amount of trouble."

Ram really hated the destructive impulses that the white horn caused her to feel. She also hated the fact that the people around her had hailed her as the second coming of the Oni God. There was absolutely no connection between that mysterious ancient god and Ram.

Ram wanted to be valued for who she was, not because of those things.

Therefore, if she were able to be connected to someone despite all of that, she thought it would be great. And if she really had a connection like that with someone, then—

"—Ram is sure that she would have an inborn love for that child."

Even if she were an infant, she'd do anything to protect that bond. She would do everything she could to protect, cherish, and love them, and give them everything.

Therefore—

"Forgive this bad older sister for making you take on her burdens at a time like this."

Through Synesthesia, Ram shared her burdens with her sleeping sister. This was due to the fact that she had experienced Subaru's Authority herself many times. Once she'd seen something once, Ram could copy what she'd seen and replicate it.

The thing that Subaru did probably worked in a similar manner—it probably forcibly connected the Od's of others to his own, creating a one-way-only Synesthesia. If he wanted to share the burdens with others, he probably could, but he was a fool who refused to do that.

Instead, he chose to try to reduce the burdens of everyone by taking them all on himself.

"—Such a fool."

These were the same words she had uttered to Batenkaitos earlier, but only the words were the same, the way she said them was different.

Subaru's Authority could be reproduced by connecting to Rem via Synesthesia. She was not sure what was going on with Subaru, either, but this should be a bit better. Ram would be able to get out of the horrible situation of constantly being connected to him.

Instead, her burdens would flow directly into Rem—

"…"

Rem, who continued to slumber, said nothing.

However, she continued to send the mana that flowed into her own horn to Ram by using Ram's broken horn, which had been placed on her lap, as a catalyst. The amount of strain on her body must have been unfathomable due to the vast amounts of mana that Ram needed.

—Therefore, the battle needed to be ended quickly and decisively.

"Si-st-eraaaaaahhhh—!!"

While barking that out, Batenkaitos appeared right below Ram in an instant.

It was a magic technique that used the skill of the Leaper to teleport instantly—but even that elusive technique was useless if his foe could see it coming.

"Too slow, slowpoke. At this rate, Ram will become an old lady."

She stole his vision using Clairvoyance.

Integrating with him to see what he was focusing on, his eye movements, and the flow of his power, she aimed to read him more easily than trying to read his mind.

She avoided his palm strike, then slipped through to the other side by twisting and bending her five fingers. At the same time, she struck his screaming throat with her elbow and unleashed a powerful turning back kick.

"Gah…"

"Of course, even an old Ram will be beautiful."

As she spoke, she grabbed the back of his collar, forcefully pulled it down, and smashed the back of his head into the ground. She then brought her heel up and swung it down on his face, crushing his nose.

With him in her grasp, she swung her arms and unleashed an endless amount of wind blades at him.

“Gah, aaaaaah!!”

“Such a lovely face is accompanied by such an unpleasant scream.”

His entire body being assaulted and cut by her wind blades, Batenkaitos was blown away as blood gushed from his wounds.

As was usual, his body never stayed the same and was constantly transforming from one thing to another. However, no matter how much time went by, the form that appeared from the neck up did not change.

Ram felt like vomiting at that sight, but chose not to due to it not being elegant.

“…”

Batenkaitos then leaped at her without using any tricks, spilling out a lot of blood. It appeared to be an extraordinary technique. She was sure he had created a technique that no one else could replicate by combining the power of various masters.

Ram crushed his superior skill that could strike every direction at once with an even more violent attack. Even if she had to face 100 or 1000 masterful techniques, she would crush them all with an even greater force. That was the current state of their battle.

Batenkaitos could not even touch her, which filled her with glee.

And unlike with Subaru, she was much more compatible with her. And so she removed two more shackles. Compared with her prime, she was using about 50% of her power—no, since she was still so young at that time, her current self was much more powerful. Ram’s current strength could not be compared to the strength from before, either.

“Just as I thought, losing my horn was a good thing.”

Had she not lost her horn on that night, she might have given in to the horn that constantly enticed her. She wanted to say that it wasn’t possible, but she couldn’t say for sure. Nonetheless, Ram was proud of the road she had walked on up to this point.

The loss of her horn saved Ram from becoming the Oni she hated most.

“In the first place, I wouldn’t have been able to meet Master Roswaal if the events of that night never happened, so there is no need to compare the two.”

In response to her inquiries, Ram simply held her hand out in front of her. Batenkaitos, who had been teleporting around the area, appeared right in front of her hand. A look of astonishment could be seen on his face when he appeared, and then she grabbed it.

“You can’t run around forever, can you? I’m growing tired of your tricks, and seeing that face on you, too.”

“Oh—”

“I can’t wait any longer.”

Saying that coldly, Ram produced a wind blade in the hand that had been clutching his face. In that moment, his eyes, nose, lips, ears, and every part of his face were minced into pieces, and Batenkaitos screamed as blood poured from his wounds. And even if he were to escape, he couldn’t escape from his wounds, the pain he felt, nor the reality he was living in.

“Ah, aaaah, aaaaaaaaaah—!!”

Batenkaitos, who’d been floundering around, cried that out as he shed blood instead of tears. Ram, seeing that, slowly walked over to him.

When he heard her approaching, he quickly started transforming. A tall, muscular man appeared.

—The fist he threw was quickly repelled with a knee strike.

After getting overwhelmed by Ram, he rushed to escape from her. Next up was a fat guy with a beard, who curled into a ball and hardened himself as much as he could.

—She threw a kick that made him fly into the ceiling and then unleashed a torrent of punches that turned his hard skin into a blob of meat.

Batenkaitos had tried to transform into different people in order to kill Ram, but instead received the beating of his life—an unending torture session.

Last up was the bald old man who could leap around as if teleporting. —Now that she understand how it worked, she grabbed his head with a pitying look, and then pressed his face into the wall and ran, as if she were trying to grind him into dust.

“Ah, babababababababababababaaaaa—!!”

Held down by Ram’s strength alone, Batenkaitos had no way to escape, and his whole body was continuously scrapped against the wall as she ran. His form changed in her hands as he tried to find a way out of his situation.

Ram mourned for the hundred, thousand, and ten thousand victims who’d suffered at his hands and been sealed away.

Using her strength, she held a memorial service for those who had been eaten by Gluttony, who had mastered their techniques and loved the life they lived, and whose lives had been trampled upon and slighted.

There were no more techniques, paths, nor thoughts that he could use. None of it would work against Ram.

“Kindly take responsibility for what you have done.”

With a wave of her arm, Ram violently threw that blasphemer that looked as if he’d been peeled. Trembling in fear, Batenkaitos rolled down the corridor of the watchtower. His form changed slowly, quite slowly. Relying on the Memories he'd accumulated, he transformed himself—

"Oh, it's been a long time. I've missed that face of yours. This is about the third time I've seen it so far."

"—Ah, gah, ah."

Seeing the real Batenkaitos, Ram wiped the blood from her forehead and relaxed her lips. In a real sense, it was Batenkaitos. He had changed back into his original form, face included, instead of borrowing the forms and skills of others.

No matter who he turned into, relied on, or trusted, he could never escape from his true self.

Just as Ram was still an Oni even if her horn had been broken.

Just as Ram was still Rem's sister despite losing her Memories of her.

"Will you at least try to fight as yourself in your last moments?"

"…"

"That reminds me, you said something interesting on the spiral staircase. —You said you had a brother and sister. So why don't you show your pride for their sakes?"

Batenkaitos fell onto the ground, his painful breathing suddenly stopping. It wasn't because he died, but was merely because he'd reacted to Ram's words.

As soon as he heard her mention his brother and sister, Batenkaitos' breathing calmed down a bit, and he slowly rose from where he had been sitting—

"O-ur… O-ur…little sister…"

"Trying to tell me to back off? Sorry, but do you really think you deserve to make such a request? Have you ever listened to anyone or lifted a finger to help someone before?"

“That, it’s...”

“…”

With his bloody face shaking, Batenkaitos begged her with tears in his eyes. Ram narrowed her eyes slightly at that bitter sounding appeal, then she lowered her eyes with a sigh—

“—I’ll kindly consider it.”

“—Sister is so kind.”

At the same moment she looked away, Batenkaitos said that and disappeared in an instant.

Using the Leaper Dorkell’s Leaper Technique—that blasphemer vanished from her view without a trace.

—He ran away.

4

“Ha-ha! Ahahaha! Ahahahahahaaaa!”

Making full use of the different techniques of the Leaper, Dorkell, Batenkaitos escaped from Ram’s clutches. He no longer cared about eating Ram now. He chose to run away using any means necessary, not caring how he looked.

We can’t win. We can’t win. We can’t beat that.

Just as he thought, she was a complete monster. It would be a good idea to buy some time and go back when he was a bit stronger. That was the type of bad food that would never show up on the plate of a gourmet meal.

“Louis and Roy, too bad for you two! Preparation is everything as far as a gourmet meal is concerned.”

Pushing his injured body forward, Batenkaitos teased his brother and sister who’d been aiming for the same prey.

Louis had already left for the front line earlier, and Roy was going on a rampage somewhere else. If the Oni were to go after them instead, he thought it'd be easy for him to slip away.

Roy of Bizarre Eating didn't know when to quit, so he might actually die this time, but it couldn't be helped. Actually, he was rather fed up with him. He felt as if he had taken away a lot of gourmet food from him that would've gone to him otherwise because he'd always eat as much as he wanted.

—Wait, have the meals we've eaten so far even been gourmet?

"That guy has always been so useless... Aaah, shit! Shit, shit, shit! That there had been such, such a thing! I wish I had known about itttt!!"

This wasn't the feeling of deep affection that the sister adoring her sister made him feel. It was an immeasurable and impulsive desire to have something—an extremely intense feeling was born in Batenkaitos that made him really, truly desire it from the bottom of his heart.

He wanted to eat it up and savor it with all his heart and soul.

He had always called himself a Gourmet since he thought he had savored all kinds of great talents and feelings, but now that he knew that the Real Thing existed, everything else paled in comparison.

The being known as Lye Batenkaitos, who had always believed that he was worthy of being called the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, turned into rubbish.

The magnificent dining table, which had always looked so alluring, suddenly began to look like a sandbox for playing with mud dango's.

"I want it."

I want it, I want it—

In order to taste it, he was willing to throw everything else away. He wouldn't even regret losing everything he'd accumulated so far in order to eat it. He didn't want to savor anything but that. He wouldn't feel satisfied with anything else except that.

"Buuu, Guuuu."

As Batenkaitos ran, vomit leaked out of the corners of his mouth. And it wasn't because of pain or suffering, either. He just felt as if it was just too unbearable. Everything that used to satisfy his appetite suddenly seemed so unsavory after realizing that what he believed to be the best was not the best at all.

Why did we think that anything other than this was the best? Was it worthy of praise? Did it satisfy us?

Was there any point in calling himself a Gourmet if he loved anything less than the best?

"Aaaaah, how nice, quite nice, very nice, as it's so nice, isn't it nice, as it's probably nice, as we think it's so nice! Gluttonous drinking! Gluttony!"

His appetite rose along with a desire to fill his belly, and he let out a heartfelt cry that seemed to beg for it.

If he had an appetite to be one with another and mix with them, to take in someone else, then the Gluttony that drove him forward was the ultimate form of love.

"We love you, we love you...so much! We love you! Sister...no, Ram! We love you—"

This powerful feeling that had been bubbling up from within and being let out in the form of words was suddenly broken. The cause of it was pain, and it was a newly formed kind of pain.

"—Ah?"

Batenkaitos placed his hand on his cheek, feeling the sensation of blood. He had been trying to escape from the watchtower, and a brand new cut, which had tore his cheek, had formed. —It seemed to have come from nowhere.

"…"

Batenkaitos, in silence, stretched a finger out in front of him, and saw as his finger was also cut by something. In the empty space in front of him was an invisible blade.

"Ha."

It was the same technique that he had shown Ram on the spiral staircase. The technique of placing an invisible blade in the air was a legendary Shinobi skill, but he did not care whose Memories it came from. The issue now was that this wasn't an invisible blade that he'd placed.

"It can't be..."

Walking carefully past the invisible blade that'd cut his finger, Batenkaitos attempted to advance forwards—but then he screamed out an "Aaaaah!" as his toes were cut off, and attempted to turn.

—He was surrounded by invisible blades on all sides.

"...Ha-ha, is this for real?"

He had only shown it to her once. It had been shown once during that fight, and since it was an invisible technique, it shouldn't have been able to be seen.

And she wasn't even here right now. And yet, she managed to figure out his escape route and placed countless invisible blades before he got there.

"…"

Batenkaitos placed his hand on his right eye, which was barely functioning still, and not his left eye, which had been torn to bits by her wind blades. —It was Clairvoyance, which allowed Ram to share his vision.

She would never allow him to escape. It was impossible to do so because she could see his every move.

“Ha-ha-ha!”

Batenkaitos laughed out loud. And it was no longer a simple sneer.

It was love. For the first time in his life, he was passionate about someone. He fell in love with that exceptional person. And—

“Aaah! Wait, wait a second! Wait, wait just a little longer! Just a liiittle longer!”

He already knew that no matter how much he yelled, none of it would reach her through Clairvoyance. And so those desperate words weren’t meant to be heard. He did so in order to push himself forward.

Batenkaitos quickly clung to the wall. He had prematurely let go of everything he’d eaten. He might have been able to save himself from this hardship had he been able to use the masterfulness of the Fist King.

After that, Batenkaitos struck his arms against an invisible blade. Blood spurted from where his wrists used to be.

It hurts, it hurts, it hurts, hurts, it huuuurts, its hurts so much, but the pain isn’t important anymore.

“Receive our feelings! With your own eyes, witness our plea!”

He pressed his bleeding arm against the wall and started writing as well as he could. With his little body covered in blood, he drew large characters on the wall of the tower in the sea of sand.

“Bwaaah.”

Then he took a step back and looked at what he had written with his right eye open. This was done so that the bloody message on the wall reached the person he wanted to see the most. He was sure that'd she'd be watching him until the very end since their vision was connected.

“Aaaaah, we love you—”

—Before he could finish his sentence, Gluttony was beheaded by a wind blade.

5

"—Fula."

With a single murmur and a movement of her hand, a wind blade was unleashed.

Even if the amount of magic used affected the size of it, the power of the wind blade itself remained relatively constant. Moreover, due to how sharp the wind blade was, even a small one was enough to cut through a neck.

Ram had chased after Gluttony, who'd escaped, and struck him with a single wind blade.

Keeping track of the fleeing Gluttony had been easy due to the use of Clairvoyance. She had left a few traps in the path he was running on to confine him, and they seemed to have worked quite well despite placing them in a hurried manner.

And just before the last wind blade struck him, Gluttony had been behaving strangely.

He had cut off his own hands and wrote a message on the wall with his own blood.

It was a filthy, completely one-sided, nasty form of harassment that was not worth looking at, but—

"…"

In his last moments, he must have seen the message written in blood spin around in his vision as his head flew through the air, and then closed his eyes one last time.

She had done so because she wouldn't feel at ease unless she did. That was the only reason she needed. There was no sense of duty holding her back.

The blasphemer made the wrong choice for the last time.

If he had risked his life for the sake of his brother and sister, Ram might have shown some mercy, but he had only used that as a way to fool her, using it as a tool for his own survival.

And he probably did not even know how to return what he had eaten. If he had, he might have used it as a bargaining chip in order to survive. —But it wasn’t even that. So this was his punishment.

“Those who live by the sword, die by the sword. Those who rely on witches, die by witches. Those who devote themselves to fire, die by fire. —And so, those who ask of Oni's, will die by Oni's, and shall be destroyed by what they relied on.”

—This was the justice that Ram believed in.

Lowering her arm, she took a deep breath. Then she turned and returned to the rocky corridor. She could not fight near them, so she made sure to create a lot of distance between them.

It had been a terribly long distance, and Ram naturally began to walk impatiently as a result.

“—ッッ.”

When she walked past the collapsed wall, she was greeted by the sound of an earth dragon. The jet-black earth dragon used her large body to hide Rem behind her. If Ram wasn’t the one who’d returned, she would’ve used her body as a shield.

Subaru really didn’t deserve this earth dragon. Despite being so hurt, she was still trying to follow Subaru’s instructions—

“—No, that’s not quite right. You wanted to protect Rem too, didn’t you?”

“…”

“Really…you’re such a good girl, Patrasche.”

Saying that, she gently stroked the neck of the earth dragon.

She needed to move her to the Green Room as soon as she could.

She didn’t want to force such a loyal earth dragon to move around with such wounds. Ram didn’t want to be rude to the earth dragon that had done so much for her sister.

Thanking the earth dragon from the bottom of her heart, Ram moved over to where Rem was behind her. Now that she had stopped sharing her burdens via Synesthesia, the horn no longer appeared on her forehead. However, the recoil from taking on so many of Ram’s burdens, who had almost been on the level of the Oni God, had definitely damaged her body.

Ram herself felt a bit depressed when she thought about how the recoil would soon arrive. But—

“Now isn’t the time to think about such tasteless things.”

Kneeling down slowly, Ram softly placed her hand on her sleeping sister’s cheek. The bond they shared as sisters that she didn’t really feel before felt much more real now, and she felt love and a sense of importance overflowing within her.

She had lost her horn, and, consequently, her power as the second coming of the Oni God, and lived on to this day.

Ram had concluded that the events that occurred on that fiery night were for her own good, and she didn’t think she was wrong, either. But from this point onward, that had changed. The reason her horn was broken on that day—

“—Was so that Ram could find out, here, on this day, that she was Rem’s sister.

Through Synesthesia, she was able to realize that they were twins who shared a single world, connected via their souls, and that she was her irreplaceable sister.

“Now, more than ever, I want to talk with you. About you and Ram, and our time together. Together, let’s fill in the memories of yesterday that we’ve lost.”

Time never stopped flowing, so they’d be able to create as many memories in the future as they wanted. So, she would make their memories bloom like a flower as often as possible, every night, so that nothing would disappear and nothing would be forgotten.

“Let’s talk a lot about the stories of yesterday.”

The Sleeping Beauty said nothing.

And yet her silence did not make her heart ache. Instead, Ram smiled as her heart filled with warmth. With a smile, she moved her lips without doubting her feelings—

“—I love you, Rem.”

She was sure that no matter how much time they spent together, they’d never be able to betray their feelings for each other. Oddly enough, she’d uttered the same thing that that warped Sin Archbishop had said in his last moments. Though the words were the same, the way they were said was completely different.

Those who don’t know love, and those who live for love, never sound the same. They never will.

Chapter 87:
Distant Regard

1

Her head rocked back and forth with a great amount of vigor.

She discovered that someone was running quickly with her waist held under their arm. And this wasn't the first time she had been carried like this. Not that she was used to being treated like an object, but being carried like this by her less-than-considerate partner had happened quite often.

"Cut it ouuut, Elsa…"

She's always had trouble describing her, someone who wouldn't listen to her no matter how many times she warned her.

She didn't trust her enough to call her a partner or a companion, nor was she close enough to her to call her sister or mother. Her relationship with her wasn't even close enough to call her a friend or acquaintance.

That was why she was always at a loss. What could she call her?

—What did Elsa even think of me?

"I told you to stop shaking meeee…"

It wasn't something that could be stopped just by saying it, but it annoyed her to no end to think that they'd think she'd given up due to not saying anything, so she made sure to make her voice heard whilst knowing nothing would come of it—no, she tried to do so.

But before she could give it a try, something hot started pouring out of her mouth. She thought she had thrown up what she'd eaten earlier, but that wasn't the case. What spilled out from deep within her was red blood.

"Damn it! She won't stop bleeding! Beako! What should I do?!"

"At any rate! I wonder if you can get rid of the blood by making her vomit! It'd be bad if she suffocated, in fact!"

She could hear a man and a woman shouting at each other right next to her ears, and then she was leaned to the side. She continued to cough and cough as blood spilled for her throat through her lips.

Something was put into her mouth and the blood that never stopped flowing was drawn out. On the verge of suffocating, they just barely managed to create an opening in her throat, allowing oxygen to flow into her lungs and brain.

"—Spit! Hooray, she can breathe again! Gimme some of your healing magic!"

"Fine, I suppose! But I can't do that much, in fact."

"I know that!... It was my mistake that led to Meili putting herself in danger. I'll pay the price for that."

She could hear them talking above her head, but when she finally managed to breathe, her body grew heavy. No, it probably really did become heavier. Due to the seriousness of the situation, she had probably shifted her consciousness to other parts of her body, and, as a result of that, she became aware of her body as a whole.

Her hands and feet were immobile. Her head continued to shake. She'd vomited around three glasses of blood. And her whole body felt like it was on fire, but her back was especially so.

There was something especially wrong with her back compared to everything else. That had probably been why she couldn't move her body and had continuously vomited blood.

Whether it was what had happened before, or what the man and woman arguing were about, or what was happening right now and how, she couldn't remember well. However, in a world where everything was vague and disjointed, there was something that had grabbed her attention. It was—

"Pro…mise..."

She felt as if she had exchanged that with someone–

2

—When the color of the gigantic scorpion changed, it released the most powerful ray of light so far.

The expanding ray of white light shot out in all directions, and the Hungry Horse Kings, who had been aiming at its crimson shell, were blown into pieces, but it didn’t stop there, but spread out further, leaving a mass of destruction in the sea of sand.

Naturally, Subaru and Beatrice wouldn’t be able to escape unscathed, but Meili was the one who took the most damage out of all of them.

While she was leaning forward in order to command the witchbeast, she had been extremely exposed to the powerful counterattack of the gigantic scorpion—of the Crimson Scorpion.

Fortunately, she’d managed to avoid being directly hit by the stinger, which emitted that deadly ray of white light. If that happened, the body of the small girl would have been disintegrated instantly.

That hadn’t happened. However, the ray of white light from the stinger left a mass of destruction in the sea of sand, and the shock wave it generated had smashed into her. That was more than enough to cause a life-threatening injury.

“Meili!!”

Subaru and Beatrice rushed to her aid and threw themselves down into the sand, and she looked to be in terrible shape when they saw her. She seemed to have instinctively curled herself into a ball, and the impact of the shockwave seemed to have affected her back the most.

Her black cloak had been blown off, and they could see her shredded skin under her torn clothes. She appeared to be suffering from lacerations and severe burns, and, for a moment, Subaru blacked out. However—

“Am I a dumbass? Think about what you need to do right now!”

Using his fist, Subaru brought his distant consciousness back and brought out his inner strength.

His Cor Leonis ability that had always been in use–it was the ability that allowed him to take on the burdens of his friends, and to take on the life-threatening injury that Meili had just been dealt.

And of course, if Subaru were to get taken out due to taking it all on himself, then it would become completely useless. He needed to do his best to help Meili whilst not falling unconscious himself.

Up until this point, he might have become flustered and broken down, and acted in an unsightly and disgraceful manner. But after walking on the same road as ‘Natsuki Subaru’, Subaru looked at himself in a different light. Not only did he have his own role to play, but there were also things that only he could do. Therefore—

“Emilia and Julius are doing alright. And Patrasche and Rem are also safe and sound.”

He took a look at how everyone in the tower was doing, and made a strategy based around their current conditions.

The response from Emilia suddenly disappeared, and he was worried about Julius’ fight with Reid. He was also a bit concerned about the positions of Echidna and Patrasche, but he trusted them enough to leave them be.

Instead, Subaru’s main focus right now was on Ram, and Meili, who was right in front of him.

“—Guh.”

The agony Meili was currently feeling suddenly started pouring into Subaru, causing him to groan in agony due to the intense pain he was feeling in his insides.

To be honest, Ram's burdens alone were quite difficult to deal with. To add Meili's life-threatening injuries to that would be akin to suicide.

"This is bad...!"

Though he'd bragged about his abilities before, it was impossible to take on 100% of both at the same time.

And if that's the case, then Meili, who was dealing with life-threatening injuries, must be given priority, and he would need to reduce the amount of Ram's burdens flowing into him.

Perhaps Ram would be perceptive enough to figure out what had happened with that alone.

"Man, I'm gonna be in for a big scolding later..."

"Haaa! After all that big talk about your Authority, look how messy things turned out. I wouldn't expect anything less from Barusu."

Enduring the bitter taste of blood, Subaru imagined a very realistic reaction from her.

The effect of Cor Leonis should simply take on people' burdens, but the fact that he could actually taste blood was a sign that a reaction was going on within Subaru's own body.

One's imagination had an extraordinary affect on one's body. He had heard about how if a person firmly believed that a hot iron had been pressed against their body, then they would feel as if they had been burned.

In other words, by taking on Meili's severe back injury and other internal injuries, Subaru's body reacted in a similar way. If things went south, there could be two dead bodies lying here with the same causes of death.

"That is…well, a bit troubling, you know—!"

Carrying Meili on his back, he spit the blood in his mouth out and stood up. Then he ducked, evading the flaming spear of the Hungry

Horse King, and retreated, and created distance between them with Beatrice's purple stakes.

The one who was attacking them was the Hungry Horse King that had been carrying them not too long ago. As soon as the situation took a turn for the worse, the intelligent witchbeast did not betray her out of the blue–it was simply because Meili's Divine Protection was no longer in effect, causing it to return to following its natural instincts.

Without the leadership of Meili, the witchbeast went back to being an enemy of mankind, and regarded Subaru and the others as enemies. And now there were many such witchbeasts in the sea of sand.

"Uuugh."

"Meili!"

As he was running away from the witchbeast, Meili spat blood onto Subaru's arm. She coughed up a storm and spat out blood, and seeing her in pain like that made him really nervous. He couldn't even take a breather and find a place to treat her wounds.

At this rate—

"Damn it! She won't stop bleeding! Beako! What should I do?!"

"At any rate! I wonder if you can get rid of the blood by making her vomit! It'd be bad if she suffocated, in fact!"

While trying hard to maintain a certain amount of distance between them and the witchbeasts, he gave his mana over to Beatrice. In the meantime, Subaru shook Meili to get her to vomit the blood that was stuck in her throat.

But even with such efforts, Meili's complexion didn't change and she wouldn't stop bleeding. As a result, Subaru had no choice but to forcefully remove the blood from her throat by creating a siphon using his clenched fist, placing it over her mouth, and sucking all of the blood out.

“Cough! Gah.”

“—Spit Hooray, she can breathe again! Gimme some of your healing magic!”

“Fine, I suppose! But I can’t do that much, in fact.”

“I know that!… It was my mistake that led to Meili putting herself in danger. I’ll pay the price for that.”

Strictly speaking, Subaru was already starting to pay for his failure. But the interest was accumulating at a rapid rate even though he’d already reduced the amount of Ram’s burdens he’d take in.

As it was now, he wondered how much time he could buy.

“No, this is where I need to take a stand. If I stand back and do nothing, I’d just be a cowa…”

“Don’t let go! I suppose!”

“Huh?!”

Subaru ran with his teeth clenched and his body dealing with the full effects of his Authority. And Beatrice suddenly jumped onto his shoulders.

Of course, Subaru was surprised to suddenly be giving someone a piggyback ride, but Beatrice was as light as cotton candy, so it wouldn’t slow down their escape.

“Beako—”

“Subaru, don’t try to do everything by yourself, I suppose. Betty and Subaru are partners, and Meili is as well. You weren’t the only one who promised to help, in fact.”

“…”

Holding Subaru’s head tightly in her arms, Beatrice spoke softly.

Through Subaru, who was speechless after hearing that, she began to treat Meili's wounds with her gentle healing magic. —And Subaru could feel the sensation of a warm light gradually healing her through him.

Based on this warmth alone, it was clear that Beatrice was looking out for everyone.

""""—ッッッ.""""

"..."

In the background, the battle between the witchbeasts continued.

Fortunately, even when Meili's Divine Protection was no longer in use, the Crimson Scorpion and the Hungry Horse King's didn't sign some sort of peace treaty. And it was the same with all of the other witchbeasts.

The stinger and the pincers of the Crimson Scorpion took out around half of the witchbeasts approaching Subaru and co. And, naturally, the other half was still beelining for them, so there was no time to rest.

"Do we have any options?—"

In fact, it wasn't that there weren't any. Based on Beatrice's words and the care she showed for Meili, there was definitely a way to change their current situation, if not break through it.

However, he was hesitant to do so because he wasn't sure if it was feasible or not and it could not be confirmed with trial and error this time, so this was the worst kind of situation for Subaru. However—

"Subaru! If you're hesitating for Betty's sake, I don't want you to, I suppose! If the reason has nothing to do with Betty, then we can simply apologize together later, in fact!"

"..."

"—To go through suffering together, to experience happiness together...to never leave Betty behind! Those are the terms of Betty and Subaru's contract!"

Beatrice cried that out angrily as she looked at Subaru's profile. Though he couldn't see her face because she was behind his head, Subaru's prideful partner, however, was rather adorable even when she got angry.

And so, though Subaru had gotten spoiled, the words his partner uttered to him gave him courage. There was no time for him to worry about anything. The need to worry was no longer necessary due to his partner's words.

Therefore—

"I love you, Beako."

"Betty loves you more, in fact."

They exchanged words of love, and then Subaru looked down at the dying Meili. And, he resolved to never lose another life.

"—Cor Leonis, Second Shift."

He gave a new name to the Lion's Heart ability that he had already named himself, and internally switched gears.

By doing so, he expanded his Small King Authority—for he had always been scolded for being an isolated king who carried everyone's burdens on his back.

However, he would never be like the shameless Greed who forced all of his burdens onto others. And so, what Subaru wanted to do with this Authority was share his burdens with those who wanted to be with him. Basically—

"Second Shift—Burden Sharing."

The burdens that Subaru had once had to carry by himself would be sent to his friends who'd need to experience it with their entire beings. It would be distributed to those who were willing to accept it.

For now—

"—Subaru."

"Yeah?"

"...IT'S VERY HARD, IN FACT!!"

"YUP, IT'S VERY HARD!!"

The Second Shift of Cor Leonis had been activated, and the burdens that Subaru received were distributed to the others. It wasn't half, though. Even so, the burden on him was much lighter now, and Beatrice, who was now sharing in his burdens, looked quite pale.

Subaru shouted that back at Beatrice, who yelled in order to make it seem like she was in more pain than she really was.

It's tough. It's painful. It's impossible to handle.

Having to take care of everyone's burdens because he's the king? Damn that. —Therefore, thanks to everyone who wanted to support the Small King, who could not stand alone, he could now move forward.

"Is it fine to share this suffering with you, by the way?..."

"…"

"I see, so I can't share it with you. That's too bad."

Subaru then turned his attention towards the Crimson Scorpion while Beatrice, who now shared his burdens and was on his shoulders, treated Meili.

Its true identity was Shaula, and he could still feel their connection though Cor Leonis. He could see a big, massive light over there.

Unfortunately for them, Subaru and Beatrice didn't seem to be able to hand all of the burdens over to the Crimson Scorpion. —Since she didn't have the intention to take it.

Only those who wanted to support the Small King would receive it. The rules of this Authority were very clear and inflexible. That's why he could not afford to be arrogant. He could not forget that he was being supported by the people around him.

"Beako! Let your head and body do different things!"

"—Mm, That's a difficult order, in fact!!"

They wanted to continue her treatment, and they also wanted to come up with a solution for the current situation, since the Crimson Scorpion's tail was starting to light up and turning towards Subaru and co. —

"—E M M!!"

His absolute defense magic, which granted him a form of invincibility and served as a trump card, was activated, and then a shockwave swallowed Subaru's three-person group.

3

—The events currently occurring below the clouds were not able to be perceived by Emilia, who was above the clouds.

But much like her friends who were fighting for their lives, Emilia, after fighting a fierce battle, had finally made it there.

"…"

The top of the Pleiades Watchtower, above the first floor, the true peak.

In the place she managed to reach by sacrificing countless ice soldiers, she saw the base of the central pillar—a black Monolith had been placed there. The Monolith itself looked just like the one's she saw during the Trial of the third floor. What made it different was that it was not floating, and the surface, which should have been free of imperfections, caught her eye. It was—

"—Someone's handprints?"

Emilia, who'd widened her amethyst eyes, could see several sets of handprints on the surface of the Monolith—six in total, including both men and women.

The size of the hands and the thickness of the fingers indicated that they all belonged to humans. And it was clear that they were all friendly with each other due to taking the trouble to place their handprints next to each other like that, and that they had something to do with the tower—

"...Maybe Shaula's master or Reid?"

They were all Emilia could think of when it came to people who were involved with the tower. There was also Volcanica, but these were human handprints, and there was no sign of dragon handprints. Therefore, she could only come up with two people out of six who could have placed their handprints here.

"—? Wait, this is…"

One of the handprints suddenly made Emilia feel uncomfortable. It was lightly pressed at the end of the other six handprints—the one's next to it all had similar sizes, but the two at the end were uniquely small.

What had attracted Emilia's attention the most was this set of handprints—

"Are these handprints…mine...?"

Murmuring that, Emilia frowned and looked down at her right hand.

It was strange, but she couldn't help but get that feeling. One of the handprints that had been pressed onto the Monolith appeared to be her own.

"…"

Holding her breath, Emilia turned to face the Monolith, and, in order to dispel the doubts she had, she stretched out her right hand towards the handprint—

"—Thou, who hath reached the top of the tower. Step forth onto the first floor, almighty petitioner."

"—Mmm! He's here!"

Right before touching the Monolith, Emilia heard a familiar voice sounding down from above, and turned towards it.

It was Volcanica, who fluttered his wings and descended to the upper floor, who had writhed in agony when Emilia's ice soldiers touched the white scale on his neck earlier.

"…"

With the Monolith behind her, Emilia confronted the Divine Dragon.

When she was climbing up the pillar, the battle they'd waged had been quite intense, and if they were to continue it here, they would have to fight just as hard. Though it had a decent amount of space, the upper floor of the tower was smaller than the floor below, which would make fighting more difficult.

"And if the Monolith gets destroyed, I'll reaaally be in trouble..."

When they first encountered a Monolith on the third floor, Julius and Ram prevented anyone from striking them, so she didn't know how durable they were.

However, no matter how durable it was, Emilia felt like it wouldn't be able to survive a strike from the Divine Dragon.

"I'm suuuper positive it'll break if you try to hit me. Sooo—!"

Just in case, Emilia once again created seven ice soldiers near her. They had been crushed on the way to the upper floor, but their faces were full of energy and confidence like Emilia's right now.

As they brought out their ice weapons, Emilia created two ice swords and held them in her hands. Then she rushed towards Volcanica in tandem with her seven ice soldiers.

"Let's go, everyone! The white spot on Volcanica's neck is suuuper sensitive!"

After seeing how strongly Volcanica reacted when she fiddled with the white scale before, she discovered that it was his weak point. She didn't want to hurt him or anything, but if she could just get someone to play with it for a while, she would have time to focus on the Monolith—

"—Huh?"

After uttering that, Emilia discovered that she had been turned upside-down.

"…"

She couldn't figure out what in the world had happened. But she had a feeling that something had touched her foot as it was moving forward. It had happened so quickly that she didn't realize what had just occurred until she'd already been flipped over.

And, at the same time—

"Ah."

The seven ice soldiers were reduced to nothing around Emilia, who had been flipped upside-down. All of their heads had been skillfully smashed, reducing them to mana particles before they could make a move. Feeling it on her skin, she shivered.

That had been Volcanica's tail. It had rapidly swept Emilia's legs out from under her and at the same time crushed the heads of the ice soldiers. Realizing that a single swing of his tail had done that, her throat froze up.

It was a lot faster than the surprise attack Emilia had been able to block the first time. If the attack power of Subaru's whip was one, Volcanica's tail was around 1,000 or even 10,000. Before that power, even Emilia would get mercilessly defeated. And so a question suddenly sprung up in her mind.

"Why are you soooo kind to me...?"

He had only swept her feet from under her and flipped her upside-down, but had mercilessly smashed the heads of the ice soldiers.

Why the different treatment? It was hard for her to believe based on how angry he was when she touched his white scale before.

Then Emilia suddenly remembered that she hadn't gotten away from the situation she was currently in.

“Oh nooo—”

She was about to fall headfirst into the ground. Once again, a gentle impact from the side had flipped her legs into the air.

“Wow, oopsies...!”

Emilia landed in a dangerous position after rotating herself until she was sideways. At the moment she looked up after that close call—

“...What art thou doing?”

As he said this, she saw the Divine Dragon's face right in front of her.

“Umm...?”

He was literally right in front of her eyes and nose. If Emilia were to move her face forward just a tad, her nose would brush against his rock-hard, sharp, and robust body.

Emilia was completely surprised by the fact that a dragon's face was so close to her. But what puzzled Emilia even more was—

“Your way of speaking is soooo different from the way you've been speaking this whoooole time!”

“...”

“Have you come back to your senses now? Can we talk about lots of things then? I reaaaally want to talk to you about the Trial and about changing the rules of the tower...”

Gazing at Volcanica, Emilia shot question after question at him. If the Divine Dragon, who she had thought had become senile, had returned to normal, then she could try asking him about the Trial again. Then there would be no need to resort to violence.

“Hey, I’m begging you! Pleaaaase talk to me...”

“What if thou fell due to thou jumping up and down wildly like that? If something were to happen to thee, I would be scolded...because everyone humbles themselves before thee.”

“Volcanica...?”

Volcanica spoke to Emilia, who had been worried about everyone in the tower and desperately begging for his help, with words that had never been spoken before.

However, the content of his answer did not seem to answer Emilia’s plea, which only deepened the amount of confusion.

However, in the eyes of Volcanica that reflected Emilia, there was gentleness. It was the appearance of emotion, quite different from the emptiness of before. He gazed gently and affectionately at Emilia—

“Where art Flugel and Reid? Shaula wilt be lonely if they dost not say adieu when leaving. Farsale, too, shalt make much noise.”

“…”

Volcanica kept going, looking at Emilia with kind eyes. As the dragon gazed at something that wasn’t there, he spoke of Flugel and Reid, as well as Shaula, and another—

It would not be clear unless she knew their family game, but Emilia remembered that name. Farsale, and if that was who she thought it was…

“Farsale? Farsale Lugunica? The king from 400 years ago?”

In the course of studying for the royal selection, that was a person who had been mentioned many times in books.

Farsale Lugunica—the thirty-fifth king of the Kingdom of Lugunica as well as a great man who ruled the kingdom 400 years ago during the era of the Witch.

And the Last Lion King had formed a covenant with none other than the Divine Dragon, Volcanica, which set the future prosperity of the Kingdom of Lugunica in stone.

"…"

Emilia gently turned to look at the Monolith behind her.

There were six handprints—and if what Volcanica said were true, then did three of the handprints belong to Flugel, Reid, and Farsale? And the others probably belonged to a man and a woman.

"Then is the woman's handprint Shaula's…?"

She thought that was the most likely answer. She did not know who the last male handprint belonged to, but she'd let it be for now. Anyhow, the biggest issue at the moment was that there was an unknown handprint that appeared to be hers—

"No way, I…am I forgetting even more things than just Mom and everyone else in the forest?"

Emilia had a history of having her memories sealed, so she began to doubt herself. Even if that weren't the case, the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony was capable of taking away one's Name and Memories. There was a possibility that she had come here before and left a handprint on it but had forgotten about it.

"No, it doesn't matter. If only Puck were here, then he could tell me if I've been here before or not."

"—Art thou alright? Is something troubling thee?"

"Oh, well, uh… I'm fine. Thank you for caring about me. Thank you, buuut…"

In the end, Emilia was in trouble since it seemed like it would be hard to have a normal conversation with Volcanica. This was much better than being hit by his tail or paws, there was no question about that, but it still seemed pretty strange since this was a Trial.

Emilia thought about what to do—

“If thou needs anything, tell me. I will remove thy anxiety from thee, —Satella.”

—As he uttered those words, she gasped.

“…”

Satella…it hadn’t been the first time she’d been called that name.

Many people were reminded of that being because of Emilia’s long silver hair, amethyst eyes, and the fact that she was a half-elf. The only difference between them was simply their names.

There were those who called her Satella, those who called her the most horrible calamity, and those who called her the Witch of Envy. Therefore, it wasn’t a surprise that he called Emilia by that name.

What was strange, however, was that he treated Satella with affection. For it was Volcanica, Reid, and Flugel, whose feats were credited to Shaula, who sealed Satella, who was also called the Witch of Envy.

Why did he treat her like that?—

“Why do you speak the name of the Witch of Envy with such gentleness?”

She could have called her Satella or the Witch, too.

There were those who called her Satella, those who called her the worst calamity, and those who called her the Witch.

And Emilia called her the Witch of Envy. That is—

“—The Witch of Envy.”

—There was a change in Volcanica’s distant gaze.

The change that could be seen in Volcanica's golden eyes was dramatic.

As usual, the dragon's head, right in front of Emilia, was still gazing at her. That was why she got goosebumps when she saw him change so dramatically up close.

She felt as if it wasn't a good kind of change, either.

Emilia, who'd been raised in a forest, had knowledge due to experiencing many thing while living out in the wild. In circumstances like that, she had seen many witchbeasts that changed suddenly.

Getting that kind of feeling, Emilia jumped backwards as she was being pulled by something.

That was the correct choice.

"…"

In the moment afterwards, the air in front of Emilia exploded. And that was no exaggeration, as the space had compressed and then quickly expanded, resulting in an explosion.

The principle behind that phenomenon, which was peculiar, was unknowable, and it was as if it warped the space itself. If one were in its area of effect, one would get warped by it, and it did not matter if one's defenses were strong or not.

And that had occurred right where Emilia's head had been.

If Emilia had not jumped back in time, she would most certainly have died.

Not to mention his tail attacks, but now even the warping of space itself, Emilia had gotten into many situations that could have led to her death. This may have been the first time that a person's life had been threatened so many times.

"But I seem to be reaaally lucky so I somehow managed to get through everything."

If the element of luck was Emilia's ally, then it was the gift of good luck that gave her a chance to breathe, so she interpretated her situation in a positive manner.

If she didn't do so, then she would become overwhelmed by all of the new changes. Because—

"—Satella."

Spreading his wings out once more, Volcanica was starting to express a certain hostility towards her.

Seeing this, Emilia endured the urge to stomp on the ground in frustration. It looked as if he had finally come back to his senses, but now it seemed as if he had reverted to the way he was before.

What's more, he seemed even more senile and vigilant than when he was in a dazed state.

"—Icicle Line."

Therefore, there was no need for Emilia to go easy on him, so she unleashed her magic with unwavering determination.

It froze the atmosphere which soon began to crack, then a white mist slowly began to drift through the battlefield. It created a frozen world of white, as if it were no different from the upper floor above the clouds.

Then, making a bit of noise, Emilia slowly stood up wearing ice armor—pulling an ice spear out of the floor, she twirled it around and pointed it in front of her. She once again prepared to fight against Volcanica.

However, if Volcanica were to get serious, Emilia wasn't sure if she would be able to handle his attacks. He was a lot stronger than he was when he was in a senile state—no, perhaps he was back in that state again.

"But…"

Staring straight into those golden eyes, Emilia wasn't sure if she could say that Volcanica's behavior was due to being senile. For his eyes were full of sorrow and anguish.

"Satella, yes, Satella. We must stop thee who hast become the Witch of Envy."

"…Were you two reaaally close?"

"On that day, I wish I hadn't hesitated. On that day, if I did not hesitate, then no one would have—"

He did not finish what he was about to say. But based on Volcanica's trembling voice, the answer as to why was quite clear.

The dragon, languishing in regret, took a deep breath, and the breath that had scorched the world of white earlier was unleashed once again.

But before that happened, it was crucial for Emilia to get up close and strike his white scale. Without doing so, Emilia would perish, and as a consequence, everyone else would too.

"—Subaru, Beatrice, Ram, Rem, Meili, Patrasche, Echidna, Julius, and Anastasia."

She thought about everyone else in the tower who were fighting for their lives. Of everyone she needed to help, of everyone who was fighting for the same cause. After doing so, a strange power appeared from deep within Emilia's chest.

"—The Witch of Envy, Satella!!"

"—No, that's not me. I am the Witch of Glaciation of the Elior Forest, Emilia."

Emilia answered the Divine Dragon, who mistook her for someone else, in a loud voice, overflowing with the power that had sprung up from within herself.

Though the enemy was the Divine Dragon, there was nothing to be afraid of. —Emilia was supported by everyone.

“—Be sure to at least remember that name!”

—In the final phase of the battle surrounding the Pleiades Watchtower, light erupted above and below the clouds.

Chapter 88:
—I Ask Thy Will

1

—It was at almost the same time that light erupted above and below the clouds.

If there were one who could observe the battle's taking place, separated by thick clouds and a large distance, then they would most certainly not be of this world.

The battle, which had begun with attempting to conquer the Pleiades Watchtower, was finally coming to an end.

The current situation was—

"Ah, ooooooooooh—!!"

Cried Subaru, as the sea of sand was blown to bits and shockwaves that whipped up a sandstorm raged.

The immense amount of destructive power that was smashing into Subaru was enough to instantly blow his body to bits. And yet no such thing occurred—

"E—M—M!!"

One of the three original magic spells that had been created by Subaru and Beatrice.

Roughly speaking, this magic spell was a form of absolute defense magic that prevented the bodies of Subaru and Beatrice from being influenced by external forces by stopping the passage of time around them.

"It's so frustrating because I came up with the idea in the first place, but it feels like I'm the one getting thrown into the worst situations because that guy used a similar ability!"

“We’ve talked quite enough about this matter, I suppose! Betty already decided to ignore it long ago, in fact!”

When she heard Subaru’s complaint, Beatrice, who was on his shoulders, shouted that at him.

The Witch of Greed’s Sin Archbishop, Regulus Corneas’ Invincibility ability, was an extremely powerful force that could be described as being backwards compatible with E M M. Though the guy who used it was a scumbag, its practicality was outstanding. That was what he’d aimed for, though it wasn’t something he wanted to do.

“I still need to reference him, even though that guy is a scumbag that makes me feel like throwing up.”

Would it sound better if he said he lived by experience?

This type of thinking also reminded Subaru of the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, and he was extremely disgusted by the fact those guys stood in his way no matter where he looked.

However, without it, he wouldn’t be able to protect Beatrice and Meili.

“—Ah.”

Meili, with her eyes closed, began taking strained breaths in Subaru’s arms.

She looked to be in a state of shock, but that was simply due to how painful breathing was for her. The injuries she’d been dealt looked like they were gradually healing due to Beatrice’s healing magic. Well, more or less, but she should be improving, maybe, possibly.

“Using healing magic and E M M at the same time is too difficult, I suppose! The three of us would be dead by now if it weren’t for Betty, in fact!”

“I know that! It’s just…”

Thanks to Beatrice’s rebuke, Subaru began to question himself.

When it came to the damage he'd taken, there was no longer any other way to endure it but to bite down on his back teeth. The problem was his current supply of mana—in the first place, he was only useful as a tank for holding magic power, but the capacity of Subaru's tank was just average, if not below-average.

When he used E M M, his mana was continuously consumed, like water flowing out of a bucket with holes in it.

And at this rate, it wouldn't be long before E M M and the healing magic stopped working altogether. And—

"Stopping Meili's healing magic is NOT an option...!"

"Then we will have to stop using E M M, I suppose. I'll have to entrust the timing and what happens next to Subaru, in fact!

"Then you can count on me. Beako, you will take care of Meili's treatment and become a good obedient spirit that responds immediately to my instructions!"

"The way you worded that! Is! Bad, in fact!"

Arguing with each other in such a way, Subaru and Beatrice exchanged glances, and without a single second of disturbance in their connection, turned E M M off—and then jumped from where they were standing.

Behind them, the Crimson Scorpion and the other witchbeasts were fighting and making a beeline towards Subaru and the others. As per usual, the bothersome Crimson Scorpion had its sights set on Subaru, who had a handicap where he couldn't get too far away from the tower.

In terrible situations like this where the situation would not change otherwise—

"—The Witch…"

By revealing his Return by Death ability, Subaru generated a thick amount of Miasma which attracted all of the witchbeasts there to his location. —It wasn't a technique of any kind, but that was one of the abilities that he heavily relied on.

It was dangerous enough as it was, but if the Crimson Scorpion was aiming for Subaru, making it fight with the other witchbeasts might bear fruit.

But it might have been too much to ask for.

If Beatrice, Meili, and Subaru collapsed here, then Ram, who had entrusted some of her burdens to him, would also collapse, and then, one after the other, they would be annihilated.

Due to the power of Cor Leonis, the sense of closeness he felt with the others became far too strong. With the power of this Authority, he had no idea how Regulus grew accustomed to living his life in solitude.

"…"

"—! E M T!!"

Thinking useless thoughts, he saw a future where everyone was disintegrated by a ray of white light, and then, having a premonition of Death, he released his second original magic spell.

E M T was a form of negation magic that negated all magic released at it. It didn't have the same weakness as E M M, which required zero movement in order to stay activated. —At least in principle, any attack that used mana would be negated by this magic spell.

However—

"I turned E M M off and used my trump card in five seconds flat!"

That wasn't as easy as it sounded, and, on the contrary, he didn't know what to do after that, and was surrounded on all sides.

As it was, the stinger of the Crimson Scorpion, the flames of the Hungry Horse Kings, and the other attacks of the witchbeasts were aimed and then fired at Subaru and his group, threatening to turn them all into ash.

Gulping, Subaru stiffened. If he wanted to break through the current situation, he would need to use his third and final original magic spell. However, it was not complete yet.

If anything were to go wrong, Subaru and his group might end up floating in an imaginary space—

“I can’t believe in myself enough to bet on it awakening at the last minute—!”

Although Natsuki Subaru was recognized as a capable guy, he didn’t blindly believe that he was some type of superman who could break through any sort of situation no matter the circumstances.

He was simply the type of guy who never gave up. Even if he gave up, he would get himself back on his feet more than any other. To put it another way, it means that other people gave up more.

“Now isn’t the time to show my habit of losing. It’s a bad gamble, but…”

“—Can you do anything with your willpower and vanity alone? That level of determination is truly like you, however.”

It was at the moment Subaru decided he had no choice but to give it a try. A sudden voice came from above, and then the figure of a person descended and slashed in between the attack of Death that had been fired at Subaru and everyone else. It was so radiant that Subaru reflexively shut his eyes.

That wasn’t a metaphor either, for it truly was dazzling. —It was because the figure was clad in the colors of the rainbow.

“—Al Clauselia.”

Immediately after that, a light shined and repelled that furious onslaught of attacks.

There were the shock waves that left destruction in their wake, an inferno of flames, and the charge of the other witchbeasts with their lives on the line. A black light weakened them, water overflowed and swallowed them up, and the violent winds of a sandstorm made them lose their momentum.

That had been the act of manipulating the forces of nature itself, and it had been done by a man with a graceful countenance, who landed on the sand wielding his long knight's sword—

"—For that reason, I came here in a hurry. It seems that I arrived in the nick of time."

As he spoke, Julius Juukulius, who was known as the Finest of Knights, glanced back at Subaru.

With his white uniform stained here and there with blood and dirt, he stood there calmly. He was a refined as ever, clad in the colors of the rainbow.

At his commanding presence, Subaru said "Julius..." with quivering lips.

"You... I left a message that said to go help out the others who were in dangerous places!"

"Yes, and I did so. That is why I came here. My apologies, but I thought this place was the most dangerous compared to the others."

"Shut up! What's up with that scar on your face? What happened with Reid?!"

"It was my loss. He ran away in a pleasant mood after winning."

"That's lame! If you're gonna do it, then you gotta go for the win! But I would've been done for had you not come, so I'll only say this once. Thanks!"

Julius, who had a white scar under his left eye, laughed with a "Ha."

He said that with a hint of annoyance, but he had apparently gained something after finishing his fight with Reid. The proof of that was —

"Have you made up with your quasi-spirits?"

“Actually, they blossomed from their budded forms and were elevated into spirits. Also, saying we made up would be incorrect. We were never at odds to begin with.”

Hovering around Julius as he answered were the six dim, glowing quasi-spirits—no, spirits.

The spirits, who had lost their connection to Julius due to Gluttony’s Authority taking his Name away, had not given him any assistance whatsoever, and had long been puzzled as a result.

However, they’d bridged the gap between them, causing them to develop a stronger bond. Forming a new contract with his six spirits made him seem both smart and like a womanizer.

“I had such a hard time persuading Beako, but you’re such a clever guy, huh.”

“Regrettably, I’ve already been eaten, though.”

“Not funny! Aren’t you getting over it a little too fast?!”

Subaru was amazed at Julius, who could even joke about being victimized by Gluttony’s Authority.

Seeing as he had said that he had won and escaped, it was clear that he had managed to conclude things with Reid. And since it was clear that Reid’s body had belonged to Roy Alphard, it would be natural to assume that he had also settled things with one of the Gluttonies.

And since Julius had yet to say anything about the danger he posed, then it could be assumed that he had succeeded in neutralizing Alphard.

“Julius! You got here at just the right time, I suppose! I need to borrow Kua!”

“—. Understood.”

Julius immediately consented to Beatrice’s request, who was above Subaru’s head. He was also able to sense that it was only a matter of time until something went wrong with Meili, still in Subaru's arms.

From the group of six spirits, the blue-colored Kua, which governed the water element, flew out and began pouring its gentle healing magic into Meili's body along with Beatrice's.

And then—

"This will require a considerable amount of time."

"Yup, so take a look around. Now that Shaula has turned red and is very angry, can you handle her? Didn't you just lose to the red dude?"

"For that very reason, it would be discourteous to the lady to state that this battle was being fought to make up for that loss."

Julius faced the Crimson Scorpion—Shaula—wielding his knight's sword.

The knight stepped forward, but the Crimson Scorpion seemed to look right through him. Everyone in Subaru's way was simply an obstacle to it, and its murderous intent stayed locked on to a single target.

It was with that attitude that Julius, a spirit knight, improved himself and moved a step up.

"Subaru, I will handle Miss Shaula. As far as other things are concerned..."

"You mean I need to handle them on my own, huh? Roger that."

"No, please work together with Miss Beatrice to get things done."

"In a situation like this, I can produce about 70% of my power thanks to Beako."

To be honest, even 70% was a pretty vain figure. At 80% or 90%, what Subaru could be proud of as the contractor of Beako was his cunning brain and a few little techniques, so it might even go up to 95%.

In any case—

“You coming here really helped us a lot…”

“It would be best for you to reexamine the value that you yourself possess.”

After having a relatively short conversation, Subaru and Julius each focused on their distinct roles.

Julius advanced in order to prevent the attacks of the witchbeasts from reaching Subaru and the others, reducing the damage to the rear by fighting a fierce battle.

Subaru, on the other hand, wanted to keep the injured Meili away from the witchbeasts while focusing on buying time so that the conditions for victory could be met.

“—Hic.”

Feeling a sense of astonishment, Subaru raised his face as if blown away by something. The cause of this was the Pleaides Watchtower and the change that had occurred there. It was—

“—The response from Ram disappeared?”

2

—Volcanica’s breath was released over the upper floor, tinged in a blue light.

“…”

Emilia attempted to break through the situation with every ounce of her being by using ice shields.

When they were traveling through the sea of sand to the Pleiades Watchtower, she had used ice shields to defend against the rays of white light coming from the tower. However, they did not last a single second against the dragon’s breath.

The stacked ice shields were melted instantly, yet still managed to slightly weaken the power and scale of that attack as it rained down upon Emilia.

As a result, Emilia took shelter behind the black Monolith for a moment.

It was true that it was quite strong and undaunted by the breath of the dragon. However, she had a hunch that if it were destroyed, the Trial would be ruined. And besides, she had a feeling that this had nothing to do with breaking through the Trial—

“I’ll reaaally be lonely if it’s destroyed...”

There was a handprint that gave her a feeling of déjà vu, on a Monolith that had been left behind.

She also had no idea if it had anything to do with her, or if she was just seeing things. She just wanted to find out why it gave her that kind of feeling in the first place.

So she couldn’t lose it. In order to not lose it—

“…”

Gathering her mana together to the limits of her current state , Emilia deployed an Icicle Line. Though she had a massive amount of mana at her disposal, using it all at the same time was not feasible. No matter how much mana a person had, they were limited by how much could pass through their Gate in a single instance.

Emilia had ten times the amount of power as most magic users, but her potential was further developed due to her experience as a spirit arts user.

Magic users interfered with the world with their power by sending the mana they built up within themselves through their Gates.

Spirit arts users interfered with the world with the help of spirits and by using the mana in the atmosphere.

That being the case, Emilia trained herself in both.

The amount of water coming out of a faucet was fixed in quantity, but if one were to store it in a bucket, one would have more water at one's disposal. Based on that, Emilia did this both inside and outside her body.

The application of a maximum magic spell, one in which the mana overflowing from within was preserved on the outside, with the gate being ignored entirely—

"—Absolute Zero."

Subaru had called it that and said it would be difficult to pull off.

Oddly enough, this had happened at the same time Subaru shouted out that he couldn't believe in himself enough to pull it off. And then Emilia went ahead and gave it her all to succeed in something that had never been done before.

And she succeeded in doing it.

If Emilia's original magic power was at a level of one, would the power of this magic spell that came into being due to the application of the overflow of magic be ten, or perhaps even reach a hundred?

In a single moment, the white void that swept over the world was not the expression of a frozen atmosphere, but was rather the accompaniment of the power to stop the unstoppable passage of time.

The dragon's breath, which was the embodiment of Death, was no exception.

The collision of the blue light and Absolute Zero created a void in the world.

"…"

In an instant, the two maximum powers struggled against each other for a short amount of time before cancelling each other out.

Indeed, they had surprisingly silently cancelled each other out without any other effects, and when the time that had been stopped began moving again, Emilia brought out an ice spear and rushed forward.

“Ha, yaaaaaa—!!”

Her slender throat vibrating, Emilia charged towards Volcanica.

Her body felt awfully heavy because it had taken energy from her entire body. Even though the mana itself was used outside of the body, the toll it took on Emilia was rather large.

Turning over a bucket full of water required an enormous amount of energy. So it was no wonder that Emilia was exhausted and fatigued, for she had used enough energy to overturn a fountain, not just a bucket.

However, she let out her voice.

“I can’t…lose heart forever!!”

By shouting that out, Emilia reinvigorated herself.

While life energy and mana were different things, she still thought that she could awaken her sleeping energy simply by willing it to come forth. That may have been a misunderstanding, but even if she was just fooling herself, lying wasn’t so bad from time to time.

“—SATELAAAA!”

Not giving her a chance to breathe, Volcanica roared that out as he swung his paw and tail.

The impact came from outside of her perception, and Emilia defended against it by relying on the feeling of the beads of ice spreading around her—helping her advance as they got crushed were seven ice soldiers she’d created.

An ice soldier stopped a downward blow from reaching her, and then another ice soldier stopped the following blow from a paw with its own body. Emilia then jumped off of its shoulder whilst another ice soldier, standing on the shoulders of two other’s stacked on top of each other in order to give itself some height, held off the tail flailing in the air, ultimately sacrificing itself.

“Ha! Haiya! Haiyaaaaa!”

After borrowing the aid of those who had nobly sacrificed themselves, Emilia threw an ice spear while rotating herself in the air. It hadn’t been enough to penetrate the outer layer of the Divine Dragon, but it had been enough to get his attention.

Volcanica swung his troublesome paw at Emilia, grazing her silver hair as she dodged it. Then she charged in, risking her life in order to get under his chest. —And from that position…

“That’s… his white scale—”

Emilia hoped that her blow would be able to touch or hit it, and then looked up at the sky.

Emilia opened her eyes when she drew close to the Divine Dragon once again, close enough to touch, and saw that evasive white scale directly in her vision.

The reason as to why was rather surprising. That wasn’t a white scale. Not at all.

There was a white scar there that could have easily been mistaken as one of his scales.

“An old…scar...”

Since the wound had already closed, he shouldn’t feel any pain if it were touched.

However, the Divine Dragon just didn’t want that wound to be touched for some reason, and went through a lot of agony when it was. Emilia’s breath caught when she realized that it had something to do with his old, undying memories.

Taking advantage of her momentary hesitation, Volcanica flapped his wings.

"Ah—Hic!"

Volcanica's massive body flew up in an instant with Emilia's hand still stretched out in front of her. Emilia greatly regretted her mistake after she'd done it.

When fighting a winged being, this was the worst situation one could be in. If one were to be attacked in a position that was unreachable, one would accumulate debt in the blink of an eye.

"No waaaaaayyy—!!"

Emilia immediately placed her hand on the floor, then ice suddenly began to rise from where she was standing.

Now that she had an improvised ice foothold in the sky, Emilia desperately attempted to catch up to the flying Volcanica. However, the ice foothold reached its limit when it had been extended to 33 to 66 feet (10 to 20 meters), and she wouldn't be able to reach him if he moved further away.

"—Everyone! Pleaaase!!"

Emilia's shouts were answered by her ice soldiers, who were climbing up the side of the ice platform.

The ice soldiers climbed to the top of the foothold and then immediately began jumping. They used the shoulders of the one that jumped previously as a footstool, repeating that process six times. Then Emilia jumped off of the back of the last one—

"Sorry!"

As soon as she pushed off of the ice soldier's back with a great amount of force, it broke their formation.

However, the seven ice soldiers, who were now falling, all fell with smiles on their faces while giving her a thumbs up. With their encouragement, Emilia, who had jumped last, moved her hand towards Volcanica's tail.

"—Foolish."

Emilia’s fingers grabbed thin air as his tail was drawn back. And then the tail, which had been pulled back rapidly, returned to Emilia’s position, who gazed at it in wonderment.

There was nowhere to go in the air. Even if she were capable of producing an ice shield in an instant, that power that could break through it in an instant was destructive enough to be fatal.

Emilia “—Ah.”

Emilia was entangled with thoughts of failing in addition to what she should do.

As time slowed down, she desperately tried to find a way out of her situation, and mobilized all of her resources in her mind and body to see if she could do anything. Giving up wasn’t an option, however.

None of Emilia’s favorite people ever chose to give up.

Therefore—

“I won’t give up, either!”

However, just saying such words wouldn’t be enough to save herself.

The tail attack of the Divine Dragon, who understood the long passage of time, drew near to Emilia, as if trying to teach her the meaning of impermanence—

“—LADY EMILIA!!”

In a single moment, a raging wind from directly below Emilia blew upwards, helping her ascend, though only slightly. The wind blowing upwards pushed against her body, slightly altering her situation.

This had brought her from a situation where there was a 100% chance of Death to a situation where the possibility of Death was 90%. And Emilia, who refused to give up, took hold of that 10% chance of survival.

"—Hic."

The Divine Dragon's tail was swung towards Emilia's head. Since the momentum behind her ascent had increased, the trajectory of the tail attack moved from her head to her body. Understanding that with her intuition, rather than her perception, she pulled her knee's to her chest with all her might.

Emilia made her body as small as she could in order to get out of its attack range—but the tips of her toes were grazed by his tail attack, causing her body to spin at a high speed due to the fierce shock it caused.

"…"

Emilia's body was blown upwards with her knee's held in her arms.

Emilia clenched her back teeth as she was swallowed by the attack that was capable of causing the contents of her head to spill out, and created some ice footholds in the sky, stopping herself by force.

Boom

With tears in her eyes, and her entire body taking in the shock, Emilia looked down after hearing a powerful sound.

With her field of view turned upside-down on the ice ceiling in the sky, she could see Volcanica's head, as well as figures approaching from the stairs of the first floor in the distance.

Actually, they weren't figures at all, but rather the silhouettes of a person and an earth dragon.

"Ram and…!"

It had been Ram who'd come here and helped Emilia move a bit higher. She couldn't hide her astonishment at the fact that Ram, who she could see in the distance, had come here in a bloodied state.

But thanks to her assistance, Emilia managed to escape a death resulting from her head getting struck.

Thanks to her help, Emilia once again put some strength into her knees. Using the ice ceiling as a foothold, she went on the offensive against Volcanica. However, Volcanica looked rather funny in front of her.

He was wagging his tail and looking down, rather than looking at Emilia. There was a possibility that he had deemed Ram, who had saved her, to be his next prey. But that wasn't the case. The golden eyes of the ancient Divine Dragon weren't looking at Ram at all.

It was—

"—Patrasche."

"N-o-aaaaahhh—!!"

After Volcanica's murmur faded away, Emilia's rushed her body directly beneath him. Half a moment later, the tail of Volcanica, who had been looking above him, broke the ice ceiling. He had been late as Emilia was no longer there, nor was she aiming directly at his throat.

Then Emilia created another ice foothold—no, an Ice Slope. When she had been running away from Regulus with Subaru in Priestella, she'd created something with the aim of not killing her speed, but accelerating it—it was created in the air and slid on using shoes made of ice.

Emilia's speed accelerated in the sky, preventing the tail attack from reaching her.

Creating an ice slope in midair and then steadily, steadily accelerating, Emilia's silver hair fluttered in the wind as his tail chased after her, and then—

"Chiyaaaa—!!"

Jumping off of the slope, Emilia aimed a kick at Volcanica's throat, going at a high speed. She fired herself straight, like an arrow, at the white scar on his throat, avoiding the closing paw trying to grab her.

"—Gah!!"

The white sole of Emilia's shoe struck his throat, causing Volcanica to let out a shout once again.

Hearing the sound of the sky cracking, Emilia let out an "Eeeeekaaaaah!" causing her to cover her ears as she immediately began falling due to the kick's recoil. Falling, falling, falling—

"Eek!... Wow, thank you!"

The falling Emilia had been caught by the ice soldiers who were supposed to have fallen to the ground.

Emilia stood up thanks to the aid of that soft landing and saw that she had gotten back to the upper floor, as well as that Volcanica was writhing in agony above her. Once again, she ran straight to the Monolith next to the central pillar.

She ran and ran to get to the Monolith that gave her a sense of déjà vu—

"I knew it!!"

She reached the Monolith, and, this time, she was able to press her hand against it unhindered. That force created a shock that shook the Monolith, and Emilia's hand was a perfect match for the handprint in question. She wasn't sure how many people in the world shared similar hands, but this handprint on the Monolith at least belonged to someone who looked exactly like her.

And—

"—Thou, who hath reached the top of the tower. Step forth onto the first floor, almighty petitioner."

"Ah..."

When Emilia placed her hand on the Monolith, Volcanica descended whilst flapping his wings.

Volcanica, whose large body was still floating up in the sky, and was supposed to have returned to a sane state, asked that same first question once more, as if he had returned to being senile.

But she felt like the question was different than the one he had asked the first time when he was in a completely senile state. — Right, that was the question he had always started with.

"—I, am Volcanica. In accordance with the ancient covenant, the will of thee who hath reached the top shall be questioned."

These were words that had been said many times.

The will of thee who hath reached the top shall be questioned. —In other words, the feelings of those who have reached the top.

What do you want to do? What do you desire? What did you come here to do?

"…"

There were many answers that Emilia could give to that question. There were plenty of answers to 'what do you want to do?, what do you desire?, and what did you come here to do?'.

However, at this moment, what Emilia wanted the most—

"—I ask. Thy will!"

After all of those repeated question, Emilia opened her eyes wide whilst opening her mouth. Then she answered him in a loud voice.

"—For everyone to get along!!"

3

Suddenly a powerful gust of wind blew, engulfing the sea of sand with its force.

Evading a fierce attack from a witchbeast, Subaru cried out "huh?!" and Beatrice, who was working hard to heal Meili, was also shocked, saying "what is it, I suppose?!."

Naturally, the same could be said of Julius, who was currently engaged in an extraordinary battle against Shaula.

—No, the amount of surprise he felt must have been even greater.

The reason why was because he wasn't pursued despite there being a fierce whirlwind of dirt that blocked his field of view, causing him to feel a sense a danger and fall back.

"—What on earth. SUBARU!!"

"HUH?! What is it! I can't see my surroundings because of all the sand…"

"It's fine! Come here!"

Responding to Julius' earnest call, Subaru, spitting the sand out of his mouth, turned towards him. Then he saw why Julius had been so frantic and widened his eyes.

It was—

"—SHAULA?!"

"～～ッッ."

Subaru, with a cry of astonishment, saw the figure of the Crimson Scorpion toppled in the whirlwind of dust, fluttering its many legs in the sand.

Until now, the tower administrator had not responded to any of their attacks and had simply chased them down in a machine-like manner—an error had occurred in the self-proclaimed Stars-Keeper.

"Have you done something?!"

"No, I didn't do anything special. I was focusing my attention on staving off its attacks. But as soon as that sand wind blew…"

"Sand wind…that's right, that wind…"

The fierce wind that had engulfed Subaru and the others was called

Sand Wind, and it made them realize that something was wrong.

The Sand Wind mercilessly engulfed those who traveled through the Augria Sand Dunes, but ever since they broke through the barrier in question, a powerful wind like this had never blown around the watchtower.

That was why there had never been such a thing known as Sand Wind here. And yet now it was blowing—

"Subaru! Look! The sky."

"…"

Beatrice exclaimed that with an adorable voice to Subaru, who was confused. When he heard her, he looked up with a pained look on his face.

Changes had occurred in the Pleiades Watchtower, and those changes were quite obvious.

"—The clouds…cleared up."

The Pleaides Watchtower went all the way up into the clouds and extended into the sky. The top of it was literally covered with clouds and could not be viewed from below. However, the strange clouds that had always covered the top of the watchtower had disappeared.

So he finally realized something. —That the aftermath of the wind just now had scattered those clouds.

The clouds had been cleared and the top of the tower was now visible from below. And that only meant one thing, at least according to Subaru's wishful thinking.

"—Did you do it, Emilia?"

The perception of the muttering Subaru, who could sense everyone in the tower with Cor Leonis, could perceive Emilia who had disappeared, and then Ram and Patrasche returned as well. It was likely that they went to help Emilia and had gotten some results from that.

To put it another way, if Subaru's deduction was right—

"The rules of the tower have been rewritten… Shaula! Hey, Shaula! Listen to me!"

"～～ッ!"

"You don't need to fight us anymore! Now you're free to…"

Was the reason why the toppled-over Crimson Scorpion was writhing and suffering so much because the ancient pact that had been etched into her had been severed? He didn't understand the fine details. But that was enough. There was no reason for her to suffer anymore—

"Hey, Shau—"

"—! SUBARU!!"

As Subaru was approaching her and calling out her name, someone grabbed his collar. At that moment, a razor sharp tail passed through the space where he had just been before being dragged away.

With the wind blowing, Subaru was at a loss for words as he felt the smell of burnt air brush against his nose.

If Julius hadn't stopped him, he would have been hit. But it wasn't a sense of Death that afflicted Subaru.

"HEY, SHAULA! SHAULA! WHAT THE HELL IS WRONG WITH YOU, STOP MESSING AROUNDDD!!"

"～～ッッ."

While listening to Subaru's desperate words, the Crimson Scorpion slowly went back to where it was in the sand. With its compound eyes gleaming, it went back to its toppled-over position, and, slowly perceiving Subaru once again, drooled from its fiendish fangs.

That didn’t seem to be the attitude of a normal, rational being—

“—Subaru, unfortunately, but…”

Julius grabbed Subaru by the shoulder as he spoke and tried to move forward. But when he realized what he was thinking, Subaru grabbed his arm and stopped him in his tracks.

He could tell that Julius was trying to take on the role of the guy who did what he needed to do. But he would never allow that to happen.

“I’ve decided to help. —I’m…gonna help her out.”

“Is it the duty you feel towards her as her master?”

“Nope.”

Shaking his head, Subaru disagreed with Julius’ words. That wasn’t the case. Subaru wanted to help Shaula, but not because he was her master or anything—

“It’s not because I’m her master. I’m going to do that because I’m…moved by her.”

“…”

“It’s the same with Beako. How could I abandon someone who’s been all alone in a sand tower like this, who cried and said she enjoyed the days she spent with us?”

Clenching his back teeth, Subaru declared that to Julius with his arm in his grasp.

Julius then glanced back at Subaru and sighed.

“...You’re stubborn. But that’s what you should do.”

“—Julius?”

“No, I was just impressed by you again. I stuck to my vanity once. So you should stick with it until the end.”

Julius, smiling lightly, replied with that, tracing the wound on his left cheek with his finger.

Subaru narrowed his eyes at his answer and suddenly realized that his left hand was being held by someone with a gentle touch. It seemed to have been Beatrice who had done it.

Gazing at Subaru with the loveliest eyes in the world—

“Meili has gotten past the difficult part, I suppose. The rest—”

“Can you help me get her out?”

“If I say no, what kind of brute would Betty be, I wonder… Good grief, Subaru really is such a helpless partner, I suppose.”

In response to Beatrice, Subaru smiled bitterly and scratched his head. Then he firmly rejoined his hand with his most precious contracted spirit and turned to the Crimson Scorpion—to Shaula.

The spirit knight, and two people standing side-by-side, faced the crying girl who needed to be saved. And—

“I’m already worn out both mentally and physically. —So help me out already, Shaula!”

—In the conquering of the Pleiades Watchtower, the final showdown, began.

Chapter 89:
Shaula

Ragged, ragged, scattering away.

Crumbling, crumbling, flaking away.

Tired, tired, fading away.

Ragged, crumbling, and tired, everything in the distance was shimmering.

1

—Outside the tower, the witchbeast Master broke through the stampede of countless witchbeasts by fighting with all her strength.

—On the second floor, Reid Astrea, who had seized the body of Roy Alphard, was defeated.

—On the fourth floor, the blasphemer of fate, the vile Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, was defeated.

—On the first floor, Emilia broke through the unknown Trial by fighting bravely and heroically.

A variety of obstacles they had faced while trying to capture the Pleiades Watchtower had been cleared. This was the result of them trusting in each other, staying unified, and cooperating.

To put it in an Emilia-like way, this was the result of "everyone getting along."

Thanks to this, they had finally managed to make it to this point.

Therefore, the next step was—

"—It won't mean a thing if we don't win this together!"

When they first arrived to the Pleiades Watchtower, this was what

Emilia had said.

They had come here not to lose anything more, but to recover what had already been lost.

Everyone had agreed with what she'd said back then, and that everyone returning from the sea of sand safe and sound was of absolute necessity. It would not be an issue even if more people returned than came.

In addition to Subaru, Emilia, Beatrice, Ram, Rem, Meili, Anastasia = Echidna, and Patrasche, one extra Shaula wouldn't be a problem at all. It wouldn't even matter how loud and boisterous things would be on the way back because of her.

"—Go!"

Of the two Spirit Knights standing side-by-side, the one who had made the first move was, of course, Julius.

—Julius brought back Kua, who was in the process of healing someone, temporarily halting their treatment, and once again clad himself in an aurora of light with the help of his six spirits.

Due to the effect of Cor Leonis, Subaru understood that in order for the light of his Od to expand so much, both Julius and his spirits would have to be under a considerable load.

It was a rather cool technique to pull off. However, no one here wanted to fight an extended battle in the first place.

"—A short, decisive battle."

Julius flew over the sand, leaving a trail of rainbow-colored light in his wake.

Closing the distance in a single instant, Julius brought his sword closer to the Crimson Scorpion. Seeing his movements with its compound eyes, it swung its pincers and stinger with the fierceness of a storm. However, the moment his sword made contact with its shell, white smoke began to rise.

It had caused it to melt.

It wasn't even able to protect itself after receiving that blow, for Julius' strike had turned into a rainbow, his magic sword wrapping itself in a sixfold light due to the constant use of Al Clarista.

Moreover, the light of the rainbow enveloping his entire body wasn't just for show, either.

"…"

The ray of light, fired from the stinger at close range, had killed Subaru more than a dozen times, and had also been used as the weapon of Death that led to the deaths of Emilia and Julius—it was also known as Hell's Snipe.

Julius did not deflect it with his sword, but rather by using the defensive capabilities of the aurora of light. The aurora of light, which enveloped his entire body, applied the concept of Al Clauselia, which created a rainbow barrier.

And so, a high-level swordsman who could unify both offense and defense was born, and could thus be called the Rainbow Spirit Knight.

"～～ッッ!!"

Its defenses were being broken through, it could not land a single lethal blow, and so, as a result, the Crimson Scorpion was having an awful time.

However, the witchbeast that had been the guardian of the watchtower for the past 400 years had a sense of dignity. Its crimson shell growing brighter and brighter, a great amount of heat was released from its powerful pincers and slammed into Julius, blowing the Rainbow Knight quite a ways away.

Its pincers were extremely hot, distorting the atmosphere around itself due to the intensity of the heat. If Subaru were to give a name to the blazing-hot pincers, he would call them the "Jesus Scissors Hellfire Form."

It was quite admirable for it to show off its new techniques in order to try to liven up the last battle, but the reality was that he did not want it to show any growth. An enemy breaking out of their shell was extremely undesirable at the moment.

“MINYA!!”

It swung its crimson pincers through the air but was deflected by purple stakes from the side, preventing them from making contact with Julius.

By himself, Subaru was not enough to do anything in the high-level battle between Julius and the Crimson Scorpion. As a result, Beatrice covered for Julius to the side whilst Subaru waited for an opportunity to do something.

“…”

Subaru made sure to keep himself out of harm’s way so he wouldn’t be killed by the aftermath of the battle. He then pointed his gaze at the sea of sand that had been devastated by the whirlwind that drove the swarm of witchbeasts from there.

In terms of the damage inflicted and their sheer vigilance, the witchbeasts that inhabited the Augria Sand Dunes had a major impact on Subaru and the others during their journey.

However, what was truly unusual was that they were now staying away from the watchtower and looking at it from a distance.

Emilia had probably rewritten the rules of the tower on the first floor, causing the clouds to disperse.

Perhaps that had served as a measure to keep witchbeasts away from the tower? witchbeasts did not seem to even approach the watchtower originally, so the fact that a stampede of witchbeasts approached it was rather unnatural.

Whatever the case may be, the fact the witchbeasts didn’t start popping up all over the place was a huge relief to Subaru and the others, who were attempting to get the Crimson Scorpion’s—Shaula’s sanity back.

"—SUBARU!!"

"Ah."

So that he could find an ideal position, Subaru cut across the sea of sand diagonally, but while doing so, he heard someone's shout.

Right as Subaru looked up to confirm what was going on, the Crimson Scorpion, which had been dodging the many sword thrusts of Julius, somehow landed right next to him.

Subaru stopped in his tracks after hearing Beatrice's call, who was right next to him holding his hand. However, as if flicking away an insect, the witchbeast's tail whipped towards them, and Subaru had a premonition of Death in the face of it.

"Persevere—!"

"—Murak!"

Subaru and Beatrice made their judgments simultaneously. The effect of gravity lessened, causing them to become as light as cotton candy. And Subaru's whip simultaneously wrapped around the base of the Crimson Scorpion's tail.

In the next second, Subaru and Beatrice were flung through the air due to the swinging of the tail.

"Wha-"

"Pyyah?!"

They hadn't been flung into the air, but shaken off. After feeling as if they were floating through the air, they had immediately fallen to the ground and were now covered in sand.

If there had been a hard surface beneath them, even though they were as light as cotton candy right now, their bodies would have shattered due to the sheer power and force. Luckily, they had only had their breath knocked out of them since it was on the sand.

"We gotta give up on chasing after it—!"

"—ッ."

The Crimson Scorpion continued to target Subaru and Beatrice, who were still buried in the sand. However, the light of the rainbow cut in between them, preventing it from making a move, and the heat and sixfold light clashed with each other.

Every time the light was scattered, a sea of destruction was left in its wake, and the shockwave it caused kicked up a sandstorm under the clear sky. The destructive power of each was equal; Julius had speed on his side, but the Crimson Scorpion was rather resilient.

"—Spit Spit! Shit, something needs to be done!"

"—Spit Spit! Figure out a way to win then, I suppose!"

—Together, Subaru and Beatrice got themselves out of the sand and spat the grains of sand in their mouths out at the same time. With tears in their eyes, they tried to figure out how to get the sound of Subaru's voice as well as Julius' rainbow light to reach Shaula.

There were three possibilities they could rely on—

The first was for Julius to suddenly awaken to an even greater power and defeat the Crimson Scorpion in a single blow. This one was a bit unpleasant but would be a win nonetheless.

The second was for Subaru and Beatrice to successfully complete their new spell and finish off the Crimson Scorpion, obtaining a win with their teamwork.

The third was for Emilia to suddenly drop down from the sky with love and peace in tow, bringing about world peace with her cuteness.

"I was really hoping for the third one to happen first, but..."

As has already been stated before, Subaru didn't believe that he was capable of successfully awakening, and it was unrealistic to expect Emilia to show up with the perfect timing.

That being the case, the best they could hope for was Julius suddenly becoming stronger.

“He’s already done that once, so I can’t expect too much from him…”

Julius and the Crimson Scorpion continued to fight at a speed that Subaru’s eyes could not follow. Pondering what to do next, Subaru stared at the devastation occurring right in front of him, the aftermath of which was capable of turning him to ash if he got too close.

The only thing he could do in the end was to fight with all his cards. If that was the case, then the least he could do as the complete Natsuki Subaru was to exhaust every card in his arsenal.

“Think-think-think….”

His brain going at full throttle, going over that which was not simply a hopeless dream or observation, he found something with substance. As he was searching through his hand for something to use, Subaru realized something.

He still had one last card he had yet to use.

“—Beako!”

“Did you think of something, I suppose!”

Beatrice responded to Subaru’s call with eagerness, as if she had been waiting for it. Blessed to have such an understanding partner, Subaru clasped her hand with his once again and nodded vigorously with a “Yeah!.”

“—Here, I’m gonna use all of the strength this journey gave me!”

2

Ragged, ragged, scattering away.

Crumbling, crumbling, flaking away.

Tired, tired, fading away.

Ragged, crumbling, and tired, everything in the distance was shimmering.

The fierce light of a rainbow flashed in front of her eyes, and, following her instincts, she swung her arms to get rid of it.

Her two bright crimson pincers glowed, containing enough power to burn anything in existence regardless of whether or not the object was rock or steel, and could cut through them as easily as cutting through butter.

“Buuuuuut, I’m not really sure what “butter” even is, either.”

Talking about things based off of secondhand knowledge, she continued to chase after that shimmering target. However, this place was a vast sea of sand without any obstacles, so there was no way for her to corner them. But whether this was a place where there was nowhere to run or where she had to fight from a distance, she had complete mastery in such things—

“After all, snipers are always alone, right?”

This was also something she had heard before. A sniper was a sharpshooter who needed to wait patiently before completely finishing off their prey. And so she also chose to wait. With the pride of a sniper in her heart, she continued to wait.

Day after day, night after night, she gazed into the horizon, forever waiting, looking at those who attempted to come to the tower.

There were rules there; rules that bound her to the tower.

She was upset about that, but she also thought that if there were no rules at all, her forgetful self would have forgotten various things in no time.

Whether it was the places they went together, the words they spoke to each other, the time they spent together, or the feelings and thoughts they shared, they would all be forgotten.

“Aaaaaah… That would be sooo terrible.”

Everything had moved on and left her behind.

Because she had been asked to wait, she could wait for as long as they desired, but since she was waiting, she couldn’t help but hope that the person she was waiting for would come back. As long as they came back, she could wait forever.

Therefore—

“I was sooooooooo happy that Master came back.”

Because, one by one, everyone disappeared. When he came back, she wasn’t sure if she could believe the words he said.

Did she wait because she believed in him, or did she continue to wait simply out of habit? She wasn’t even able to answer this question. She had never even thought about it before.

There was no reason to think about it, either, for before it had disappeared, they made true on their promise.

“Aaaah, I’m sooooo happyyy, Master.”

So, she hoped he would never leave. She thought it would be great if he could stay here forever. Because she was no longer alone and could graduate from being a sniper, she thought she should receive an appropriate reward for graduating.

“Master, I don’t want to be left behind agaaain… Aaaah, I also… want to be loveeeed.”

Everything had moved on and left her far behind.

Therefore, this time, she wanted to follow him, no matter where or when.

So—

“I hope you…can come to love me. —Master.”

3

The Crimson Scorpion twitched, the glow of its crimson shell growing ever brighter.

It was possible that it was an increased reaction of its Warning Color, but in the eyes of Subaru, that didn't seem to be the case. It was as if that crimson hue came about due to Shaula crying.

It was the expression of the true thoughts of the being named Shaula, who had locked her feelings away for the past 400 years and kept her promise to stay in the tower.

Red was the color of fervor, of passion, of unrestrainable Love. The crimson hue of the Crimson Scorpion must've been brought about by its strong desire to love and be loved by the person it loved.

"—AFTER ALL, EVERYONE SAYS THAT SCORPIO WOMEN ARE EXTREMELY LOVING!!"

Kicking up a lot of sand with his own two feet, Subaru shouted that out with a burst of enthusiasm and brought his hand up to fling his whip with his broad shoulders.

"…"

He aimed at the one whose back to turned to him and was fighting and fooling around with Julius, the Crimson Scorpion. He used his whip to announce his presence, seeing that she was so busy, but the Master she longed for was standing right there. Since she was making advances on another man, he had no choice but to say some nasty things to her—

"SEEING YOU GO AFTER ANOTHER MAN LIKE THIS REALLY MAKES ME SAD AND WOUNDS MY MANLY HEART, YOU KNOW—!!"

"Subaru's way of speaking is disgusting as usual, in fact!"

Subaru unleashed his whip and landed a perfect hit, having been pushed onwards by Beatrice's harsh words from behind his head—it had been beautifully wrapped around the base of the Crimson

Scorpion’s tail.

However, just this alone would still lead to what had happened not too long ago where they had been buried into the sand.

The Crimson Scorpion, perhaps because it did not think much of their game of tug-of-war, instead focused on the fight with Julius, completely ignoring Subaru and co. altogether.

Subaru and everyone else was weak. —It would take advantage of that idea.

“EL VITA—!!”

“GAAAAAH!!”

Beatrice chanted the magic spell, causing the effects of it to pour over Subaru’s whole body, his legs sinking into the sand due to the sheer weight.

In contrast to Murak which mitigated the effects of gravity, Vita increased the effects of gravity—Subaru’s weight class had been raised to the Yokozuna level of the Makuuchi division of sumo wrestling, allowing him to compete with the tail of the Crimson Scorpion.

Naturally, that alone would not be enough. It could enhance the effects of gravity, but only up to 220 or so pounds (100 kilograms.) That was nowhere near enough to compete with the monstrous strength of Shaula, who could easily pick up and carry a dragon carriage.

Therefore—

“—Time for the climax! DO IT!!”

With both hands pulling hard on the whip and his feet firmly planted in the sand, Subaru let out a loud cry. In the next instant, Subaru’s body, which was being pulled up by the brute strength of the Crimson Scorpion’s tail, returned to the ground.

The obvious reason as to why was because the strength of the Crimson Scorpion and Subaru—no, Subaru and the others—was evenly matched.

"—ッッ."

Now in front of Subartu, still standing firmly in place, was the Hungry Horse King, who had broken into their game of tug-of-war with its huge, strange-looking body. Moreover, it wasn't just the Hungry Horse King that had joined this unprecedented game of tug-of-war.

Courtesan bears, winged moles, and suspicious serpents all joined the battle. All of these witchbeasts, who were supposed to be Subaru's enemies, were giving him a helping hand in this battle.

The cause of this scene was none other than—

"...Really, you're such a slave driverrr!"

It was the voice of a girl enveloped in a weary and unhappy atmosphere. The owner of that voice was a young girl whose cheeks were devoid of blood and having trouble breathing—Meili.

Tightening her lovely face, she let out a long, hard sigh. Then, yelling out a "Hoorah!" and clapping loudly—

"Okay! Come here, everyone. Watching from the side is a waaasteee."

With a single clap, and, after a single beat, the sea of sand began to rumble. Continuously pouring into this area were witchbeasts, whose footsteps and roars could be heard. This environment was well-suited for witchbeasts, and the one who had taken control of it was the witchbeast Master—no, she could no longer be called that.

The massive phenomenon occurring wasn't caused by a mere witchbeast Master. Using the Divine Protection of Magic Manipulation, she guided and took control of the witchbeasts of the Augria Sand Dunes, so the title of witchbeast Master no longer suited her.

It was as if the Mother of witchbeasts, who had left a trail of destruction in the southern empire, had returned. She once again made use of her skills to cause a stampede for this battle, turning it into an all-out war.

"…"

Though Meili wore a painful expression on her face, she still managed to stay conscious and had recovered enough to participate in the final battle. Naturally, there was a little trick behind it.

Subaru had, naturally, used Cor Leonis to distribute the damage Meili had taken to another. —Sharing it had been the last card in his hand.

Not with Emilia, not with Beatrice, and not with Ram, either. Nor was it shared with Julius, Echidna, Patrasche, Meili, or the sleeping Rem. It was the one who had come with them to conquer the Augria Sand Dunes, their last ally—

"—Sorry to get you involved, Gyan! Give me a hand!!"

The earth dragon Gyan, who had been left on the sixth floor of the distant watchtower, was also within the range of Cor Leonis' influence, so, as a result, Subaru made the decision to share that burden with the earth dragon.

The decision to do so was heartbreaking for Subaru, but what was even more heartbreaking for him was that Gyan met the conditions of Cor Leonis for those who wished to share his burdens.

This meant that, just like Beatrice and his other friends, Gyan wanted to support Subaru's actions. He was grateful for the spirit of the theatrical version of Gyan, transferring most of Meili's burdens to the earth dragon through himself. This was the trick that allowed Meili to get back in the game.

It was also the main reason why the Crimson Scorpion lost in the competition of strength. And also—

"—This will be the cause of your defeat, Shaula."

Subaru had taken command of the battle, and even used the power of witchbeasts and an earth dragon, and, as he spoke, the Crimson Scorpion lifted its legs up.

The Finest of Knights did not let this opportunity go to waste. Unleashing a rainbow slash, Julius cut the tail of the Crimson Scorpion, who had been struggling against them in a battle of strength, clean off.

The severed tail let off an explosion, much like it had earlier, spreading a mass of destruction throughout the area, but it was unable to get through the rainbow light. Its trump card having been blocked, it violently swung his large pincers down at Julius' back.

However, its attack appeared to have been born from a feeling of agitation and impatience due to losing the battle of strength and having its tail cut off. As a result, it was not able to overpower the knight who had defeated the first Sword Saint and overcame his limits.

"—Hiss…!"

The slash drew an arc through the air, beautifully slicing through the vulnerable joint on the left pincer. Still trying to regain its balance after its left pincer got sliced off, it attempted to chop Julius in half with its remaining right pincer.

Right as the pincer closed, threatening to bisect his slender body from the waist—

"—Al Cranvel."

A moment before the pincer snapped shut, an aurora of light enveloped Julius' entire body in a single breath. As soon as he deactivated his rainbow armor, that aurora of light let off an explosion inside the pincer that was about to close, blowing it to shreds.

"—ッッ."

Pushed by the shockwave of the explosion, the massive body of the Crimson Scorpion flew into the air. The witchbeast flew through the air, spinning, before finally falling into the sand, its tail and arms lost and covered in injuries.

The other witchbeasts quickly swarmed around it and pinned down the eight-legged Crimson Scorpion. Still resisting its fate, it turned its large head, barring its sharp teeth.

Taking the Crimson Scorpion's resilience into account, it would not be surprising for it to suddenly come up with a new move at this very moment, spurred on to achieve new growth due to its current predicament, however—

"—This is the end, Shaula."

Subaru stood right in front of the writhing, struggling, Crimson Scorpion so that its compound eyes could see him fully. With no weapons left and its legs pinned down, it was in a rather sad state. It would be easy to strike the final blow now, but that was not what he wanted.

Subaru was not sure what the correct answer was despite being driven to this point—

"Meili."

"...If I had not been here, I wonder what you and everyone else would've doneeeee, mister."

Having been called by name, Meili sighed and walked over to the Crimson Scorpion. She stood next to Subaru and snapped her fingers with a sigh. She then had its compound eyes focus on herself.

"Who are you? The crimson, scary Miss Scorpion? Or are you…"

"…"

"Or are you someone else, I wonder?"

Having been asked such a question, the compound eyes of the Crimson Scorpion gradually slowed down. Gazing at Meili, its compound eyes showed signs of wavering before turning its gaze to Subaru. Those aggressive, compound red eyes slowly changed color.

"Shaula."

The crimson hue of its shell slowly began to fade away. Its eyes turned green once more, its shell went back to being black, and it slowly began to calm down, and finally—

"—Shaula!"

At last—

4

Ragged, ragged, scattering away.

Crumbling, crumbling, flaking away.

Tired, tired, fading away.

Ragged, crumbling, and tired, everything in the distance was shimmering.

Ragged, crumbling, and tired, everything shimmered in the distance.

Even though she was left behind, even though her memories faded somewhat, they still shined so brightly.

Because they were so precious to her, she desperately tried to preserve them.

"…"

"Master, do you still remember? You told meee, 'I'll definitely return, so wait here for me', and then you disappearedddd."

In a seated position, Shaula hugged her knees, inclined her head, and asked like so.

Subaru shook his head at her, who seemed to be thinking about nostalgic memories of her past.

"I don't remember. And I've already told you I don't know, right? Don't keep making me repeat myself!"

"Weeeeelllll, it can't be helped then. After allllll, Master is so much better at forgetting things than me. Master and I reallllly are similar."

"That creeps me out! No, I admit that we have a similar way of speaking, though."

That said, it was only the fact that she was using words from Subaru's world that he unconsciously felt a sense of closeness with her. He was not as charming, cute, or spirited as she was. He wasn't willing to wait 400 years for someone who had abandoned him.

"After all, I'm an impatient guy who wants immediate results. Well, if I could at least be with the other person, I might be able to endure it…"

"Aaaaaaaaah, Master, you're no good like this! Ready? There's a saying for this: 'The key to love is patience!'"

"Aren't you confusing this with 'The key to fashion is patience'?! Isn't that like the slogan of a tribute woman rather than a devoted woman?!"

"It's all about realizing the love swirling around in the depths of my heart. You can even laugh at this sad, pathetic woman. That kind of smiling face is also verrrrrry attractiveee…mmm."

"Nope, I'm not laughing at all. Look, I'm starting to tear up."

"Let me see, let me seeeeee."

When Subaru pointed at his face and said that, Shaula got up and walked over to him. Shaula, who had jumped up enthusiastically, came close enough to where he could feel her breath, so he once again examined her face that had fine features from up close.

Her shining eyes were large and long, and she had a finely-shaped nose between them. She had long, slender eyelashes, and her skin was so soft and firm that it was hard to imagine that she had been living in the sea of sand for so long. Although hidden by her spirited and varied expressions, her body as a whole was rather beautiful instead of cute.

Given the name of a star, she had been destined to wait in this place for the return of the one she loved.

“Huh? Master, are your eyes glistening, or are you crying a little?”

“...Your Master…is a piece of shit. I’m gonna punch him in the face if I ever get the chance.”

“Then I’ll have to witness it with superrrr-superrrr mixed feelings! What sort of horrible situation would it be if Master KO’d Master!... Jeez.”

Lips quivering, Subaru squeezed his eyes shut. His hot emotions rose, pushing past his eyelids and falling down his cheeks. Seeing those tears fall, Shaula gently whispered “Jeez.”—

“…”

While Subaru’s eyes were closed, his cheek was suddenly attacked by a wet sensation. When he opened his eyes, he saw Shaula’s face pulling away from his. Her fingertips on her lips, she mischievously smiled with her red tongue slightly sticking out.

“...Master’s body fluids…are salty and sweet.”

“Saying it like this...”

“The way I say it…doesn’t change anything at all. Ah, I always express my feelings with my whole body and soul, you know. — Master, I love youuu.”

I love you. She had often told him that. Once he understood the context, it was impossible for Subaru to say that it was a meaningless statement. Shaula said “I love you” as often as she could because her heart was overflowing with love.

Always, always, the words she wanted to convey overflowed from within. For 400 years, she had been waiting, wanting to love him, wanting to be loved by him.

“I love youuu, Master.”

“...I…won’t tell you I love you.”

“I know, I knowww. Because Master is a bad guy, is thin-skinned, and shy, but this is what I like about you. I’m crazy about you. Only you.”

“…”

Time had left her, and the role she had been assigned had bound her like chains. When she had almost hurt to one she loved, she cried and begged for Death. Instead of hurting him with her own hands, she would rather lose it all.

What did he say to her, who was in tears? He said he would never allow her to continue to cry like that.

“I…will not say that to you…I love you…words like that.”

“...It’s okay. I’ll keep saying the words Master won’t say. Master will definitely want to say them to me sometime in the future.”

“Sometime in the future, you say… That’s a looooong time. 400 years of waiting…can you really do that?”

“Is it? 400 years went by soooo quicklyyy.”

Waiting for so long, she had once cried out in anguish at that fact. Having been left behind by the passage of time, her love holding her hostage, she cried out that she was lonely.

Now she had no idea that a world had once existed where she had spilled her heart out. Therefore, concealed behind her spirited attitude, how much emotion had been swirling around in her own heart?

Subaru had swore to never make her cry. And he wasn’t going to break that vow even now. That’s why—he hoped she could cry out. He wished she would cry. But now that wasn’t going to be enough.

As long as she cried, bawled her eyes out, cried out, and howled, Natsuki Subaru, who wasn't her Master or anything like that, would run with all his heart and soul to her side to stop her tears.

And yet—

"A mere 400 years…is almost like the day after tomorowww."

The Crimson Scorpion was nowhere to be seen, and in its place was a beautiful girl, smiling.

She was so beautiful that he could not help but become speechless. So ephemeral that it seemed as if she would collapse at the touch of his hand. Shaula's soft cheeks flushed red as she said "because" with the look of a maiden in love.

Continuing, the maiden in love said "because—"

"—I also loved waiting for you."

"…"

"Hey, Master. That's why…one day…again—"

5

Ragged, ragged, scattering away.

Crumbling, crumbling, flaking away.

Tired, tired, fading away.

Ragged, crumbling, and tired, everything in the distance was shimmering.

Ragged, crumbling, and tired, everything shimmered in the distance.

"—Shaula."

A part of her shell fell off, crumbling and flaking away, and turned into dust. It didn't stop there, but spread elsewhere, her whole body peeling off and turning into dust.

The tail and pincers that had been cut off, the eight legs being held down by the witchbeasts, and the head that Natsuki Subaru held in his arms, everything—

"...Did she…fulfill her purpose, I wonder?"

While Subaru attempted to bring all of the pieces of her existence that had been diminishing together in his arms, Beatrice uttered that to him in a hushed voice.

The adorable spirit was listlessly gazing at the witchbeast powerlessly crumbling away—no, it was someone just like her who had given their life to the role that fate provided them.

His brain refused to comprehend what Beatrice had just said. But he instinctively understood. —This was not Death.

This was, after being entrusted as the Stars-Keeper of the Pleiades Watchtower, the inevitable end that she had met today.

"Then...we..."

If they had not come here, she might have been able to exist here for eternity. Forever, in this sand tower, waiting for a person who would never return—

"—Subaru, you should be of the understanding that this assumption…is insulting to her."

"…"

"And so, what you should do…is not live in regret."

Sheathing his knight's sword back into its scabbard, the knight tidied up his appearance, which had been dirtied by blood and sand, and spoke such words.

It was a ruthless thing to say, but he was right nonetheless. At that, Subaru gritted his teeth and took a deep breath to hide his hatred for that correctness.

Then he hugged the one who had been alone for so long tighter. She who had been left behind and spent such a long time in this place. Slowly, not being alone, she was being sent off by her one and only.

Subaru, Beatrice, Julius, and Meili were all there.

In the distance, people could be seen running here from the tower. They must've been their other companions. Everyone was gathering together for her who had been alone for so long.

"But, even if Master were here alone, that would be enough."

The image of her saying such words, not being demanding at all, appeared in front of his eyes, which slowly began welling up with tears. The witchbeast's fangs gently brushed the tears that were falling down Subaru's cheeks.

The sharp fangs that seemed as if they could destroy anything, intimately, tenderly, and gently caressed Subaru, who was the most fragile of all. And then—

"—Ah."

The arms that had been wrapped around her suddenly no longer felt her. Crumbling, the shell of the Crimson Scorpion that had lost its weight scattered into dust. As he watched the black particles scatter over the sea of sand, Subaru opened his mouth wide.

"Shaula..."

"Yes, Master."

"Shaula…Shaula…Shaula."

"Did you call for me? Master."

"Shaula, Shaula..."

"Mmmmm, ahhhhh, being loved sooo much by Master like this makes me feel soooooo embarasseedddd!”

Closing his eyes, the sound of her voice responding to his call rang in his ears. And yet, now, she no longer existed anywhere.

“—Ah.”

Subaru crouched down to the ground, scratching at the sea of sand in front of him. The sound of someone’s voice reached his ears. He didn’t know whose voice it was. He didn’t have the time to confirm who it was, but simply looked up at where it came from and widened his eyes.

Still covered in black particles, a mound of sand shook slightly, and something crawled out from it. It was rather small, about the size of a palm. The small creature with a crimson shell swung its two pincers in order to get through the sand and then expertly pulled its body from the sand with its tail—

“…”

It skittered over to Subaru, who was on his knees, and brushed against his sandy hand. The mere act of brushing against him seemed to have been her leaving behind a trace of her charm.

6

Ragged, ragged, scattering away.

Crumbling, crumbling, flaking away.

Tired, tired, fading away.

Ragged, crumbling, and tired, everything in the distance was shimmering.

Ragged, crumbling, and tired, everything shimmered in the distance.

—Everything shimmered, because you were there.

“A mere 400 years…is almost like the day after tomorowww.”

“Because I also loved waiting for you.”

“Hey, Master. That’ why, someday, again…”

“I hope you’ll meet me again someday.”

“This time…is it my turn to wait for you? Instead of the woman doing the chasing, the woman is being chased.”

“Master, this promise is…very, very important.”

“This time…please don’t forget it.”

7

“You’re an…idiot.”

His voice trembling, Subaru muttered that, as if saying he could never forget that.

Then he picked up the being tickling the back of his hand and cupped it with both hands.

As if it were a little embarrassed, the tiny scorpion trembled, accepting his action.

Its shell was a bright shade of red, so vivid that it seemed like it could burn one’s eyes—oh so red.

—That was something that not even the span of 400 years could fade, the color of Love.

Chapter 90:
Hero

1

—In complete silence, Subaru's shoulders trembled, the tiny scorpion that had emerged from beneath the dust in his hands.

He'd wanted to save her. He'd wanted to take her out of this lonely sand tower. He'd promised to help her, but now he couldn't keep his promise. Natsuki Subaru always made promises he couldn't keep.

"…"

Not a single soul could utter a word to Subaru, squatting in the sand in silence.

Beatrice, who was beside him, and Julius and Meili, who were behind him, could not find the right words to say.

The scorpion, which had been in his cupped hands, crawled up Subaru's arm and perched itself on his shoulder, brushing against his neck as if it were trying to comfort him, who had even forgotten to shed tears and weep.

Subaru didn't have a clue as to what the tiny scorpion even was. What did this scorpion, which had emerged from the remains of the Crimson Scorpion, have to do with Shaula? Or was she this scorpion?—

"—That's…impossible."

Subaru had exchanged words with Shaula in her last moments. However, it was not clear whether the conversation actually happened or if he was just imagining it all as she was passing away.

However, Subaru harbored a sad conviction that it was indeed the case. Shaula was gone. Her existence was tied to the very rules of the Pleaides Watchtower, and, ultimately, much like Reid or the Monolith of the third floor, was like a stage prop for a Trial.

As a result, once the watchtower had fulfilled its role, she had to leave. She had followed the role of a Stage Prop until the very end, and for her to merely be a Stage Prop opened up a hole in Subaru's heart.

"…"

That frank smile, the annoyance he felt because of her desire to interact with him, and her unfamiliar voice calling him "Master, Master" with deep affection, all of it was gone.

If Shaula were to cry out and scream that she did not want to disappear, then Subaru would do everything in his power to stop it from happening, and would sacrifice himself time and time again in order to save her.

However, that wasn't what she wanted.

Smiling, she told him she wanted to meet him again someday, but then she disappeared shortly after. He wasn't sure, but—

"I know... I will meet you again someday. So…"

With a cheerful smile, she fulfilled her wish to tell him she loved him. For that reason—

"—So… Goodbye for now, Shaula."

Her dreams, which had turned into crimson dust, were stolen away by the sand wind along with her remains. Subaru let out a sigh as he watched. And, as if to brighten the mood, the scorpion, which had crawled up to his neck, was playing with his ears with its pincers.

"OUCH!"

Feeling a sharp pain, he felt as if he were being urged not to feel down about it. With tears in his eyes because of the pain, Subaru nodded with an "I know, I know" and grabbed the scorpion on his neck and tried to disengage it from his ears. However—

“OUCH! No, I got it already, so you can let me go now...OW! Hey…this…is making my ear bleed...this guy! This guy’s…not letting go...!”

“...What are you doinnnng, mister?”

Subaru’s ear currently in its grasp, he panicked since he couldn’t manage to peel the mini crimson scorpion away from it. When he was about to lose part of his ear, it was Meili who came to the rescue.

Astounded by what was happening, she quickly moved over to where Subaru was and grabbed the mini crimson scorpion with her little hand.

“Just because it’s smallll, it’s stilllll a witchbeast, you know, so if you let it get close to your face, it could start chomping on your eyes or nose before you knew what hit youuu.”

“Eyes and nose?! But…this little guy isn’t like that.”

“…”

Saying that, Meili plopped the mini crimson scorpion onto the top of her head. The little thing didn’t do anything naughty to her head, unlike what it did to Subaru earlier. It appeared as if it were under the influence of her Divine Protection of Magic Manipulation, thus hiding its aggression.

Needless to say, this was proof that the mini crimson scorpion was a witchbeast that could be tamed by Meili—as well as proof that the little thing didn’t contain Shaula’s ego.

“Subaru, let me heal your wounds then, I suppose.”

Then, with his eyes still cast downward, Beatrice tugged on his sleeve and tenderly looked his body over. In consideration of her, he bit his lip and nodded strongly. He knew he couldn’t stay in the sea of sand forever.

“—Subaru! Everyone!”

In the distance, the big door to the watchtower swung open, and Emilia came rushing towards them. It was clear that she hadn’t had an easy time due to how messed up her clothes looked. They would all be able to chat together, including about that as well.

They had too many things to talk about as well as too many farewells to give.

2

“...Shaula…was someone who always worked reaaaaally hard.”

After she heard the details and found out the reason why Shaula was no longer there, Emilia stared out into the sea of sand where her remains had scattered, mourning her loss in her own ladylike way.

And then she gently patted the mini crimson scorpion on Meili’s head with her white fingers. It was rather accepting of Emilia’s fingers despite being ordered by Meili to behave well, and it seemed to find it quite pleasant even though she could not see a change in its facial expression.

“Lady Emilia, what went on on the first floor? Were you able to safely complete the Trial?”

After hearing about what happened to Shaula, Emilia looked at Subaru, whose face was sunken, with grief painted on her face. However, it was Julius who’d made the first move to change the subject. And after hearing his question, she answered him with an “I think so.”

“Mm, it was reaaaaally hard because I didn’t understand it, but I more or less completed it, I think... Oh! Do you completely remember me, Julius?”

“—. That’s…right. I can certainly remember who you are now.”

Emilia asked that question nervously, and Julius replied with a look of surprise on his face. Whilst covering his mouth his hand, Julius said “Lady Emilia” once more, confirming that the Emilia who had previously gone missing had returned, and then nodded.

“Beatrice! Do you remember me? How about you, Meili?”

“...I remember you, so don’t worry, I suppose. It was as if I had completely forgotten you until someone told me I’d forgotten you, in fact. It’s such a scary feeling, I suppose.”

“I also completellly remember youuu. How about you, Big Sis? Do you remember me and all of the promises we made?”

“Absolutely. I’ll never forget them. That’s a relief. I had a feeling everything would be okay since Ram and Patrasche remembered me too...”

After hearing Beatrice’s and Meili’s answers, Emilia gave a sigh of relief. Subaru called out to their response with “Wait.”

And with everyone’s attention drawn to himself, Subaru let out—

“That’s super awesome news, but I wanna properly make sense of it. In short? Everyone…can properly remember everything about Emilia-tan now? That means…uhh...”

“—Miss Ram…has slain Lye Batenkaitos.”

“…”

Subaru widened his eyes after Julius interrupted him and made that declaration.

Lye Batenkaitos—one of the three Sin Archbishops of Gluttony, as well one of Subaru and Ram’s mortal enemies. He was also an enemy in this tower who had caused them much hardship with his extreme violence in addition to eating Emilia’s Name.

After being told that he had been slain, Subaru’s throat dried up. If Lye Batenkaitos had been slain, that meant—

“Does that mean the things he stole will be given back…? If that’s true—”

If Emilia’s Name had returned, that means the other effects of Gluttony’s Authority will also come undone.

Batenkaitos, who had pretended to be a Gourmet, must have eaten beyond his fill. If everything that had been stolen had been returned, that would also affect the people in the Watergate City, Priestella—

“…”

Thinking about such things, Subaru shook his head. He knew he shouldn’t deceive himself like this. He knew he shouldn’t bottle up his feeling and keep bullshitting himself.

Natsuki Subaru, at this very moment, harbored an excessively selfish and egotistical hope. If Lye Batenkaitos had been slain, and the influence of his Authority had come undone, then—

“—Rem…can anyone remember her?”

She was a girl who had been forgotten by the world, leaving a hole in Subaru’s heart because of her absence. They had gone on this journey to take back what had been stolen—and for Subaru, the purpose of this journey was simply to save Rem.

For the watchtower, where they had gone to obtain wisdom for that purpose, to be attacked by Gluttony, was rather ironic, but it did not matter as long as they got what went there for.

Subaru looked at everyone, fueled by such hopes. In response to his question, however—

“…I’m reaaalllly sorry, Subaru. But I still can’t remember who Rem is.”

“—! Why not?!”

“Betty can’t either, I suppose. I still can’t recall who Ram’s sister is, in fact. Moreover…”

"Moreover? Moreover, what? What else is there?"

Emilia had denied it, and Beatrice followed, leaving Subaru in a state of shock.

His budding hopes had been shot down, so Subaru rushed over to Beatrice, who had yet to continue her words. Desperation in his eyes, she pointed towards Julius behind her with her white chin.

"I still can't remember Julius, in fact. Perhaps not all of the harm Gluttony caused has been undone, I suppose."

"Julius…"

Emilia agreed with Beatrice's opinion with a nod of her head. Meili, on the other hand, shrugged since she didn't even know Julius before his Name was taken, and Emilia had no reason to lie, either.

It was clear that Rem and Julius' Names had not been returned—

"As far as that is concerned, I have an idea as to why my Name hasn't been returned."

Whilst Subaru was still in a state of confusion, it was none other than Julius who uttered that. And then, after looking back at Subaru with narrowed eyes, he continued.

It was—

"—The Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, Roy Alphard, was captured alive. To be exact, he was the one who bereaved me of my Name. I suppose that is why my Name has yet to return."

3

Passing through the grand entrance to the Pleaides Watchtower was the dragon carriage that had brought Subaru and the others to the sand tower and left on the fifth floor. Next to it was a person waving at them.

"Long time no see, Emilia, Natsuki."

“...Could that be Lady Anastasia?”

Widening his eyes, Subaru stared intently at the smiling, slowly waving figure.

He confirmed that her movements, attitude, and even her expressions were all natural. Was that the artificial spirit, Echidna, who could reproduce a persons nature and act exactly like the original?—No, it wasn’t a reproduction.

This was her ORIGINAL character. He couldn’t really call it a reproduction now. That is to say—

“Anastasia! Did you wake up?”

“Yep. It seems like I took a really long nap and made you guys worry. Echidna told me about the things that happened these past few months, too.”

“Is Echidna alright, too?”

“How can I put it? For now, other than the thought of blamin’ herself, there are no thoughts like ‘Let me just die.’”

As Anastasia answered Emilia’s question, the scarf around her neck moved, and the white fox lowered her head as if in apology.

“Blamin’ yourself like that. I’ve already told ya before. It was our choice, so there’s no need for ya ta be depressed, Echidna. Ya think so too, don’t’cha, Julius?”

“Me?...Yes. If I am speaking honestly, the decision you made made me quite worried, so I am afraid I cannot give you an answer to that, Lady Anastasia.”

“I feel a bit embarrassed, but I’d still like ta ask: what do ya mean by that?”

“Hearing the reason why you shut yourself within yourself is…all I could ask for as your knight.”

Unraveling his lips, Julius answered gracefully. Hearing his answer, Anastasia covered her mouth with her hand and said “Forget it, I’m not going to force you to say it” with a smile.

It was a very harmonious conversation. If you were to say that these two were like a master and a servant, then there would be none who could say otherwise.

“Did Anastasia really forget about Julius? Because they seem to be getting along pretty well...”

“I really did forget about the relationship we had before... This in itself, for me, is already makin’ me totally angry and is unbearable...! But...!”

“She’s been controlling her feelings, really, so she’s acting like that. Fortunately, after being with Julius for the past two months, I can say a few things about him. It appears that I was born for this very purpose.”

“...You…also seem to be going off in an odd direction, in fact.”

Beatrice spoke a bit gently to Anastasia, whose lips were quivering, and, by extension, Echidna, who was around her neck. Hearing that, Echidna snorted her fox nose and nodded with a “yeah.”

Echidna, the artificial spirit without any history, and who had gone to the watchtower in the place of Anastasia, also had her own thoughts and appeared to have been able to come to a positive conclusion.

It seemed as if Anastasia getting her own body back safely was part of it. The taking care of her many problems, as well as her regret she felt for shutting herself off in her own Od, and so on, had yet to be resolved—

“It’d be insensitive for us to poke around at their affairs, huh.”

The problems between Anastasia and Echidna should be discussed by them alone. Of course, if they asked for his assistance, Subaru would gladly exert himself for their sakes and assist them in solving their problems. It would be safe to say that the time they spent on this two month journey had fostered such a bond.

"—Um, Anastasia. I'm sooooo happy that you got back safely and are suuuper talkative, but…"

"I know. You wanna know what happened to the Sin Archbishop that Julius defeated? He did this and that, and then chucked him into the dragon carriage."

"Julius did this and that…"

Anastasia shrugged her shoulders and then gestured at the dragon carriage behind her. Subaru silently gazed at the dragon carriage next to Emilia, who was pondering her words. Within it was Roy Alphard, the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony.

"…"

Before he entered the dragon carriage, he stroked the neck of the earth dragon—Gyan, who was attached to the carriage. With its thick legs, the earth dragon from the Agaress species played a crucial role in the final battle with Shaula, and had unexpectedly led Subaru and the others to victory.

This wasn't the absolute best result. Nevertheless, it didn't undermine his consideration for Gyan. Not to mention that Meili was able to survive thanks to Gyan's spirit.

"I was totally saved thanks to you… In the future, no matter what happens, please continue to help me out."

"…"

Gyan, whose thick neck was being stroked, flared his nostrils, as if saying that that would be a heavy burden to carry. Subaru smiled bitterly, put on a serious face, and then got on the dragon carriage. Then, after giving a nod to Emilia and the others, he peered inside.

"—That's him."

The atmosphere full of tension, Subaru peered into the dragon carriage, and after seeing what was inside, was shocked by what he saw. Alphard was indeed inside of the dragon carriage. However, the method in which he had been detained was a bit different from what Subaru had imagined.

Roy Alphard, with his eyes rolled back revealing the whites of his eyes, was covered in a black crystalline material, effectively detaining—no, sealing him.

“It’s a Sin Archbishop...so just preventing them from moving wouldn’t be enough, right? That’s why I rigorously solidified it to the best of my ability.”

“This solidification thing...what’s the principle behind it?”

“The principle…is that it is an application of Yin Magic, I suppose. Using Shamak to separate them from their consciousness, it is then solidified like that... It’s a very ruthless way of doing it, in fact.”

“So this black thing is like a chunk of Shamak...?”

After Subaru heard Beatrice’s explanation, he was a bit shocked and then looked at the seal once more. Shamak was arguably Subaru’s most trustworthy magic before he formed a contract with Beatrice, but its effects and the way Julius used it as a means of sealing someone could only be described as amazing.

Seeing the way Subaru reacted, Julius said “Please don’t misunderstand me.”

“It’s nothing…it’s not a technique I invented or anything. This exact technique is used to make the world’s most famous seal. Though there is a huge difference in the scale.”

“The most famous in the world... You mean that one?”

“—The Witch of Envy…right?”

Emilia, who was looking at the sealed Alphard, said that. Julius gave a deep nod, confirming what she’d said. The seal used on Alphard had used the same technique that had sealed the Witch of Envy for the past 400 years nearby, east of the watchtower.

In other words, the words of Julius, who had created the seal using a tried and true method, could be said to be more than reliable enough. But that wasn't the question that needed to be asked.

"The question is…why do you want to keep this guy alive?"

"Subaru..."

Emilia, gazing at the sealed Alphard, said that to Subaru whilst lowering her eyebrows. His heart aching due to her gaze, Subaru turned his head and said, "That's just how it is, right?."

"When one of the Gluttony's…when Batenkaitos died, everyone remembered Emilia again. So, if this guy dies, then the rest of the Memories would..."

"There is no solid proof that they would come back. That is the biggest reason why I did not end his life."

"…"

"There is absolutely no doubt that Miss Ram slayed Batenkaitos. However, was Lady Emilia's Name returned merely because of that? Something else…perhaps he had given it back voluntarily...that possibility cannot be ruled out. If you make a hasty decision, everything could be lost."

Julius threw out one sound argument after another, as if reprimanding Subaru for his impatience. And his argument was so sound that Subaru could not even offer up a rebuttal. However—

"In that case...in that case, what about his Book of the Dead?"

Subaru proposed using a method that only existed in the watchtower as an alternative. When it came to revealing the true thoughts of a person, there was perhaps nothing more suitable than a Book of the Dead. Whatever the case may be, it was something that allowed one to experience another person's life.

"Even if you interrogate him, there's no guarantee that he will spill the beans. If that's the case, then it would be better to just use his Book of the Dead to reveal this guy's innermost thoughts."

"Subaru, that...I don't think that's a good idea. This kind of approach is…”

“But, I’m sure it’ll work. If we do it this way…”

“Ya know what? Can I interrupt ya for a sec?”

Emilia’s opinion differed from Subaru’s, who had suggested using his Book of the Dead. Not only that, but Subaru was just about to lay out his argument only for Anastasia to butt in with a raise of her hand.

Anastasia looked at Subaru, who looked embarrassed, and folded her hands on top of her chest—

“I heard from Echidna that there may be things missin’ in ‘em…like that Book of the Dead, so wouldn’t it be dangerous ta rely on it too much?”

“Dangerous…? why do you say so?”

“In any case, that’s somethin’ you’ve vividly experienced yourself, right, Natsuki? I heard that ya lost yourself while I was asleep.”

“…”

How many things could she possibly talk about with Echidna in such a short period of time? He wondered. Anastasia had hit him where it hurts.

However, the danger the Book of the Dead held did not necessarily coincide with Subaru’s amnesia. The disappearance of his memories did not come about due to the Book of the Dead. However, that did not completely negate the risk that Books of the Dead posed.

In fact, when he read Meili's Book of the Dead, some parts of Subaru’s mind and emotions were almost painted over by her personality.

What would have become of Subaru, who did not consider himself to be particularly powerful or mentally strong, if he had been a more impressionable person?

Who could say that a new Roy Alphard, who had inherited the soul of the former Roy Alphard, would not be born as a result?

“Then…then are you trying to say that it’s right to let this guy live, Anastasia? Even after everything he’s done up until now?!”

“If you’re talkin’ ‘bout what’s right or wrong, then I don’t think it’s right to keep a Sin Archbishop alive. If I could just kill this guy and get Julius’ Memories back, I think that’d be good. But I have a pet theory ‘bout that.”

“A pet theory…?”

“Whether someone should be alive or not, snatchin’ and robbin’ ‘em of it should only be done as a last resort. —A person who can easily kill another human being will not have a good end. It ain’t one of Hoshin’s Sayings but one of my own.”

Subaru’s eyes widened after hearing Anastasia’s words. In this fantasy world of swords and magic, there was such a rebellious, naïve way of thinking. But at the same time, the moral side of Subaru felt like she was right.

Subaru also believed that the less people died, the better. Not to mention his friends, it would even be better for his enemies to die less. However, that way of thinking was only limited to cases where the other person deserved mercy.

“He has caused so much misfortune for so many people, and has continued to torment everyone until this day… Do you still think we shouldn’t kill a guy like that, Anastasia?”

“When it’s the right time to kill someone, kill them. When I need ta make a decision, and the situation is critical, I will dirty my hands. But it ain’t right ta leave it ta impulse. —I think you’re that kinda guy, Natsuki.”

“That kind of…thing, is…”

“Because of that, you can shed tears for someone else who’s been lost… Rather than a heartless Natsuki who doesn’t shed blood nor tears, I would prefer ta get along with that kind of you forever.”

Anastasia ran her fingers across her cheek and pointed out Subaru's tears. Instantly, Subaru lowered his gaze, the wound in his heart due to losing Shaula aching. Anastasia's statement had been mean. But it was, without a doubt, quite effective.

"…Subaru, I also share the same opinion as Anastasia. Taking the sleeping Rem and Julius into account, I reaaaally want to hurry up and resolve things, but…"

"No need to worry about me, at least. Having gotten to this point, doing what is right is far more important than making hasty decisions… This also concerns my younger brother, after all."

They were on the brink of recovering Joshua's memories, who had been left in Priestella, and Julius was extremely cautious—but, as has already been mentioned above, that was the correct choice.

In order to make up for their pain and sense of loss, he was eager to get results. That was probably how Subaru felt right now.

"Let's summarize it then. Ana and Julius' opinion is that we should move Roy Alphard…the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, to the royal capital to find a way to save the victims of his Authority. He will not be pardoned after that, either. He shouldn't be able to escape capital punishment."

"There're limits ta how much they can pardon on the grounds of age. That's how it may end up in the end."

After seeing Subaru unclenching his fist, Echidna and Anastasia got the story in order.

Emilia had no objections to the treatment of Alphard. He would be taken to the royal capital in a sealed state, so, in a sense, he would be in the same position as Sirius, who had been taken there not too long ago.

"Do ya also think this'll be alright, Emilia?"

"Yeah. I also reaaally want to properly remember the people who have been forgotten."

When Anastasia asked her that to confirm her intentions, Emilia lifted her head and answered in a dignified manner.

Subaru couldn't form a rebuttal to her words, feeling somewhat hopeful and bitter at the same time, and then turned away from the Sin Archbishop in the dragon carriage and suddenly fell to his knees.

"Huh...?"

"Subaru! Ahh, jeez, I knew you were going too far, in fact! It's only natural for you to become like this when you've been in a bad mood for so long, I suppose!"

Subaru's head felt heavy, his vision was unclear, and she was supporting his shoulders whilst yelling angrily at him. Her adorable voice rang in his head and he realized he had consuming more energy than he thought. Wouldn't it be natural for her to say, "it's a natural result"?

He had died many times when he had amnesia, died many times afterwards, came face-to-face with himself in order to recover his memories, fought against the five obstacles that plagued the tower when he woke up, used his Authority to take on the burdens of his friends in battle, and lost Shaula at the end of it all—

He had exhausted his mind and body well past their limits. He had only been there for a few days but felt like he had spent more than five years in the tower.

"—Ah, I…"

"Subaru, relax, everything is going to be alright. Can you be good now and rest for a little while? Let's talk about it when you wake up. I have a loooot I want to say to you, too."

Subaru, who was exhausted and unable to move an inch, was being hugged from the front by Emilia. Her soft touch and sweet scent, which would normally cause his body to stiffen, were as effective as a powerful drug for him now, causing his consciousness to quickly descend into darkness.

If I die now in the darkness, would I go back to an earlier point where I was running around the tower trying to find a way to save Shaula? he wondered. But that was impossible. He half-understood it would be impossible, but he couldn't help but hope for it.

Slowly, Subaru's consciousness was swallowed up by the darkness.

4

"Heave-ho!"

Lifting up Subaru's unconscious body, Emilia sighed. Subaru's eyes were shut tight and was breathing laborious breaths, testaments of how hard he worked to solve the problems in the watchtower.

It showed just how desperate Subaru was to save Emilia and the others. When he rushed to her side when Batenkaitos took her Name and was forgotten by everyone, she was so happy.

She wanted to tell him that. She hoped Subaru would not blame himself too much. He was not responsible for what happened to Shaula. It was Emilia's and everyone else's responsibility, but to be more precise—

"—I think her Master, Flugel, was a reaaaally bad person."

He was the one who pushed the achievements of the Sage onto Shaula, and, binding her to the Pleiades Watchtower, was responsible for putting her to sleep.

Even if he was one of the three heroes who saved the world, since he made Subaru cry and Shaula sad, he was just a villain in Emilia's mind. Of course, since she would never have a chance to talk to him, there was no one who could relieve her of this feeling of frustration.

"He looks like he's really fatigued…but it ain't a big problem. He will recover if he rests. That's it, why don't we go to that 'Green Room'?"

"Yeah. Ram and the others are there too… Weren't you looking after Rem when she came to help me, Anastasia?"

"That's an exaggerated story, right? Once I recovered my self, I just saw off Julius, who was goin' to help Natsuki, and Ram, who was goin' to help out Emilia… I'm afraid ta say that Rem hasn't shown any changes at all."

"I see…"

Thinking of Ram, Rem, and Patrasche waiting in the Green Room, Emilia wrinkled her finely-shaped eyebrows.

The slaying of Batenkaitos was, in a sense, done as revenge for Rem, who had been bereaved of her Name and Memories. However, the only thing that mattered was that she woke up, and since she had not done so, whether they managed to get their revenge or not was unimportant.

That was at least something Ram would say without any sort of hesitation. The only thing that mattered to her was getting Rem back.

"I hope Roy Alphard can tell us something about that, too. There are too many unanswered questions about this watchtower…no, about the Great Library of Pleiades."

"An all-knowing Great Library…that is the claim Shaula had made, in fact. She was a carefree girl, but because of that, she did not play around with words, I suppose. She said this was the Great Library, so there's no reason to doubt that, in fact.

Was the function of the Great Library merely the Books of the Dead? Or were there other functions? That is what they needed to find out. Based on that, Emilia had something to say to Beatrice and the others.

"Well, after taking Subaru to the Green Room to rest, there's a place I want to go with everyone… There is someone I'd like everyone to meet."

"…Is it related to the first floor, I wonder?"

On the first floor, Emilia had broken through the last Trial. This was something Beatrice and the others already knew about. The problem was that she had yet to reveal everything.

Specifically, what was on the first floor? Who did she meet? What did Emilia do there? Since it was bizarre, out-of-this-world, and difficult to express in words—

“It won’t take long to tell you about it, but it’s suuuper complex, so how about we just meet them in person and talk about it?”

Said Emilia, pointing far above her at the top of the watchtower.

5

“…”

After being guided by Emilia to the highest floor of the Pleiades Watchtower—the first floor—everyone was overwhelmed and rendered speechless by the massive dragon’s greeting.

“When I got to the first floor and saw Volcanica waiting here, I was reaaaally surprised…”

“No-no, hold on, hold on a second, I suppose. Hey, this isn’t a problem that can be solved simply by being surprised, in fact!”

In front of the Divine Dragon covered in azure scales, Beatrice let out a panicky voice unbefitting of her appearance. She was swinging her hands up and down as if she were completely restless. However, she was not the only one who was in a shocked state.

“This…is…”

“Wooooow, somethin’ has appeared that not even I could’ve anticipated. What’s goin’ on here? Didn’t ya say that Mr. Divine Dragon was beyond the Great Waterfall?”

“That should be the case. According to the prophecy from the Dragon History Stone, in the same year that the royal selection comes to an end, he will renew the covenant with the one who becomes the ruler of Lugunica, Ana."

Next to Julius, who had been rendered speechless, the calm Anastasia could barely hide her cold sweat. Around her neck, the sound of Echidna's voice was also slightly hoarse. However, after being late in reacting to the ladies' response, Julius fixed his posture and said, "Excuse me—"

"Oh Great Divine Dragon who defends our Kingdom. We deeply apologize for our rudeness in the presence of your esteemed self, Great Volcanica, the bearer of the covenant who has kept it for so long and given us much aid."

"…"

"Although it is like this, it is such an honor to meet you. I am Julius Juukulius, a member of the royal guard of the Kingdom of Lugunica. I've made sure to keep many of your treasured tales in mind."

Julius, who had kneeled down and bowed, removed his sword from his waist and placed it on the ground next to him as a form of the utmost respect.

And so, as a knight who served the Dragon Kingdom, he showed the greatest courtesy to the Divine Dragon. Then, narrowing his golden eyes, Volcanica said—

"—I, am Volcanica. In accordance with the ancient covenant, the will of thee who hath reached the top shall be questioned."

"My life, my faith, have all been dedicated to Lady Anastasia Hoshin. The one who will be the next ruler…and forge the next covenant…will surely be Lady Anastasia...Kuuu."

"Ju-Julius, are ya crying?"

Julius, who was on his knees helplessly shedding tears, disturbed Anastasia. Wiping his tears away with the back of his hand, he said, "My apologies—"

"Not only did I become acquainted with one of the Three Heroes—

Reid—but I was also able to meet the Divine Dragon, Volcanica. As a knight of the Kingdom of Lugunica, I could not be any more honored... This…tower, what in the world is it?"

Julius' voice trembled due to experiencing something awe-inspiring.

With a tinge of remorse, as if she were ruining his special moment, Emilia started to say "About that..."

"Julius, I'm reaaally hesitant to tell you this because you're sooo happy, but..."

"—. My apologies, Lady Emilia. Disregarding you and Lady Anastasia, I attempted to talk with the Divine Dragon without permission..."

"Mmm, don't worry about it. It's just that…Volcanica is..."

Trying to explain things to Julius without hurting him, Emilia struggled to find the right words to say. Then, coming from above her head—

"—Thou, who hath reached the top of the tower. Step forth onto the first floor, almighty petitioner."

"...Wait a second. This line…I feel like I just heard it earlier."

Hearing him repeat those words, Anastasia was the first to become suspicious. However, that same feeling spread to the others, too. Saying that was a natural thing to do, and everyone immediately noticed the change in Volcanica, who continued to repeat the same words over and over again. And—

"Although that's Volcanica, he's been waiting here for soooo long that he became a bit senile. Since his body is still full of energy, he's a biiit of a rowdy one though..."

Volcanica, who had a pretty bad case of dementia, still had the true power of a dragon, but over the course of a long period his time, his mind became damaged.

Perhaps because of the Trial of the first floor, the Divine Dragon exerted a great amount of energy to stop Emilia from getting up the pillar, but once Emilia had reached the Monolith, he judged that she had passed the Trial and returned to his original position.

Moreover, although the Trial had ended, he still continued to talk about the Trial.

“The Great Divine Dragon is senile...?”

“Ju-Julius, calm down. Come on, you’re a little tired, aren’tcha? Why don’t ya sit down?”

Julius was extremely shocked by Emilia’s words. After Reid, the second legend he encountered also differed from the stories he’d heard about them, causing his knees to tremble.

Emilia also didn’t want to disappoint Julius, whose eyes sparkled, and somehow felt a dull pain in her chest. But—

“Emilia, that’s probably not the case, I suppose. This isn’t some kind of dementia, in fact.”

“Eh?”

“Echidna, I’m sure you can feel it, too, I suppose. This isn’t dementia...”

“Ah, yes. I wasn’t sure at first, but I feel it now. This isn’t the wearing down of the mind, but the emptiness of the spirit.”

“Emptiness of the…spirit...?”

Emilia was puzzled by the mutually understandable conversation going on between the artificial spirits Echidna and Beatrice. With surprised expressions on the faces of Julius and Anastasia, Beatrice held out her finger and said, “It’s simple, in fact.”

“His spirit is empty.... That is to say, his spirit is not within him, I suppose. As a result, he is limited in what he can say and respond with, in fact. Just think of it as him being 90 percent asleep, I suppose.”

“90 percent... But he was suuuper strong, though?”

“If his spirit were there, it would have been incomparable.”

Echidna’s tone implied that she had been lucky to survive, making Emilia shudder in response.

Emilia had just barely survived the desperate battle with the help of her ice soldiers. Surprisingly, that had just been akin to fighting with a half-asleep Volcanica. Although being half-asleep and being senile were similar, they were completely different in nature.

“But even if his spirit isn’t there, he still has the body of the Divine Dragon, I suppose. If that’s the case, then there may be a way to help the people of Priestella, in fact.”

“—! A way to help everyone? How can we do that?”

“—I see. We can get the blood of a dragon from the…Divine Dragon.”

Anastasia snapped her fingers, and Beatrice nodded at her words. Also hearing that, Emilia widened her eyes and let out an “Ah.”

The source of all of the tales that had been passed down in the Kingdom of Lugunica was none other than the blood of the Divine Dragon, Volcanica.

It had been said that a dragon’s blood was a miracle elixir that could revive a barren land, ensure a bountiful harvest, and heal all illnesses and injuries. To put it simply, many remarkable effects of it had been recorded.

And, not to mention anything else. Dragon’s blood was an element that Emilia could not ignore—

“If I get the blood from Volcanica...”

The reason why Emilia was participating in the royal selection was to obtain the Dragon’s Blood kept in the Kingdom of Lugunica and use it to thaw the frozen soil of the Great Elior Forest.

Emilia was determined to participle in the royal selection in order to liberate her people, who had been frozen in that forest because of her power going wild.

"…"

The realization that her main purpose in participating in it had a possibility of being achieved suddenly hit her. It made Emilia tense up and hold her breath.

If Volcanica's blood could be obtained here, then Emilia would no longer have a reason to ascend the throne—

"I..."

"...Emilia, I'm sorry to have confused you, I suppose. The Blood that you are thinking about is not the same blood of this Volcanica, in fact. That's why you won't be able to achieve that, I suppose."

Said Beatrice to Emilia, who was about to lose her reason for participating in the royal selection. Emilia then looked at her with rounded eyes and said "Huh?."

"What do you mean I won't be able to achieve that? I've…studied reaaallllly hard, you know. In order to melt the ice in the forest, I need the Dragon's Blood in the royal castle. So..."

"There's nothing wrong with that idea, I suppose. However, as I stated earlier, the Blood in Lugunica's royal castle and the blood of this Volcanica are, strictly speaking, not the same... The Dragon's Blood in the royal castle is the blood that spilled from the last beat of a dying dragon's heart, I suppose."

"The last drop of blood from the…heart?"

Hearing things she had never heard before, Emilia frowned, scrunching up her finely-shaped eyebrows. Beatrice gently nodded, and then Julius raised his hand and said, "May I ask a question?."

Julius, who seemed to have just barely recovered from the shock of hearing about the existence or nonexistence of the Divine Dragon's spirit, looked up at the Divine Dragon, whose responses remained unchanged—

“Excuse me, Lady Beatrice, but what do you mean by what you just said? I am also a knight belonging to the royal guard of the Kingdom of Lugunica. My ears pick up many things regarding the Kingdom. However, the thing you just said…”

“—As its heart beat one last time, the blood from its heart was poured into a container. That blood, as the true blood of a dragon, was entrusted to the royal castle in order to serve as proof of the covenant between man and dragon.”

“…”

“It’s no surprise that you do not know this, in fact. The words I said just now came from a book that had been sealed within the Forbidden Library… There is no longer any trace of its existence in the outside world, for it was an account left by the Witch of Greed, Echidna, I suppose.”

After hearing Beatrice’s response, Julius gasped, his eyes widening. As a knight of the Kingdom, he didn’t even know about that, but if it came from Beatrice, he couldn’t consider it a lie. And if it was the truth—

“Then, which dragon’s blood is the Dragon’s Blood being kept in the royal capital, Lugunica? The last beating of the heart would mean…”

“It’d be strange if the dragon who left the blood didn’t die… In that case, it wouldn’t make sense for it ta have come from the empty-headed Mr. Divine Dragon.”

Julius and Anastasia voiced their doubts, but they were also justified in doing so. If the Dragon’s Blood came from the last beat of its heart, then it would not belong to Volcanica. Also, if it was still the blood of a great power—

“Unfortunately, it wasn’t mentioned in the book, in fact.”

“…That person is always doing things half-heartedly. From what I can tell, that Witch of Greed is the biggest reason why Natsuki is so cold to me, right? Because of that, he doesn't have a good impression of me, and now that impression is only getting amplified."

"Don't speak ill of Mother, I suppose. Mind your words, in fact."

"Don't fight like that, you two! But, errmmm, mmm..."

After scolding the two of them who were getting heated with each other because of having a difference of opinion regarding Echidna, Emilia silently lowered her head.

When Emilia first heard that Volcanica's blood was different from the Dragon's Blood in the royal castle, she was surprised. And yet, at the same time, she was relieved.

"...Such a thing is…sooooo strange."

Emilia's main goal was to help everyone in the forest. This goal remained unchanged even today. Therefore, if she were able to obtain Volcanica's blood here and use it as a solution, it would be possible to liberate everyone in the Great Elior Forest using it. However, while she wanted to do so, she was hesitant.

—If she used another means to melt the permafrost plaguing the Great Elior Forest, would she step off the stage and stop participating in the royal selection?

"…"

"...Emilia's concerns aside, if Beatrice's words are true, can anythin' be done with Mr. Volcanica's blood? There's a high possibility of it bein' a disappointment, right?"

"Whether he's become useless, senile, or lost his spirit, he is still a Divine Dragon, I suppose. So his blood must be quite powerful as well. It's just that..."

"It wouldn't be enough to melt everyone's ice, right?"

In response to Emilia's question, Beatrice gave her an apologetic look and nodded her head. Gazing at the appearance of Beatrice who looked more sad than herself, Emilia relaxed her lips, looked up, and said, “It’s okay.”

“That fact is pretty disappointing, but since it was something that happened so suddenly, I was soooo surprised that I didn’t realize it… So, it’s not a big deal.”

“I’m sorry, I suppose. I should have told you about it, in fact… I didn’t expect the Divine Dragon to be in a place like this, I suppose. It’s truly regrettable.”

Beatrice’s face sunk in a way that didn’t suit her, and Emilia puffed up her chest.

To be honest, she really did feel disappointed. However, what she had said to Beatrice was the truth. Rather, it felt as if she had been told she could not take shortcuts or cheat.

“Then, let’s get back to the question at hand. If the blood of the Divine Dragon is used, there is a possibility of restoring those in Priestella who have had their appearances changed due to Lust’s Authority. As Beatrice stated, even if he does not have a spirit, the blood itself should still contain great power.”

“It has been said that a single drop of the castles Dragon’s Blood could revitalize a wasteland. It’s a powerful medicine, ain’t it?”

“Therefore, it would be essential to dilute it thousands of times.”

“But it’s a pretty big improvement compared to having nothing at all. If the stories about it being a miracle medicine are true, then it’s worth giving it a shot.”

After hearing the conversation going on between Echidna, Anastasia, and Julius, Emilia once again felt hopeful. They had crossed the Augria Sand Dunes in order to help those who had suffered misfortune.

If they could find a way to solve the problems caused by Lust and Gluttony, that would be best. Otherwise, there would be no way to reward Subaru for all of the damage he had suffered.

“I’m sooooo selfish like this...”

It was very selfish of her to want to make Shaula’s sacrifice have meaning. She’d spent a long time in this tower following her own thoughts and desires. It had been Shaula herself who’d made it meaningful, not Emilia.

“Mm, I got it. I’ll go and ask Volcanica about it. But he may not understand me at all and go on a rampage if I try to take his blood.”

“Don’t you ever get tired of hearing that, I suppose? Emilia, as the new administrator of the Pleiades Watchtower, you have authority over it now, in fact. Can you do something with it, I wonder?”

“The administrator’s authority...I still don’t have any awareness of that…like at all.”

The mystery of the third floor had been solved, she had broken through Reid on the second floor, and expressed her will to Volcanica on the first floor.

Based on these conditions alone, Emilia had indeed captured the watchtower. However, if she were to say whether or not she could see any obvious changes, the answer would be no.

What she could vaguely perceive now was—

“The sand dunes leading to the watchtower will no longer reject anyone...I think?”

“Is this…the choice you made, Emilia? Isn’t that kind of statement quite risky since Books of the Dead are troublesome things?”

“We may face dangerous situations sometimes, but I think we can handle it if we are careful and use them properly. I think there are still lots of things that can’t be decided on on our own.”

For Emilia and the others, it would be too difficult to draw any conclusions about the tower since they were too few in number. For better or worse, she and the others didn’t have the power to do anything about it. Therefore, it would be best to let more capable people figure it out.

“That’s what I think. Do you not agree with it?”

“…I feel like you’re putting a little too much hope in others, but this is the conclusion you came to. If Ana and Julius don’t object to it, then neither will I.”

“Thank you, Echidna.”

Emilia thanked Echidna, who had been the first to agree with her, like this. Anastasia also spoke up with a “Got it, got it.”

“I don’t object to it, either. Actually, even if we made an effort ta hide it, it would be difficult to make the most of it… If that’s the case, it’d be best ta share what we found after trekkin’ all the way here. There’s the issue of Gluttony and we might be able ta bring the dragon’s blood back, too.”

“We should not be vile, nor expect too much. The most important thing is that it was Lady Emilia who reached the top of the tower. We should respect her wishes.”

“Anastasia, Julius, thank you!”

After receiving the two’s agreement, Emilia thanked them with a smile. Then she finally looked back at Beatrice, who had yet to express her opinion on the matter.

“How about you, Beatrice? Do you think this is too irresponsible?”

“If you are talking about being responsible or irresponsible, abandoning this place without investigating it is the most irresponsible thing we could do, I suppose. Betty does not object, in fact. I am also personally interested in this.”

“Awesome!”

Emilia placed her hand on her chest, relieved that one of her closest companions did not disagree with her.

“Okay, next up is the issue of the blood… The easiest way to go about it is to take Volcanica with us.”

“I think that’ll cause a lotta problems.”

It was true that Volcanica was rather large, and if they took him back with them, there was a possibility that he would bump into a lot of things. However, since he could fly, he could just fly in the air when they entered a street and not have to worry about him bumping into anything.

“Erm, Volcanica. Can you come with us? Or, if you have to stay here, I’d like for you to share some of your blood with me…”

“…”

“Volcanica?”

Half expecting something to happen, half giving up, thinking that Volcanica would only repeat the lines from the Trial, Emilia frowned at his present reaction.

Volcanica, the Divine Dragon, who had returned to his original position on the first floor and was leaning against the central pillar, slowly raised his head and turned his gaze outside of the tower.

He neither responded to Emilia and the others, nor did he show any sort of aggression. Emilia, at least, felt like his behavior was rather peculiar. And at the same time—

“What?”

Feeling as if a cold finger had traced along the entirety of her back, Emilia quickly turned her gaze in the direction of the cause of that chilly feeling—the direction of Volcanica’s gaze, east of the tower.

East of the tower, past the end of the sea of sand, was the Great Waterfall at the world’s edge—no, what existed there was the Great Waterfall, as well as a special place.

6

“Mmmmm...”

Feeling something rough gently brushing against his face, Subaru opened his eyes whilst groaning. His vision was blurred, and after blinking a few times, a clear outline appeared, and what came into view was the cause of that rough sensation—Patrasche had been licking his face with her red tongue.

“...Is that you, Patrasche…?”

“…”

“Sorry for making you worry... You…risked your life again, didn’t you? Sorry for always making things hard for you.”

Relaxing his lips, Subaru gently put his hand on his beloved earth dragon’s worried face and began stroking it. This jet-black earth dragon had always saved him when he was in tough spots. Not to mention her kindness for saving him when he had amnesia, but the things Patrasche had done in this past week were also of great importance. To put it simply—

“If Patrasche hadn’t been here, Rem might have died. Bringing this girl back home is probably the greatest accomplishment of Barusu’s life.”

“Even if it’s true, don’t diss me like that! I took Beako out and got Emilia-tan’s insignia back, too. Although Roswaal was involved with both of those, you know.”

As a matter of fact, Roswaal had nothing to do with Beatrice’s problem, but he dared to say it since it would get under her skin. And, as expected, he heard Ram “Tch” with her tongue in disgust.

Ram was leaning against the wall of the Green Room with her arms wrapped around herself. Subaru painfully narrowed his eyes and looked at her bruised body. It was clear that the battle against Lye Batenkaitos had been an intense one.

Since Meili had been injured in the middle of their battle, the amount of burdens Subaru could shoulder had been reduced, which was one of the reasons why she had to fight such a hard battle in the first place. Not sure of what to say, Subaru opened his mouth to apologize—

“Hey, Ram. It was my fault that you got hurt like this...blughhh!”

“Don’t speak such stupid words. Barusu being responsible for Ram’s injuries? There is no place in Ram’s life where Barusu has any such role. How repulsive.”

“What’s repulsive is talking like that! Stuffing grass into a person’s mouth is even worse!”

Subaru protested as he pulled the lump of ivy that had been shoved into his mouth, his eyes watering due to the grassy odor. Hearing that, Ram responded with an unapologetic “Haaa.”

At the argument going on between Ram and Subaru, the sound of giggling could be heard.

“You two…look like such close friendsss. It’s like watching two siblingsss,” said Meili, who’d spread her legs out on the grass mattress covering the floor, the mini crimson scorpion perched on her head. Ram’s face scowled at her giggling with an easy-to-understand expression—

“Barusu is my little brother...? For argument’s sake, let’s assume it’s true, but even if we weren’t related by blood, the Oni Village would cull a useless little brother like him.”

“Is the Oni Village really so severe? I’m glad I wasn’t born as an Oni...”

“That was just a joke. But, it’s just that Ram could not stand the horror and would have you culled.”

“Don’t make it more complicated by doubling up on your assumptions!”

Spit flying, Subaru shouted that at Ram, who was acting like she usually did. Having said that, he could now see that it was just her roundabout way of showing consideration for him. She'd said that the cause of her injuries was not due to his decision, after all.

It was difficult for him to presume upon that consideration. But if he were stubborn and insisted that he was the one responsible, he would instead incur Ram's ire.

"You're…such a troublesome girl, Big Sis..."

"After Meili's presumptuous remark just now, kindly stop calling Ram 'Big Sis'. It would be troublesome if someone we met for the first time had a misunderstanding."

Getting the usual cold reply and the Ram experience, Subaru looked around the room—at everyone in the Green Room. There was Subaru and Patrasche, and Ram and Meili along with the mini crimson scorpion. And at the back of the room was the Sleeping Beauty lying on a bed.

"—Rem…is she not awake?"

"I regret to say this, but…I beheaded that hateful, rude person. Lady Emilia's stuff seems to have returned because of that..."

"Julius' stuff hasn't returned, and neither has Rem's... Is there anything we're missing?"

Pressing his fist firmly into his palm, Subaru chewed on his bitter feelings.

He had once again confirmed the matter he had spoken about to Emilia and the others about before losing consciousness. —In the end, they would need talk to those guys directly and wring the information out of them in order to completely eradicate the damage caused by Gluttony.

"Are the ones here…based on the severity of the injuries? Where are Emilia-tan and the others?"

"If it's Big Sister and Beatrice, they said they were going up there to meet someoneee. Waaay up on the first floor, waaay, waaaay up there... Who might be up there? Big Sister Ram must know, riiight?"

"It's nothing to be concerned with. However, there is a large, senile old man there."

"The senile old man at the top of the watchtower…is DEFINITELY an important key character..."

Hearing that there was a new character, Subaru wrinkled his eyebrows. Who was the senile old man that Ram was talking about? Or, if they were an overseer like Reid on the second floor, then—

"—It couldn't be Flugel, right?"

"Barusu."

"If Flugel is the one who is up there, I'll never forgive him. I have enough to say to that guy to fill a whole mountain. If he isn't there, then Shaula..."

"Barusu, please calm down."

"Calm down? Ram…you, that kind of thing, Shaula, she..."

The cheek of the vigorous and rash Subaru was slapped while he was trying to determine the true identity of the old man on the top floor of the tower, causing him to put strength into his knees. The cause…was the palm of Ram, who had moved in on him.

With his face having been slapped, Subaru widened his eyes and looked at Ram with a dumbfounded expression.

"Don't use Shaula as a crutch because of your own powerlessness."

"…"

"I heard about Shaula. She was obnoxious and unmannered, and the eyes that admired Barusu were rotten...but she wasn't so bad that she deserved to disappear."

As she spoke, Ram gently placed her hand on Subaru's struck cheek. It was hot, but her palm was cold. While absorbing the heat, Ram continued her words to the speechless Subaru.

"If you can't accept it, then, rather than getting angry, just cry. Shaula would be happier if you cried out "I miss you" rather than using her as a reason for your anger. —Ram is the same way."

"Ram..."

"I still believe you are mixing up someone you should strongly care for with someone else."

After getting one last word in, Ram flicked Subaru's forehead with her finger. That painless force made Subaru fall onto his butt, and, as he placed his hand on his forehead, said "My bad..."

If Subaru calmed down, Flugel being on the first floor could just be called his own desire, or even something like paranoia. But for argument's sake, if Flugel really was there—

"Before Barusu could do anything, Lady Emilia and I would beat him until he was on the cusp of death."

"...I can see you doing that, but not Emilia-tan."

When thinking of Shaula, the amount of anger directed at Flugel was by no means small, and everyone in the tower naturally shared that feeling.

With Ram's affirmation, Subaru let out a long exhale. In that case, he was curious about who the senile old man on the first floor was.

"Let's put that aside for now. If we assume that the senile old man can be helpful in some way, then we should ask him about the victims of the Sin Archbishop of Lust, not Gluttony."

"That's a pretty big thing to talk about...so, uh…"

Ram clearly had her priorities straight at this point. Being able to advocate for such a thing without hesitation was one of Ram's fine qualities. Subaru could also resonate with her ideas to a certain extent. The prospect of being able to save the victims of Lust was attractive, but…

"But did Big Sister Ram have something else in mind when you said that?”

However, Meili had said that right next to Subaru’s face, who was on guard. She poked the mini crimson scorpion on her head with her finger and said—

“Didn’t you say this before? The effects of Gluttony have something to do with time or something like thattt.”

“—. What a loose-lipped girl. In that case, it will be necessary to discipline you properly once we return home.”

“Ohhh, so scaryyy.”

Meili held her head and stuck out her tiny tongue. Above her head, the mini crimson scorpion aimed its pincers and stinger at Ram, as if trying to protect her. However, under Ram’s icy gaze, it quickly shrunk into a little ball.

He could sense a part of her previous self in that flustered behavior.

“Ram, that hypothesis is? What’s it about?”

“It doesn’t amount to much. However, it’s been said that Gluttony eats other people’s memories, correct? If they are truly treated like food, I believe that time will affect the rate of digestion.”

“Digestion…”

“Lady Emilia’s came back a few hours after it was taken away. If so, then what about the other victims such as Julius the Knight, the people of Priestella, and Rem?”

“—Ah.”

After hearing the hypothetical statement of Ram, whose finger was raised, Subaru’s eyes widened due to how uncomplicated it was. Just as she said, the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony had equated the stealing of Names and Memories to eating. If that were more than just a superficial expression, then he could find her hypothesis to be satisfactory.

It took time for the Names and Memories that were stolen away to be digested. Then, the reason why Emilia's Name came back but nothing else did was because—

"...There's no way…has everything already been digested?"

"—I'm not sure. There's a possibility that it might just take time for them to come back. If that's the case, then there is hope. The Memories of Julius, the other victims...and Rem, will hopefully come back, too."

"…"

Not knowing whether it was good or bad, Ram made the above explanation. Subaru knew what she was thinking as well. This was a question that could not be answered immediately.

However, now that Batenkaitos had been slain and Alphard had been captured, Subaru had another big thing to worry about—no, it was something that had come up once again.

"Louis Arneb..."

He had come across her, the final Gluttony, in the Corridor of Memories by chance, and then left her there. Was that young girl, who did not possess her own body, and took over the bodies of her two brothers as well as Natsuki Subaru's in order to commit evil deeds, really the object of a Witch Factor?

Her abilities were not inferior to those of Gluttony. However, if the life of the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony was needed to undo the damage caused by their Authority, how could he defeat Louis, who was in that place? In the first place—

"Does the concept of dying exist in that place or not?"

In that place, a spirit-like body took the place of a physical one. He may be able to emulate an idea from manga and games and apply it to kill a spirit, but would that be enough to release a Witch Factor?

Whether it was that place or Louis who remained there, nothing about them was clear. Moreover, even if an answer could be garnered—

“When Julius defeated Reid, Reid’s role in the Trial was terminated. If that’s the case, then wouldn’t Reid go back into his blank Book of the Dead?”

Subaru had managed to go to the place known as the Corridor of Memories within the cradle of Od Laguna. And the reason why he had managed to do so was because of an empty Book of the Dead that just happened to lead to that place.

Since the soul of Reid Astrea had been used in the Trial, there had been a gap in his Book of the Dead, which was connected to the Corridor of Memories. If that was no longer there—

Natsuki Subaru may have missed the opportunity to defeat Louis Arneb.

“…”

Subaru had thought a lot about it, and he needed to confirm the possibility that Reid’s Book of the Dead was still blank. Not only that, but he also had a way to challenge his own Book of the Dead. This was a trump card that connected him to the Corridor of Memories.

Although he would have to go through the hell of watching himself Die again, it was better than closing himself off to other possibilities. He thought it would be much better for him to do so.

Instead of giving up because I’ve made irreversible mistakes—

“—Such a fool.”

“Big Sis?”

“If you have the leisure to worry about such frivolous things, then it would be much better for you to rest your mind and body so you can think properly. —Barusu was not the only one who failed to choose the most excellent answer in this tower.”

Shaking her head, Ram gently touched her forehead. Remaining there where her horn previously came from was a slim scar. After doing so, she stretched out that same finger towards Rem, who was on the bed. She then lovingly caressed her sister's forehead and said —

"For the purpose of defeating the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, I borrowed Rem's power. Though I achieved victory in the end, it came at a cost... This girl must have paid a heavy burden, right?"

"Heavy burden..."

"If it were Barusu, and I did the thing where I activated my horn, Barusu's body would probably explode from the inside out."

Subaru, who had taken on Ram's usual burdens before, knew very well that these were not exaggerated words. The simple acts of breathing and moving conservatively made Ram experience the taste of hell.

That kind of her was the real deal. —What sort of recoil would he get from it? It would be no exaggeration to say that had Subaru taken it on, a part of his body would suffer from so much damage that it would never be able to recover.

After Ram told him that she made Rem take on her burdens, she closed her eyes, revealing her long eyelashes. However, she said, "Make sense?" and then continued—

"Because of this, Rem might feel resentment towards me when she wakes up. However, I will not regret it. Ram is Rem's sister. That fact will never change, even if this girl resents or hates Ram... Then, so that things might get better, we can only rely on each other."

"—Rem…won't hate you."

"Yes, I'm sure you're right. —She's a very smart girl, and my amazing little sister."

Like this, Ram smiled, brimming with confidence, and looked at Subaru with her pale crimson eyes.

Though she had no memories of her little sister except through

Subaru, since she came to love her, she no longer doubted her feelings. Instead of lamenting about the past, it was better to forge a better future.

"...Saying these words to me…really hits me where it hurts, you know."

Unbeknownst to Ram, Subaru had gone through several loops to change the past. For Ram, who was an extremely positive thinker, it wouldn't be too much to describe Subaru's using of Return by Death as being an extremely regressive form of thinking. Return by Death, which changed what had already occurred, was always used because of regretting the past.

"In the end, it's better not to use it, huh..."

Subaru once again loosened his tightly clenched fist, smiling bitterly. He admitted that he used Return by Death in order to seize a better future where everyone could laugh together. Based on that, he also knew he should not indulge himself too much in the use of Return by Death itself.

In this tower, Subaru had seen the shedding of so many tears and heard many voices full of regret.

"Although I'm not sureee, but you look to be a bit betterrr."

Seeing the change in Subaru's expression, Meili whispered that whilst sitting on the floor. She was sitting in a P.E. sitting posture, and, while stroking her three-strand braid, said—

"Big Sister (Emilia) and Big Sister Ram can do iiit, but I'd be in trouble if you felt down since I can't cheer you uppp, so please don't feel dooown. You promiseddd me you'd show me how much I could depend on you to get things done, riiiight?"

"Oh, there was that promise as well. Uh, well, I'll definitely keep it…this time."

Gazing at Meili and the mini crimson scorpion on her head, Subaru nodded his head vigoresly. To the side, Patrasche nuzzled her head against his cheek, as if supporting his determination. Though her scaly body was tough, since he had gotten used to it, he could rub his cheeks against it without feeling uncomfortable.

Subaru returned that show of affection with affection of his own and then stood up. Although he had consumed so much energy before that'd he collapsed earlier, he seemed to have more or less recovered his lost strength. The Spirit of the Green Room had a variety of healing methods at its disposal.

"If I think about it, whether it be Gyan who joined the big battle, or the Spirit in this room, I don't know how to thank them enough for everything they've done."

Shaula had explained that although the Green Room was used as a recovery room, there was a Spirit here originally that was fond of treating the injuries of those who entered the room.

It did not have a physical form, nor was it possible to converse with the Spirit, but its intention for healing others was crystal clear. Subaru and the others had been healed time after time by this room as they constantly attempted to capture the tower.

It was for that reason that, after arriving at the watchtower, Rem had been left in this room.

"Wellllll, I didn't let her stay here just 'cause I wanted her to hang around."

"The Spirit, then. Barusu…no, it'd be a waste to say it. Why don't we force it to come out by using Julius' Divine Protection of Gathering Spirits?"

"I know what you're trying to say, but it won't work on me since my strong point is that I can put my life on the line for Beako. Anyways, I wonder if we can talk to it with the added effect of Julius' Divine Protection…"

The Divine Protection of Gathering Spirits was simply a Divine Protection that made it easier for him to be liked by spirits. Under that effect, he had contracted with his six quasi-spirits—no, La and the others who'd been elevated into spirits. If he could use that effect to converse with the Spirit of the Green Room, it would open up a world of possibilities.

The Spirit has been in the tower for as long as Shaula, if not longer. That nameless being might be able to help solve the mysteries in the watchtower—

"—?"

While Subaru was immersed in his thoughts, a small breath suddenly flowed into the room.

"Ram? What's the matter?"

"...I…sensed something strange. This is…"

—Ram uttered an unusual premonition in that moment.

"—Hic?!"

"HUH?!"

A phenomenon suddenly occurred in the middle of the Green Room —light spilled out, shocking Subaru and the others. In response to that, their bodies suddenly stiffened, and Subaru and Ram gravitated over to where Rem was. Meili and Patrasche also seemed to be wary of it and slowly moved away from the light.

"What-what-what-what, what's happening?!"

"I don't know! In any case, do not leave us! No matter what happens... Oh, AH?!"

Subaru shielded the flurried Meili behind him, his warning words having been interrupted. The reason was because the light in the room suddenly became brighter, which captured his attention. Then, while covering his eyes with his hands, he carefully gazed in the direction of the light.

He could see that the light, which was currently strong, was gradually becoming weaker, and then it disappeared. When he wasn't sure whether or not he should be relieved or cautious, 'That' appeared in front of Subaru’s eyes.

“—Huh?”

Subaru wasn’t sure what it meant when ‘That’ appeared right in front of his eyes in the spot where the light disappeared. He became speechless, then stunned, and then speechless once more.

“...A girl?”

Next to Subaru, seeing the same thing as him, was Ram, who’d muttered that in surprise. That observation was correct. However, between him and her, she did not have the same knowledge of the Girl that Subaru did.

Subaru…knew the name of that Girl. The name of the Girl lying on the floor of the Green Room was—

7

Louis Arneb, the girl who appeared in the middle of the room along with the light.

Subaru was speechless when the youngest sister of the Sin Archbishops of Gluttony trio known as Satiation—and was not supposed to have a physical form—appeared in reality like that. However, the nearby Ram did not fail to pick up on his words.

“Louis Arneb...the name of the last Gluttony, isn’t it?”

Subaru had yet to tell Ram the details about his encounter with Louis through the Book of the Dead during this loop. He’d only mentioned that he’d had contact with her. Ram had a very good memory indeed.

Now faced with this question, Subaru was a bit disturbed.

“Ah, ah, that’s right, she’s the last one of the Gluttonies...Louis Arneb. The little sister of Batenkaitos and Alphard...”

“—. It appears that she is unconscious.”

Based on what Ram had said, Subaru calmly observed Louis and determined that she was indeed asleep. Well, he could say that, but he wasn’t exactly sure if that was the case. How in the world could Louis, who didn’t even have a physical body, appear here like this?

He could not imagine that she, who was ever-so terrified of and despaired because of Subaru’s Return by Death ability, would somehow reinvigorate herself within a few hours and come back to challenge him again.

—The thing known as Death was something that left a deep wound in a person’s heart.

“I can’t make any progress even after thinking about it... Meili! Go get Emilia-tan and the others! Ram and I…will watch her!”

“Really, you’re suuuuch a slave driverrr... Don’t let yourself die easily, ‘kay?”

Gradually moving backwards, Meili moved towards the entrance of the Green Room. Subaru heard her admonishments and gave her a thumbs up before she left.

He saw the mini crimson scorpion above her head put up its pincers as if imitating her, before she quickly turned around and went to go get Emilia and the others.

And then, in the room where Subaru and Ram remained—

“I don’t think anything will happen, but in any case, should we tie her up with ivy?”

“I’d rather not provoke them...Barusu, have you noticed it yet?”

“—? What?”

When he was trying to discuss the treatment of Louis with her, Ram grabbed his shoulder and asked him that. Not seeming to understand the purpose of her question, he cocked his head.

So, Ram pointed at the ceiling of the Green Room with her chin—no, the entire room.

"—The healing effects of the room have disappeared. The Spirit is gone."

"Ah… That's a joke, right?"

"It's not a joke. Barusu, even you will be able to feel it if you concentrate. There is an emptiness in this place."

Subaru looked around the room, spurred on by Ram's statement. Even if he was told to concentrate, the way Subaru felt the presence of a spirit was by picking them up, kissing their face, sleeping together, and so on. He's not sure about other ways of doing it.

However, just as Ram had said, he could no longer feel the gentle power that had previously wrapped around his entire body. It seemed that something had indeed happened, for the Spirit in the Green Room was no longer there—

"If that is so, then perhaps it has something to do with the Sin Archbishop."

"…"

Subaru could not deny Ram's conjecture. He also had a similar thought. The Spirit in the Green Room had disappeared and been replaced by Louis Arneb. Then, perhaps—

"—. Anyways, it's best not to jump to any conclusions. We should wait for Lady Emilia and Lady Beatrice to return. Once Lady Emilia and the others come back—"

—We can continue our discussion on what to do with Louis. He thought that that was what Ram was about to say. However, she did not continue her words. One step ahead of her—the blackness that led to the demise of all…had assaulted the Pleiades Watchtower.

"—Hic?!"

A huge explosion went off at their feet, letting off a bang, causing

Subaru and the others to get thrown into the air. Seconds afterwards, his entire body crashed into the ceiling and wall, making him let out a “Guh!.” He then turned his head to figure out what had happened.

—Fear permeated throughout his whole body as that vile presence drew near.

“N-No way…”

In a state of disbelief, Subaru stood up, denying that foreboding feeling in his gut. But that horrible chill grew stronger and stronger, making his suspicions more and more real.

“Patrasche! Take Ram—!”

“—Ree-reeee!”

As he crawled along the floor, he grabbed Ram’s body and threw her over to Patrasche. Though she was still covered in injuries, Patrasche understood his intentions and flew towards the room’s entrance.

“Barusu, that fool…!”

Ram resented that forceful action, but there was no time to listen to her. Subaru pushed off of the ground and sped towards Rem on the bed made of ivy. Then he carried her towards the door—

“…”

—Just before that, the figure of Louis, who was tumbling in the grass, passed by the edge of his vision.

“—Hic! Aaah, shit! Shiiiiiit!!”

While spewing out curses angrily, Subaru exerted as much strength as possible with his worn-out body for this maneuver. With Rem’s body held in the right hand, he used his left hand to grab Louis’ arm by force.

Both of them were rather light. In extraordinary circumstances like this, it was possible for him to ignore the weight as he carried them. Like this, carrying both of them, he was on the verge of leaping out of the Green Room.

"…"

A black shadow emerged through the floor of the Green Room, as if trying to cut Subaru off from the entrance—indeed, it was the black shadow. The last of the five obstacles—the black shadow of the Witch who had an obsession with Subaru—had come to the tower at a time like this.

"Ram—!"

Subaru, who was screaming maniacally, tried to get Rem away from the clutches of the shadow. However, the black shadow swallowed up his vision, leaving not even a gap. Moreover, the black shadow did not stop flowing in, engulfing him from the front, the left, the right, and the back.

"Damn it... Even though…I've made it this far...!"

Gazing at the shadow inching closer and closer, Subaru's heart was filled with regret as he tried to find a way to escape. If he got swallowed up by the black shadow, he would lose his life and have to Return by Death. If he Returned by Death in this tower, and his respawn point had not been updated, then he would have to start over at a point when Louis was still within him.

If that happened, he would be at the mercy of the Sin Archbishop in the shape of a white girl. That fear was what drove him to do his best with the attitude that this loop was his last chance—

"BARUSU! SNAP OUT OF IT! REM WOULD CRY!!"

"—REE-REEE!!"

Coming from beyond the black shadow were the desperate cries of Ram and Patrasche. In response, Subaru took a deep breath, but could not utter a word.

—Long before that, the entirety of Natsuki Subaru had been swallowed up by the black shadow.

8

—Having been swallowed up by the immense black shadow, Subaru’s consciousness slowly swirled around in the darkness.

“…”

He felt as if his hands, feet, blood, flesh, and his very existence had been broken apart and turned into concepts. Consumed by endlessly powerful and vast emotions, his very existence had been overwritten.

“—I love you.”

He heard a murmur in that silent and dark nothingness. That sound was, indeed, very nostalgic for him, causing Natsuki Subaru’s consciousness to smile to itself. Getting used to someone saying “I love you” to him was akin to being the Knight who was loved by his six spirits.

Unfortunately, Subaru didn’t have a strong will like that. Even if he pushed himself to his limits, the love he could give was limited to what he could do with his own two hands and back. So, the whispers of the black shadow just seemed like forced words to him.

“So? It’s way too forced, you know...”

“—I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you.”

“Sorry, can’t give you an answer to that... That phrase is like a landmine to me right now. I’ve never been able to grab the hand of the person who said that to me...”

“—I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you.”

“...Is there no way for us to hear each other? Then…hurry up and consume me.”

In this nothingness, there was no hope of escaping from it and living. So, Natsuki Subaru would die a merciless death in the darkness. He would not grieve over it, but would accept it and turn that feeling into anger, pushing himself onwards.

“When I get back, the worst thing may be waiting for me. Louis, who would still have a clear head on her shoulders, might fight me again for my Return by Death ability.”

“—I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you.”

“But, I’m not gonna lose. I won’t lose. No matter how many times it takes, I’ll keep fighting. This time, I’ll keep my promise.”

“—I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you.”

“—I’ll fight for tomorrow’s tomorrow, no matter how many times it takes.”

He would no longer be overwhelmed by the repetitive “I love you’s”. He was sorry, but the heart that could be wounded by such words had gotten worn out long ago. This kind of ‘love’ could not chain Natsuki Subaru down any longer.

And yet the words of love that were continuously uttered did not pay any mind to Subaru’s rejection. Indeed, the words of love themselves came pouring in, coating the world in them as Natsuki Subaru was swallowed up by the darkness—

“—I love you. I love you.”

"—I, am Volcanica. In accordance with the ancient covenant, the will of thee who hath reached the top shall be questioned."

In the next instant, a pale blue light poured down from above, striking the darkness that had engulfed the world. That fierce light then swallowed up the darkness, and the color of the world changed—

It changed—

It chan…ged—

"Mmm..."

Subaru groaned as he felt a rough sensation moving against his face and opened his eyes. His consciousness slowly returned. And at the same time, on the other side of his open eyelids, his blurry vision gradually returned to normality, revealing an outline.

Subaru had continued to feel a rough sensation on his cheek during this time.

"Pat…rasche... I…got it. I'm up. I'm awake…already..."

He wasn't sure just how tired he was, the sound coming from his throat was incredibly thin, and he wasn't sure if his intentions were being communicated properly. The other person didn't show any signs of stopping their skinship.

"You're being such a sweetie... I bet you could win the next heroine contest with that cuteness..."

"Aaaah-ooh?"

"Aaaaaah…ooh...?"

After swallowing some saliva in his dry mouth, he managed to utter a word and got a response in return.

However, the answer Subaru received was different from what he was expecting, causing his face to stiffen. His cheek was being licked like mad, and, gradually getting his vision back, what appeared in front of him was—

“Woo, ah—?”

—Louis Arneb, whilst sitting on top of Subaru, was licking his face.

“Nn, UWAAAA—?!”

“Waaah!”

Subaru was startled by that impossible sight and then immediately pushed Louis, who’d been in front of him, away. Due to that action, she let out a anguished cry and rolled around on the grass.

Gazing at that sight, Subaru desperately slid his butt backwards.

“What, what, what, what the hell are you doing?! What are you trying to do?! Coming on to me like this...”

“Woo—, Woo—? Wooah—”

“Waah, what in the! What, what the hell... Did I…die...?”

Subaru stared at Louis in complete shock, his voice trembling with desperation. Right in front of Subaru was Louis, lying on her back in the grass, shaking her arms and legs like a child, whining.

He didn’t understand what she was doing. What was the point—no, before that—

“What, where…is this place...?”

Without taking his eyes off Louis, Subaru observed his surroundings whilst staying vigilant. Then, what came into his view was a lush, green prairie—as if it were a vast grassland, flowers swayed in the wind here and there.

“…”

Such a sight would be impossible to see in the Augria Sand Dunes.

Well, to be precise, there were also things like flower gardens there where courtesan bears lived, but this was not an artificial place, and the vegetation was definitely real.

A little bit further away, Subaru could see a forest, plunging his mind into confusion. This clearly was not the Augria Sand Dunes. It didn't seem to be the Corridor of Memories where he'd encountered Louis before, either.

"The grass seems pretty real. And it tastes like...Peh, peh! Grass!"

After pulling up some grass and checking the smell and taste of it, Subaru was certain that it was real. Then, basing it on the injuries he'd incurred and the state of his torn clothing, he confirmed that the traces from the last battle—the battle surrounding the Pleiades Watchtower—had remained.

That is to say, that the battle had taken place, and Subaru had yet to die. He had been swallowed by the massive black shadow that had assaulted the Green Room and survived.

"—That's right! Rem! Rem is..."

If Louis was right here in front of him, that meant that Rem, who he also had in his grasp at that time, would also be around here.

Based on that idea, Subaru ignored Louis and searched around the grassland for Rem. It did not take long for him to find her soundless figure lying down in the low-cut grass.

"Rem! Ah, this is great... What a relief, you're safe and sound..."

Rushing over to Rem, Subaru confirmed that she was indeed safe and then fell to the ground in relief. She also appeared to not have any external injuries. Her body temperature and slow breathing were just as they were before. This made Subaru breathe a sigh of relief and wipe away the sweat on his brow.

"Ah, there's nothing to worry about. Big Sis would kill me if anything happened to Rem, anyways..."

Even if Ram didn't do anything, Subaru would go ahead and off himself since he wouldn't be able to forgive himself. While having such thoughts, Subaru uttered "Then again..." and then looked up.

"Where is this place...where's the tower at? Where are Emilia-tan, Beako, and the others?..."

Looking around, he still could not find the watchtower that was supposed to be visible in the distance. No matter where he looked, the result was the same.

"EMILIA—!! BEAKO!! RAM—!!"

"Ooo, waaah!"

Even if he couldn't see them, there was a possibility that they would respond, so Subaru called out to Emilia and the others. However, his voice beget hollowness, and the only one who answered was Louis, lying in the grass. Although that fact annoyed him, it was also true that he could not ignore her presence.

With no way of knowing what she was trying to do, nor with a way to deal with whatever it might be, the only one who could protect Rem was himself, so he got up so he could deal with Louis and—

"…"

—When he was about to get on his feet, someone gently grabbed onto his arm.

"—Eh?"

Subaru, currently on one knee and about to stand up, emitted a gruff breath. Though the strength of the arm pulling on his sleeve was not much, he could not move an inch.

"…"

Subaru's knees began to creak and tremble, and his whole body began to sweat. It truly was an incomprehensible urge. The entire being known as Natsuki Subaru began to shake all at once, the phenomenon making him go crazy.

That was…a shock that could not be described in words.

That was…intense emotions that could not be compared to anything else.

That was…of all the great surprises he had savored in this world, it was as big as a massive wave.

"—Ah."

Slowly, her eyelids trembled and opened slightly. Beneath those eyelids were her pale blue eyes, as clear as the surface of a lake.

He loved…her happy and cheerful eyes.

He loved…the twinkle in her eyes when she occasionally acted mischievously.

He loved…the eyes that grasped his heart when she pleaded with him.

—He had always, always, always, yearned for that radiance.

"Re..."

His heart thumping, his throat quivering, as if he were choking on something, unable to produce a sound. He'd choked up. That was indeed so. How many thoughts were swirling around in his heart at this moment?

The words he'd wanted to convey to her, the things he'd wanted to talk to her about, the dreams he'd wanted to share with her, all of these had been accumulating.

In pursuit of these very things, Natsuki Subaru—

"—Rem."

His lips trembling, he called out her name. Sadly, he had failed countless times trying to do just that. He wondered if he had ever clearly conveyed anything to her. Perhaps it had only been done in his own fantasies, and the most important thing was never conveyed.

Out of fear, Subaru gasped out her name repeatedly.

“Rem, Rem... Remm, Remm... Re…m...REM!”

Each time he called out her name, he could not stop his tears from overflowing like a flood. Each time tears flowed out of his eyes, she became blurred. Whenever she became obscured, he was afraid she would slip through his fingers once more.

And so, with snot falling out like rain and desperately wiping his face with his sleeve, Subaru frantically tried to keep her face in his view.

“…”

Rem blinked silently, a light shining in her eyes. Having gotten to this point, Subaru knew this was not simply an illusion being shown due to his desire. He had no doubt that this was her—Rem—and she was here.

“—Ah.”

Rem appeared to be trying to say something, her lips moving weakly. Hearing only that weak sound, Subaru’s heart was on the brink of breaking. He’d always talked to her sleeping face, and, in order to confirm that she still had life, checked her breathing as she slept.

Ushering in countless mornings and nights, Subaru had vowed to get her back. However, not once had he heard her voice in all this time. Closing his eyes, he recalled how she’d called out his name, and all sorts of other scenes. —But all of that belonged to the past.

Today, tomorrow, he wanted to hear the voice of the new her. Now that wish had finally come true. Subaru had gotten what he’d yearned for.

“Re…m...It’s fine. It’s okay, so take your time...”

“—Who.”

She anxiously moved her lips, her mouth still closed. Honestly, he thought he should grab her a glass of water or something for her now. However, there didn't seem to be a water source available near them, and it was impossible for him to tear his eyes away from her. Just a single word. If she called out to Subaru once more. When he heard that word, he would—

"—Are."

"...Rem?"

In silence, Rem sped up the movements of her lips, seeking out any ounce of moisture in her mouth. Moistening her tongue with the secreted saliva, Rem finally regained enough strength to open her mouth. Then, with Subaru reflected in her light blue eyes, she opened her mouth and said—

"—Who…are…you?"

"…"

The sound that spun from her lips, tied together with significance, pierced into Subaru's mind.

—Who are you?

"…"

Subaru knelt down, gazing at Rem's expression, holding his breath. Then, painfully exhaling the accumulated breath in his lungs, he pounded on his chest. Harder and harder, twice, thrice, talking to himself.

He should have expected this possibility. The possibility that Rem might not remember him when she woke up, he had considered it. It was only natural to think of that if he took Gluttony's Authority into account. There was a high possibility of her waking up without her Name or Memories.

Indeed, it was quite likely. So, it wasn't like Subaru had never considered that she'd lack memories. And, of course, the shock and pain he was feeling right now wouldn't be eliminated just because of this, either.

Even if that were the case, no longer would Subaru curse fate and live in despair, no longer would he live in rage, no longer would he pretend to be a tragic hero and feel sorry for himself.

Most important of all, Natsuki Subaru had already been told something by her.

"Please show me how awesome you can be, Subaru."

"—My name is Natsuki Subaru."

Gritting his teeth hard, Subaru threw away his anguished expression and pulled his cheeks up. Rubbing his face hard, he did his best to put on an act and give Rem a smile.

"You may not be able to remember it for now. But…I'm..."

"You…are..."

In the face of Rem's question, Subaru made a pause and shut his eyes tightly. Then, his black eyes reflecting in her light blue eyes, he continued—

"I'm…your hero. —I've missed you, Rem."

Saying this, for the sake of the girl he'd made an oath to, Natsuki Subaru once again took on the role of a hero. Bearing the image of a broken hero, the young boy once again gave his name for the sake of the young girl.

—Once again, here, and now, he vowed. To start a story with her, from zero.

Those Remaining in the Watergate City, Priestella: Reconstruction Journal Number Six (Edited Machine Translation)

1

…The attack on the great underground temple in the Watergate city of Priestella is finally coming to a close.

However, as they approach the final phase, the circumstances are slowly catching up with the invading party.

Liliana: “Ugh, ugh, ugh… w, what do I do from here?!”

Ezzo: “I told you! I told you it was best to proceed as instructed!”

Liliana: “No! It is always the fresh and innovative ideas that break through the confines of the environment and are not bound by existing values…!”

Ezzo: “That’s coming from someone who doesn’t have a full understanding of the standards that need to be broken!”

Liliana: “Sniffle!”

Hearing Liliana’s reckless desire to be a hero, Ezzo judges it. Normally, Garfiel would be more in line with Liliana’s views, but in the current situation, Ezzo’s argument was far more correct. Everyone’s life was at stake right now. There was no doubt that Garfiel was the most pathetic person in the world, stuck in such a situation.

Garfiel: “Damn it…!”

He was slumped on the mossy floor, biting his back teeth as his body refused to budge. Garfiel was lying on his stomach on the floor, unable to move a single finger due to the mysterious load acting on the space. This is a thing… a punishment for sinners, or so Ricardo had interpreted it.

Liliana: “Ouchhh! It’s bad, it’s bad, it’s bad!”

Liliana’s transparent scream goes up, and the board tilts more and more to our disadvantage. Unlike the men who were crippled before her, Liliana was the only one who was free to challenge the last trap of the Great Temple, the giant Shatranj board. The Shatranj board is an ancient board game, where each piece is life-sized, and the game has begun with the commander, Liliana, as the king. However, the board was overwhelmingly disadvantageous for Liliana, who defied the rules from the beginning of the game, and her fate as the King piece was in the wind. With a number of shattered pieces already scattered all over the board, it was only a matter of time before Liliana was shattered at this rate.

Ricardo: “Liliana-chan! If you lose, you’ll probably die, so you’ve got to be strong!”

Liliana: “Uhh? What’s that? I didn’t hear any of that!”

Ricardo: “You didn’t even realize it! You’d know it if you saw it!”

Ricardo waved the hooks on his right arm, and Liliana, hearing his voice, became upset. Even Ezzo, who was a wise mentor to the strategy team, seemed to be uncomfortable with the Shatranj board, and it was difficult to come up with a move that would resolve the situation.

Garfiel: “If we lose like this, Liliana will be gone and our amazing selves be…?”

Will the defeat of Liliana, the representative, be the defeat of Garfiel and the others as it is? In that case, Garfiel would be defeated without a fight. That was when such anxiety flashed through his mind… A small shadow passed by the edge of his vision.

Garfiel: “Rats…?”

Garfiel frowned suspiciously. This is a space beneath the city, a space that has been abandoned for years. I would not be surprised if there were not one, but a hundred rats living here, but Garfiel had not seen a single one of them in all their adventures. The only thing that was there was a deformed monsters. The only reason the rats appeared there was because they had come in from the outside…

???: “That’s not good, Garfiel. You can’t be too honest. You should be more skeptical and not be poisoned by Natsuki-san.”

“…”

The voice came from the back of the corridor where Garfiel and the others had come from. It was a familiar voice, as it should be, but my rational mind denied that it could be. Because the person who this voice reminds me of is badly injured in both legs. Even if the enemies and traps along the way had been eliminated, there was no way to get there.

???: “Well, I wouldn’t have been able to do it alone. So…”

???: “My sister asked us to come with her, and we did.”

???: “I was worried about the captain, too.”

With that, two small cat people appeared from the dark passageway and a basket they carried… in that basket, Otto Suwen rushed to his brother’s predicament.

2

???: “…Sin will become a wedge which allows no escape.”

As soon as Otto, Hetaro and Tivey, Mimi’s brothers who appeared carrying him, stepped into the place, the voice directly shook Garfiel’s brain again.

Hetaro: “Ahh!”

Tivey: “Gah, It’s, It’s…”

Under the influence of the voice, Hetaro and Tivey could not stand there either. Somehow, the dragon was lowered to the ground, but Otto frowned as he crawled out from inside.

Otto: “I see, this is the load in question…”

Garfiel: “Oh, Otto-Bro?”

Otto: “Oh, I don’t want to keep you wondering. It’s a simple story. I asked the rats to scout for me, so I knew what would happen here…”

Garfiel: “That’s not it! No, it’s not. Why is Otto-Bro here…?”

With a hint of astonishment in his voice, Garfiel struggled to keep his voice down. Garfiel knew the answer to his own question. Otto came here because he was worried about Garfiel. Otto is a very caring person, so it’s easy to understand his decision.

Garfiel: “But now that Otto-Bro is involved… what happens to us if Liliana loses? Our amazing selves can’t face the captain or Emilia-sama like this…!”

Otto: “I told you, you’re taking it too seriously. Didn’t I tell you? We jumped into this situation knowing what we were getting into. Why is that?”

Garfiel: “Eh?”

Otto shook his head loosely in front of a gritted teeth Garfiel. Then he did something even more startling in front of Garfiel, who rolled his eyes… he pushed his injured leg and slowly stood up on the spot. The load must have been on for sure. He chuckled at the questioning look.

Otto: “I know it doesn’t seem like much… but what does it matter?”

Garfiel: “What about…?”

Otto: “Sin is a wedge, was it? I can imagine this situation, that it is weighing on each of us. It’s not the severity of the sins committed by each individual that makes the difference… is it?”

Garfiel: “…Ah?”

Otto’s guess, which negates Garfiel’s conclusion. Otto looked down at his brother, still crawling on his belly, his astonishment, and shrugged his shoulders.

Otto: “It’s not the sin committed that weighs you down, but how heavy you take it. So if you are willing to reopen it, the weight will go away.”

Garfiel: “Ah…”

Otto: “However, it’s hard to truly reopen your mind. That’s why I can’t stop my knees from shaking…The best of us for this is probably Emilia-sama.”

Garfiel was greatly puzzled when he was told that opening up was the right thing to do. The mind is not an easy thing to free. Especially when it comes to Garfiel. In this case…

Otto: “That’s why I’m here. …Garfiel, to forgive you.”

“…”

Garfiel was confused by the sudden offer and choked up. Otto’s forgiveness, he couldn’t quite grasp what it meant.

Otto: “I know that despite your appearance and demeanor, you have a difficult personality to reopen. I also know that you can’t forgive yourself easily. So let me forgive you instead.”

Garfiel: “…Ah”

Otto: “I’m pretty sure your regrets are about your family and us, anyway.”

At Otto’s bitter words, Garfiel was astonished and could not argue. Garfiel can’t say anything back to Otto, who laughed at him anyway. It was undoubtedly true. And Otto was right, Garfiel thinks he is naive, no, he is ashamed.

Garfiel: “Oh, oh oh…!”

…Just that one word was enough to lift the weight off of Garfiel’s body.

Hetaro: “Captain, we’ll forgive you for worrying us when you lost your… right hand.”

Tivey: “I forgive you, too. I forgive you for all the trouble you’ve caused me.”

Ricardo: “…Oh, yeah. Oh, yeah, you little bastards. You’re so full of shit…”

With Hetaro and Tivey crouched down and cheering, Ricardo also stood up laughing. Next to him, only Ezzo, who had no one to forgive him, was in pain, “Why…?”. Then they stood up, Garfiel and Ricardo, and looked at each other.

Ricardo: “So, I’m standing up, but what are we going to do? Why don’t we cheer for Miss Liliana loudly from behind?”

Garfiel: “No, that’s not it. You’re right, our amazing selves were too honest.”

Gently clenching his fists together, Garfiel replied with a ferocious grit of his teeth. Then he nodded to Otto, who was standing painfully behind him, with just a glance.

Garfiel: “Our amazing selves don’t need to be a part of this nonsense.”

With that, Garfiel jumped down the front steps and landed on the board where Liliana was cornered. Then he stood proudly in front of Liliana, the king.

Liliana: “Ga, Garfiel-san? This is a rule thing?”

Garfiel: “Who decides what the rules are and where are they written?”

Garfiel whispers this to Liliana, who turns a wary eye. At that moment, a piece resembling a knight aiming at Liliana brandished a weapon and closed in on her. Garfiel literally kicked him in the face with a spinning kick.

Garfiel: “You can’t expect a lump of stone to stop someone else!”

Ricardo: “Oh, that’s fine! That’s something I’m really good at too!”

With a hearty laugh, Ricardo jumped down onto the board as well, and firmly caught the next piece’s blow with his hook. In the meantime, he slams his machete sideways into the vacant torso, shattering it. It was a big mistake to try to start a straightforward contest of wits.

Ricardo: “The first voice and the atmosphere that started on its own got the better of me. But, you know, now that I’m not going to be asked to win Shatranj… I’ll push through.”

Liliana: “Whoa, whoa, whoa! Let’s do it! It flashed an Idea! Brain muscle in the middle of the chestnut hair!!”

An excited Liliana strummed her lyulyre and charged at the pieces, listening to the sound… Garfiel and Ricardo attacked, and it took less than a minute to wipe out the enemy pieces.

3

The last, unpleasant load disappeared right after Garfiel hit the enemy king.

Ezzo: “Yes, I thought it would be a contest of wits, but in the end it was a matter of brute force…”

Otto: “I’m sure I’ve been a bad influence, but if you can solve a problem by punching it, it’s often the fastest way. I’ve learned a lot in the past year.”

When Ezzo finally stood up, Otto smiled and closed one eye. Once again, Otto was in the basket carried by Hetaro and Tivey. Then, the group, including the three who followed, headed for the innermost space of the temple this time. There is an object with a vague light on it that asserts its existence… the “Witch’s remains”.

Garfiel: “This is…”

Placed on a glowing pedestal, it looked like the bone of a human arm. However, it was very small and probably belonged to a child… So the “Witch” was young.

Ezzo: “Very interesting, but we’ll have to look into it later. There is a magic cloth. Let’s wrap it up and take it with us.”

When Garfiel thought it was in poor taste to gaze at it, Ezzo offered it to him, holding back his academic interest. The cloth is made of a special material that is woven with a magic formula that prevents the deterioration of the wrapped object. There is a question of degree, but it is probably best for wrapping bones. The rest…

Garfiel: “Now that we’ve served our purpose… how do we get back?”

At the entrance to the underground temple, at the very beginning, we fell more than one hundred meters. The walls were rigged to be unclimbable, and Garfiel hadn’t seen any side passages that looked like exits up to this point. Garfiel had assumed that there would be a way out once they reached the end of the room.

Liliana: “Well, if nothing else, can I count on Otto-san’s blessing?”

Otto: “…I’m sure they know we’re down here, so if we don’t come back for a while, they’ll send help. Just like we did.”

Liliana: “So, yeah! Fortunately, we’ve already taken care of all the scary things on our way here, and now we just need to stay here and wait for help.”

With a particularly cheerful voice, Liliana placed her butt on the pedestal where she had moved the remains.

…It was that moment.

Liliana: “Up?”

The moment Liliana gets on, the pedestal sinks down significantly. Then a quiet earth tremor and the sound of something approaching from afar began to echo.

Otto: “Wait, Liliana-san?! What did you do?!”

Liliana: “Wa, I didn’t do anything! I didn’t do anything! I insist that I did not!”

Garfiel: “This is no time to talk! Oi, this shaking…”

It happened just as Liliana was about to deny her responsibility… A tremendous amount of water rushed in and rushed at the group.

Garfiel: “Uh, ooooh…!”

The water flowed in with such force that it sank the underground temple and swallowed Garfiel and the others in one fell swoop. Quickly reaching out, Garfiel grabbed the basket containing Otto. Ricardo, too, grabs Hetaro and Tivey, and snags Liliana with his hook. Then Ezzo curls up and defends the remains wrapped in magic cloth to the death… but is swept away.

“…”

As he was swept away by the murky waters, Garfiel forced his eyes open to the dark vision and desperately searched for a way out. With the help of Liliana, Ricardo and Ezzo, Garfiel reached the deepest part of the Great Underground Temple, and with the help of Otto and Mimi’s brothers, they finally obtained the Witch’s Remains. It should never have ended in failure in this way…

Garfiel: “…Buhaa”

The end of the struggle came abruptly. Garfiel felt that he was being thrown out of a high place, and after sinking deeply once, he surfaced with Otto in his arms. Garfiel managed to catch his breath and looked around…

???: “…Ga, Garfiel-dono? And Liliana! And Ricardo-dono!”

Above the surface of the water, a young man standing on the edge of the moat… Kiritaka, the current leader of Priestella, was looking down at the group, stunned. If you look closely, you can see that the surroundings have brightened up, and everyone has been thrown out of the dimly lit space underground.

Otto: “Cough, cough, I wonder if this thing is supposed to be drained out?”

Coughing, Otto guessed the situation they were in. Garfiel agrees with him.

…The waterway, a muddy stream, merged into it and swept Garfiel and the others from the dark underground to the bright surface.

Liliana: “Ki, Kiritaka-Saaan! Please help me! The bones, I brought the bones back!”

Ezzo: “I’m at my wits’ end… I’m not fit to do manual labor in the first place…!”

Liliana complained as she splashed and splashed, and Ezzo floated helplessly. Ricardo, Hetaro and the others were completely soaked, their hair flattened and they looked like different people.

Kiritaka: “In any case, I hope all of you all… made it back safely.”

Garfiel: “Oh, Thanks to Otto-Bro.”

Otto: “If you say that, I’m sure it’s because of you Garfiel.”

As he relaxed his body and floated in the water, Garfiel laughed back at his older brother’s words. Then, they both thrust out their fists without either of them, and bumped them together.

…The group continued to drift in the water, relaxed and surrendered to a comfortable sense of weakness, until a panicked Kiritaka came calling. After a long ride, the group that had conquered the Great Underground Temple returned safely.

Lady Priscilla's Cheers for Me!
Presentiments of Chaos Part

1

Looking back at the history between the Kingdom of Lugunica and the Vollachian Empire, one could clearly see the depth of the rift that ran between them.

Both of these countries were part of the four great nations; however, it was plain and clear that they had the remaining two countries —The Holy Kingdom of Gusteko and The Kararagi City States—beat if boiled down to how abundant their realms were.

Of course, spreading the notion that further expansion was desirable, or seeking further prosperities, in lands like these was rather easy. Thus, as a result, Lugunica and Vollachia clashed with each other many a time, with the other's territory as their aim.

For most of these, the Vollachians, with their harsh mantra of life, had been the ones to seize many opportunities to wage battle. But, throughout their long history, the Lugunicans too had gone and waged battle on them.

Nevertheless, these skirmishes had gotten fewer and further between ever since four hundred years ago—when the Kingdom of Lugunica formed its covenant with the Divine Dragon; and so, peaceful times flourished between the two nations.

???: "…I read that stuff in a book! I'm really glad the two countries have quit fighting thanks to the esteemed Divine Dragon giving it its all!"

As soon as they heard Schult's answer, the three riding along in the same Dragon Carriage reacted in three different ways. Priscilla batted her eyes shut as she listened to him talk, Al nodded as he rested his chin on his hand, and…

???: “So you’re really going to blindly believe such a childish fairytale?”

And lastly, Heinkel, a red-haired man who, immaturely, was acting like a wet blanket.

The four of them were travelling together, all key members of the camp belonging to Priscilla, who was participating in the Royal Selection. They were currently on board the same Dragon Carriage, deep into their journey towards their destination.

During their journey Priscilla had ended up with a lot of time on her hands, thus she’d asked Schult about his studies. And just after he’d answered, Heinkel had given him his crude impression.

In all honesty, Al and such were always in a constant state of anxiety over Heinkel’s attitude.

How could he spew that sort of stuff to Priscilla’s favorite, Schult? Couldn’t he remember that he’d put his life at risk several times before for the very same reason?

This time as well, Heinkel received a cold look from Priscilla, as if it were natural…

Al: “Huh?”

Priscilla: “…What is it, Al. Are you amusing yourself by stealing glances at my face?”

Al: “Nope, though make no mistake, your face is gorgeous, Princess; the kind where you never get tired of it, no matter how many times you look… Regardless, I was surprised you didn’t say anything. I was terrified you were going to blow a fuse again and set off a blood purge.”

Priscilla: “Fool.”

Priscilla fired off a curt rebuke in response to the content of Al’s answer, as the latter shrugged his shoulders. Following that, she gave her beautiful chin a nod towards the front—pointing out Schult and Heinkel.

Al looked over in that direction, and…

Schult: “Calling it childish is awful, Heinkel-sama! After all, I am still a child, so of course I’m gonna be getting hooked on childish stuff.”

Heinkel: “The fact you can take a good look at yourself at your age is great and all. But is the place you’re living in one with guys who are willing to show due consideration to the fact you’re a child?”

Schult: “Well…”

Heinkel: “I’ll go ahead and tell you. No, it’s not. They’ll mercilessly snap at the fact you’re Priscilla-sama’s weak point, if they catch wind of it. Priscilla-sama would be put in a bind, due to you being content with the fact you’re a child. Get it?”

The words Heinkel had for Schult were devoid of any mercy as the latter frantically defended himself.

Though it still appeared to be a manifestation of Heinkel’s immaturity, if one were to attentively prick their ears up to their exchange, it would be noticeable that was not the case at all.

In fact, it seemed like Schult had figured out the meaning of his words in his own way too.

Schult: “I get it… I’ve gotta not be a child, right?”

Heinkel: “…No, kids should stick to being kids, being cute is way better. Though they may be a bit more of a handful, it's way better to have no special powers.”

Schult: “So which one is it…?!”

With the look on his face indicating he’d heard something pleasant, Schult grew red in anger while Heinkel brushed that aside.

But they weren’t actually arguing with each other, as far as Al could see. Plus, it was clear that Heinkel wasn’t trying to harass Schult.

Al: “He’s not going to be showing some part of him where he’s kind to children, right? Even if he does, he ain't gonna be getting back any of the likability he's lost."

Priscilla: "Enough with the nonsense, Al. Though evaluations may be things that others attach to one another, they need not be shackles that fetter one's way of living. Do you really believe that thing cares about what others think of him? There are far easier ways of living life out there."

Al agreed with what Priscilla had said, all the while fiddling around with the seam of his helmet.

Heinkel's way of life certainly looked more like the epitome of horridness, rather than one of clumsiness. He even seemed to willingly walk down the path of being loathed, rebuked, disdained and shunned by others.

That's why the fact that he displayed a decent human side every so often would bring them the sort of surprise Al had felt. In other words…

Al: "I guess it's just like the cliché where a hooligan picks up a stray cat on a rainy day."

Priscilla: "You are saying incomprehensible stuff again."

Al: "You don't ask about these things as much as you used to, huh. It's pretty sad that I've been getting less chances to lecture you about them, you know?"

Priscilla: "We have been acquainted with each other for a long time now, so I can tell which of your words elicit my interest, and which are prattle. What you said now is prattle that I shall not listen to. Besides…"

Priscilla cut her words off there and looked towards the Dragon Carriage's window. Naturally, Al followed suit and turned his face around. There, he saw how the atmosphere had changed outside the window.

Priscilla: "…We shall be arriving at the harbor soon."

Al could feel the smell of water in the breeze straight after Priscilla had spoken those words. The air too was starting to be tinged with moisture; he could feel it on his skin that they were near a large body of water.

The harbor city they were heading to was nearby. Ironic as it was, the harbor looked out towards the lower reaches of a massive river —one they'd been close to until very recently.

Al: "The Watergate City of Priestella, or rather, the Great Tigracy River that flows nearby once again huh. We've come far downstream from that city, but I can't shake off the impression that we've ended up looping back to it."

Priscilla: "It is not part of my nature to fritter away time for nothing. We cannot be so naive as to take the road that leads down south through the Barielle Territory though. We have nothing to gain by carelessly provoking the Empire."

Al: "There's one way around that, using your splendor, Princess"

Priscilla: "Indeed, my face is always bright and radiant. Nevertheless, the rabble will oftentimes misjudge the value of that which shines. Birds that gather shiny objects are far more honest and adorable in that respect."

Priscilla directly called the people of the Empire fools without so much as mincing her words. However, given that he was so used to being on the end of her speech and actions, there wasn't anything in particular in what she'd said that he could find fault with. Besides, the relations they held with the Empire were in line with what Schult had said at the start.

Thus, Al and the others had headed off to the Great Tigracy River, heeding Priscilla's intentions. Their aim was to ride the river's current downstream and make it into the Empire.

Al: "The Empire, huh…"

He muttered softly. The Vollachian Empire was a place that had not left any good impressions on Al. Though he had spent eighteen years there, far longer than the time he had spent in the Kingdom of Lugunica, the only impression he had left with him was one of struggling to survive in a world akin to hell.

This place was one he had hoped to never return to, if it were at all possible…

Priscilla: "…What is it?"

Al let out a sigh as he looked at Priscilla, the very reason behind why he was going back to the Empire. Priscilla raised her shapely eyebrows in response, making Al bluster out a "Nothing,"

Al: "Just if this is one of the weaknesses of falling in love, then I wonder what there's to like about it."

Priscilla: "I see. This feels like a bunch of nonsense that I need not hear."

Keeping in line with the standard she'd set earlier, Priscilla lost interest in what Al had to say. And in response to her cold attitude, Al softly muttered "What's there to like about it, huh."

2

Cutting down through the world map, the Great Tigracy River had its source in the south of the Holy Kingdom of Gusteko and meandered southward, passing through the places where the four great countries bordered one another, before finally flowing into the Vollachian Empire. There the river also swept down its realm, linking the southernmost land to the Great Waterfall.

Many ships travelled through the river, often being used for trade between the countries. Priestella was one of these trading hubs, though other, more modest, river harbors existed as well.

The ship they had chartered to cross into the Empire was one setting sail to the great river from one such river harbor.

They had started off their cruise by reserving a ship neither too big nor too small, the Empire as their destination.

Some stuff happened during their journey. Like Schult getting sick from the ship rocking about, Priscilla telling them all she knew about travelling by ship and the great river, and Heinkel getting into disputes with the sailors. However, they didn't encounter any major troubles, and like that, the ship with them aboard crossed into the Empire. And then…

???: "No sudden movements folks. Do anything weird and there'll be hell to pay."

Al: "…"

???: "'Oy, you, the asshole with the face covered up, do you get what I'm saying? I'm talking to you!"

Al: "Oh, me? My bad, my bad, couldn't quite catch your expression. Now I get you loud and clear."

Al raised his hands and kneeled down on the deck of the medium-sized ship—which was still in the midst of its journey downstream. Saying "How did it come to this?", he lamented his ill luck.

They had boarded their ship in the harbor city and tried to cross into the Empire from the river, just as they had initially planned.

The Vollachian Empire was in a state of constant tension with the Kingdom of Lugunica, the latter holding its Royal Selection; however, the river-crossing was way less guarded, compared to crossing the border station by land.

Al had imagined they would be able to continue like this and get onto Imperial Lands without any issues, however…

Al: "Never thought we'd come across river bandits…"

Al frowned inside his helmet as he placed his sole arm behind his head, indicating that he was not going to put up a fight.

River bandits: just like one would get mountain bandits up in the mountains and moor bandits in the moors, one would also get bandits dubbed “river bandits” in the rivers. They were simply robbers by trade, forming bands to attack merchant ships and ferries, pillaging their valuables.

By the time they had caught a glimpse of the boats around their chartered ship, it was already too late. They had come aboard in the blink of an eye, and both Al and the sailors ended up being taken captive.

???: “Wh-Wh-Whoa, Al-sama? Wh-What should we do?”

Al: “Calm down, Schult-chan. We’ll be okay for now, so long as we don’t go against them. Heinkel, ya geezer, that goes for you as well y’know?”

Heinkel: “…Tch”

Heinkel moved his hand away from the sword at his waist as he stood next to the panicking Schult.

His lifeless blue eyes were seemingly saying he would do whatever it took against these river bandits, however, Al had lazily shaken his head. His chances of coming out as the winner rested with having Al help him.

For sure, if Al and Heinkel worked together, they might be able to scrape by against these river bandits, which numbered around twenty. However…

Al: “We wouldn’t come out unscathed either. You wouldn’t want Schult-chan to get hurt, right?”

Heinkel: “…”

Al: “Oh, seriously? That worked. Attaboy Schult-chan, how fiendish of you.”

Schult: “H-H-Huh? What’s that all about?”

Heinkel, albeit reluctantly, finally shelved away his readiness to fight.

Al was not sure whether Schult's presence contributing to that was because Heinkel seriously liked children, or because he was projecting someone else through Schult.

River Bandit: "I'm gonna lower the boats down. You guys move over there, we won't be killing you."

The rogue in charge of the river bandits lowered the boat at the side of the ship down as he said that.

However, it was going to be touch and go whether this boat could fit all of the sailors from the ship, even crammed together. Though their ship was by no means a large one, it still held a crew of twenty, same as the river bandits. Add passengers like Al and the others to the mix, and things were going to get tough.

River Bandit: "Boss! We've got a real beauty staying in one of the cabins!"

Al: "Gah!"

One of the river bandits who had been scouring the ship came back carrying that bombshell. The person he had brought along was Priscilla, who should have been relaxing in her cabin. Naturally, she was not in a great mood, given that she had been interrupted. —No, it was much worse.

That was obvious enough from witnessing the smoldering look in her eyes. However, the boss stepped over to Priscilla and boldly grabbed her chin, not taking any note of this.

Boss: "Whoa, she's lush. She's gorgeous, and well-dressed to boot… I bet we'll be getting a huge ransom from her parents or husband. No way we're letting this golden goose out of our sight."

Priscilla: "…How vulgar."

Boss: "What?"

Priscilla: "Even under the best of times, the thought of going back to where I used to live is one that weighs heavy on me. This first hurdle already is not starting to bode well. Nevertheless, I shall not tolerate having it upon the path I walk. Therefore…”

Priscilla narrowed her eyes, all the while being still made to look up at him.

Both Al and Heinkel snapped to attention, bracing themselves for the carnage that would ensue. However, nothing happened.

Priscilla: “…”

With her eyes still narrowed, Priscilla softly moved her lips and began whispering something to the boss.

His expression significantly tensed up after he heard what she had to say, his eyes swinging wide open. His underlings also exchanged glances with one another, witnessing their boss like that.

And then…

Boss: “—. Just like I said, get the sailors onto the boat! We’ll be taking the woman and her companions for ransom. And we’ll be having the ship as well!”

The boss loudly declared this again, causing the river bandits to hurriedly comply. And just like that, the original sailors were placed on the boat and set loose on the river, leaving only Priscilla’s group behind.

Al: “Erm… So, what are we going to do? Negotiate the price of the ransom or something?”

Priscilla: “Fool, we needn’t do anything like that. Lo’ and behold.”

Al: “Uh, what do you mean… Whoa?!”

Al had tried to continue with what he was saying once the sailors were out of sight, but he was left amazed by the fact that the river bandits were all kneeling down on the spot, reverentially waiting on Priscilla.

Al, Schult and Heinkel blinked in astonishment, not understanding the meaning of what lay in front of them. But Priscilla drank it in, as if it were the most obvious thing ever,

Priscilla: “Excellent work, you have my thanks for welcoming me. That was quite the smart move.”

Boss: “Yes ma’am. Smart…?”

Priscilla: “It is a word the jester who serves me says. You can take it as a compliment if you do not capture its meaning.”

The river bandit tilted his head in confusion, before nodding deeply at what Priscilla had said. Seeing that, Al finally got up from where he was and said “Princess?”

Al: “I don’t get what this means, or what sort of connection you have with these guys, Princess… Any chance of an explanation?”

Priscilla: “There is nothing to explain. These people belong to the private troops of an Imperial Noble and are merely disguised as river bandits.”

Schult: “Private troops? But but, aren’t they wicked people?”

Both Al and Schult could not figure out what Priscilla meant, their heads similarly tilted in confusion. Only Heinkel behind them said something, looking as if he had figured it out.

Heinkel: “So that’s what it is. Your identity would stand out no matter how much we tried to avoid it. So the easiest way to get them off your trail is to hide where you are. Therefore…”

Priscilla: “…High Countess Selena Dracroy. We are acquainted via my ex-husband.”

Priscilla quietly replied back to Heinkel, not once denying what he had said. Hearing both her answer, and the name that had cropped up there, the facial expression of the river bandits grew tenser.

Likely, this High Countess or whatever was their mistress. And so, in following her orders—no, in accordance with her and Priscilla’s collaboration, they had put on this spiel.

Al: “Did you really have to go this far just to get these people to tell them off? Aren’t you just going back home?”

Priscilla: “This shall not end up being only a mere visit back home. —Otherwise, where would the fun be in that.”

Priscilla pulled out her fan from her cleavage, hiding her mouth with it, before then flashing him a somewhat cruel smile. Though Al could not actually see her lips, which had taken the form of that smile, he could feel a shiver running down his spine.

The ship, with them on board, sailed down the river and headed into the Empire. —The curtain-rise signaling unrest drew ever near.

The Golden Lion and the Sword Saint, The Lion's Ferocity: Third Chronicle

1

"Does the dinner suit your tastes?"

"It ain't bad. Anyhow, Reinhard's cookin' is more delicious."

"This, really… The kitchen staff have been giving it their all, but it still isn't up to par? Just as I thought, the world's greatest knight truly seems to be great at everything."

"It ain't that big of a deal. This dude's cookin' is just one of the few things I acknowledge about him."

Whilst saying that, Felt jutted her finger at the red-haired knight, Reinhard, who was seated next to her. Her comment, which was hard to tell if it really was a compliment or not, caused Reinhard and the dinner host—Russell Fellow, the merchant who'd invited the two of them there—to exchange glances while smiling bitterly.

Felt and Reinhard, who had escorted the Sin Archbishop, Sirius, to prison, were being entertained by Russell, one of the most influential people in the royal capital, and came to this place to be treated to dinner.

In the royal capital, Lugunica, this was the largest residence in the commercial district, as well as where Russell lived. The residence of the man who was known as one of the prominent merchants in the royal capital was even more luxurious than the mansions of your average noble in the noble district, highlighting the fact that he was a highly successful individual.

This was evidenced further by the fact that Felt and the others enjoyed a variety of different dishes that satisfied their tastebuds.

"…"

Narrowing her crimson eyes, Felt poured the post-dinner black tea into her mouth, as was only natural. Though it irritated her to no end, the life she had lived this past year was rather distinct, like a completely different world, when compared to the life she had lived for ten or so years in the slums. She may have been shocked by the differences in ideas and what could be considered common sense, but whether she liked it or not, the appearance and form of the person known as Felt had changed, having been dyed a different color.

—Felt was not afraid of change. For change was only the natural course of things.

No matter who or where you are, there will always be those with unparalleled strength whom you cannot match up to. However, the theory of 'Only the Strong Survive' only applied to the strong.

Felt was instinctively aware that she was most certainly not a strong person. Having been born and raised in the slums, she had not been educated, and to top it all off, she was a female. If it weren't for Grandpa Rom looking after her, she likely would not have made it to the present day.

As a result, Felt had a preference for the theory of the Survival of the Fittest—where the one who could adapt to their situation and discern the best manner of survival would survive—rather than the theory of 'Only the Strong Survive.'

She also believed that it was because of this belief that she is who she is today. Therefore, she did not blame herself for changing and adapting to her current situation and position. This was only the natural course of things. If there existed anything unnatural or unsatisfying, it would be—

"What the hell are ya smirkin' at?"

"Smirking… Did I smirk in such a way? My apologies, milady. It's just unusual for you to praise me in such a frank manner."

"Frank? I was simply praisin' your cookin' skills, yeah? But you're a knight, not a cook. Ain't that right?" Felt wrinkled her nose at his smile, which made her feel as if he weren't two-faced.

Reinhard was the knight who served Felt, as well as the knight who brought her into this different world against her will. Although they had spent time together for the past year, for some reason, Felt still hated him. —No, that wasn't the proper word for it. Instead, it could be said that she got angry at the mere sight of him.

Even at this very moment, she felt angry at him like she usually did.

"Ha."

"Oh-ho?"

"No, my apologies. The relationship between the two of you simply feels surprisingly novel." Observing the interaction going on between Reinhard and Felt, Russell provided a justification for his laugh, chuckling softly. "I've heard word of it before, but your Master-Servant relationship truly is incredible. The relationship between you two really breaks the bounds of common sense when it comes to the relationship between a knight and their lord."

"This ain't the first time I've heard something like that, but no matter how many times I hear it, I still don't see where it's comin' from."

"However, it came from Mr. Russell this time, who is famed for his excellent eyes in the royal capital. I believe it is a very good opinion. Lady Felt."

The relationship between the two of them which Russell had evaluated was often said to be an unordinary Master-Servant relationship. However, to Felt, the idea of "Normal" didn't exist. And, in the first place… "When it comes to human relationships, it's only natural for there to be no such thing as 'normal.' Everyone is different. And if that's the case, then every relationship ain't the same. Ain't that right?"

"…"

"That's why I don't wanna hear from a guy who often talks about what is 'normal'. Even less so if it's from a guy who's said to have excellent eyes. That'd be outta the question."

Even if a man were said to have a good eye for people, if he were held back by superficial values, it would mean the people around him had poor judgement.

Such uninteresting guys aren't that hard to find throughout the kingdom, so… "What kind of guy are ya gonna be for me? If you're just gonna be an uninteresting guy who talks bullshit, then I'm just gonna have ta thank ya for the fine meal and head on out."

"…Now I understand. You're more…tough than I heard."

"Hmph. I ain't sure where ya heard that, but if you're truly a person who has a good eye for people, then don't listen to such things, confirm it with your own eyes."

With her arms crossed, Felt snorted at Russell in a provocative manner.

He was the one who had invited them here. To put it another way, there must have been another reason as to why they were invited here other than to simply have a friendly get-together.

—From this point forward, the main discussion would begin.

"—. Do you recall what we were talking about in front of the Prison Tower during the day, Lady Felt?"

"Are you referrin' to the thing 'bout the changin' times and the tumultuous era?"

"Yes, that is correct."

Russell nodded and began talking about the conversation they'd had when the Sin Archbishop was being escorted into the Prison Tower. He then called the trend of Sin Archbishops and the Three Great Witchbeasts being defeated one after the other, as well as how the royal selection first began, the changing times.

It was the flow of change comparable to 400 years ago, when the Witch of Envy was running wild.

"The signs of change are not limited to within the borders of the Kingdom of Lugunica. To the north, the Church of Gusteko has begun hunting heretics, and to the west, in Kararagi, the thinking of the mayors there has begun to fester. Most importantly, in the south, in Vollachia…”

“Vollachia… Are there any signs of unrest in his empire?” Responded Reinhard to Russell, who’d folded his hands on the table and spoken in a lowered voice.

To the south was the Vollachia Empire, which was the nation that the Kingdom of Lugunica was most weary of. The relationship between the two countries could not be said to be friendly, and they often had conflicts with each other.

“However, what I can say is that the Kingdom exchanged a non-aggression contract with the Empire for the duration of the royal selection.”

“The Kingdom did indeed hold negotiations with the Empire for the forming of a non-aggression pact before the start of the royal selection. Weren’t you part of the delegation that handled that, Sir Reinhard?”

“That’s right. Felix and I accompanied Council Elder Miklotov and Council Elder Bordeaux.”

Felt raised her eyebrows when she heard the nodding Reinhard say that. Of course, one of the reasons why she was surprised was because this was the first time she’d heard about the fact that he had been in the delegation that’d been sent to the Empire, but—

“Wait, what? From what I can remember, wasn’t there some stupid little treaty called the Reinhard Law? And ‘cause of that, you can’t go to other nations, yeah?”

“Yes, that’s correct. However, it was the Empire that asked me to go with the delegation. I heard it was the wish of the Emperor himself.”

“That guy has strange tastes… if ya ask me, I definitely wouldn’t wanna see this guy’s face if I could avoid it.”

"This… Even I can be hurt sometimes."

Felt shrugged her shoulders at Reinhard, who was sitting across from her and smiling bitterly.

Whatever the case may be, since it was the Emperor himself who'd requested Reinhard's presence there, and the non-aggression pact came about because of that, then even if the Empire was rather warlike, it would never dishonor itself by violating the pact and attacking the kingdom.

"It's precisely as you have presumed. Even the Empire wouldn't violate the pact made between the two nations by making a move on the Kingdom."

"—. That really worsens the mood, ya know."

"Lady Felt?"

Russell had picked up on that guess and agreed with it completely. That kind of attitude, as if he were fully aware of her ulterior motives and saw through them, annoyed Felt to no end.

If the topic of this conversation ended with this, then she had no idea why he would bring it up in the first place. In that case, Russell should have enough material to continue with it.

Then why was he withholding it from them?

"Are ya tryin' to say that there's no goin' back after hearin' what comes next? I'll tell ya what, once I boasted to the arrogant guys in the castle, there was no goin' back after that."

"And it is my duty to remove all of the obstacles in Lady Felt's path."

Felt's eyes took on a stern expression, and Reinhard's expression became serious as well.

Russell's eyes could only widen slightly at the sight of the master and servant, who were near each other and looking in the same direction. Then, he reluctantly shook his head in the next moment.

"I was rather rude earlier and apologize for that. I did say that you two did not fit within the mold of what could be considered normal when it comes to the relationship between a knight and their lord… However, it is clear now that you two are, without a doubt, master and servant."

Even though Felt did not really see this as a compliment, she felt like there was no point in interrupting him here, so she remained silent.

Russell then raised his hand and had all of the staff in the room leave.

Then, with only them in the room, and without any outsiders present, he lowered his voice and said—

"Now then. What I am about to say is confidential and must not be shared with the outside world… There is a bit of a loophole in what Sir Reinhard said."

"A loophole? Are you referring to the non-aggression pact?"

"Yes. Who actually signed the non-aggression pact between the two countries?"

Reinhard dubiously scrunched up his finely-shaped eyebrows in response to that question.

"The King is actually not present at this time. It was a representative of the Council of Wise Men, Council Elder Miklotov, and Emperor Vincent Vollachia of the Vollachia Empire who… It can't be."

In the middle of saying this, Reinhard's eyes widened in surprise. Felt, who did not share in that surprise, asked for an explanation with a "What the hell is it?!"

"There's nothin' weird about that, yeah? The Council of Wise Men represents the Kingdom now. Ain't it only natural to talk to the highest rankin' person on the opposing side? No one is gonna complain now that the opposing side ain't in the same rank as them, right?"

“…There’s no need to worry about that. His Majesty, Vincent, is a wise man. He should know very well that it doesn’t work like that, right? But…”

“—This pact…was made with the Empire ruled by His Majesty, Vincent.”

Russell said that in the place of Reinhard, who was hesitant to say it. After thinking about it for a moment, Felt understood what he was saying, too. The true meaning behind his roundabout words was—

“There are signs of civil unrest in the Vollachia Empire. If that is true, then the Kingdom is not unrelated to this. —Because there is a possibility that the pact will be dissolved.”

2

“What do ya think ‘bout what that guy said?”

Asked Felt, on the way back to the mansion. The dinner meeting and secret talk now over, their current plan was to return to the Astrea Family’s mansion in the royal capital. In it lived Grimm, who was its caretaker, and Carol, his wife. It was time to see them again after a long time.

Felt was quite fond of the old couple. Therefore, she did not want to return to the mansion with a sad, troubled expression on her face, and intended on getting rid of it on the way there. The source of said expression was none other than the discussion she’d just had with Russell.

“Do ya really believe that something will happen in Vollachia?”

“In my personal opinion, this is not something I want to believe. However, Mr. Russell is not one who would speak such irresponsible words without evidence, after all.”

“That’s very important for a merchant, ain’t it. That’s only natural.”

What could be gleaned from speaking with him was that Russell was the kind of guy that would never spread rumors without gaining anything from it. It would not be right to describe him as being a good person. However, he wasn’t necessarily evil, either. He was the type of person who would use the information at his disposal in order to guide others towards fulfilling his own plans.

Moreover, whether he acted with good or bad intentions would more or less depend on the situation he was currently in and what he needed to deal with, so it wouldn’t be possible to know which one it was until all was said and done. Therefore—

“If Mr. Russell’s speculation turns out to be true and the throne is handed over to another…”

“The Empire would be able to make a big move against the Kingdom. But there ain’t no way the new Emperor wouldn’t know about the pact made by the previous Emperor, yeah?”

“According to the way things are done in the Empire, it is the norm to negate whatever the previous government did, so his speculation is no laughing matter.”

The more she heard about it, the more idiotic the theories of the Empire sounded. While an ability-based system sounded good in name, if it got taken to an extreme, it would advance past what could be considered a good thing and into the realm of anarchy.

Therefore, it could be said that Reinhard and Russell’s fears were by no means ungrounded.

“What will ya do if the Empire attacks?”

“I will ensure your safety first and foremost, Lady Felt. Fortunately, I have met and fought against many of the Empire’s most skilled, so I am sure I’ll be able to take care of things.”

“I ain’t worried ‘bout myself. If I gave a damn about that, I’d just find a way to turn tail and run, anyway. By the way, if that were to actually happen, ya wouldn’t even be able to stay with me in such a situation, would ya?”

Though it was just a hypothetical, if the Empire did indeed invade, then it would end up being a war between two nations. If that were to happen, it would only be natural for there to be no way to deal with the matter of the royal selection.

The strongest knight in the kingdom, Reinhard, as he was a former knight of the royal guard, would be assigned a different role. He would then no longer be in a situation where he was by Felt's side, doing things like cooking meals.

However, in front of Felt who was having such thoughts, Reinhard shook his head. "That's not the case," he said. "Although I am not certain what decision the Council of Wise Men will make at that time, I have already pledged my sword to you, Lady Felt. I will ensure that my duties as your one and only knight and my duties as a member of the royal guard are properly balanced."

"Even if I were to tell ya to turn your back on your country, ya have no intention of turning your back on me…?"

"At the very least, that is the meaning behind the oath I made to you in the royal castle."

Felt couldn't help but scrunch her face up whilst looking at the display of Reinhard looking pleased with himself, a slight smile on his face.

In the royal castle, she had made a vow to make Reinhard her knight, and he had also made a vow to be her knight. In any case, it was something that had been done based on the circumstances she had been placed in, and she had no intention of stepping away from it. Well, she did still feel angry at the very sight of him, however.

"Having said that, it would be best if nothing actually happened in the Empire. The unfortunate thing is that I cannot do anything in such a case if I am not close to the border."

"What we can do, then, is prepare for war. I really don't like this negative way of thinkin' AT ALL."

Pouting, Felt turned her head upwards and gazed at the starry sky.

However, whilst being in trance-like state, what suddenly sprang up within her mind was—

“Even if there ain’t nothing we can do, I’m sure there may be others who can figure out a way to do something about it.”

“Others… You mean the other royal selection candidates? But the others are all…”

…Preoccupied with dealing with the problems in Priestella. She thought that was what Reinhard was about to say before cutting himself off. Much like Felt, who was tasked with transporting the Sin Archbishop to the capital, the Emilia and Anastasia camps were acting in order to overcome the great disaster that had occurred in Priestella.

If they thought about it in this way, it would only be natural that no one had the time or energy to worry about the workings of neighboring nations, however—

“It is a tumultuous era, or so they say, right? I’m lookin’ forward to what’s gonna happen.”

Although she didn’t like borrowing Russell’s words, there must be someone that brought about these tumultuous times. —Perhaps Emilia or the dark-haired boy by her side, for instance.

Looking back at things, she thought that it was because of them that her and Reinhard’s paths intertwined. I’m so lookin’ forward to what is to come. —Lookin’ forward to them making big waves once again.

“Lady Felt?”

“No, it’s nothing. Anyway, let’s go and do what we gotta do. First things first—”

Stopping herself midsentence, Felt then grinned at Reinhard in a rare display of emotion. Without thinking, with her heart overflowing with joy, and her canines in full view, she said, “It’s been sooo long since I’ve had Grandma’s red tea and snacks. Let’s get goin’ already!”

“—Yes. As you wish.”

Chapters 1-12

Chapter 1: Initiation

1

…As soon as the plume of smoke cleared up, Ram felt a rare sense of helplessness.

Ram: "…"

She opened her pale crimson eyes, straining them as she peered into the room which still had smoke hovering over it. However, even as she did so, searching for something amongst the emptiness, the ones which she was seeking were nowhere to be seen.

She looked for those people in the room where a large hole had appeared, someone moving, or someone in black, along with the adorable blue one; however, they were nowhere to be found…

???: "…Ram!"

Ram's shoulder was grabbed from behind as she'd tried to take a step forward, bringing her back to her senses. She realized that she'd been about to step through a cracked bit of the floor. If she hadn't been stopped in her tracks, she might have fallen.

How clumsy of her, to literally not even see what was beneath her feet.

???: "I'm glad you're safe Ram… And Patrasche-chan, are you okay as well?"

Ram: "Emilia… sama…"

Ram bit her lip. Meanwhile, the one who'd grabbed her by the shoulder was Emilia, who should have been on the upper floors. While panting slightly, Emilia checked to make sure Ram was okay, as well as how the black Earth Dragon, Patrasche, who was crouched down behind them, was getting on.

Finally, while looking at them, Ram regained enough of her composure to take in the state of her surroundings.

The corridor in what should have been a robust stone tower had collapsed, with the floor and ceiling both smashed to pieces. She could see the sky and sand of the sand-sea from across the wall, which now had a hole in it; a parched breeze was blowing in as a result.

However, the place that had gotten damaged the most was the room where Ram, Patrasche and co. had been staying in until just before—That's to say, the room they'd so dubbed the "Green Room".

Ram: "…"

The room had been chock-full of grass and ivy, covering the walls, floor, and even going up all the way to the ceiling. Nevertheless, the room was now unrecognizable from its original state, with its natural erosion of many, many years torn up root and branch.

That included its beds, which were woven from grass and ivy, as well as the faint light the Spirit's presence gave off; all of it.

That, and their biggest problem was…

Emilia: "Ram… Where did Subaru and Rem go? They're safe, right?"

Standing by Ram's side, Emilia peered into the area where the Green Room had previously stood. Ram wasn't able to answer her question straight away, even though she knew that her painful silence itself served as an answer.

???: "…First of all, let's try 'n sort out what happened. We're not gonna be able ta talk about things calmly unless we do tha'."

Looking around at everyone who'd gathered within the room as she said that, Anastasia took charge of the situation.

Anastasia's white fox scarf—Echidna—was still wrapped around her. She brushed her fingers through her slightly dusty fur as she spoke.

Anastasia: "So, about that black shadow that attacked the tower jus' before…"

Julius: "It's gone, at least for now. Thanks to the power of the Divine Dragon, Volcanica, I'd say."

Echidna: "Both the Dragon and the shadow's movements were so sudden, it made us really wonder what the heck was happening, huh."

Inside the tower, the ones who'd come back safe and sound began to share what had happened, starting first with Anastasia, and then Julius and Echidna following her lead.

Much like Anastasia and Echidna, Julius' white knight garb was also covered in grime. However, that wasn't just because of the heated battle that had taken place in the tower, it was also heavily due to the effects of the aforementioned event.

Nevertheless, none of these three had ended up with any extra injuries; on that point itself, you could say it was a relief.

That in itself was thanks to the achievement wrought by the Divine Dragon, Volcanica, on the top-most floor of the tower.

Beatrice: "Volcanica cleaved the looming shadow with its breath, I suppose. If not for that, we would have probably been in for a world of hurt, in fact."

Anastasia gave Beatrice a nod in response to what she'd said, as the latter folded her short arms together.

In all honesty, when Volcanica had unleashed its breath so suddenly, Anastasia had uncharacteristically resigned herself for death. Things had happened so quickly, that there hadn't been any way to deal with it.

Though of course she couldn't say that she'd completely relaxed her guard just because of that single breath.

Julius: “The Divine Dragon’s response to the crisis dawning upon us was simply magnificent, but even so, the state it’s in isn’t great, that remains unchanged still… Currently though, it seems to be keeping itself quite obedient and following Emilia-sama’s instructions.”

Anastasia: “Out of consideration for Julius, I’mma try ‘n avoid callin’ ‘em “senile”… But, ‘tis all the same as the Divine Dragon-san bein’ a scary‘un. Anyways, as for what happened, it’s exactly as Beatrice-chan says.”

Beatrice: “I suppose.”

The only one who could have dealt with a situation as abrupt as that was Volcanica. What would have become of them now, had the Dragon not blown away the looming shadow for them.

Yet, they couldn’t start jumping around in joy…

???: “There was a to~n of ‘em. But, they all went towards Onii-san and stuff…”

Anastasia: “Meili-chan.”

Meili: “…Ah, my apo~logies.”

Anastasia: “…”

Meili didn’t take care with her word choice, almost as if she were upset, and for that, Anastasia chided her. Meili gave her a sincere apology as she looked towards Ram and Emilia, both having kept their silence.

In hindsight, the ones who’d received the damage from that shadow had been the two from the Emilia Camp—Subaru and Rem—Thus, the damage the Anastasia Camp had suffered was practically zilch.

Anastasia: “Though it’s not like I can actually say that, we’re all travelin’ together after all.”

Anastasia muttered that to herself before then catching a glimpse of Julius and Echidna. They had been working together with Emilia's group during the time she'd traded places with Echidna, when she'd been sleeping at the depths of her own consciousness.

It went without saying for Echidna, whom she'd known for around ten years, but even the practically brand spanking new Julius, at least as far as her memories were concerned, could easily tell that she was shook.

On that point, it was quite the surprise to Anastasia that Beatrice, who should have been quite close to them, had come to this meeting.

Anastasia: "Beatrice-chan, are ya alright? Ah wait, no, it ain't propa' of me to use a word like "Alright". But still, ya haven' gotten ya'self into a panic, no?"

Beatrice: "…Betty panicking wouldn't mean it'd bring back Subaru and Rem, in fact. Right now, the main issue in question is messing up our first move due to panic, I suppose. I'd specifically like to avoid that, in fact."

Anastasia: "First move? By that, do you mean…"

Emilia: "…Bringing back Subaru and Rem. Taking action for that, yeah?"

Anastasia raised her eyebrows quizzically as she tried to question Beatrice. However Emilia interrupted her, still while supporting Ram by her shoulder.

Emilia's amethyst eyes pierced right through Anastasia, her eyes widening in surprise a tad at the intensity of her glare. She wet her lips with her tongue.

Anastasia: "Dang, I thought you were gonna be dejected as heck, but that's one helluva' look you've got in your eyes. What d'ya mean?"

Emilia: "It's really nothing complicated. Subaru and Rem ended up being swallowed by that shadow and taken away from us… Volcanica did drive it away, but he was just a tad too slow. Even so…”

Ram: “They didn’t die from it. I’m sure of it.”

While still being propped up by Emilia, Ram opened her eyes and replied. Then she gently touched the part of her on her forehead—the part where presumably her Oni Clan Horn had been—as she let out an exhausted sigh. It was what served as the basis of her words, which felt full of conviction.

Anastasia: “The Oni Tribe’s… Ah, wouldn’t that be the sisters’ synesthesia? So you’re saying that you’re linked with Rem-san?”

Ram: “Yep, that’s right. Rem is alive… No clue about Barusu.”

Beatrice: “Subaru’s alright as well, I suppose! Betty can guarantee that, in fact!”

Beatrice shouted in anger, almost red in the face, in response to Ram’s very Ram-like words. After all, she was Beatrice, the Spirit who’d made a contract with Subaru. Her words did have some credibility to them.

In other words, it meant that the two of them who had vanished had been confirmed to be alive from separate angles.

Julius: “In regards to Subaru, we have his connection with Beatrice-sama’s contract, and in regards to Miss Rem, we have Miss Ram’s synesthesia… Both of those are worth believing in. Besides, I too would like to hope.”

Anastasia: “Quite the honesty there… Well, either way, I too would rather prefer that Natsuki-kun ‘n Rem-san were safe ‘n sound.”

Anastasia stroked her scarf after Julius replied, as if to say getting too close to them would be a problem.

They were working with Emilia’s group as collaborators for the time being—But the fact that they were competing with each other in the Royal Selection hadn’t changed. She didn’t want them to get the wrong idea about that and add to their troubles.

Nevertheless, it was precisely because they were fighting each other that they ought to repay their debts without fail.

Meili: “We~ll then? Like, it’s super-duper good that Onii-san ‘n stuff are alive, bu~t, where are they?”

Failing to read the mood positively, Meili asked them that while playing around with the Tiny Crimson Scorpion balanced on her head. Julius opened his mouth in reaction to her question, and began to speak,

Julius: “Well, though I wouldn’t be able to explain them in great detail, that shadow was the product of Yin Magic… Or at the very least, the Yin Attribute. It should be the same sort that’s sealing the likes of the Witch of Envy in her shrine, and Roy Alphard in the Dragon Carriage. If we presume this to be the case, then as for our resident expert…”

Beatrice: “…That would be Betty, I suppose. My prognosis isn’t all that different from Julius’ either, in fact. That thing was a clump of Yin, I suppose. It’s close to a Shamak that’s been given direction, in fact.”

Echidna: “Shamak? Isn’t that the basic magic of the Yin Attribute? How was it then so powerful?”

Beatrice: “…I knew there were going to be quite a few humans who’d misunderstand since there are hardly any users of it. However, it’s troubling that even you think of it like that, when you’re a Spirit like me, in fact.”

Echidna, who had taken up her white-fox form, was stared at reproachfully by Beatrice, causing her to cower her head. Giving a sigh at her reaction, Beatrice raised one of her fingers and said: “May I, I suppose?”

Beatrice: “Shamak’s special quality is in “Separation”, in fact. A low-grade Shamak separates one’s body from their awareness, whereas a high-grade Shamak rends space from itself, I suppose. Betty’s Door Crossing is one such application, linking two rooms together, and achieving something close to teleportation, in fact.”

Ram: “That was the contraption Beatrice-sama had set up in the previous mansion. It was a real pain having to call her for mealtimes, so to be quite honest, I’d gotten fed up with it.”

Beatrice: “It really upsets Betty that you’d say that so honestly right here, right now, I suppose. I do believe I am sorry about it, but the apologies can wait until later… Anyways, Shamak, in essence, can separate space from space if so inclined; as well as that, it can separate objects, no matter how strong they are. It’s the Witch of Envy’s specialty, in fact.”

Anastasia: “From your explanation, aren’t you saying that Natsuki-kun and Rem-san have been scattered into pieces?”

If that shadow was as deadly as that, then what she’d said felt just like something that branded Subaru and Rem’s survival, who’d been swallowed by it, as being hopeless.

Beatrice however shook her head at Anastasia’s question.

Beatrice: “What I mentioned right now was an allegory, I suppose. At least, that shadow wasn’t something that was set to chop Subaru and Rem into pieces, in fact. But it was going to take them within and whisk them away somewhere, I suppose.”

Echidna: “Somewhere… Across space… In this situation, I imagine it would be to where she is?”

Ram: “…After all, there’s the matter of Barusu’s miasma.”

Echidna broke down Beatrice’s exposition into simpler terms, and at the end of that, Ram provided the reason why.

The miasma that enveloped Subaru, which had greatly agitated the witchbeasts en-route to the Watchtower, was now a well-known fact amongst the Royal Selection Candidates.

Regarding this miasma thing, both its cause, and its finer details, were unknowns.

Ram: “All I know about the miasma is that it attracts witchbeasts to it, and that the people who are connected with the Witch Cult often emanate it in spades… That's pretty much it."

Emilia: "Hm, although Subaru's been chased by witchbeasts quite a few times, he's got nothing to do with the Witch Cult. I get that it's preeeeetty suspicious, but…"

Anastasia: "No need ta fret, don' worry, I ain't castin' doubt on that now, Emilia-san."

Emilia: "Oh? Thank goodness. Subaru is a good boy, so…"

Emilia patted her chest in relief, however, the issue was still very much there.

Just like Anastasia had said, the thread of thought regarding Subaru being connected to the Witch Cult was no longer inside her. Nevertheless, the fact that they didn't know Subaru's origins still brought forth doubts within her.

She didn't think that Subaru was someone with ill intent. However, ill intent that one wasn't conscious to was a thing too.

There was a chance that, behind all of his good intent, Subaru's existence was a ticking time-bomb in itself.

Anastasia: "Yeah Yeah, so your concern is unnecessary, I got that much from how ya started the sentence off. The shadow that swallowed Natsuki-kun and Rem-san up was the one that whisked 'em away ta somewhere. The real question is, where ta?"

Echidna: "As well as what happened due to Volcanica's breath having interfered with it."

Beatrice and Ram, who were linked with the two of Subaru and Rem respectively, probably had a rough idea of their whereabouts.

Searching for them was going to be a tall order, if all they knew was that they were alive, without knowing exactly where they'd been hurtled off to. —At the very least, the option of not searching for them was not available to anyone in this place.

Emilia: "Please, you two, where are Subaru and Rem? Tell me please.”

Beatrice and Ram exchanged looks, having turned towards Emilia’s sincere appeal. Then after a few seconds of silence from the both of them…

Beatrice: “…He’s south, in fact.”

Ram: “Ram too senses that she’s in that same direction. I’m not sure of her exact position, but I think she’s fairly far away.”

Emilia: “South? South from here we have the uhh…”

Emilia furrowed her well-defined eyebrows straight after Beatrice and Ram had both mentioned they were south. Though she must have been giving it her all to envision the map of the world in her mind, Anastasia raised her hand in her stead.

Currently they were in the Augria Sand Dunes situated in the easternmost part of the world map. As far as south from here went, Picoutatte or Flanders, of the five great cities, were the most likely, however…

Julius: “In regards to that alone, the state of the two is inscrutable.”

Seemingly having arrived at the same idea, Julius spoke Anastasia’s mind for her.

From the way he got into sync with the speed of her thoughts, Anastasia valued him as being ideal as her knight even more, all while batting one of her eyes shut and saying: “Indeed.”

Anastasia: “‘Tis quite the distance, but if they find themselves aroun’ those parts, then we can say that the damage incurred would be negligible. Yet, despite that, both of yer faces look pale… Do ya both mean ta say he’s way more south?”

Emilia: “Way more south, you can’t mean…”

Meili: “…They ended up going all the way down to the Vollachian Empire in the sou~th?”

Meili’s surprise was minimal compared to how shocked Emilia was. But it was safe to say that Meili’s reaction was down to the fact that she hadn’t comprehended the scale of things. Given that, Beatrice and the others’ reactions were all perfectly understandable.

If Subaru and Rem had crossed through the country… And if they’d crossed into the Southern Empire, they had a real problem at hand.

Anastasia: “If I’m not mistaken… The Kingdom of Lugunica ‘n the Vollachian Empire in the south signed a nonaggression pact that would last for the entire Royal Selection. Isn’ that right, Julius?”

Julius: “That’s correct. I imagine you wouldn’t know about this, but I also went there to tie down the agreement. Me, Reinhard, Ferris and such met the Emperor in person.”

Emilia: “From what I’d heard, we were on reaaaally bad terms with the Empire; but, if you did that, then are we okay with them now? So if we were to go and search for Subaru and Rem…”

Julius: “…No, that’s not going to fly.”

Julius lowered his brows with a shake of his head in response to Emilia’s timid question. He softly cast his yellow eyes down, which glittered like jewels, emblazoned on his handsome features,

Julius: “The Empire has forbidden travel between itself and the Kingdom since several months ago, for the time being. Due to the Royal Selection, the same thing happened with the Holy Kingdom of Gusteko in the north, however they’ve already rescinded their ban…”

Echidna: “I guess that means the one the Empire set hasn’t been rescinded. Though we did travel to the Watchtower, so because of that we don’t have the latest information… So if the situation there hasn’t changed…”

Emilia: “Going there to help Subaru and Rem is going to be tough?”

Julius: “Yes, unfortunately.”

Though they exchanged various thoughts about it, Julius concluded with these mere words of regret.

Anastasia too, could only come to the same conclusion as Julius. It would be impossible to break in from the front where entering the Vollachian Empire was concerned.

They'd have no choice but to look for a secret way in, and in addition to that, they'd also need to find the time and contacts for it.

There'd be no quick and easy way here. Surely Emilia would be in an absolute hurry when thinking about the two people who's status remained unknown…

Emilia: "…We need to move quickly. We'll receive Volcanica's blood and bring it back to Pristella… Then we'll take the Gluttony we captured to the Royal Capital, yeah?"

Beatrice: "Emilia…?"

Emilia: "I know Beatrice. I can't help but feel reaaally, reaaally impatient. But we won't be able to help Subaru and Rem out, even if we rush things here… We've gotta remain calm."

However, Emilia's calm decision surprised Anastasia, just as it seemed she would have gotten into a panic. She gave a resolute nod at Beatrice, also similarly surprised. Her eyes were quivering, her voice was shaking a bit, yet she was giving it her all to keep a grip of herself.

It was just like she was saying I'm not going to fold my arms together and sit back for even a second, if it means getting Subaru and Rem back.

Emilia: "You two, Subaru and Rem must be together, right?"

Ram: "…I just double-checked with Beatrice-sama, we think they probably are."

Emilia: "Alrighty… Then if that's the case, I'm sure Subaru will go to great lengths to protect Rem. That's why we needn't worry about Rem. Even though Subaru's a lil' scary."

Though her belief in Subaru was strong, in regards to the same kind of worries, Anastasia did agree as well.

Natsuki Subaru had lost his memories for a bit in the tower, as a result of being left to his own devices. That boy with a propensity for self-punishment had a bad habit of making light of himself in order to protect the people precious to him.

Just as it sometimes would encourage others, it also similarly served as a cause for concern.

Anastasia: "That said, guess all we can really do is count on Natsuki-kun's quick wits. Emilia-san is right, what we can't do is stay here grumblin' 'n moanin' inside the tower. We gotta get a move on."

Julius: "Understood loud and clear… Beatrice-sama, do inform us if there are any elements of concern."

Beatrice: "…Subaru's body, I suppose. Subaru's gate can't expel mana out on its own since it's broken, in fact. If we leave him alone for too long, then it's going to burst due to a mana blockage, I suppose."

Anastasia: "I see. I'm sorta in the same boat, so I can really get on the same level as Natsuki-kun there."

Anastasia's gate was defective by birth. She was unable to take in mana properly; such, for example, would be a critical defect for a mage. Nevertheless, this had no effect on the luck and knack for business needed for a merchant, so it didn't really bother her much.

Echidna: "Ana…"

Anastasia: "I know, I know. In regards to our problems, ain't we gonna talk about 'em separately a bit later… That aside, it doesn' look like we've got any time ta slack off."

Anastasia clapped her hands together, with everyone else nodding back at her signal.

Their objective was to search for the whereabouts of Subaru and Rem, who'd both disappeared. For that, they would need to return from the Pleiades Watchtower as soon as possible, in order to muster a search party as well.

On top of that, they needed to fulfill one of the primary objectives that they'd come to the tower for.

Meili: "Things are so hectic, to the point that I almost feel like I'm gonna pass ou~t…"

Emilia: "I know right. Still, Subaru and Rem must be having it way more tough."

Emilia firmly clenched her fist, thinking of Subaru, who'd been hurtled off to somewhere faraway. Seeing her face in profile, Meili, with the Tiny Crimson Scorpion plopped on her head, narrowed her eyes and said "Yeah, of course" with a shrug of her shoulders.

And just like that, the group began to busy themselves to get their preparations done—Or so, they were about to.

Meili: "Come to thi~nk of it, Ram Onee-san, did you tell 'em about th~at thing?"

Ram: "… I still haven't."

Anastasia and the others: "…? That thing?"

Ram's face turned sour at Meili's rather abrupt question. All of their gazes turned towards Ram, clearly having not heard anything about it.

With them all looking at her, Ram paused for a brief moment, and after that said,

Ram: "Emilia-sama, although I'm still not one-hundred percent sure about this… The ones swallowed by the shadow and hurtled away to the Empire may not just be only Barusu and Rem."

Emilia: "Not only the two of them… But you, Patrasche-chan, and Meili are all accounted for, so shouldn't that be everyone who was in the Green Room?"

Meili: “Well, a girl appeared all of a sudden, before that shadow came kinda kerplowing i~n. And what’s more, according to Oniisan, it was the third Gluttony or some~thing.”

Anastasia and the others: “The third Gluttony?!”

Anastasia and the others were taken completely aback after being told this tidbit they really could not disregard.

And so, the discussion grew in intensity, regarding whether they should amend their actions going forward and getting the details which Ram had kept under wraps regarding this matter out of her.

As that went on, within the now turned bedlam of the Pleiades Watchtower, Emilia clasped her hands in prayer in front of her chest, all the while looking out of the huge hole where the Green Room had once stood.

Emilia: “Please, Subaru… I really hope you’ll be alright with Rem.”

3

—As Emilia’s small prayer drowned in the parched skies overhead the sea of sand, at the same time far, far away,

Subaru: “…”

Sitting atop an open meadow, caressed gently by a wandering breeze was a boy, and in his embrace, a girl.

The boy had black hair, and his eyes sharp as the edge of a dagger, with the whites being quite pronounced, aka the very known sanpakugan; eyes that made his face to appear in a permanent scowl, a glare rumored to be all that is needed to kill a man.

However, at that moment, his lips curved up ever so softly, and the corners of those eyes were wet. It took all he had to not break into a complete bawl.

It was a natural outcome, of course.

He’d waited for this very moment for so long. The memories of each day he passed in wait, in grief, none would allow him to look away for even the briefest of moments from the girl in front of him.

The girl, embraced so dearly, looked at him through the locks of her bright, blue hair.

Her eyes widened, though the strength to resist was barely present on her adorable face. It was as if she had woken from sleep, and was still caught up in her drowsiness.

To be fair, that was indeed the truth of the matter. She'd finally woken up from a long, long slumber, so she'd quite obviously feel a disconnect from reality.

Rem: "…Ah… um…"

Her lips moved, as if mulling over what he'd spoken of moments ago.

As he watched, the boy—Natsuki Subaru nodded vigorously.

Subaru: "Yeah, exactly, that's exactly it, Rem. I'm your Hero. I've been waiting for so long for…"

Rem: "…"

Subaru: "Rem?"

Trying to stifle the tremble of his own voice, he desperately tried to pick up on Rem's.

Perhaps due to being thirsty or something of the sort, though as her lips moved and her tongue flicked, her throat would not produce sound. Even so, he put his ear near her mouth, attempting to glean even a sliver of what Rem was trying to communicate to him.

Her meagre attempts to convey anything filled him with immense joy.

Rem: "…m."

Subaru: "I'm listening, there's no need to rush it, okay? Rem, what are you trying to…”

Tell me, as he would’ve said, but was ultimately cut off.

Once he’d drawn his ears close enough to listen to her, his trail of thought was halted as a hand pushed against his head and chin.

Following that flow, he felt himself be turned over and fall to the ground.

And then—

Subaru: “…Re…Rem?”

Subaru found himself with his back on the grass, and Rem straddled on top of him.

Bewildered, he remained stiff in place. Staring down at him, Rem’s eyes scanned him from top to bottom.

She then released a quiet sigh and,

Rem: “What’s your aim here? Tell me what you intend to do to me right now!”

Subaru: “…”

Rem: “Calling yourself some Hero out of the blue and… Who’s Rem? Tell me right now!”

Knees pressed down over Subaru’s shoulders, her hands shot to his neck. With her weight bearing down on him, Subaru struggled to move, his legs twitching restlessly.

Kaede

However, the skill with which Rem had restrained him was somewhat aweing. She'd left no room for him to regain his freedom.

Subaru: "Gu… ah… ghk…"

Rem: "If you refuse to speak, I will simply continue until you desire to do so. Please do not prolong your own suffering. Speak. What exactly are you…"

Subaru: "—Gha."

He knew not whether it was involuntary or on purpose, but the strength with which Rem used to press against his neck left him no room to answer her with.

As his mind dimmed due to the lack of oxygen, he realized letting this go on would result in his death.

It had been so long, and even if it were a one-sided reunion, Subaru could not allow it to end with Rem strangling him. Not like this.

Even if nothing of Subaru remains in her memories.

Subaru: "A- Ah…"

Rem: "Are you feeling like speaking now? If so, I will, in good faith —"

Just then, as Rem frowned while looking at the signs of strained struggle on his face,

Louis: "Ah-! Ooh-!"

Rem: "—Kya-?!"

Suddenly, a petite shadow slammed into Rem's body from the side —Or rather, it leapt onto Rem and became entangled with her on the grass.

With the weight gone, he rolled over and began coughing, then looked towards Rem with clouded, wet eyes. There, he saw the figure of a little girl struggling with Rem.

Louis: “Uuu—! Uuuu—!”

Rem: “Wh-What are you doing… Stop it, please! This isn’t the time to be…”

Her blonde hair covering all of Rem, the little girl bared her teeth on her flushed red face as she howled. Subaru stopped, unable to form any thoughts upon witnessing this sight.

Subaru took a breath and rushed to the two.

And then—

Subaru: “Oi! Get away from Rem, right now!”

Louis: “Ah—, Uuu—!!”

Subaru pushed off the little girl who had been trying to pull on Rem’s hair—Archbishop Louis Arneb, and held her down with her hands behind her back.

The light bodied Gluttony attempted to struggle, but only in vain. The best she could currently do was kick about. Twists and groans were thrown in, but nothing more beyond that.

Louis: “Au—! Uuu—, Uuuu—!!”

Subaru: “God damnit, you…! Stop struggling…Just stay put! Rem, are you okay?! Did she do anything to you?!”

Rem: “N-No, I’m fine. More than that, I keep asking you over and over…”

Subaru yelled as he held Louis down, to which Rem answered with crooked brows. With her eyes fixed on him, she attempted to stand on her feet—

Rem: “—Eh?”

And thumped back onto the ground, her knees having given away.

Her strange way of falling down raised questions in Subaru's mind. Yet unaware she was being observed, she pushed on her knees and tried to stand up once more. However—

Rem: "…My legs won't…"

Subaru: "Wait, you can't stand up?"

Rem: "N…no, that's not… Not true… It's not true at all…"

Her voice trembled as she attempted to refute his strong claim. However, no amount of willpower allowed her to stand up. Far from being able to balance herself, she couldn't even put any power into her feet at all.

Subaru: "Are you feeling weak because you've been asleep for so long? Wait, that can't be right. Wouldn't call the strength you used to push me over just now that of someone who's been bedridden as long as you."

There was often talk of how one would eventually grow weaker over their long stay at the hospital, likely due to a lack of exercise.

It was quite a well-known fact that those people require rehabilitation to stand and walk again, but would that truly end at the legs?

It wasn't as if Rem had been moving her upper body during her 'hospitalization period'. She'd been asleep for over a year, so it would only make sense for her to feel weak overall, and not just in her legs.

And yet, this disconnect existed in her, in Rem's body. Likely, this was due to—

Subaru: "—Wait, could it be because of the feedback she took from Nee-sama's fight?"

As his mind sifted through the possible reasons as to why Rem's body would behave like this, that was the conclusion he had reached.

He'd heard from Ram in the Green Room about how her death-battle against Gluttony went down. Due to Subaru's worsening condition, Ram needed to change things to avoid being cornered. So she'd chosen to share her 'burden' with Rem as her trump card.

As a result, the majority of Ram's burden of pain, who was said to be the strongest of the Oni Clan, flowed into Rem. Subaru remembered having that conversation.

If that were the case, then—

Subaru: "…It's all my fault."

He'd uttered a phrase he'd surely be rebuked by Ram for.

However, as it stood, Subaru had been unable to fulfil the duty he himself had taken on himself, resulting in Ram needing to push herself further, which consequently affected Rem. It all went back to being Subaru's fault.

Steeped in this situation, having none of his friends around that he could rely on, where only he, Rem, and Louis, who was continuing to act weird for god knows what reason, the responsibility he bore was all the more heavy.

Rem: "All your fault you say… Did you do something to me?!"

Subaru: "Not at all, it was just a figure of speech; however…"

Rem: "First things first! Who are you?! And who am I?!"

Subaru: "…"

Giving the legs that wouldn't obey her will properly a firm whack, Rem glared at Subaru with a tempest of fury in her eyes. Subaru felt something rather bitter, that his unpleasant guess had become reality, hearing Rem's heartbreaking complaint, which had felt like she was going to lose her temper.

…Rem had said: "Who am I"?

"Who are you" was still way better. However, her asking about who she was, was still something extremely gut-wrenching for Subaru, considering he'd been waiting so long to see Rem again.

He'd had an inkling this would be the case, from the fact that she was referring to herself using "I" instead of "Rem".

Subaru: "I guess she must be in the same state as Crusch-san…"

Rem had had her name and memories taken away from her, resulting in her continued slumber.

There were two other patterns found in the victims of Gluttony; namely, the ones found with Julius, who'd had his name taken away from him, thus forgotten by the people around him, as well as with Crusch, who'd had her memories taken away, having lost herself.

When Rem had woken up, she'd done so having lost her own memories; in an amnesiac state.

Her confusion was perfectly natural when you considered she was stuck in a situation this incomprehensible, along with a boy with mean-looking eyes to him, a girl who could do nothing but groan and her own legs not working as she wished.

Louis: "Uwaa!"

Without even realizing that Louis had grown quiet, as if she'd tired herself out from struggling around, she dropped from the exhausted Subaru's arms, and fell down on her backside, letting out a screech.

She began to roll about, while rubbing her backside. Subaru didn't bother to give her any attention, instead he slowly made his way over to Rem's side.

As Subaru drew closer to her, Rem kept an eye on him, all the while keeping her guard up strongly.

Seeing that look in her eyes, he was reminded of the first time Rem had turned this hostility against him.

It was easy to forget, because they'd gotten quite close after they'd warmed up to each other, but Rem originally was quite reserved, and was a rather difficult girl to get close enough to.

In that respect, it was way easier with Ram, since she never changed how she interacted with him, both before and after they became closer.

The scary part in fact though, was that according to one theory, there was even the chance that they didn't get along.

Subaru: "Anyways, the matter of nee-sama aside… Hey, you know…"

Rem: "Wh-What is it? Just so you know, if you're planning on doing anything to me, I'll…"

Subaru: "…Rem."

Rem: "Huh?"

Rem's tense expression turned into one of being taken by surprise. Subaru stopped in his tracks as he made his way over, keeping enough distance between them, so he'd be more than a step out of her reach,

Subaru: "It's Rem. That's your name."

Once again, he called out her name.

Rem: "…"

Rem sunk into silence, unable to hide her bewilderment, having had that gently poured against her. Nevertheless, she shifted her red tongue, which was barely visible behind her lips, and repeated "Rem" as if making sure of it.

It was like she was making herself familiar with her own name anew.

Subaru: "In all honesty, I don't really know properly what happened either. Just that we got separated from our friends, and we're here, in this place which is god knows where. You should be able to understand that’s quite the mess, right?”

Rem: “Well, I…”

While still very bewildered, Rem’s eyes examined the grassland in their surroundings rather than Subaru.

A breeze rustled through the grassland, the sun was high up in the sky, and he felt humidity against his skin. A muggy sensation that felt different to the parched air of the Augria Sand Dunes.

He was in a place that was so different that the sensation he felt from the air had changed.

In other words…

Subaru: “We can’t expect to be helped immediately. We’re gonna need to take the necessary actions to help ourselves from here, somehow or other. That’s why…”

Rem: “That’s why what? What are you going to tell me to do? Me, and my legs which can hardly move and all.”

Subaru: “…I imagine you’ll get all suspicious again once I say this sort of stuff, but I’d be just content with you being here for me. Breathing, talking to me, looking around the surroundings with your eyes; I’d be content with only that.”

Rem: “…? You mean looking around with my eyes, and telling you whether the coast is clear?”

Subaru: “No quite like that, though, that too would be fine.”

He was very much just content with Rem waking up, breathing, and speaking to him.

Even though it was something rather unselfish, what Subaru had implored in regards to Rem having woken up, was only that she’d be in good health, thus these were, no word of exaggeration, his true intentions.

Of course, he needed to solve the issue of her missing memories.

That, and Emilia, Beatrice, Ram and everyone who'd been left behind in the tower with the matter of Subaru and his group having gotten separated from them, ought to be quite worried.

He wanted to join up with them as quickly as possible. —He wanted to get Ram to meet Rem, since she'd felt such love for her little sister, whom she didn't remember.

Subaru: "Please, won't you trust me here? Even if I were to give up my life in exchange… No, it means squat were I to give up my life, so I shall protect you at all cost. I swear it. That's why…

Rem: "—. And say I take you up on your offer, then what will you do?"

Subaru: "Ah, right. Would be pointless to act with no-plan, so when it comes to one…"

Receiving Rem's prudent question, Subaru sought for the information needed to draw up a plan.

As aforementioned, Subaru and the others were in a vast grassland, however, they could see large trees growing close to each other, encircling the grassland.

Seeing they were intercepted by the canopies of the trees before they reached the horizon, the trees surrounding them at a 360 degree angle, it seemed like they were in an open grassland, a place such as that inside of a forest.

Truthfully, it was nothing but dangerous to venture into a forest on a land he was completely unfamiliar with, but—

Subaru: "Firstly, the unbreakable rule when one gets lost in a forest is to let his allies know his location, using a GPS, but…"

Rem: ""Gee-pee-es"?"

Subaru: "I know. Nothing like that exists… It's just that Beako has the connection she has with me, so there's a possibility she could pinpoint my whereabouts with something similar. In a way, you could say my existence itself is a GPS."

Depending on the situation, there was also the possibility that Ram's Synesthesia would detect Rem's location. In that sense, both Subaru and Rem were fulfilling their roles as a GPS that connected them to their allies.

Subaru: "What's left is securing a source of water… It's important to get a hold of water, no matter what. It's probably better if we chose our base camp, and start widening our field of search from there. Edible grass and fruits are… ahh, I was right to learn it from Clind-san. Gotta thank my mentor…"

During the process in which he learned parkour and how to handle a whip, Clind had hammered various techniques and knowledge into his head. There were times he nearly whined about giving up on the teachings of the versatile steward, but thanks to it being beneficial to him, Subaru could keep his guiding principle with him despite being in this situation.

Anyway—

Subaru: "There's a lot of other stuff as well, but it's not like I'm trying to take action without a plan. Are you able to understand now?"

Rem: "…To an extent. Even if I wanted to resist, I'm in this condition, so…"

Subaru: "…That's a remark that I can get a glimpse of your honest thoughts from."

Subaru tested a smile, trying to reassure her, but her reaction wasn't as good as he thought it would be.

Having lost her "memories", there was no foundation for Rem to build her trust for Subaru on. If she could move her legs freely, then she might've already escaped from him long ago.

Though, he didn't want to think of the misfortune that happened to her as something fortunate.

Subaru: "Your legs. I hope you can start moving around on them soon."

Rem: "—hk, even if you told me that, I don't know. What are you going to do?"

Subaru: "I told you. Firstly, I'm planning on searching for water. There's the thing with your legs, so I'm thankful if you wouldn't act against me if you could…"

Saying that, Subaru closed the final step between him and Rem, crouching down and turning his back to her.

If she looked at his posture, even Rem would know what he was trying to do.

Rem: "Are you planning to bring me with you on your back?"

Subaru: "There's also the choice to princess carry you, but I won't last very long if I do that. If you would let me carry you on my back, I guess it's very helpful, personally."

Rem: "…"

She fell silent for a while, staring at Subaru's pitiful expression. After that, she slowly blew out a sigh, and tentatively reached for his back.

Rem's slender arms slunk above his shoulders, interlocking in front of his chest. Feeling the tender weight on his back, Subaru took his time in standing up, making sure he wouldn't shake Rem, who was clinging onto him.

He felt her weight. However, what he thought while carrying her on his back was that she was light.

During this one year, he had many opportunities to carry the slumbering Rem, but every time he did, he experienced how difficult it was to carry an unconscious person firsthand.

The sensation wasn't there with the Rem who was holding onto him of her own accord.

Rem: "—? Is something the matter?"

Subaru: “No, it’s just that it was deeply moving, oddly enough. So, it’s about the search for water, but,”

Rem: “Before that… what will we do about that girl?”

Subaru: “…Ah.”

Looking ahead of the place where Rem indicated by jerking her chin over his shoulder, Subaru remembered the problem.

On the grassland, splayed out on the grass while patting her bottom, the area she had hit on the ground, was Louis, who was tangled up in her own long, blonde hair. —What should he do about this Sin Archbishop that was acting strangely?

Subaru: “…”

Even Subaru knew Louis’s current state was unnatural.

She was an opponent with a mental structure that couldn’t be declared as decent, but it was because of her knavishness, not because he could see her previously hidden side of infantile regression.

In fact, she was quite intelligent for her age, and she also had the room to ponder over her devilish thoughts, something that was similar to swiping her tongue across the splinters in one’s heart.

What about the behavior of the current Louis?

Louis: “Aah, aauuh—”

Having been licking Subaru’s face at the time he woke up, growling like a toddler that didn’t know how to speak, and throwing a tantrum like an infant as a result.

There was no mistake that something immeasurable had occurred within her mind.

However—

Subaru: “Will that become a reason for me to pity her?”

She was abhorrently evil. That truth would always be unwavering.

Louis, who he had faced at the last scene in the “Hall of Memories”, had been traumatized from experiencing “Return by Death”, becoming frightened of not only Subaru, but everything that existed in this world.

At that point, she had already become enough of a poor, miserable girl.

However, Subaru didn’t save her. He didn’t even think about wanting to save her.

Despite having many different options held in front of them, they continuously picked the choices that went against humanity, ultimately losing the opportunity to correct those, and cut off their own way out of it. The Sin Archbishops were those kinds of people.

Her two older brothers, as well as Louis herself, weren’t exceptions, either.

Committing unforgivable evils, Louis Arneb had turned into a degenerate deserving of being damned to hell.

—Why did Subaru have to save someone like that?

Rem: “You won’t help her?”

Subaru: “…It’s complicated. I was in the same place as her, but she’s not really my ally. In fact, she’s on the opposite side of an ally. My heart won’t ache, even if I left her here.”

Rem: “…”

Behind him, he heard Rem’s breath catching in her throat, but it was a reaction that couldn’t be helped.

From Rem, who didn’t know of Subaru’s circumstances, Louis probably only appeared to her as a young, helpless girl, just as what she looked like. Even if her true identity was one of the desecrators that toyed with a great number of lives.

That's why Subaru had one choice.

Subaru: "We're leaving her there… We can't bring a dangerous element with us, much less a burden."

Picking up Louis from the advancing shadows was an error of misjudgment that he made in the tower. Perhaps, if Subaru had abandoned her then and there, there could've been the possibility this wouldn't have happened between him and Rem.

It was certainly what people called it as causing a hundred problems and bringing forth not a single profit.

Rem: "Is… that so."

Subaru: "Yeah, that's right. I can't say I had a pleasant time waking up either, but…"

Subaru's topmost priority was Rem, and then himself. He would never be confused about it.

With that intention, Subaru ignored Louis, who was lying down on the grass, and headed towards the forest on the opposite side to—

Rem: "—As I thought, even if I were to be empty, I was right to believe in myself."

It was said with a terribly icy, cutting tone.

Having that voice murmured by his ear close by, Subaru released a breath with an, "Eh?". However, forbidding him from reacting any further, a pair of slender arms snaked themselves around his neck.

—Rem, who was being carried on Subaru's back, was strangling him from behind.

Subaru: "—Gahk,"

Rem: "Saying things that sound pleasant to my ears before inviting me to come with you, and then abandoning the girl. How could I believe someone like that, telling me to put my trust in him? Stop messing around with me."

The strength in the arms wrapped around his neck was certainly the strength of an oni, unlike her physically handicapped legs.

Unable to peel her arms away, Subaru's breathing was blocked completely. Bending himself backwards, he wasn't aiming to do so, but he fell onto the grassland on his back.

However, in spite of being crushed underneath him, Rem refused to remove her arms from his neck. Since she was behind him, he couldn't flail his arms to free himself from her.

Why? The doubts and questions filled up the inside of his head.

He shouldn't be asking "Why?", because Rem had already provided the answer to that. In front of her, who didn't know anything, Subaru had made too much haste out of his panicking feelings.

He was receiving retribution for that, like this—

Rem: "Letting such a wicked stench drift around yourself, and saying you're not scheming anything is a bare-faced lie in itself!"

Subaru: "…"

A wicked stench. Subaru recalled his memories as he heard that.

During the time he had just gotten to meet Rem, the biggest reason she doubted him and regarded him as dangerous, was by no means the bad impression he gave during their first meeting, nor the shape of the eyes he was born with.

—The Witch's miasma.

Having lost her "memories", even if Rem didn't have anything left other than herself, she was still able to perceive it.

That was the largest factor that bought him Rem's suspicions.

He was too late in remembering it, much less even noticing it, and —

Subaru: "—ah,"

Thrashing and twisting his body around, Subaru attempted to make an excuse for his actions, but it was impossible.

Like that, Subaru’s consciousness fell into the deep abyss of the darkness, slowly and gradually.

The last thing he wanted was to be killed by Rem like this. He shouted that out with desperation.

His voice was silent, unable to be heard.

4

Subaru: “–~hk, Rem?!”

The abrupt awakening of his consciousness, woke up Subaru’s upper body as though crashing into him.

At that instant, coughing violently due to the pouncing ache of his throat, whilst spitting out the phlegm stuck there, Subaru somehow raised his body and looked around.

The location was the meadow Subaru had been thrown into; those were his circumstances.

Though he was in a state of awakening he had remembrance of, he immediately discerned that this spectacle was not one yielded by “Return by Death”.

–Because, neither Rem’s form nor Louis’ form were to be found anywhere in his environs.

Subaru: “This place… is undoubtedly, someplace I was hurled to. I…”

Recalling the preceding moments, the instant he touched his neck, the pain regurgitated repulsive memories.

His throat strangled by Rem whom he was carrying, and just like that, he was robbed of his life. –No, that was not the case.

Subaru: “My throat, hurts… that means, Rem didn’t kill me.”

She did strangle him, but did not go as far as to kill him.

Astonished by the judgement of Rem, who'd spoken with such an icy voice, Subaru spilled an exhale of relief and then immediately admonished himself that this was no time to be taking relief.

He did not die. In other words, the world was resuming onward from the earlier worst possible turn of events.

He had Rem doubt his humanity due to the scent of the Witch, and she had disappeared with the worst possible impression of him maintained. –The reason why those two were not here must be because they sought to run away from Subaru.

In the end, Rem was repulsed by Subaru's judgement of seeking to leave Louis behind.

Casting aside a young child in an unknown meadow, he must have seemed as a truly cold-hearted man.

Subaru: "I'm telling you that's a misunderstanding, though she probably won't trust me even if I tell her…!"

Whilst lamenting his consecutive misjudgments, Subaru straightened his cheeks and stood up.

Upon looking at the sky, he could tell from the position of the sun that not much time had passed. He did not wish to call this as good fortune, but Rem's legs were not in a condition wherein they were at complete liberty either.

With her legs in that condition, she shan't be able to run too far off. It's proof—

Subaru: "There are drag marks on the grass…! Now I can run after them!"

Should he pursue the two who ran into the forest spread wide in 360 degrees around him without any clues, then that would mark the beginning of a game of tag with an impossible level of difficulty.

However, should he follow the traces left on the grass then he would be able to grasp where those two entered the forest from. Though being able to further pursue them from there was the gamble,

Subaru: “When it comes to unfavorable gambles, I’ve taken them on for innumerable times!”

Shouting what was unbefitting of commendation, Subaru fiercely pursued the traces on the grass. With his feet’s ability, Subaru was able to immediately discern the position the two entered the forest from.

With exuberant foliage and trees, it somewhat matched Subaru’s impression of tropical rainforests.

For an instant he was reminded of watching information on the television that the Amazon Forest meant the point of death for humans as a matter of course—

Subaru: “If Rem has entered into such a place, then that’s all the more reason for me to not overlook it.”

Both Subaru and Rem were here in a completely unprepared state for entering a forest.

When he thought of Rem, who had escaped into the forest with impaired legs in desperation, he regretted why he did something so foolish, and cursed every single bit of his judgements.

Subaru: “–Rem! Come out! Please! I was the one at fault!”

Within the forest, whilst walking over the soft ground and tall grass, Subaru called with a loud voice. Of course, it was possible that his voice would in turn buy Rem and the other’s anxiety, and make them keep their distance.

But still, it was far better than wandering around aimlessly in the forest, possessing no clues, possessing nothing to rely on.

Above all, he must undertake action he deemed as searching for Rem, or it felt like his chest would burst apart due to guilt and self-hatred.

Even though so many people made so many efforts for the sake of Rem, should something happen to her, just what would he be able to do in order to apologize.

Even though it was not even possible for him to apologize by giving up on his life.

Subaru: “Rem–! Where are you! Please respond! Please, don’t leave my side!!”

Thinking that he would not mind even should his voice run dry, within the obstructive trees of the dense jungle, he raised his voice.

And his limbs, as he passed through the forest, felt heavy accompanied with tremendous exhaustion. Now that he thought about it, Subaru’s body had overcome the fierce skirmishes that occurred in Pleiades Watchtower, and had gotten only a few hours of sleep.

Even if his recovery was augmented by the healing of the spirit of the “Green Room”, it was bound to eventually fail him.

Should he be untactful, then he may collapse out of relief upon finding Rem.

His guard up against that absurd possibility, Subaru aimlessly walked through the forest—

Subaru: “Rem! Please respo~nd! I beg you, I’m sorry!”

His hands by his mouth, Subaru resumed with a loud voice.

A call from the bottom of his heart, yet the absence of any response whatsoever from her made his heart stand a foot away from crumbling.

With things remaining as is, pursuing Rem’s vanished form, he desperately darted his eyes around the dense trees of the forest—

Subaru: “—-”

When he once again widely opened his mouth seeking to call Rem’s name, something entered the vicinity of his field of vision.

That was a slight change peeking through the gaps of the dense trees beyond the fallen leaves. Seeing it move differently from grass swaying in the wind—

Subaru: “Re–”

It was the instant he embraced hope and turned towards that direction.

–The impact charging with tremendous velocity, captured Subaru’s chest from the immediate front.

Subaru: “–hk?!”

Unable to shriek, his legs lost balance due to the impact, and Subaru’s body flew backwards.

Subaru: “Gah… wh, at…hk?!”

His thoughts thrown into chaos by the impact from the gaps through the trees directly ahead which he had seen, he darted his eyes around.

However, upon thinking about the impact he had received, he immediately understood that it was an attack. Thus, before he could even get his thoughts straight, Subaru tried to leap away from that place.

However, he failed to leap. Because—

Subaru: “–Ah?”

Because, the thick arrow piercing through Subaru’s chest, had pinned him to the gigantic tree behind him.

Subaru: “Guh, bhugh…… hk.”

The moment he directed his awareness to it, he vomited blood overflowing through his throat at once.

Stabbed through, massive quantities of blood from ruptured organs or otherwise flowed out, without cease. Vomiting blood instead of exhaling air, Subaru suffered whilst breathing once again.

Whilst suffering, he grabbed the arrow in his chest and tried to pull it out.

He couldn’t, not in the slightest bit. The arrow had firmly pierced through both Subaru and the tree, disabling all movement.

What was this arrow.

Hopeless, abnormal, a blow by a thick, mighty arrow. A truly tightly drawn bow, the body pierced by it was stitched and rendered immobile like a bug, only to flounder unsightly.

Subaru: “Egh, raegh, eem, gh…”

Through the gaps of the overflowing blood, he called the name of she who was yet in this forest.

What the call unable to vocalize words was charged with, was the evocation of caution towards the menace lurking in the forest.

Wielding a bow and arrow, someone lurking in the forest had aimed for him.

And, in this unseemly manner, unable to reach Rem, unable to accomplish anything, Subaru—

Subaru: “–m.”

What the hell is going on. Where is this place, what should he do.

Welling up fever and pain he took notice of after a delay, spread through his entire body, and blood streamed out of Subaru’s eyes, nose, and ears as well.

Tasting the sensation of the disappearance of oneself and becoming empty, whilst feeling icy “Death” draw close to him, Subaru strained his eyes, made his throat tremble, and called her name until the end.

–Called her name, until the end.

Smeared in blood.

Until the very end of the end, he called, called, kept calling her name.

Kept calling her name—

Chapter 2:
Animal Tracking

1

Beatrice: “—Listen, Subaru, I suppose. From now on, you need to understand that you’re always on the verge of death, in fact.”

Subaru: “Hey hey, this little girl-sama made a joke that’s quite unamusing.”

Beatrice: “Betty is not a little girl, and it’s not a joke either, I suppose! You need to take Betty seriously, in fact!”

As Beatrice said so with a reddened face, Subaru nodded with a “Got it, got it.”

He was sitting on the speckless carpet with his legs folded underneath him, in the middle of receiving a lecture from Beatrice-sensei, who was crossing her short arms, but it was simply going nowhere.

It was mainly because Subaru was butting into the lecture between her brief pauses, but—

Subaru: “It’s all because of Beako’s cuteness. It’s not good…”

Beatrice: “Betty thought you finally put on a straight face, but what are you talking about, in fact?! …Well, it’s common knowledge that Betty is cute, so that can’t be helped by now, I suppose…”

Subaru: “Your dere index is tremendous right after we got over the event…”

Beatrice: “You’re going too far in pulling the rug out from under Betty!”

Beatrice stomped on the ground, making her anger known to him. Her current attitude looked like it hadn’t changed from before, but on the other hand, Subaru’s feelings were largely different.

Until now, they had often clashed over their ideas and opinions, and she had the impression of a kitten in a neighborhood that didn't warm up to him easily. However, to Subaru, the current Beatrice was—

Subaru: "Like an adorable pet cat that I want to spend time with by burying my face into its stomach."

Beatrice: "Take! Betty! Seriously! I suppose!"

Subaru: "Bhargh!"

Murmuring that out with deep emotion, he was then sent flying by Beatrice, who had held out her hand towards him. As he stuck to the wall before crumpling down onto the floor, Beatrice gave him an exasperated shrug of her shoulders.

Beatrice: "Don't make Betty repeat herself, in fact. This is an important thing to talk about, I suppose. It's something that's really dangerous if you missed hearing it, in fact. —It's about the problem with your gate, I suppose."

Subaru: "…It's about my gate, huh."

He lifted up his body abruptly, sitting down cross-legged right on the spot where he had fallen.

Placing a gentle hand against his chest, he thought about the organ that was on the inside—something that he couldn't see with his eyes, nor touch it either.

Gates were an important organ that existed within living things, utilized in order to use magic in the world that had differing ideas from Subaru's common sense. Whether it was of decent quality or not apparently had to do with one's aptitude for being a magic user, and in Subaru's case, the quality of his gate hadn't been very good.

"Hadn't been", because his gate was already lost and gone.

Beatrice: "To be specific, you didn't lose it. You broke it, in fact."

Subaru: "It's because I used it recklessly even after being told to not use it. Oh well, the next time I see Ferris, I'm going to get far more than a huge scolding. I went ahead and ruined all the treatment he gave me."

Beatrice: "Congratulations on your newfound worries, I suppose… A "next time" for this isn't guaranteed, in fact."

It was the outcome of completely ignoring Ferris's advice, who had been in charge of restoring Subaru's gate that had been strained from being overused. He shrunk out of fear, certain that Ferris would be angry with him with the ferocity of an oni, but there was a look in Beatrice's eyes that implied the situation was graver than it seemed.

Beatrice: "As a result of your broken gate, you became unable to release your mana properly, I suppose. Even with that, mana will keep being produced, or absorbed for as long as you live, continuing to accumulate in your body, in fact. But, because you don't have a way to get it out…"

Subaru: "Surely you won't say that I'll be filled up with mana and burst apart?"

Beatrice: "…"

Subaru: "Wha, Beatrice-san?! It scares me when you become quiet!"

Subaru raised his voice when she averted her eyes, falling silent with an uneasy expression on her face. Seeing that he looked like he was finally paying serious attention to what she had to say, Beatrice raised a finger with a "Listen,"

Beatrice: "In all seriousness, your perception of it is correct, in fact. If things go on like this, your physical condition will deteriorate from the mana that gradually builds up in your body, and you'll eventually go "boom" from the muddied mana, I suppose."

Subaru: "So scary! Is there a way to do something about it?!"

Beatrice: "That's where Betty comes in, in fact. Fortunately, Betty made a contract with you… Subaru, and we connected ourselves to each other through our souls, I suppose. Just as Betty said, Betty is a little bit different from other Spirits, and requires receiving mana from other people, in fact. That means…”

Subaru: “—You’ll do something about the mana that’s piling up in my body, for me!”

Hearing Beatrice’s idea, one that was like a home run which turned the tide of a baseball match, Subaru stood up vigorously and lifted up her small body in his arms.

He continued to hold her up in the air as she cried out a “Nh, kyah?!”, starting to spin around on the spot,

Subaru: “You’re amazing, Beako! Actually, I owe your existence so much, I feel like I can’t stand on equal ground with you! With this, we’re in the same boat in both name and reality!”

Beatrice: “I-It can’t just be settled as that, I suppose! From now on, you must remember that every time you sour Betty’s mood, your life is going to be as flimsy as a bunch of foam, in fact. If you don’t want to die, continue to put your heart and soul into getting on Betty’s good side, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Heh, so you’re telling me to keep giving it my all in being affectionate with you. If anything, it depends on how long you can continue being spectacular and dazzling. That’s a big responsibility on your shoulders, Beako.”

Beako: “Why does Betty need to be told that, in fact! Betty can’t accept it, I suppose!”

Subaru kept spinning around while he listened to Beatrice’s red-faced shouting, with her still held up in his arms.

Spinning around, round and round.

Round and round, and round and round, and round and round—

2

Like that, the sensation of his field of view being spun around suddenly came to an end, and his consciousness was awakened.

The agony he was suffering through just before, something similar to the feeling of drowning had vanished without warning, and Subaru was assaulted by the pain of the unbalanced rhythm of his breathing, as well as the size of the ground that he felt on his back.

Subaru: "—k, ah, ghagh,"

He sat up while rubbing his throat, retracing his memories of what happened to himself.

At the same time, when he glanced at the center of his chest, he didn't see the arrow that was supposed to be sticking out from there. Aside from it, the scratches he had gotten from scraping his body against the trees had also disappeared.

It was only natural it turned out like this. His chest had been pierced by that single, frightening blow.

Subaru: "I… died…"

Experiencing a vague sensation which felt like the ground was crumbling away from under his feet, Subaru's blood ran cold as he shuddered.

As for the events which led to this, he was swallowed by the black shadow at the Pleiades Watchtower, and only a few dozen minutes after he was whisked away from there—that was all it took for Subaru to lose his life.

Once again, he understood the severity of the position he was in, and stood up. Somehow managing to support his unsteady body, Subaru surveyed his surroundings.

And then—

Subaru: "Shit, this sucks…"

Confirming he was in the middle of a green, grassy plain that stretched far and wide, and also seeing the figure he wished would've stayed with him was nowhere to be found, Subaru cursed his misfortune.

This was unmistakably the grassland where he and the other two had been hurled to from the tower.

The problem was he couldn't find Rem, who had been sent here together with him, and Louis was missing as well. To sum it up, the point in time where he had "Returned by Death" to was—

Subaru: "After Rem choked me and made me pass out…!"

His restart point was the time after he had fallen unconscious, strangled by Rem who he had been carrying on his back.

It hadn't brought him back far enough to make it so that Rem's awakening never happened, and it also didn't make it so that his final loop at the Pleiades Watchtower never existed, either. That in itself, was what Subaru wanted to say was good news.

Or, if he had been able to return to the final loop at the tower, it wasn't like he didn't hope for the possibility that he could've exchanged words with the missing Rem, a hope which only lasted for a fleeting moment, but—

Subaru: "Am I an idiot? No, I am definitely an idiot."

If he bore the feelings of regret to such a large extent, he should've made more time for her while he could still afford to come into contact with her, while he still had the time to speak to her, and while he was still graced with the opportunity to listen to her about how she felt.

To Natsuki Subaru, who hadn't done so, he had no right to be lamenting in that manner.

Anyhow, right now—

Subaru: "—I'll find Rem."

He had to chase after the runaway girl, and he had to clear up her misunderstandings.

If the reason for Rem's escape was the Witch's miasma that encircled him, then since he had just "Returned by Death", the intensity of the smell had probably gotten stronger.

It was very likely that she would heed his words even less compared to before. However, the one year Natsuki Subaru had spent wasn't so meaningless, to the point he would give up on her because of something like that.

Subaru: "Also, there's the one who killed me… Though, the arrow shouldn't be an attack from Rem."

The worst case scenario would be Rem launching an attack on him, which was a possibility that existed, but he couldn't imagine her being able to gather the tools she needed to do so in such a short time.

Even more so, a bow and arrow was something that couldn't be prepared so easily and quickly.

Subaru: "The arrow that pierced into me had an arrowhead, and it also had feathers attached to it… Might've been because it punched through my heart, but I didn't feel too much pain. Even though…"

If Rem were to be struck by the heavy-hitting, powerful arrow that was fired from the bow, then she wouldn't stand a chance against it even with her strength.

Since she was unable to move her legs around freely, it would be difficult for her escape to succeed. At any risk, Subaru had to rescue her out of this place before she fell victim to the arrow.

Even if the amnesiac Rem didn't consider him as an ally, that was.

Subaru: "Time to go, Natsuki Subaru. —Show 'em how great you can be."

Slapping his cheeks, what he temporarily dismissed from his mind was the shock of "death" from just before, and the sorrow he felt from being disliked by the girl that was important to him. It was unknown if he could join her even if he found her, but finding her came first before anything else.

Being woeful and being angry, were all things that could be done while one was alive.

Subaru: "…"

Letting out a deep breath, in the same way as he had done previously, Subaru trailed after the footprints that he deduced Rem had followed, judging by the grass that was tipping downwards, and jumped into the forest.

However, he was undecided on the decision of whether he should raise his voice loudly while looking for her, or not.

He had gone through an initiation process courtesy of the arrow, probably because the enemy came across Subaru while he was defenseless.

Whoever they were, their identity and objective were both obscure, but it was difficult to think of them as an amicable person, seeing they aimed to kill him with a single blow. There would be "death" if they found him. He should regard them as that kind of enemy.

Subaru: "But, since they're using tools… a bow and arrow, It's not a witchbeast, but it's a human I'm up against."

If his opponent was a human, then there was a chance he could get out of this situation without trying to kill each other, depending on how he negotiated with them. Although, he didn't know if they would even sit at the table of negotiations to start with.

For the most part, in the total number of times Subaru had "Returned by Death" so far, the percentage of his deaths that were caused by humans and witchbeasts seemed like it was leaning slightly towards humans.

Just because his opponent was a human who could understand what he was saying, didn't mean he thought he could blindly form friendly relations between them.

He did think the likelihood of finding Rem would increase, if there were more people that were looking for her, but—

Subaru: "—Cor Leonis."

Shutting his eyes, Subaru drove away his rambling thoughts, activating the Authority that rested within himself.

The brand new power which demonstrated its fierceness in the Pleiades Watchtower, "Cor Leonis" was a probing skill that enabled him to detect the locations of his companions, those who would support the "Little King".

Using this, Subaru desperately clung onto the hope that he could pinpoint where Rem was at.

However—

Subaru: "…It's no good, there's no reaction. She might've gone far away from me, or if that's not it… is it because she doesn't think of me as an ally?"

Little was known about the exact range of "Cor Leonis", but Subaru didn't see the pale light which indicated his allies in the area where the ability took effect.

Thinking of the cause of being unable to detect their locations, Subaru came up with the distance between them and his relationships with them.

Emilia and the others had once been the targets of its effects, but he currently couldn't perceive them at all. Even if he personally knew both Reid and Gluttony, he didn't know their locations as well.

He was certainly able to ascertain the activation of "Cor Leonis."

If he were to say it, his ally radar was turned on, although it was in a nonreactive state. The reason why it became like that would be because Emilia and the others were outside of its range of effect, and Rem, who was supposed to be inside of its scope, didn't place Subaru under her category of allies.

—The fact he also didn't know the location of Louis, who was acting in unison to Rem, attested to his theory.

Subaru: "There's no way I'll ever treat her as an ally. It's why she won't appear on my radar that has my one-sided love for Rem."

Coming to this point, Subaru regretted the poor communication that had occurred when he came into contact with Rem.

Since he was wrapped around in the Witch's miasma, he was unsure of which words he could've chosen to say would've won over her trust. Despite that, even if he were to be deceitful, he was unable to say anything pertaining to protecting Louis nor bringing her along with them.

Subaru: "Shit, dammit… why…?! Rem finally… finally woke up, so why do I have to…"

Play tag with her like this?

He had been waiting eagerly for the day Rem could stand up and move around freely on her own two legs, but when she actually sprang into motion like this, Subaru couldn't help but resent it.

If he thought about who he should loathe as a result, all it did was make his anger surge up, directed towards the Sin Archbishops of Gluttony, involving Louis as well.

Subaru: "…"

Keeping the thoughts in his mind that were going around in circles, Subaru gingerly moved through the forest.

He kept his body lowered as he walked because of the person that killed him once—he would be referring to them as a "hunter" since it was more convenient, but it was a desperate measure he took in order to avoid making contact with the hunter.

Subaru thought he should do something more, such as rubbing mud on his face, camouflaging his clothes with leaves, and applying the effects of deceptive colors onto himself, but he unfortunately couldn't spend his time on those things.

If he at least precisely knew how much time passed after he was separated from Rem, his search for her would be getting somewhere.

Subaru: "Think, think… It's only during these times I can make use of my crafty mind. Rem forgot everything, and doesn't remember. But, she still had the ability to hold me down and sense the Witch's miasma. It means her episodic memories are missing."

"Amnesia" often had an appearance in manga and games, but in most cases, the amnesia handled in these works corresponded to the lack of what were called episodic memories.

It was the same condition as Subaru, who lost his memories once in the tower as the consequence of coming across Gluttony—no, that Subaru had only lost his memories which were made after arriving at the different world, so Rem wasn't exactly in the same state as him, but it was something similar to that.

In other words, she was in a state where she knew the names of things, and she also remembered the reflexive actions absorbed into her body, but she lost the memories of her own name and the names of other people, as well as any details that tied into her recollections of the time she spent with them.

The evidence of Rem calling herself "I", and being instinctively on her guard against Subaru because of the scent, was proof of that.

Subaru: "She must be confused. She can't keep running away forever. If she separated herself from me to some extent, then she'll make some time to calm down and reflect on herself. Even more so, if she took Louis with her."

It was stupid of him to pray for such a thing, but he just wanted to wish Louis would be a grand hinderance and get in the way of Rem's escape.

Throwing tantrums, refusing to walk sometimes, and continuing to cause Rem a lot of trouble, a chance for him to catch up to Rem would eventually come around if those things happened.

Or, it was also okay if Rem forsook her.

If Rem decided she wouldn't be able to look after her because she couldn't handle her, that could also—

Subaru: "…Actually, I don't know about that."

He didn’t know if Rem would abandon Louis, seeing that she at least looked like a helpless infant.

Losing her episodic memories and being nobody in a sense, it could be said Rem didn’t have the inferiority complex she had from interacting with Ram, nor the establishment of her own identity.

Despite losing the existence of Rem, it was abnormal how Ram could remain stable, with there being no changes. He wondered if the same thing would happen to Rem.

She wasn’t sisters with Ram, her inferiority complex and her pride as a member of the Oni Clan was irrelevant to her, and she thought nothing of Natsuki Subaru. That Rem—

Subaru: “—hk!”

As soon as he imagined it, Subaru felt a burning sensation in his chest, and took a large, mighty step forward.

The twigs he took his emotions out on by stepping on them creaked before snapping, and he leaned forward while walking around the tall grass that sat in front of him, nearly slipping on the muddy ground,

Subaru: “—Ah?”

Unexpectedly, the forest had opened up into a different terrain, and Subaru found he had exited out of it into another grassy plain.

Thinking he might’ve gone around the forest in circles, only to end up in the same place, the color drained from Subaru’s face. However, when he observed the area attentively, he realized it wasn’t the case.

It was similar to the first grassland, but the height of the grass beneath his feet were different.

Compared to the grassy plain at the beginning, the grass here was slightly taller. Adding to it, that place was completely surrounded by forests at a 360 degree angle, but this area only had the forest Subaru had rushed out of.

In front of him with the forest at his back, he could see a large horizon between the rifts in the grassland. The sky looked terribly far away and high up in the air, and the illusion of mysteriously feeling like he was being sucked into it was making the ground beneath him unsteady.

However, it wasn't only the far away sky that caught his eye.

Closer and nearer to him than that, there was a small, open area created by cutting apart the grassland, and the camping tools placed over there—in short, it was a sign of someone previously having been here.

Subaru: "…"

Instantaneously, caution swelled and bubbled all over Subaru's body, and his field of view was narrowed drastically.

Fortunately, there weren't any silhouettes at the place he should refer to as a simple camping ground. Only the possible traces of someone camping out here remained, and it was hard to think of it as a trap.

The problem was about who exactly created this camping site.

Subaru: "The highest possibility for that is the one who killed me… right?"

He thought about the hunter that brought him down. Upon proceeding to carry out a hunt in the forest, the odds of them setting this place as their base camp were high.

If it came to that, then Subaru should immediately move away from here, and ensure his own safety.

Whether he came across them in the forest or on a plain, there was no doubt the hunter was a dangerous individual.

It was often said that the Matagi shot humans by accident because they mistook them for deer, but mistakenly shooting someone that was looking for their acquaintance while shouting loudly, because one confused them for a deer, was simply impossible when Subaru took their skills into consideration.

The hunter was a threatening enemy. He needed to conclude it as such before acting.

However—

Subaru: "…If I could filch at least one knife."

In order to march through the close-knit trees of what he should call a dense forest, Subaru wanted the assistance of a tool. Unfortunately, the only item which was currently in his possession was the whip he used regularly—the Guiltywhip, crafted out of the materials from a powerful enemy.

His outfit, one that was for conquering the sandy sea, was kind of coming in handy for the conquering of the dense forest. Nevertheless, his situation would change drastically if he had even one bladed tool to cut up the trees so he could get a move on.

Therefore, things would go rather differently if he could obtain a single tool that was something like it.

Viewing it as such, Subaru finished his short period of contemplation, and walked towards the camping grounds.

He also had the choice to immediately make a quick turn and return to the forest, but considering what he was after, he wanted to avoid going back there empty-handed.

While paying attention to his footsteps and surroundings, Subaru entered the site.

Subaru: "There's marks left from when they made a fire, and it's shoddy, but… is this a bed?"

He knew the traces of a burning fire were left in the center of the camp, and also that there was something which looked like a bed next to it, lined up with cut grass. There was no doubt someone had been living here.

The bed was empty as well, and it seemed like there was nothing else in the area, but—

Subaru: “If I could just find a knife, or something like that—”

???: “—Huh, so you want a blade. Well, you have made your appearance at the right time.”

The moment Subaru tried to find a tool he could use, going on a brief search around the camp, he stopped as he heard a voice speak behind him and felt something cold being held to his neck.

His breath catching in his throat, upon lowering his gaze slowly, Subaru saw that the object raised against the right side of his neck was the blade of a sword, polished and refined beautifully.

Subaru: “…”

Holding his breath, Subaru understood that he had given his opponent the right to decide whether to kill him or let him live.

However, his head was in a state of confusion because of the fact he had been spoken to from behind. —He was cautious. He was cautious, with calculations thrown out of the window, because he was in a situation with his life on the line.

Of course, among the superhumans that lived in this other world, he knew there were people who could move at a speed his eyes couldn’t catch up to, and there were also people who could even pull off the likes of teleportation.

Despite that,

Subaru: “Did I really manage to roll one of the few exceptions here, at this time? …How unlucky can I be?”

???: “Fool. Who said you could speak? You are to choose each and every one of your words with utmost care. Do not forget that your life is within our… my hands.”

Even as Subaru cursed his own misfortune, there was no mercy in the voice of the person behind him.

Just as they said, they would probably immediately send his head flying if he tried anything funny. Feeling the indubitable, overpowering pressure asserting that things would definitely turn out like that, Subaru desperately tried to think of any ways he could make a breakthrough.

Judging from the voice, the person was a man.

Because he sounded quite young, he could be around the same age as Subaru, or slightly older. The way the man chose his words was peculiar, but it strangely didn’t feel odd to him.

And, more than anything—

Man: “I see you are racking your brains in deep thought whilst your mouth remains closed. However, you are not thinking of throwing away your life and attempting to strike back… Hm.”

The man had the insight that allowed him to discern the silent Subaru’s inward thoughts.

It seemed like he had considered something while looking at Subaru’s back, as he let out a breath that sounded like he was mulling over his thoughts, and,

Man: “You are dressed in a style that I do not see around these places. I do not believe it is suitable for the climate in Buddheim, either. Pale hands and feet… you are not from the local area.”

Subaru: “I’m… woah!”

Man: “Silence. Who said you could open your mouth? If you are to incur my displeasure next time, I would like to see you try speaking even after your head is separated from your body.”

The man had no intention of engaging in the conversation. Subaru was forced to realize it when a shallow cut was delivered to his neck.

Along with the pain from the prickling sensation, blood gradually spilled over the wound and trickled down his neck, but the man wasn’t finished yet with his examination of Subaru.

Man: “The whip at your waist is also extremely, terribly inconvenient to use in a forest. Your arms and legs are also somewhat trained, but it is not so much as to arrange you into the line of wolves… It seems like you did not come here chasing after me.”

Subaru: “…”

Man: “Why is it that you have fallen silent? If you would not explain yourself, would you rather die here?”

Subaru: “Eeh?! I’m allowed to speak this time?! Isn’t that unreasonable?!”

When Subaru protested against the man’s unfairness, the stern gaze boring into the back of his head became sharper.

Subaru stiffened, grasping that he said something unnecessary, but the rigidity of his body was finally loosened as the sword against his neck was drawn back.

However,

Man: “—Turn around slowly. If you try anything funny,”

Subaru: “You’ll lop off my head?”

Man: “No. I will sever your limbs, gouge out your heart, and incinerate it in front of your eyes.”

Subaru: “A threat that’s way too evil!”

Subaru got the message of the threat from its intensity, raising both of his hands, and started turning around bit by bit while proving he had no intention to counterattack.

And then, he took his time to set his eyes on the man that managed to get behind him—

Subaru: “…Are you serious?”

—He came face to face with the man in front of him, whose face was hidden behind a rag wrapped around it.

3

He really was a strange-looking man.

His height was only slightly above Subaru’s, and his physique looked vaguely slim. Showing his slender limbs as he stood, he held something similar to a saber or a rapier in his hand, a thin-bladed sword that had given a shallow slice to Subaru’s neck.

The outfit he wore consisted of noble-like clothes of excellent quality, and it could be said his style was more out of place than Subaru’s appearance. If he looked closely, he could see that the rag wrapped around his face might've been a cape.

Whether he sustained an injury on his face, or whether he simply didn't want to show his face, it wasn't clear why he wore the rag on his face, but—

Masked man: "What is it? With your idiotic face."

Subaru: "Setting it aside if you meant "idiotic look" by that, I was born with this face, so doesn't it count as bad-mouthing me…? There's this and that, but my reaction can't be helped especially after looking at your appearance."

Masked man: "You are making assumptions. I am also looking at your face, currently being once again suspicious if you are an assassin or not."

Subaru: "People don't get jobs assigned to them because of what their eyes look like! My role is just the exact opposite of an assassin in the first place. Rather than going on the offensive, I'm more of a defensive kind of guy."

Without loosening up his vigilance, the man—no, the masked man continued to point his sword at Subaru.

Responding to his voice that was laced with doubt, Subaru looked at the masked man's equipment, and then at his baggage which was placed behind him, before furrowing his brow.

The man's outfit, ill-suited for any camping or activity in the forest, had attracted Subaru's attention, but what drew his focus more than it was the sack lying down behind him—Subaru could only see it as something that materialized into the clearing without any warning, the same as the man that had appeared behind his back.

Adding to that, it was about the masked man's equipment. —He didn't have a bow, nor did he have any arrows.

Subaru: "…It seems like you're probably not the hunter."

Masked man: "Hunter?"

Subaru: “It’s a personal matter. By the way… are you able to do things like crossing a distance instantaneously, or becoming invisible… stuff like that?”

Masked man: “…”

The moment he asked the question, the man’s black eyes, able to be seen from the gap in his mask, were narrowed.

However, the masked man’s reaction wasn’t one of anger nor one thinking of deserting him, but it was a reaction showing he took an interest in Subaru.

In fact, when the man let out a small sigh with a “Huh,”

Masked man: “Why have you reached an idea such as that? State your reasoning.”

Subaru: “…I was cautious of my surroundings before coming closer to this place, just in case. Of course, I know there’s tons of people who can tear through anything as poor as my caution, but you’re not one of them.”

Masked man: “Why is that?”

Subaru: “I want you to listen without getting mad at me, but I had a lot of opportunities to coincidentally come across a bunch of skilled people, or what you would call superhumans. Comparing you to those crazy guys, I get the feeling from you that you’re… uh, ordinary.”

If he was talking to a notable warrior, what he said would definitely offend him.

Even so, it was what Subaru felt after facing the masked man in a conversation. He observed that the man in front of him was unquestionably able to use a sword, but his skill was average, having gotten to that point with a certain amount of training.

Looking at him from Subaru’s eyes, who knew people such as Reinhard, Garfiel, Wilhelm, and Julius, he could only say the masked man was inferior when he measured them side by side.

Subaru: “If that’s so, then the theory of you jumping here outside of my perception will be null and void. What’s left is the possibility of you instantly closing the distance and appearing behind me, or if that’s not it…”

Masked man: “It was either that, or I have disappeared from your sight by utilizing “Concealment”.”

Subaru: “—hk?!”

Soon after, Subaru jolted with astonishment as the man vanished from his field of view, despite having been standing in front of him.

However, his surprise didn’t end there.

Subaru: “You disappeared… but, are you right in front of me?”

Masked man: “—You are correct. “Concealment” cannot remove even my presence.”

Receiving Subaru’s question, the masked man blinked back into view the moment he replied, standing in the same exact place in the same posture as before.

As he thought, the man hadn’t disappeared in the sense of being gone, but he only disappeared in the sense of being invisible. And, the fact he returned from that state the moment he answered Subaru’s question meant—.

Subaru: “It gets canceled if you touch someone, or they become aware of you?”

Masked man: “Although, it is the ideal tool for holding one’s breath and lying low whilst being hidden.”

Saying that, the masked man lowered the sword he was pointing at Subaru, and directed it at the edge of the camping grounds. He was aiming it towards where his sack was placed.

Masked man: “The bed is a decoy. I was holding my breath over there, just slightly far away from it. I saw you sneak into here from the very beginning. How humorous you were.”

Subaru: “Looking from the side, people look super dumb when they’re on alert… wait, that’s not important right now! You lowered your sword, so that means…”

Masked man: “You are not my pursuer. I have no clue of how, nor your motives, but you must be someone that has gotten lost. If so, I have no reason to condemn you severely for that. Neither do I need to teach you a lesson with this blade.”

As if indicating he had no intention to fight, the masked man withdrew the bare sword back into the sheath at his waist. Seeing it through, the tension in Subaru’s body finally softened.

The moment he relaxed, he came to remember his original plan.

Subaru: “Agh, it’s not the time to be calming myself. Hey, sorry for all these questions, but did you see a blue-haired girl? We got separated around here.”

Masked man: “Blue hair? No, I have not. Rather, making my way to this place, the first thing I saw was your face. What are you going to do about this?”

Subaru: “I won’t do anything about it, though?! I won’t do anything about it, but… shit, it ended in failure here too, huh. Hey, this is a maybe, but is it possible for you to help me look for…”

Masked man: “…”

Subaru: “Yeah, just as I thought…”

He failed to obtain a witness statement, and his last resort, relying on the rope of human relations, had also been chopped off in front of him.

Subaru received the masked man’s icy glare, knifelike to the point that it might cut anything that touched it, as the answer to his request. Like that, in order to take back the time he lost, he tried to return to the forest,

Masked man: “Halt. If you were separated in this forest, then reuniting is not a feat that could be done so easily. Although, I believe the best course of action is for you to prioritize your survival?"

Subaru: "—. Sorry, but not a chance. It's just that she's more important than my life. I'll reunite with her no matter what it takes. No, I need to bring her home."

Masked man: "More than your life, huh. Setting aside the bardic poetry of songstresses, I can only imagine those as empty words if I hear it in reality. I can only imagine it as that, but what is interesting are your eyes."

When the intensity of Subaru's gaze sharpened from the man's attitude of ridiculing his recklessness, the man exactly pointed a finger towards his eyes.

As Subaru drew back, thinking he was going to poke his eyes out, the masked man chuckled at him,

Masked man: "Those are eyes that do not tell lies nor slander. I do not know if it will remain the same when it is actually weighed on a scale with your life, but at this moment, it seems like you apparently did not line up any words of deceit."

Subaru: "So… so what? If what I'm saying is true, what will it,"

Masked man: "—It will more or less capture my interest. I shall allow you to borrow my intellect."

With a finger, the masked man tapped the area around his temple.

Listening to his answer, Subaru thought he should just yell out, "Stop messing around!" at the man, but any harsh remarks such as that didn't leap out of his throat.

Mysteriously, this was a strange thing as well, but he couldn't find any feelings of suspicion he could direct towards the man. —No, the man was shady. However, he had a persuasiveness that overpowered it.

It was most likely the effect of the natural-born charisma he held.

Masked man: “Describe the details of what exactly transpired. I will find you a way to search for her.”

Subaru: “…Me and her were suddenly hurled to this place.”

Before he knew it, Subaru was starting to answer the man’s question, slowly and steadily.

It wasn’t as if he actually believed in this guy, or trusted him either. —It was just that he was desperate enough to be grasping at straws. When he felt like this, he wanted to rely on someone, even if they were less trustworthy than a pile of straw.

Maybe, it was just about that.

4

Masked man: “You were careless.”

Like that, having finished hearing Subaru’s explanation of his circumstances, the masked man’s first words in response were biting.

Just as he had been asked by the man, Subaru had given a clean description of what happened between him and Rem—omitting the complicated situation which also surrounded them.

He told him that Rem’s memories were jumbled, and that she had escaped after knocking him out. And, he also included the part where she was acting together with a dangerous little girl.

Subaru: “I know. I know, I was being a huge idiot. But, you won’t stop there… right? Exposing my recently acquired dark past, and being done after making fun of me…”

Masked man: “Fool. How could I bother to go as far as using my precious time to deride a jester such as yourself? —That girl, she is able to think on her feet to a certain degree, yes?”

Subaru: “Ah, yeah, I think so, maybe.”

Intimidated by the air the masked man was giving off, Subaru nodded truthfully.

As a versatile maid, Rem played an active part in the various moments of daily life, but an evaluation such as that couldn't be obtained just by being skilled at doing housework.

Determining the abilities of different people and placing them where it would be appropriate for them, before letting them act. —Even during fights, she predicted his movements and moved in sync with him, despite him not saying anything to invoke that.

Rem was smart. Even if her memories had been lost—

Masked man: "If that is so, it is highly feasible that you have been plotted against."

Subaru: "Pl, plotted against? You're saying I got tricked? That's… I don't…"

Masked man: "In this case, whether she has her memories or not is not the problem. What is important is that the girl is aware she is being chased after, and she has the capability to come up with this and that against her pursuer. For example—"

Cutting off his words there, the masked man stared at Subaru from head to toe with his black eyes.

Feeling like his thoughtlessness was being criticized, Subaru drew his shoulders closer to himself.

Looking at Subaru, the masked man narrowed his eyes,

Masked man: "For example, something such as purposely leaving traces in the grassland, to disguise the direction she had escaped in."

Subaru: "…"

Masked man: "You must have been quite anxious, after you awakened from being knocked unconscious. When you felt like you needed to find her as soon as possible, what would you do if there were footsteps, placed there as if it was being shown off to you?"

Ardent and eager, Subaru had run after the traces like a mongrel.

It was what happened in reality, and it was the answer to the mocking gaze of the masked man. Of course, he could make a retort, saying that wasn't it, but—

Subaru: "—. Sure enough, I couldn't find any more traces deeper into the forest, coming from the entrance. But, I thought it was because the path was unsteady and hard to walk on…"

Masked man: "You do not avert your eyes from the truth that is inconvenient to yourself."

Subaru: "I've known that I'm stupid and an idiot for a long time. It's only that I have a gift for adaptability and willpower, something I'm on the same page with the other me."

It couldn't be conveyed even if he said it, but Subaru replied to the masked man as such.

Truthfully, the man's speculation made a lot of sense. Looking back on it, the traces left on top of the grass felt way too "obvious".

Among wild animals such as foxes and rabbits, there were those that did things such as purposely leaving behind footprints and jumping into a clump of grass midway, utilizing techniques which confused their predators.

The marks Rem left on the grass were the same, so what if it was a cunning trap in order to deceive him?

Subaru: "She made me go to a different direction, and went the other way instead…?"

Masked man: "In that case, the direction one will choose to go would often be the exact opposite. It is reasonable to select the method in which she could keep away as far as she could, considering her state of mind. —Do you understand?"

Subaru: "…It's frustrating, but I get it. Damn! That Rem!"

Just as the masked man said, if Rem had deliberately left visible tracks as a decoy, there was a high possibility she had made her escape towards the opposite direction.

However, if Subaru managed to get a good guess on her actions and went to the forest on the other side, he might be able to work out something to catch her. He somewhat felt like a villain, but—

Subaru: “I’m used to giving others a bad first impression because of stuff like my face and body odor. I’ll definitely catch up to her!”

Masked man: “How high-spirited. —Here, take this with you.”

Subaru: “Uweh?!”

Standing up, as Subaru attempted to dash away, unable to stand still for any longer, the masked man threw something at him after palming his sack of his belongings.

As Subaru looked at the thing he just caught in his hands, he saw it was a small knife, fitted inside of a leather sheath.

When he widened his eyes at it, the masked man shrugged his shoulders,

Masked man: “It is not a forest you could confront with a single whip. Utilize it to the best of your ability.”

Subaru: “I’m really thankful for it, but… are you sure? I can’t do anything in return right now.”

Masked man: “I do not mind. Sometimes, I would like to be the one who bestows to another. Or, will you make an effort to deprive me of every one of my belongings with the knife?”

It sounded like he was joking, but it was true that he had given Subaru the power to carry it out.

The masked man had a certain amount of skill, but it couldn’t be declared that Subaru didn’t have a chance against him, no matter how slim it was. In that sense, the man’s actions were akin to a type of gamble.

However—

Subaru: "—My name is Natsuki Subaru. This is unmistakably a debt that I owe you. I'll definitely return the favor that I was given. I won't try anything ungrateful."

Firmly fastening the knife he received on his waist, Subaru bowed deeply. Looking at that, the masked man let out a small scoff with a, "Hmph,"

Masked man: "I have already shown you the way. Get on with it and go. By all possible means, you are to make every effort in winning over the trust of the runaway girl."

Subaru: "I totally agree. Thanks for the help! Oh wait, that's that, but…"

Masked man: "What is it?"

Waving his hand to express his gratitude, Subaru paused right as he was about to rush into the forest. The masked man's voice had a hint of exasperation in it because of how busy he looked, but Subaru pointed his finger at the forest in front of him,

Subaru: "I'm passing through here to go back to the grassland I was in, but you shouldn't really use this path. There's a frightening hunter in here. They'll try to kill you from afar with a bow, so no matter how many lives you have, it won't be enough against them. If you're going somewhere, I recommend you to take a detour around the forest."

Masked man: "—. I see. I understand. I will keep it in mind."

Subaru: "Yeah, please do that. —See you!"

Hearing the masked man's response, Subaru succeeded in preventing his benefactor from immediately being killed by the hunter, avoiding a potential situation that left a bad taste in his mouth.

And then, racing into the forest as fast as he could, he started running for the first grassland with all his might.

Subaru: “—It cuts really well!”

Fortunately, Subaru didn’t have much trouble returning to the first grassland.

It was because the knife he received from the masked man had a sharp edge, giving him a huge boost in slicing off the branches and leaves that obstructed his path.

Normally, when it came to a knife like this, it seemed like its blade would be heavily chipped if it were to be overused, but he felt no inconveniences such as that. Perhaps it might be an excellent blade of the highest quality.

Subaru: “His clothes looked pretty expensive, too. Who exactly was that guy…?”

While wondering about it, Subaru returned to the original grassland with great haste. After that, when he searched around the area where he had been led towards the opposite way—

Subaru: “—Found it. This must be it.”

Just now, on the other side of the marks placed for show, Subaru discovered a set of footsteps left in an uneven shape on the grass. It looked like Rem had tried her best to rub out the tracks, but it was very likely that she could only erase her own, and couldn’t fully erase Louis’s.

Since traces of the effort that was put into removing the tracks were there, it was implausible to think of this as an additional decoy.

Which meant—

Subaru: “Finally, I got something on you, Rem…!”

Although he was self-conscious of it earlier, he uttered the words that made him straight-up sound like a villain, running as fast as he could while chasing after the marks which became his newly discovered sign of Rem’s location.

The tracks which continued to the entrance of the forest were the same as last time. However, it wasn't possible to disguise the broken twigs at the entrance, nor the footprints in the mud.

Subaru: "I found it! If I use this—"

I can catch up to Rem, Subaru thought as he attempted to track the footprints in the mud with eagerness.

It was the next moment.

Subaru: "—hk?!"

As Subaru paid attention to the footprints, a tied vine broke apart below his feet. The recoil made the branch it was supporting shoot out towards him, and a powerful blow struck him from the side.

Subaru: "Gh, ugh,"

Receiving a horizontal lash from a branch about as thick as his arm, Subaru was sent flying at a long distance. A pained cry escaped from him as he rolled across the mud, unable to stand up from the impact of the blow.

His vision flashing and flickering between light and dark, and hit by a surprise attack that he wasn't expecting, Subaru's consciousness twirled around like the revolving light of a police car from the pain and the shock.

Subaru: "R-Right now, could that be…"

When the pain was mitigated after a while, Subaru finally stood up on the spot. Though, he knew it was affecting his knees, and he also knew that a massive amount of internal damage was done on the side of his body.

However, his shock extended beyond that.

Subaru: "—A trap?"

Although she was running away, she wouldn't end it with a simple escape.

Despite having lost her memories, she could exert herself to the fullest. That was how fearsome the girl—Rem could be.

Natsuki Subaru finally realized it then and there.

—That this was the beginning of his second real, genuine battle with Rem, ever since he arrived at this world.

Chapter 3:
VS Rem

1

Subaru: "—Uwah, it's just as I was told. What's this? It's not cleaned thoroughly at all."

Peeking into the back of the shelf he had tilted over, Subaru grimaced at his own work.

With the suit coat of his butler outfit taken off and the sleeves of his shirt rolled up, Subaru was fully assuming the style of a cleaner—however, the contents of his work deserved to have the title of "Apprentice" or "Poor" attached to the top.

Displaying the small amount of dexterity he naturally possessed, Subaru became able to do his job in the mansion more efficiently compared to before.

Just as he bore those thoughts, he felt like his hubris had been pointed at and called out.

There was one shadow staring at Subaru's self-reflection from behind, sneering with a, "Hah!"

Ram: "Well, well, it's just Barusu after all. You turn into such a wretched state when Ram thought she could try extending the range of your job, thinking you've improved… You should be ashamed of yourself."

Subaru: "Yeah, I don't have anything I could say back against… wait, I do! How come you have the right to stand with such a haughty attitude?! You aren't doing enough work to lecture me like that!"

Ram: "Unlike you, Ram is very skilled at being efficient and well-organized. So, from the moment we allocated our workload in the morning, Ram guided it to make sure she would be in charge of the minimum amount of work.”

Subaru: “Not the skill to proceed with your work efficiently, but the skill to avoid working?!”

It wasn’t being victorious in a fight, but being victorious without fighting was the art of war.

That was what it looked like if put in a good way, and it was an excellent ability for skipping out on one’s job if looked at in a bad way, but it was too late no matter what Subaru wanted to say, because he wasn’t able to point it out during the morning.

Although—

Subaru: “The shifted burden going to Rem… is something neither me or you want, right.”

Ram: “Mn… you’re quite brazen in spite of being Barusu. But, you have a point.”

As Subaru said so while scratching his head with disappointment, Ram narrowed her eyes at him. Like that, when the two turned their faces towards the edge of the room, there was the figure of a person who was moving around with haste, her footsteps pattering against the floor.

A blue-haired girl, wiping away at the trivial parts of the room in the vicinity of the damp spots on the floor, whilst swaying the hem of her maid skirt—

Subaru: “—Rem.”

Rem: “Ah, yes, I’m sorry. I was a bit absorbed in my work. How did it go with the back of the shelf, Subaru-kun?”

The girl, Rem, smiled softly as she turned around to answer his call, asking him a question.

When that smile of hers was directed towards him, Subaru felt apologetic for having to give her a pathetic answer, but he resigned himself to his fate since it wasn’t something he could conceal.

Subaru: “Yeah, it was just as you said. Thoroughly wiping the places that can’t be seen easily… Really, my attitude of being OK with only making the surface clean isn’t good at all.”

Rem: “No, that’s not true. When it comes to putting on a front and glossing over other issues, you’re second to none. You’re the best among those of the kingdom!”

Subaru: “You put it in a way that might get us sued for defamation!”

He knew Rem meant no offense, but it was an evaluation that stabbed him like a needle.

Being good at keeping a facade and hiding his problems was a trait he himself was aware of,

Ram: “As expected, you’re good at seeing through the essence of various things, Rem.”

Subaru: “You’re being noisy, nee-sama! I’m a little aware of it, so don’t make me feel any more downhearted than I already am!”

Subaru directed a stern look at Ram, who was crossing her arms while being seated on the bed. However, she met his eyes with a sharpened gaze, even more intense than his, causing him to flee dejectedly.

The person at the lowest position with the lowest power in this place was Natsuki Subaru.

Subaru: “Damn, it’s tough to be bullied by a senior maid… In that regard, Rem is kind, right?”

Rem: “Yes, of course. Rem won’t say anything harsh to you. Rem believes that you will understand her even if she doesn’t say anything extra.”

Subaru: “Your kindness is going to tear a hole in me from the inside.”

Sliced up on the outside by her older sister’s wicked tongue, and ripped into tatters on the inside from Rem’s sweet, sweet poison.

Subaru felt like he was going to be confused, whether he was placed in a fortunate environment or whether he wasn’t, but it probably also pertained to how he perceived it.

Subaru: “Hey, don’t shut your eyes against your own faults, Natsuki Subaru. Putting nee-sama aside, isn’t it all about meeting Rem’s expectations for her? I’m gonna do it! Right, Rem?”

Rem: “As expected of you, that’s the spirit! Rem is deeply impressed!”

Subaru: “Heh, this positiveness of mine is also one of my special qualities. So, what should I start from?”

Rem: “Hm, yes… Firstly, the sashes of the windows aren’t wiped properly at all, so let’s redo that. For the place above the shelf, please use a foothold to wipe it thoroughly, not just standing on your toes. As you saw, there’s no need to clean the back of the shelf daily, but it will become a huge mess if it’s not cleaned from time to time. And, it’s about the foot of the bed and the other side of the mat, but…”

Subaru: “Ahh, I’m under heavy fire! It’s going to make me fall forwards!”

As Rem immediately listed off what Subaru could improve one by one in overflowing numbers, speaking at a pace as smooth as water, he was unable to keep up with his mental note-taking.

However, looking at the room from the perspective of Subaru, who was rated as the best among the kingdom at putting on a front and hiding his other problems, he was surprised to be told it had a lot of room for improvement, despite it appearing to be moderately clean.

Subaru: “Really, you’re very observant of things. Is it also a maid’s dedication?”

Rem: “Of course. Ah, but, if you think from another person’s standpoint, there are things you can eventually start seeing. Rem is always thinking about you, Subaru-kun.”

Subaru: “I’m happy, but the flaws of my cleaning… the dust-covered areas are being seen through one after another…”

Clenching her fist, Rem’s response was rather sweet of her, but it was awkward for Subaru.

However, she could direct her attentive gaze to even the miniscule details and carry out her work meticulously, which was the sign of her having the basics of a maid down, no matter how humble she was trying to be.

She undoubtedly lived up to the reputation of the versatile maid.

Ram: “It’s only natural. Because Rem is Ram’s adorable little sister.”

Subaru: “Wait, you’re the one who’s triumphant about it?!”

Rem: “It’s because nee-sama’s bold attitude fits her well, it being a part of her charm.”

As Ram acted all high and mighty on top of the bed, shamelessly cocking her head and leaning backwards to assert her posture, Subaru and Rem’s voices flew around her.

It was another scene in the everyday lives of the maids and the servant, who all worked at the Roswaal Mansion, and—

2

Subaru: “—Gh, whoa! Hh, dah!”

The feeling of floating that lasted for a moment, and the pain from being caught by the firm, solid ground.

Knowing that he was going to fall, although he curled up his body and rolled forwards to soften his landing, it was still quite the impact.

The follow-up attack from the thick branch that laid on the spot where he tumbled down, was especially beyond what he expected. It dug against his shoulder blades, and the unanticipated pain made his eyes water.

Subaru: “Ow ow… ahh, I’m glad there weren’t any follow-up attacks other than from Mother Nature. Thanks to this knife…”

Standing up while teary-eyed, Subaru sighed after he returned the knife in his hands back into its sheath.

He then spun around to gaze up at the trunk of the large tree, which he had been dangling from until now.

A long vine extended towards the ground from one of the thick branches of the trunk. It was cut off in the middle by the knife, but beyond the severed vine was—

Subaru: “A ring… I’ve seen those before in stuff like manga, but these kinds of traps actually work, huh.”

Saying so, Subaru removed the vine that was looped and tied around his right ankle.

The trap was set up on the ground, and it had a function where it tightened itself around one’s foot should they try to pass above it, leaving the person suspended in midair—to be honest, even though Subaru fell for the trap, he had no idea how it was able to make that possible.

And, he also didn’t have the spare time to search for this and that in order to find out the answer, either.

Subaru: “Although she doesn’t have her memories, her knowledge and skill are left as they are, huh… When I’m in the position of chasing after her like this, I see Rem really is nee-sama’s little sister.”

It was already obvious from the start, but he was forcefully reminded of it yet again. Of course, he didn’t want it to be pointed out to him in this manner, so it felt quite unpleasant to him.

—Over an hour had passed, since Subaru entered the forest in pursuit for Rem.

Following the advice of the masked man, who he met on the other side of the forest, Subaru was able to detect Rem’s attempts to disguise the escape route she used with Louis in tow.

Thanks to it, he could undoubtedly say the distance between him and the two was shrinking. However, the greatest factor of why he wasn't able to close the distance to zero, was because Rem's wariness was his biggest obstacle.

Rem was cautious of the Witch's scent—the miasma that encircled him, not limiting herself to only camouflaging her and Louis's footsteps, but also placing traps everywhere around the forest to slow him down.

Ever since he received the powerful blow at the beginning of all of this, Subaru discovered (or you could say that he fell for) traps that amounted to a number above ten. Knowing Rem was carrying out the positioning of those numbers of traps while running on her unsteady legs, taking a deadweight with her to add to that, Subaru had to be deeply impressed by her.

Subaru: "If it's something like tying some grass or digging a shallow pitfall, it's actually cute, but…"

Minor traps with the purpose of tripping him or spraining his foot. If it came to those kinds of traps, it wasn't as harmful, and it also wasn't much of a hindrance to his continuation of tracking Rem down.

However, their number was abnormally high, and it was troublesome because he needed to be on the lookout for them, when he navigated the areas with considerable amounts of grass and fallen leaves.

Subaru: "It's difficult for me when with Rem's strength, it takes one try for her to make a pit that only traps one of your legs… The difference between the physical abilities we were born with are showing."

Mingled among the minor traps were the intermediate traps made out of vines and fallen trees, similar to the one which pulled him into the air, fully aiming to slow him down.

If Subaru hadn't been blessed with the opportunity to obtain a knife by some miracle, how much time would it have taken him to free himself from the vine trap? There was also the likelihood of the recommencing of his chase being delayed even further, due to losing his cool in one way or another.

And, what made the panicking Subaru hesitate the most was—

Subaru: "Sh!"

He lashed out the Guiltywhip he drew from the back of his waist, the tip of the weapon delivering a powerful strike to a suspicious spot on the ground.

The next moment, aimed towards the spot, two or three branches swooped down onto it, rebounding through the air with a devastating amount of power. It had a force that would be strong enough to break one or two of his arms, if he had been hit directly by those.

Large traps, which existed to seize Subaru's ability to take action—there weren't many, but the fact that these traps had been indeed set up was hampering the speed he was advancing through the forest at.

He could also say the single blow he received from the thick branch at the entrance, was one of Rem's large traps.

As Subaru continued deeper into the forest, the danger and power of the large traps was increasing. Instead of thinking that Rem, being chased, was losing her mercifulness, it was more as if her skill was growing.

Subaru: "She's learning and getting even better at making traps, while creating them during her escape… Damn, as expected of how hardworking you are, Rem. I didn't want it to be demonstrated against me right now, though."

He knew Rem was a hard worker who tried her best at everything, and he was also happy those qualities weren't lost, even in the present situation where her memories haven't returned. However, that was beside the point.

To put it short, Rem was growing throughout their battle. Considering Subaru's own growth was pretty much at its limit, to make matters worse, the already severe difference in their capabilities would be even more noticeable.

He had to capture her before this difference became set in stone, but—

Subaru: "…"

Dismantling the large trap in front of him, Subaru held his breath for a moment.

Restlessly glancing around the area around him, what he sought after was the next escape route of Rem, who had created the trap he just took apart. In order to find it out, there was a need to follow the little amount of tracks she tried to cover up.

Of course, he could think of a situation where she left no traces behind at all, but the current Rem didn't have the ability nor time to pull that off. Because of that—

Subaru: "—Found it."

In the gap between the trees, where the trap was previously set up, Subaru discovered the sign of tree bark having been plucked at, albeit only a little.

It was unrelated to the large trap, and it was a tiny scratch that was similar to a cat dragging its claws against a pillar of a house. However, these childish scars had served a purpose in leading Subaru to this point.

After all, the true identity of these scratches were the tracks left behind by the "hinderance".

Subaru: "…"

It was an ironic thing, but the primary factor that got in Rem's way and allowed Subaru to continue his pursuit, was the existence of the Sin Archbishop she was taking with her on her escape—Louis Arneb.

Rem and Louis, Subaru didn't know how compatible they were with each other, but what he could observe from the little scars was that Louis wasn't very well-behaved and cooperative with Rem's actions.

No matter how hard Rem tried to erase their footsteps, Louis was ruining all of her efforts.

Subaru: "Shit…!"

Taking notice of the good news as Subaru used it to assist his chase, his feelings remained cloudy, the rays of revitalization refusing to shine through them.

It was only natural. With it resulting in Louis's existence giving Subaru a helping hand, if he thought about his relationship with the evil Sin Archbishop, he couldn't be rejoicing over it.

Even if it wasn't Louis who directly stole Rem's "name" and "memories", the three siblings, representing the Sin Archbishops of Gluttony, all bore sins to an equal degree. Only one of them having the weight of their sins lightened was something that wasn't going to happen.

It didn't matter if she didn't have a physical body that existed in the world, or if she strayed off the correct path in the way of life.

That was the conclusion Subaru made against Louis Arneb, who had been ranting, screaming, and bawling her eyes out in that white-filled world.

Because of that, even if Subaru could catch up to Rem successfully, and entered the stage of persuading her, he had no intention to make a compromise on how Louis would be treated.

In the first place—

Subaru: "Why the hell… do I have to play tag with Rem like this…!"

As he thought about catching up to Rem and discussing what they would do about Louis, Subaru bit his lip out of the anger rushing back into him, despite leaving it out of his mind until now.

He had considered the possibility of the awakened Rem having lost her “memories” and “name”.

Of course, it would’ve been the best if the original, complete Rem had returned, but since there were previous cases such as Crusch and Julius, he couldn’t really expect Rem to wake up in her former state.

His worries had nailed the problem right in the center, and as a result, Rem had forgotten about herself, as well as Subaru.

Even if things turned out like that, Subaru thought he could withstand it and support her.

Emilia and Ram, Beatrice, and the others—with the members of the camp helping each other out, everyone could support Rem together. That was the source of why Subaru could stay put.

However, right now, in the forest with none of the people Subaru could rely on, he was in pursuit of the runaway Rem.

Subaru: “Why… did it turn out like this…? Why does everything always…”

Didn’t allow him to settle down anything neatly and smoothly?

Rem would wake up after remembering everything, and although she would be surprised at the time that had passed during her slumber, they would weave the story that laid ahead of them, together. He was fine with that.

Even if Rem were to be in the same state she currently was in, if Subaru’s allies, who would do their best all together as a group, were there for her and stood by her side, then he wouldn’t have been tormented by a disaster like this. He was fine with that, too.

Fate always had the harshest, cruelest path in store for Natsuki Subaru.

And not only did it prepare that for Subaru, but it also directed that towards the people around him, who were dear to him.

Subaru: “—Have you complained enough already, Natsuki Subaru?”

Gnashing the back of his teeth together, Subaru delivered a strong slap to his cheeks using both of his hands.

The sharp pain and the impact rocked his consciousness, and Subaru temporarily left behind the feeble thoughts he had been harboring just until now.

Yes, fate invariably showed him the cruelest path every single time.

That was why Natsuki Subaru was constantly beaten down by hardship and suffering in the form of a whip, standing up every time he fell despite feeling like he was on the verge of vomiting up blood, and continued to face the front.

Subaru: “The man who finally made his hardships into his own whip. That’s me.”

Strictly speaking, Guiltylowe, the witchbeast that became the raw materials for the whip, was not quite a wall that obstructed his path, and it was on the lower difficulty level among the other hardships that blocked his way. Subaru declared it as such.

Talking big and lifting his own spirits, stirring up his emotions, concentrating his crafty mind, and searching for a way he could fight. It was what Subaru had been doing until now.

He had been following through with it to a foolishly honest degree. He didn’t have any other way to do it. So, he would do the same for today as well.

Subaru: “Think, think, think, me. Even if I keep chasing after Rem, she’ll eventually realize that Louis is screwing up her plan. If that happens, then the tracks would be cut off sooner or later. Before that happens…”

—He either had to catch up to them, or figure out a way to forestall them.

Subaru: "…"

Analyzing the difference in their fighting strength, Subaru racked his brains with all his might, trying to pinpoint the strengths of both the opposing party and himself.

As of now, Rem's strengths were her dexterity and her attentiveness, things which weren't lost even if she didn't have her memories. He wanted to watch over the speed of her growth as she became more adept at setting traps, the cuteness of her face and voice, and how she was taking action, but those could wait.

On the contrary, Subaru's strengths were his handling of the whip and knife, the clues Louis was leaving for him, although it was vexing to think she was helping him, and regarding the mean-looking shape of his eyes as a part of his charm—he could point out that he knew what kind of person Rem was, even more so than Rem herself.

Subaru: "…Rem must've already noticed me chasing after her."

The existence of the countless traps proved it, but Rem had been guessing that Subaru was hot on her heels.

If not, there was no reason for her to prepare an excessive number of traps to this extent. She would've only placed a few traps just to be safe, and prioritize her escape.

Instead of doing so, she continued to set up various traps because she was certain that Subaru was after her. And, the reason why she could be so sure of it was because of the Witch's miasma, as he had thought.

Subaru: "Exactly how much does my body stink right now…?"

Subaru sniffed his arm, but while he could detect the scent of sand and sweat, it wasn't as much as scattering a rancid odor all around himself. Of course, people said that it was hard to notice your own smell, but in this case, the problem was the Witch's miasma being only able to be recognized by the ones who could recognize it.

Previously, he heard something about the scent fading away day by day from Rem and Beatrice, but it would drastically increase its putridity depending on if it was right after he “Returned by Death”, or the frequency of its usage.

And, in half a day, Subaru’s looping in the Watchtower had piled up approximately twice as many Natsuki Subarus, and he was then hurled to a place like this.

That meant—

Subaru: “—In the history of my life in this world, the man who reeks of the Witch the most is the current me.”

It was unknown whether there was a limit to the Witch’s miasma or not, but Subaru could guess that the current him was emitting a substantial amount of it. If it’s the case, then his pursuit had definitely been found out already.

When it becomes so that Rem was unable to keep away the distance between them despite continuing to run and escape, she would eventually grow impatient.

Usually, teasing his opponent and leading them to make an error was a common trick of Subaru’s, but he also wanted to build a new, friendly relationship with Rem, so he didn’t want to rely too much on the method.

Subaru: “Something good on one side would be bad to the other… It’s impossible to appease both sides.”

The fact that the saying was being carried into real life, showed how bad the current situation was in a straightforward manner.

Thinking it as such, Subaru deactivated two or three minor and intermediate traps, chasing after the route Rem took while following the clues left by Louis.

He genuinely felt like Hansel and Gretel, who picked up crumbs of bread as they made their move. However, the difference was Subaru being alone, and also the group of two being the ones on the run.

Subaru: “And it’s in a pretty obvious place this time. Next is…”

Discovering the stripped bark of a tree, Subaru determined the next path he would be taking.

Louis didn't intend to let Subaru know of her and Rem's whereabouts, so if there wasn't any sense of unity between the marks that became his clues, there were many cases where it was hard to find them.

Quite possibly, while Rem worked to create the traps, Louis, who was left by herself, was just doing as she pleased. That was probably the truth of the matter.

The clues Louis left continued to be difficult to find for a while, but it was very helpful when he finally came across an obvious one.

Subaru: "I'm glad it was left there. If Rem found it and erased it, the trail of clues would be…"

Cut off, he almost said, before taking a pause in his words.

Then, he returned to the tree he had just passed by, staring at where the bark had been peeled away. The tree was large and sturdy, and the bark was pulled off from a spot that rather stood out.

Would Rem really fail to notice such a thing?

Subaru: "…"

The part where he was confused by the footprints at the grassland, Rem gradually becoming proficient in her trap-setting skills starting from there, and a large portion of bark being stripped from the tree in front of him in an exaggerated manner.

The three combined themselves inside of Subaru's head, completing the puzzle of the odd feeling he had.

Eventually, a single answer was derived inside of him.

Subaru: "If it's the Rem I know…"

If it was Rem, who was tactful and good at being attentive, she would’ve eliminated any plainly visible tracks.

Since the clue in front of him was left alone, unless Rem had sunk into quite a state of tunnel vision—

Subaru: “—Hah!”

Towards the path he had tried to move past, Subaru ripped out a chunk of thick grass from beneath his feet and hauled it in that direction.

The grass, with soil entangled in between its roots, drew a parabola as it flew at the patch of tall grass—

—Immediately after, the patch of grass made a terrifyingly gigantic sound as it plunged down, and an enormous pit engulfed the earth.

Subaru: “Whoa…!”

A large hole materialized in front of him, almost making him wonder what the other pitfalls from the minor traps were for. Nevertheless, the trap didn’t end there.

Aiming for the huge pit that made its appearance, the surrounding trees creaked as they snapped apart and collapsed. The fallen trees tumbled into the large hole one after another, and the freshly-opened pit was immediately refilled.

If Subaru had fallen into that enormous pitfall, he would’ve been stuck and entombed in there by now, buried alive.

Coming to this point, a daring, powerful technique had been executed, having used the other traps until then as a psychological trick.

The clues that had been serving as a hint for Subaru’s pursuit, was waiting with its mouth wide open as a trap to bury him alive.

He wanted to applaud it for being a measure that was very Rem-like, but—

Subaru: “—The Rem I know wouldn’t end it with this.”

If one set psychological traps, then the best result would be their pursuer falling for it and being forced to stop moving.

However, the Rem he knew was attentive, a hard worker, had a cute face and voice, warmed his chest just by how admirable she was with her actions, and—

Subaru: “Would initiate an attack if she got tired of waiting. —Isn’t that right, Rem?!”

Subaru spun around after he said that, gazing up at the tree with its bark peeled off.

It was just at that time.

“—fh!!”

That Rem gritted her teeth, launching herself at Subaru from a branch of the very tree.

3

Unable to pull away her pursuer from herself, and the traps not even serving to fix him to his spot.

When put under such a situation, what would the Rem that Subaru knew do about it?

Being able to pinpoint the location of her opponent because of the smell, if she also managed to distinguish the identity of the bread crumbs her opponent was relying on, she would use it against them and trap them, trying to eradicate the cause of her escape directly.

And, Subaru’s prediction hit the nail right on the head.

The problem was—

Rem: “—Haaaaahh!”

The difference in their fighting strength, as Subaru was unable to stop Rem’s lunge towards him.

As he cried out, “Gh, whoa!”, he was then blown away by an arm from the falling Rem.

Truthfully, Rem moving around to that extent despite not having the full use of her legs, and his body immediately jolting into action to try and to catch her, were both things that went beyond what he expected.

Rem: “You’re so persistent! So, so persistent!”

Subaru: “Wa… wait, Rem, please listen to…”

Rem: “How insistent…!”

She swung around her arms, one of them hitting Subaru and causing blood to start flowing down his nose. He appealed to her, although he was stained with blood, but Rem wouldn’t listen to him since she was flying into a rage.

Rem was on the forest floor on her hands and feet, glaring at Subaru with her blue eyes.

Rem: “If you gave up on us there and then, I wouldn’t have done anything more than that. And yet, you continue to chase after us… Please stop!”

Subaru: “It really hurts when I get told that in such a simple way…”

Rem: “My nose feels like it’s going to be twisted off! When you come closer, I can immediately notice it. Worst of all, it became stronger compared to the grassland before…”

Holding down on his bleeding nose, Subaru staggered to his feet.

Subaru, who could stand up, and Rem, who was on all fours. The situation seemed like it was in Subaru’s favor, but it was merely an advantage that could be easily flipped over by one thing: physical strength.

To add to that, if Rem started moving swiftly like a Teke Teke using only her arms, Subaru would be knocked down into the gigantic pitfall this time for sure, and it would be the end of him.

He had to clear her misunderstandings while measuring the distance between him and her, little by little.

Subaru: “Rem, please listen to me. It seems like I’m considerably stinky to you…”

Rem: “…Yes, you stink.”

Subaru: “A nostalgic way to put it…! It seems like I stink, and I know you feel like it’s something that’s no good, but I don’t bear any ill will towards you!”

Raising his hands in the air, Subaru showed her that he wasn’t planning on being antagonistic to her.

However, in spite of his claim, the wariness on her face refused to dim. To that extent, the Witch’s miasma was the primary factor in driving the empty Rem into a corner.

No matter where he went, anything related to the Witch really didn’t bring about a decent situation.

Subaru: “There’s the thing with my smell, and I’m aware I gave you a terrible first impression. Even with this, I’ve put up with the existence called myself for eighteen years. So, please let me redo this.”

Rem: “…Redo this?”

Subaru: “I was the one at fault. Even though you were worried and anxious, having forgotten everything, I couldn’t explain a single thing for you. All because of my personal matters, I wasn’t able to listen and be thoughtful of your feelings…”

His eager thoughts and impatient feelings, those were the reasons he couldn’t be considerate towards Rem.

The blame was entirely on those two reasonings—it was easy for Subaru to defend himself like that. However, what meaning was there to a poor, scanty bout of self-justification?

What he needed wasn’t the words to protect himself.

He needed the words to appeal to Rem, to relieve the tension in her stubborn heart.

Subaru: “You’re important to me. I only want to protect you. So, please listen to me. Please don’t reject me. —Please, give me one more chance.”

Rem: “…”

Both of his hands still raised up, Subaru bent over to bow deeply on the spot, pleading to her.

He didn’t know if he was able to be sincere towards her with his whole body and his soul, but he at least put his inner feelings into it. If it would sway Rem’s heart even a tiny bit, if she would give him the opportunity to explain himself—

Rem: “—Is that all you have to say?”

Subaru: “…Eh?”

Rem: “Is that only what you’re offering an explanation to me for?”

Subaru timidly raised his head from the reply he received from her.

The emotion that was thick in her voice was different from what he had hoped for. However, it was also unlike what he expected to happen if things went wrong, and it caused him to be bewildered.

Rem’s voice was adorned by a silent rage, an unbearable amount of fury.

Subaru: “Re, Rem…?”

Rem: “The fact that you’ve chased us around, and the fact that you’re emitting an awfully evil stench is suspicious, of course, and I think it’s terribly strange. But,”

Cutting off her words there, Rem drew her lips tightly.

That was also as if she regarded Subaru, who remained unsure of the answers that lied ahead, as an unpardonable villain from the bottom of her heart, hostility gleaming in her blue eyes.

Rem: “More so than any reason, you can’t wipe away the truth that you tried to abandon such a little girl. How are you telling me to put my trust in a ruthless and despicable person like that?”

Subaru: “—ah,”

Subaru was left speechless from the gaze that condemned the wicked.

The words that were thrusted against him permeated into his brain, and Subaru understood he made the wrong choice in obtaining Rem’s trust with his first move, whether he could gain it or not being completely separate from the Witch’s miasma.

His mean-looking eyes which he inherited from his mother, and the miasma that was forcefully shifted onto him, were not the reasons that damaged Rem’s trust in the real sense.

It wasn’t the things he already had with him, but his own actions that destroyed her belief in him.

Even if Louis were to be a Sin Archbishop, the incarnation of evil. From Rem’s eyes, who knew nothing about the matter, she was a young, weak little girl, and Subaru had overlooked it.

Subaru: “…”

He couldn’t find the answer to what he should say immediately.

Subaru overcame many hardships on countless occasions. Sometimes he lost his life, unable to overcome them, and he had searched around for solutions from a different angle, but the answer for this very moment didn’t lay inside of him.

His apology, his excuse, or the truth. Which one did he need to prioritize?

Apologize for the fact he tried to forsake a child?

Make excuses to gloss it over, saying he had a reason to do so?

Tell her the truth that the “weak little girl” was actually a young monster?

No matter which one he picked, he didn’t feel like he could change the distrusting stare from Rem, who was in front of him.

And that was the result of Subaru’s actions, already set in stone by “Return by Death”.

Rem: “—You’re saying nothing more.”

As Subaru’s gaze wandered around, his cheeks hardened, and no words came out of his mouth, Rem grew tired of waiting for him.

She heaved herself up with tremendous effort, trying to distance herself from him. —It seemed like she didn’t intend to beat him down on the spot, in order to sever the source of her worries for her future.

Perhaps she thought the devastated Subaru wouldn’t chase after her.

Of course, that wasn’t happening. Even if he was brushed off here, he would continue to extend his hand towards her until she took it.

Parting ways—that wasn’t happening. That wasn’t happening, but—

Subaru: “—Re,”

Changing the direction of his body, Subaru tried to call for Rem, who was about to leave the area, to stop.

Firstly, he called her name, not thinking of any other words to continue his sentence, simply trying to call for her.

And then—

Subaru: “…”

As Subaru nearly reached his hand towards the back of Rem, who twisted her body around, a change occurred in his field of view.

It was a tiny flicker of a shadow, beyond the dense trees—and he recognized it.

Subaru: "—Rem!!"

It's coming. Faster than the thought emerged into his mind, Subaru threw himself at Rem's back. Caught off guard by his sudden action, Rem stiffened her petite body.

It was the moment he embraced her small body as if he was wrapping himself around it.

—An arrow that was released from the heavy, powerful bow flew over their heads, and a hulking tree was blasted away, having the center of its trunk pierced through.

Chapter 4:
A Brave Choice

1

Subaru: “Whoa!”

The grip he had on his whip was wrenched away, just as he felt a sharp blow to his right hand.

He immediately tried to resist it, exerting his strength into his hand, but it was no match against the force snatching away his whip. On top of that, he was pulled forwards and fell down, flipped upside down onto the ground with an, “Abeshi!”.

Subaru: “Ouch…”

???: “The only way to improve, is to dedicate yourself to trying your best everyday. It seems like you still have an insufficient amount of training. Very poor.”

Subaru: “I don’t have anything to say to that…”

Subaru flopped down onto the bare ground, grimacing as his lack of skill was harshly pointed out to him. He sat up slowly, his gaze clashing with the intelligent, handsome man.

The man had a sharp look in his eyes that reminded Subaru of reptiles, and he also had deep blue hair, cut and arranged evenly. Just like the impression he gave off, with his butler outfit and the monocle on one of his eyes, he was a formal, proper, and smart professional.

His name was—

???: “—Clind! How could you do such a disrespectful thing to Subaru-sama!”

Clind: “…”

The young man, called Clind, wordlessly turned his gaze to the side. As he did so, the figure of a tall woman, lumbering towards them, jumped into his field of vision.

She was a stylish and beautiful woman with exquisite green eyes, her long, blonde hair swaying from side to side. Clothed in a maid outfit with black as its main color, she passed by Clind and walked towards Subaru, who was still on the ground, and gently held out a white towel to him.

Woman: “Are you alright, Subaru-sama? From what I can see, you fell onto the ground face-first…”

Subaru: “Yeah, I’m fine, Frederica. My clothes got a little mud on them, but that usually happens.”

The beautiful woman—Frederica gave Subaru a worried stare, standing her ground with a, “But…” as he accepted the towel gratefully, using it to wipe his face.

However, Clind was the person to shrug his shoulders out of exasperation at Frederica’s words.

Clind: “Just as Subaru-sama himself said, it’s a normal occurrence during his training. If anything, aren’t you the one who’s embarrassing him by making a big deal out of it? Meddlesome.”

Frederica: “Wha!”

Her face reddening from Clind’s choice of words, Frederica glowered at him, putting her sharp teeth on display.

Caught between the two who had started glaring at each other, Subaru felt like holding his head in his hands, muttering out a, “There they go again…”

—Clind and Frederica.

In butler and maid outfits respectively, both were in the position of servants who worked under the Mathers family. Although Subaru heard they’ve known each other for a long time, they didn’t have a very good relationship.

Usually, both were capable servants who were simultaneously polite and attentive, but when they came into contact with each other like this, arguments would immediately break out with every opportunity they had.

If their arguments consisted of exchanging their opinions on Roswaal's political affairs, a deed that was quite highly advanced for servants, then trivial disputes over something as simple as making way for each other in the hallways also occurred.

In short, they were apparently incompatible with each other, but—

Subaru: "Frederica, I'm happy you're worried for me, but I'm fine, really."

Frederica: "No, I'm not particularly worried about you. It's only that this man's fake expression and composed attitude, as well as his inconsiderate remarks, they are so infuriating…!"

Subaru: "Oh, you weren't worried about me! I'm embarrassed!"

Frederica: "Ah, that isn't…! It's not as if I wasn't worried! Of course, I'm concerned for your well-being, Subaru-sama. Not only me, but Petra as well."

Frederica seemed like she accidentally blurted out her honest thoughts, and Subaru could only give her a wry smile as he scratched his cheek with a finger, hearing the mention of Petra's name from her mouth.

He was causing the women in the mansion, barring Ram, to be worried about him—especially Petra.

Regarding the current situation, what had likely happened was that Frederica had been asked to check up on Subaru on the behalf of Petra, who had her hands full.

Subaru: "But, I was the one who asked him. I was already prepared for it to be this Spartan… No matter what it takes, I need to break out of my shell before he returns to Annerose's place."

Clind: "—You are splendidly determined. It makes me more enthusiastic in tutoring you. Inspired.”

Listening to Subaru’s answer, Clind swung his arm, the ivory-colored whip in his hand bending as it created a sound reminiscent of the air bursting apart.

Using the same weapon, Clind was helping Subaru learn the way of the whip. Because he respected Clind’s technique and position, Subaru referred to him as “Teacher”.

Subaru: “Really, learning by myself would only get me so far, I would have hit a limit if I weren’t mentored by another person. It’s nice if there’s someone who can use a whip near you. Thanks for the help.”

Clind: “I’m honored to be of help. Delighted. However, if it comes to people who are able to use a whip aside from me, there is another. Candidate.”

Subaru: “Eh, someone else can use a whip? It’s not Ram in the sense of handling the whip of words, right?”

Frederica: “Subaru-sama, that idea of yours is… no, I can’t deny it if what you’re saying about Ram.”

A displeased look settled on Frederica’s face as Subaru cracked a joke, picking up his whip from where he dropped it, and carrying it in his hand. Clind looked at their faces, comparing their behavior before closing his monocle-side eye,

Clind: “It’s simple enough. I’m referring to Master. Versatile.”

Subaru: “Well then, I absolutely don’t want to be taught by him!”

While he spoke, Subaru stomped the option that was as good as nothing into the ground, and lashed out his whip.

It flew at top speed, its velocity having the potential to exceed the speed of sound if Subaru was serious about it. The tip of the whip made a deep, hollow sound as it aimed for Clind—actually, not him, but the piece of wood set on top of the tree stump between him and Subaru.

Entangling and capturing the wood positioned atop the round stump with the whip.

It was the assignment given to Subaru by Clind, and it was a high enough hurdle that he wasn't able to overcome even once until today.

It's not exclusively because Subaru was unable to capture the wood with his whip due to his technique lacking experience and skill.

Clind: "Your aim is transparently obvious. Impede."

Subaru: "Guh…!"

With a terrifying amount of precision, Clind's whip repelled the pointed end of the whip Subaru had released.

The requirement of completing the assignment was to overcome this form of obstruction, and pull the piece of wood into his hands with his own whip. This was why exactly Subaru wasn't able to cross the hurdle even a single time.

Clind: "Striking the area you are aiming for, entangling the entity you are aiming to capture, and displaying the results you are aiming for. Instead of relying on a sword or a spear, if you cannot fulfill the reason why you chose the whip… Worthless."

Subaru: "Dah! Deh! Doh! Damn! You're warding me off like it's no big deal! I know, I don't have to be told! This is the only path I have to make use of my crafty mi…ndah?!"

He attempted to draw back the whip that was forced away, but its tip was caught by Clind's once again.

It was too late when Subaru realized it. The next moment, his sense of balance was disoriented, and Subaru was easily pulled down onto the ground by Clind, who wasn't even putting that much strength into his weapon.

Subaru: "Wagh! Sound Pillar!"

Clind: "You fell rather flamboyantly. Breaking your fall is important as well. Caution."

Frederica: "Su, Subaru-sama!"

Subaru fell from the front and collapsed onto the ground yet again, and Frederica hurriedly rushed to his side. This time, he hit the ground face-first, and blood was trickling out of his nose.

She hastily held it down with the towel, and then,

Frederica: "Clind! No matter how you look at it, this is too much!"

Clind: "It's inevitable, considering Subaru-sama's position. Necessary. You shouldn't really get in the way of a man's rise to action as well. Understand."

Frederica: "A man's rise to action…?"

She made a face as if she were saying, I can't believe it, but Clind shook his head at her. And then, with his sharp eyes, he gazed at Subaru who was wiping his nosebleed,

Clind: "Subaru-sama, I think highly of your attitude of asking for guidance. Admirable. As long as you stand by Emilia-sama's side as her knight, you need strength. The strength to protect Emilia-sama and yourself to the very end. Indispensable."

Subaru: "…Yeah, I know. That's why I'm thankful that you're this strict with me."

Although he was snorting and his voice was muffled, Subaru's spirit refused to crack.

Looking at him, Frederica drew her lips tightly against her teeth.

Frederica: "You two gentlemen are as dumb as Garf…"

Subaru: "It would be super helpful if my strength, instead of just my dumbness, was enough to stand side by side with him as well, but it seems like that's not gonna happen, so…"

Holding his nose, with blood spurting out of both of his nostrils, Subaru forcefully stopped his nosebleed.

As Subaru stood up after doing so, Clind looked at him, tucking his chin in and straightening his posture.

Clind: “Facing the front and refusing to stop… Your attitude is truly pleasant. Long-awaited.”

Subaru: “Thanks a lot… If my handling of the whip gets better, then I’ll have more options to choose from. If I get more choices, then the people around me will also have more moves to make, not just me.”

Clind: “Yes. However, please do not place too much confidence in that. I believe there will not be many occasions where you have to fight alone. Support.”

Clind jerked his chin, pointing towards Frederica.

Beginning with her, Subaru had people such as Garfiel and Otto around him, and Beatrice stood the closest to him, more than anything else. If it was a fight in order to protect, then of course, Emilia stood alongside them as well.

That’s why Clind’s statement was correct.

In Subaru’s battles, it wasn’t as if Subaru himself would snatch a hard-earned victory. His battles were brought to fruition by making the most out of everyone else’s abilities.

Subaru: “By the way, what if I accidentally find myself in a situation where there’s only me and no one else?”

Clind: “You ought to run. Full speed.”

Subaru: “…”

Subaru said that, half-intending for it to be a joke, but Clind didn’t smile at it.

It was a situation that was extremely unlikely to happen, but it didn’t mean it was impossible. In a set of circumstances in which he would be chased and driven into a corner, with his back to the wall, Clind's advice went straight to the point.

Clind: "You must run, Subaru-sama. Put every last drop of effort into running away, as fast as your legs could carry you, disgracefully, and with no regard to how you appear in doing so. That is the wisest course of action. The only one."

Subaru: "If that's how you ended your sentence, then it sounds like there's no other decision I could make, instead of it being a better choice."

Clind didn't answer, his expression unchanging at Subaru's words.

There was no need to answer. Was his wordlessness the proof of it being just as Subaru had deduced, after all?

Subaru: "Jeez, my mentor really has no mercy!"

Frederica: "That man has been like that since a long time ago. Being strict with those who show promise and training them… but, he quits and throws that out of the window when he loses interest in doing so. Icily, and cruelly."

Subaru: "Derica-san? Uh, your voice is becoming kinda icy?"

Feeling something lethal in her voice, as if it would slice him upon touching it, Subaru hesitantly questioned her, who turned her face away in a sullen mood, muttering, "Don't ask me!"

Frederica: "I've decided. I will also be rooting for your success with your training. Please embarrass Clind, make him contort that nonchalant face of his, and make him cry."

Subaru: "That's a pretty tough request…!"

Frederica: "Oh, the person who demands and desires for Emilia-sama to become King says that?"

As expected of a capable maid, even her taunts were top notch, although Subaru provoked her into doing so.

Subaru widened his eyes at her words, then nodded with an evil smile, replying, “You’re right.” After that, he assumed a fierce stance with his whip,

Subaru: “It’ll hurt my honor as a man if I can’t achieve it, despite being told all that! Watch me, I’m gonna do it!”

Alongside a courageous shout, Subaru swung his whip, lashing it out with all his might.

It drew a sharp trajectory, the tip whizzing through the air as it aimed straight for the tree stump—

Clind: “Your enthusiasm is admirable, but your skill is poor. Inadequate.”

Subaru: “Guh, gwaaaaaaaahh—!!”

Frederica: “Su, Subaru-sama—!!”

Yet again, Subaru was pulled down and was slammed onto the ground face-first.

2

The hulking tree broke in half overhead, its resulting shockwave buffeting Subaru’s entire body. With his back battered by that, he spat out the rust-tinged blood that had accumulated inside of his mouth.

Subaru: “…”

Rem’s soft, warm body was wrapped inside his arms.

His own hands and feet were still there too, and it looked like he’d managed to avoid the arrow. As soon as he became cognizant of that, this moment was a pass mark.

Rem: “Wh-What are you doing all of a sudden…”

Subaru: “Shut up! Or you’ll end up biting that tongue of yours!”

Rem had been slow in her reaction, due to how sudden things had been; however, Subaru paid no attention to her complaints. So as to pull her body up, having first fallen forward, he then tumbled backwards, rolling around as much as he could while still clutching Rem close to him.

Wrapped inside his arms, he could feel Rem stifling the urge to scream; yet that was interrupted by a far louder sound—Namely, the roar of the broken, hulking tree coming crashing down.

The spot where Subaru and Rem had been lying in just a moment ago was flattened, with the other trees caught in its fall spreading the deforestation around.

As someone quite in tune with nature, that fact made his heart pang quite a bit, however…

Subaru: "…Right now, we're more important!"

Using the dust unsettled by the fallen tree as a diversion, Subaru didn't stop rolling. There was some resistance from Rem, but despite that, he let his adrenaline rush take over and pulled her in towards him with all the strength he could muster.

They kept rolling, and rolling and rolling, until the ground before them suddenly disappeared.

Subaru: "Gwhooaa!"

Rem: "Kyaa?!"

For a moment, it felt like they were floating, however the ground stopped their fall in their tracks straight afterwards.

A large hole full of many a fallen tree and heaps of earth and sand—Namely, it was the pitfall that Rem had constructed to trap Subaru. By taking it upon himself to roll into it, he'd cut off the line of sight away from his opponent.

Nonetheless, it wasn't like he'd paid nothing in return for that.

Subaru: "Gh, gkh… Damn, Oh no you didn't…!"

His left arm had been frantically wrapped around Rem, and some of that arm's fingers, that she had kept a hold on, were broken. His middle finger, his ring finger, and his little finger; all of them, except for his thumb and index finger, were kaput.

Having fallen into the same large hole as Subaru had, Rem crawled away, keeping her distance from Subaru. He was in agony, trying his best to not to look at his fingers, which were pointed in strange directions.

Rem: "What did you expect! Doing that so suddenly… What the hell is going on?!"

Subaru: "…I failed to mention it, but just so you know, there's a dangerous hunter knocking about in this forest. Though, this pretty much eliminated the chance that they were hunting game and missed their target… Dzaah"

As cold sweat beaded down his forehead, Subaru straightened out his three broken fingers. For the time being, he'd fix them in place using a towel, with a branch as a splint.

It was a small mercy that the fingers that he'd broken were the ones on his left hand. Had it been the ones on his right hand, his dominant hand, which handled his whip, then his ability to take action would have dropped down to that of a primary school kid.

Rem: "A dangerous hunter… They're not your ally?"

Subaru: "Would an ally be providing covering fire with this kind of force? And in general, why would they be providing covering fire… Uwoa?!"

A tree exploded in front of his eyes the moment he'd gingerly stuck his head out of the hole to try and get a glimpse of the situation outside.

It seemed like the hunter had started to prioritize clearing up their field of vision first, so that they could aim and shoot at Subaru and Rem. They must have seen that they didn't possess any means to attack from distance.

Subaru: “The theory usually goes that sharpshooters change their positions when their presence becomes exposed…Shit, they’re making light of us. Can’t say anything back to that though.”

Rem: “—. This is the power of a bow and arrow? I can’t believe that. This isn’t normal.”

Subaru: “Mhm, I agree with you! Like for sure you’re gonna end up with a huge airhole in your chest if you get shot by it!”

In fact, last time, he’d ended up being pierced by one of their arrows, and dying like a trapped insect, pinned to a tree. However, there were yet strange points about it. —Last time, Subaru had come to the opposite side of the forest.

Subaru: “Why the fuck did you come here…?”

The pain coursing through from his broken fingers bored through his mind intensely. Subaru gritted his back teeth, almost to the point of cracking them from his anguish, and frantically plunged into thought.

It was difficult to imagine that this hunter and the hunter who killed Subaru were two different people. Both of them had come to attack Subaru, plus, their weapon of choice was the same strongbow. Thus the question remained on whether their attack was an accidental one or not.

Whichever it was, the amount of questions regarding why Subaru was being targeted right now were endless. Subaru and Rem had confronted each other, and while it was true that the former had frozen up at her rejection, he didn’t really think that would mean it would make it easier to aim at him than before.

Furthermore, if they were actively targeting him, then the possibility that they were following him grew larger.

What had happened to them was still rather vague, but what was beyond their grasp was how they’d been hurled away from the Pleiades Watchtower. There was always the chance that, perhaps, they’d flown through the sky like a shooting star and crashed down onto the grassland.

Naturally, if that were the case, even disregarding Rem, there'd be no explanation as to why Subaru's weak body hadn't ended up in smithereens; so it was a reasonable assumption that what happened to them was something else.

Subaru: "They're aiming for the dodgy 'uns who dropped down there, or something…"

Or perhaps this was private property, so they were trying to chase off anyone who trespassed in an extreme manner. In opposition to the accuracy of their bow, should they perhaps take it as the hunter sucking at going easy on others?

Subaru: "In that case, can't I just talk things out with them! Hey! I mean no harm! It's just mere coincidence that we're in this forest, so…"

Rem: "Wait a second! When you say "we", are you counting me and that girl as well? I don't want us to be lumped in with you!"

Subaru: "Now's not the time to be saying that sort of stuf—Dwhaa?!"

A single arrow that punched into the ground came as the reply to Subaru's call for a ceasefire. This magisterial power, enough even to extinguish his quarrel with Rem halfway through, was probably going to make short work of all the obstacles in their field of view soon and turn its bared fangs over to Subaru and Rem in the large hole.

Rem: "It seems like they're not the sort of person you can get through to…"

Subaru: "When you're facing arrows, you've gotta assume there's a chance they could hit you with an arcing shot… If they can hold their position for hours and hours, just like a sniper that means business… No, considering we're talking about a bow and arrow here, then it is indeed different to looking through a scope. So… does it make it impossible to keep that up for such a long time?"

In stuff like movies and manga, you'd often get scenes like the sniper waiting for hours on end while staring at their prey with their sniper rifles. However, with a bow and arrow, it would indeed be a completely different kettle of fish.

Unlike rifles, which only require a trigger to be fired, arrows need to be notched to the bow, before then drawing its string. There were limits even to those who possessed supernatural strength in the different world.

Then, with the enemy hunter aiming at them, it too was…

Subaru: "…A short-term battle"

Predicting that their opponent would make some kind of move soonish, Subaru set himself a time-limit, given that he couldn't afford to think too long here.

They wouldn't be able to avoid a fight so long as their enemy wasn't going to acquiesce to talking things out. And even though they wouldn't be able to avoid one, the aces they had up their sleeve were way too meager.

Subaru: "Just like what my mentor taught me, the only way is to run."

Thankfully, their enemy couldn't catch eye of Subaru and Rem's position thanks to them jumping into this large hole. If they climbed out from the opposite side and ran away while keeping close to the ground, they could perhaps escape into the thicket.

Or maybe…

Subaru: "…"

Rem: "…? What's with you shutting your gob all of a sudden? Weren't you coming up with an escape plan right now?"

Subaru: "…We're really in a huge pickle here, and what's more, it seems like you're finally listening to what I have to say, huh."

Rem: "Ugh."

Rem furrowed her well-shaped eyebrows as she sat down on the ground, a disgruntled look on her face. However, it seemed like she understood that she couldn't afford to argue with Subaru, so long as she didn't come and attack him immediately.

It would save them a lot of time if she could rein in her hostility for the time being, and call a temporary truce.

Subaru: "Listen to me, Rem. I'm going to jump out and attract their attention. While I do that, you're going to climb over the other side of the hole and flee for cover."

Rem: "Wha…?"

Subaru: "Though the power behind their arrows is frightenin' as heck, you're going to be spoilt for choice for somewhere to find cover in the greenery of mother nature. So I'll give it my all to somehow buy you time, that way you can run away."

It was either take Rem with him and run away, or let Rem run away ahead of him.

Subaru thought the option had the biggest chance of success was probably the latter. No matter how much of an expert their enemy was with the bow, they were in a forest chock full of trees. Thus, Subaru had played his cards, taking into consideration the possibility of arrows flying towards them. They probably wouldn't pierce through all of that so easily.

Subaru: "I'll make a run for it as well, after I've bought you enough time. However, I don't want to become separated from you, after you've ran away, so if you can, please leave me some markers. Though it may be hard for you to understand this, in my hometown we have a symbol called an arrow, it gives you a general sense of direction towards…"

Rem: "…Can you please stop spouting out whatever you feel like."

Subaru: "Rem?"

Subaru had briskly told Rem about his plans for her escape, however, she interrupted his explanation and glared at him very sharply.

With his breath knocked out of him by how sharp her expression was, Subaru was perplexed as to what was up with her. And Rem looked even more irritated by his perplexion.

Rem: “You decide everything, absolutely everything, on your own… And after all of that, you’re telling me to run away? You’re telling me, who’s angry with you because you tried to abandon a child?”

She refused Subaru’s proposal for the same reason she had rejected Subaru in the beginning.

It was perfectly reasonable. You could probably say it was an answer born out of being a good human being. However, Subaru hadn’t thought she’d decide that she wouldn’t let him abandon them in this situation.

Subaru: “But… well, I…”

Rem: “I’ll pass on the excuses. There’s no time for that. Still, as for your instructions telling me, and only me, to run away, I refuse them. I can’t leave that child behind in the first place.”

Shifting her gaze away from Subaru, who was unable to hide his surprise, Rem turned her attention to the outside of the hole.

She’d turned her attention to the hulking tree that the first arrow had blown apart—and after that, to another large tree a little bit away from it.

Subaru: “And just when I was thinking she wasn’t here; is she hiding over there? How can she be so quiet despite all of this commotion…”

Rem: “…Taking her along with me was a real pain, so I knocked her out. I don’t think she’ll be waking up for a while.”

Subaru: “You…”

Even now, Louis had become a burden towards Subaru and Rem’s withdrawal. The resentment that had been beginning to sprout regarding that was shattered the moment he heard her typical Rem-like answer.

He could only describe that rather extreme snap decision as being truly like Rem.

Rem: “…I know it wasn’t a good move as well.”

Subaru: “Nah, I reckon it’s a fine move given how things are. —Just between us, you wouldn’t leave her behind and have us running away together, right?”

Rem: “Even though I have no idea who I am, I’d rather bite my tongue and die than do something like that.”

Subaru doubted that she’d really die from something of that degree, but he sure didn’t want Rem to do anything like that, even if she was just testing.

In all honesty, the best choice for Subaru would be to leave Louis behind here and leave with Rem, however Rem herself wasn’t about to let that happen.

Subaru: “God damned me, for showing my benevolent side before we were swallowed by the shadow…”

He’d ended up carrying not just Rem’s body, but Louis’ as well when the Green Room had been swallowed by the shadow. And that had brought forth this situation. Albeit a setting which he couldn’t re-do again anymore, he could say loud and clear that he’d made the wrong choice back there.

Rem: “So what shall you do?”

Subaru: “…I’ll do it. I’ll come and bring her. That tree there, right?”

Rem: “—. Correct. She’s fast asleep inside the hollow of the tree. Do you stand any chance of making it?”

Subaru: “Well, my mentor told me to run away without wasting a moment whenever I’m up against a strong foe.”

He wasn’t talking about gauging the difference in strengths between the two sides, and so on and so forth.

After all, in this world, the majority of Subaru’s opponents were stronger than him. Thus, the optimal way to defend himself was to assume in advance that everyone he met would be better ranking than him.

It was precisely for that reason that he’d prioritize running away. However, in cases where he couldn’t…

Subaru: “I will make use of everything I can. Rem, you probably don’t want to, but please lend me your hand.”

Rem: “—. If it’s for helping her out.”

Rem gazed at the hand offered out to her, but she didn’t take it.

She merely nodded at Subaru, quite begrudgingly, with him having worked out a plan of action.

3

Subaru gave his left arm a strong swing, checking the condition his three broken fingers were in.

They hurt. And so, while feeling this pain, that would not fade no matter what, as if it were digging its talons into his mind, Subaru steeled himself so that it wouldn’t become a hindrance to him running over.

And then…

Subaru: “…Zha!”

Putting some muscle into it, he pushed a small-ish fallen tree from the large hole up to the ground above.

The very next moment, an arrow that had come towards them at insane speeds pierced into the fallen tree that he’d pushed up. The impact wrenched it away from his arms, forcefully buffeting him backwards.

Subaru: “Whoaaaa!!”

Looking at that from the corner of his eyes, Subaru crawled out of the large hole and stepped firmly on the rough ground. There were limits to how quick the hunter could fire off their bow, no matter how confident they were with their archery. Unlike with guns, you have to notch the arrow, draw the bowstring, and then take aim.

This time lag gave Subaru the merest ray of hope for survival…

Rem: “…It’s coming faster!!”

She said that the moment he’d crawled out of the large hole and kicked out his first step.

Time-wise, only two seconds had passed since the first arrow had blown away the fallen tree he’d used as a decoy—Nevertheless, for a skilled hunter, those two seconds were plenty sufficient for them to fire off their next one.

Subaru: “…hk”

The ground behind Subaru exploded straight after he heard Rem’s voice ringing out.

The fact he had tensed up in place and hadn’t gone into a defensive stance at her call proved to be the right course of action. More specifically, his nerves weren’t quite in tune enough to be able to respond to her call; however, that turned out to be alright in the end.

And just like that, arrows came flying towards Subaru, as he ran to his tree, one after the other—Each in the space of less than two seconds.

If any of them had made it to him, he would have been turned into a hedgehog in the blink of an eye.

However…

Rem: “I won’t allow that to happen—!”

The hunter's next attack was interrupted by a clump of dirt which Rem had flung out, along with her valiant cry.

With her back against the slope of the large hole, it had been something thrown by Rem—No, it had been a ferocious attack which you could even call a bombardment, made from a large stone covered in dirt.

Subaru: "Though, it would have been best if she knew how to use her magic…"

When they'd been confirming how much she could fight, Rem had shown her disapproval for using the power of her Oni horn, magic and such. To be more exact though, in truth, she couldn't remember how to use them.

Nevertheless, they couldn't waste time trying to get her to remember those techniques. For that reason, what Subaru had suggested to her instead, was her physical strength, which she still had in her, even if she didn't have her techniques…

Getting in their way via some rather primitive violence, using the physicality intrinsic to the Oni Tribe by birth; an attack borne of that struck at the hunter, who had maintained their position, dismissing Subaru and Rem as weaklings.

Subaru: "You know that saying, a cornered rat will bite the cat! Then get a load of this!!"

Subaru leapt over the shockwave which the arrow had produced right under his feet as he let out a bellow. Meanwhile, in his field of view, a large stone thrown by Rem went flying towards the direction that the hunter had loosed their arrow from.

Subaru: "GRHAAAAAAA—!!"

When face to face with an enemy, Rem didn't know how to go easy on them. And that was Rem's best feature.

She'd gathered those stones just to be safe, yet, they quickly became extremely dangerous weapons from just the act of throwing them from her slender arms.

Subaru: “Well, while Rem’s buying me time, I’mma—!”

While Rem smashed up the sniper fire with her bombardment, leveraging the use of her appropriate weaponry, Subaru made it to the tree in question.

As that raged on, he walked around to the back of the large tree. There the figure of Louis flew into his sight, sleeping in a bed of her own golden hair inside the rotten hollow.

Subaru: “…”

He caught sight of her rosy-red cheeks, as well as her chest gently heaving up and down, confirming that she was alive and well.

And so, as he tried to reach his arms around her body, Subaru felt a strong sense of rejection within himself. Even though he’d tried to act without bringing personal feelings into it, his soul, rather than his mind, rejected Louis.

This was a Sin Archbishop, even if now it was an innocent sleeping face she was showing. She was a traitor that was beyond forgiveness…

Rem: “Stop dawdling please!!”

Subaru: “—hk!”

His indecision was shattered by Rem urging him on.

The moment he heard that, Subaru somehow bit down his sense of rejection and picked Louis up. And then, while having a hold of her light body, he jumped out of the tree’s hollow and started to make his way back to Rem…

Subaru: “…Huh?”

When suddenly, a black shadow blocked his path, having leapt out right in front of his eyes.

The assumption was, that he’d take the same path to get back to the large hole. Subaru hadn’t imagined that something like this would be on his way there; he looked up at the shadow that had so suddenly made its presence known here. —And then, he was lost for words.

???: “—ﾐﾐ!!”

This gargantuan shadow had slipped through the forest, making nary a sound, and was now blocking Subaru’s way. It was a huge snake, probably around ten meters in length. Its entire body was covered in tightly-packed green scales, and its eyes were yellow. Spotting the twisted white horn on their sudden intruder’s forehead, Subaru realized what its identity was.

Subaru: “A witchbeast—!!”

Faced with its imposing appearance ever so near to him, Subaru rued his foolish oversight.

Subaru himself should have taken note of this; of the fact that, as he was right now, he was letting off the Witch’s lingering scent the strongest ever since he was summoned into this different world.

So it was inevitable that Subaru would be attracting witchbeasts to him, just as it had happened in the Augria Sand Dunes, and just as it had happened in so many places up until now.

He should have known that the inside of a dingy forest like this, which had few people going in and out of it, would have been an ideal dwelling for them.

Snake witchbeast: “—ﾐﾐ!!”

The huge snake opened its gaping mouth wide, settling its aim on Subaru.

Its gaping mouth seemed plenty big enough to swallow not just Subaru himself, but Louis as well, whom he was carrying in his arms. Seeing it drawing near to him, Subaru’s perception of time crawled to a halt.

…Oh, this is bad.

Subaru felt like he was feeling these things as someone else entirely.

Seeing the world flickering ever so slowly and languidly was something close to the times where you'd see your life flashing before your eyes, so to speak. In regards to this topic, there were theories along the lines of it being the mind's way of looking for a solution using what has been experienced in life up to this point, as death looms.

But, when it came to Subaru, no matter how much he racked his mind, he couldn't find anything like having narrowly escaped from being gobbled up by a huge snake. If he forced himself, the closest he could find involved the swarm of rabbits; but that was one memory he wished to reject, even when it came to his life flashing before his eyes.

Having wasted a few brief moments on such pointless thoughts, Subaru's shoulders then slumped.

As he cursed his body for having stirred into action to protect Louis so quickly, they were about to be swallowed, head-first, into the huge snake's gaping mouth—

Snake witchbeast: "—))?!"

Subaru: "Whoa?"

Subaru reflexively closed his eyes, when something dripping wet poured down on top of his head. An unpleasant thought ran through this mind, that for sure, it was the type that sprayed its digestive juices out before its meals. However, that was not the case. What caked Subaru's entire body was darkish blood that had been sprayed everywhere.

It was a tremendous amount of blood that the huge snake had spat from its jaws, having had its body pierced by a sharp arrow.

Chapter 5: Being a Man is Tough

1

Subaru: “Wabuh—!”

???: “Kyah! Subaru-sama, I’m sorry!”

Splashing and splattering, Subaru was showered by water that cascaded down from above his head. As he let out a cry of alarm, wondering what the heck was going on, an apology from a high-pitched voice flew towards him.

When Subaru glanced up while shaking his head, he saw the curtains swaying from an opened window, and his gaze mingled with a girl’s—Petra’s, who was looking down at him from above.

It seemed like it was right when Petra threw some water out of the window on the second floor.

Of course, she wouldn’t do anything ill-behaved, such as dumping water onto the garden. She threw the water onto the edge of the flowerbed to make sure no one would be splashed by it.

Subaru: “And yet, unluckily, I was gardening right there…”

Petra: “I-I’m sorry, Subaru-sama! I’ll bring a change of clothes straight away…”

Subaru: “Ahh, you don’t have to do that much. Getting drenched was the only thing that happened, and… it freaking stinks! Getting drenched wasn’t the only thing that happened?!”

Petra: “Because it’s the water I was using to clean the room, and… anyway! I’ll get going right now, wait for me at the watering place!”

Petra said to Subaru, who was astounded by the smell of the dirty water poured all over him. Like that, her adorable face was withdrawn into the other side of the window, and she started running to fetch him extra clothes, her footsteps pattering against the floor.

Subaru smiled wryly at the panicking Petra, deepening due to his own rotten luck, and he headed towards the watering place at the garden of the mansion, just as Petra had told him to do.

Subaru: “Well, I was planning on changing my clothes once I’ve finished gardening, anyway…”

Subaru consoled himself with the fact his plans were only brought forward by a tiny bit.

If Petra was going to bring a change of clothes, then he should wash the dirt off himself first. Before drawing up water from the well, he flung off his shirt with haste—

???: “—Hm, you’re quite daring, getting undressed so suddenly.”

Subaru: “Wait… kyaaaaaa?!”

???: “Woah, to think you would let out a scream comparable to a girl’s… Normally, wouldn’t you think our positions would be reversed?”

Saying that and staring at the screaming Subaru was a pink-haired girl—old woman Ryuzu, who was sitting on a garden rock next to the watering place.

She looked at Subaru, who covered the exposed upper half of his body by hugging his shirt to his chest, her intellectual eyes shimmering in contrast to her awfully young appearance,

Ryuzu: “You don’t have to hide it like that. I’ve gotten used to seeing the naked body of a boy. I used to live with Ga-bo, you know.”

Subaru: “Well, you might be right, but what’s embarrassing is embarrassing, right?”

Ryuzu: “There’s nothing to be embarrassed about. Besides, your physique is not too bad as well, Su-bo. It's quite pleasing to the eye. Pleasing to the eye, indeed."

Subaru: "It's embarrassing, after all! Ryuzu-san, aren't you acting out of character?!"

Ryuzu was characterized by her behavior that didn't match up with her appearance, like her calm and relaxed manner of speech, but she left a strong impression on Subaru with how everything about her, except for her looks, were faithful to the role she was entrusted with.

It was why he was surprised when she poked fun at Subaru, referring to the naked half of his body.

Subaru: "Am I right in guessing this is mostly because you were released from the heavy responsibility of being the leader of the Sanctuary?"

Ryuzu: "I suppose there's that aspect to a considerable degree. Although I went outside of the Sanctuary, I moved onto the land Ros-bo had prepared, and a similar position was handed over to me. So, if I would ask myself if a load was lifted off my shoulders, then…"

Ryuzu said, directing her narrowed eyes behind her—towards the mansion.

Specifically, she wasn't looking at the mansion, but she was looking at the people living inside of it. To be even more specific, she was probably gazing at the siblings consisting of an older sister and younger brother, who she both loved as if they were her own grandchildren.

With the reconciliation between Garfiel and Frederica having been finished, Garfiel was also freed from the cross he had been bearing for ages. Though, Subaru was surprised he turned into a brat that was mischievous beyond his expectations, as a result of being freed from his burdens, Subaru: “Do you feel lonely, living separately from Garfiel and Frederica?”

Ryuzu: “Nn… what got into you all of a sudden?”

Subaru: “Was it too sudden? But, I thought about it. Of course, it would be a great help if they stayed in the mansion together for Emilia-tan’s Royal Selection. But…”

Ryuzu: “It can’t be helped. In order to live in the mansion, there are many problems for me, of course, and also for the other clones… my sisters. I don’t think we can be of use as well.”

Subaru: “…”

Ryuzu answered him with a small laugh, and Subaru closed his mouth as he heard her speak.

I wasn’t talking about being useful or useless, the emotional side of Subaru wanted to shout.

However, the details of this couldn’t be reasoned with anything like a child’s tantrum.

In the current Roswaal Mansion, the people who were permitted to stay were only those that actively took on a role, and could fulfill their responsibilities. During times like these, it was necessary to have severe regulations to that extent.

Subaru: “…Still, Garfiel is fourteen. He’s still a kid.”

Ryuzu: “—. You’re a kind one. Are you worried about Ga-bo?”

Subaru: “Well, yeah… When I myself was fourteen, I was an immature, stupid brat. Even now, the “stupid brat” part hasn’t changed, but I used to be worse. To the point I would be fed up with myself, because I think I wouldn’t even be able to do anything if I got separated from my parents.”

Of course, in direct opposition to the norm in this world, Subaru had experienced a loose and lenient daily life, something peaceful that was as good as being rocked from side to side in a cradle.

Garfiel's was fourteen years old—even if he was around the age of a middle schooler, it didn't apply to this world, and Garfiel was far more mature than when Subaru was his age.

Even so—

Subaru: "What others did for you, could also be done for them as well… is what I think…"

Ryuzu: "Fufu, let me rephrase what I said. Not only are you kind, but you're soft and green, too."

Subaru: "I know a famous passage of writing that says men should not only be strong, but also be kind… huh? Going by this logic, I'm not a man because I'm not strong…? What am I?"

Seeing Subaru unable to defend himself from what he had brought upon himself, the sound of laughter rumbled in Ryuzu's throat. Subaru thought of her reaction as something unexpected, and she wiped the corners of her eyes with a finger, saying, "Sorry, sorry."

Ryuzu: "I understand what you want to say. I'll drop by from time to time to make sure Ga-bo and Frederica won't feel lonely. Is that alright?"

Subaru: "Sorry. It probably seemed like an outsider was pestering you about it."

Ryuzu: "You have nothing to apologize for… It's just, if it's about a very young child, who hadn't reached the age of maturity yet, leaving their parents, there's someone younger than Ga-bo in this mansion, isn't there?"

Subaru: "Are you…"

Right after Subaru made a guess about who Ryuzu was referring to, a set of footsteps approached them. When he and Ryuzu turned their eyes to the direction of the sound, they saw Petra running towards them.

Petra held a pair of extra clothes for Subaru in her hands, calling out, "Subaru-sama~!" as she rushed over to him, seemingly full of energy. However, she stopped immediately before setting foot on the watering place.

Petra: “Wah! Kya! Subaru! Why are you naked?!”

Subaru: “Ah, shoot. I was planning on bathing, but I got too focused in this deep conversation.”

Petra blushed, commenting on Subaru’s half-naked body while covering her face with both her hands. However, she was staring at him from the space between the fingers that hid her face, with Subaru noting it as a common turn of events, something he often saw in mediums such as anime and manga.

Even Petra’s ears were a bright red color as she cried out, “Wah, wah!” rather excitedly.

Subaru: “Look, Ryuzu-san. This is what you call an adolescent girl’s cute reaction.”

Ryuzu: “You’re being fairly greedy, telling me to act like that… It’s no use even if I do that in the first place. I’m an elderly person.”

Subaru: “You don’t really feel like an elderly person, aside from your mature way of speaking…”

Responding to Ryuzu’s easy-going voice, Subaru heaved up a pail of water from the well. He then dumped the ice-cold water onto his head, exclaiming, “Agh! Cold!”

Subaru: “Anyway, that reaction of yours is pretty adult-like for your age, Petra.”

Petra: “Ah, Subaru-sama, you’re still treating me like a child, aren’t you? I’m just saying, but I recently became thirteen years old. A one year difference with Garf-san!”

Subaru: “Even if it had to do with their birthdays, the fact that there’s a one year difference between Petra and Garfiel feels kinda amusing to me…”

There was Garfiel, whose combat strength and appearance didn’t really seem like a fourteen year-old's, yet his personality did. Then there was Petra, who was like a bud that was gradually trying to bloom into a flower, retaining her young and adorable looks.

It was the natural course of things because time flew by and it couldn't be stopped either, but the concept of growth was a precious notion.

Subaru: "I'm, well, eighteen, and Emilia-tan and Beako don't go through any changes in their appearance. In that regard, I feel a great amount of potential from Petra…"

Ryuzu: "Su-bo, Su-bo. Is it alright for a teenager to look at things from a perspective like that?"

Subaru: "Even if you tell me that… oh, thanks for the extra clothes, Petra. They fell out of your hands while you were staring at me, though."

Shaking his head to get the water out of his hair, Subaru picked up the shirt discarded by Petra's feet, and wore it after brushing the specks of soil off it. Petra seemed to have realized she dropped his change of clothes just now, uttering a, "Wah!" as she flushed at her own blunder.

Petra: "Uu~, I'm sorry. I'm sorry about your extra clothes, and the water from before…"

Subaru: "Nah, it's just a cute little mistake. Setting the topic of my clothes aside, I got soaked because I was unlucky. And, because of that, I showed an unseemly side of myself to two maidens."

Ryuzu: "You counted me in as a maiden… Well, well, you're good at flirting with the elderly."

Subaru laughed wryly at Ryuzu, who gave a slow shake of her head, her behavior the same as usual. After that, he gently patted Petra on the head, who was still reflecting upon herself, smiling at her with a, "It's okay."

Subaru: "Everyone makes mistakes once in a while, and it's not like anyone got injured by it. There's no problem, no problem at all."

Petra: “…Yes, I understand. I’ll make sure to write it in today’s entry for my diary.”

Subaru: “You’re writing a diary? That’s great. I’m the type of person that’s good at keeping at it little by little everyday, but my diaries never last no matter what I do.”

He was able to make his daily workouts and jogging into a habit for every single day, but strangely enough, his diaries didn’t last long. He thought it was possibly because the contents of what he wrote everyday weren’t consistent.

Adding to that, his days of truancy were monotonous and boring, so he had nothing to write back then.

Subaru: “Though, my Beako Lovely Diary is still ongoing…”

Petra: “Are you going to show it to Beatrice-chan later?”

Subaru: “Yeah, I want to show off how much I’m spoiling her with tenderness on a daily basis to her.”

Not only that, but Beatrice’s reactions were dramatic and adorable. If it meant being affectionate towards Beako, then Subaru would gladly challenge himself to overcome his own weakness of not being able to continue writing his diaries.

Anyhow—

Petra: “So, what were you two talking about?”

Subaru: “Ahh, just some idle talk? Something like, “Aren’t you lonely to be separated from Garfiel?” and stuff like that… but, you’re also far away from your dad and mom. You don’t get homesick or anything?”

Petra: ““Homesick”… are you asking me if I miss my home?”

Placing a finger to her lips, Petra furrowed her brow as she decoded and made sense of Subaru’s words. She looked to be in deep thought, mumbling, “Hmmm, let me think…” before, Petra: “Sometimes, I do feel lonely. But it’s what I’ve decided I want to do, and I’m doing it right now. I can’t be whining.”

Subaru: “Woah, so mature… did you hear, Ryuzu-san?”

Ryuzu: “I heard it, I heard it. Gee, you look as if you’re proud of her, eh?”

Ryuzu nodded at Subaru, who turned around, genuinely proud of Petra’s confident answer.

It was just as Petra had said.

He was also in the middle of trying to accomplish what he resolved to do. If so, instead of making feeble complaints, he needed to raise his head and smile, even if he were to be in agony and in pain.

Petra: “Subaru-sama, was my answer alright?”

Subaru: “—. Yeah, of course. As expected of Petra! It’s the answer I wanted!”

Petra: “Kya!”

In response to the question from the worried-looking Petra, Subaru lifted up her body in his arms.

It was the same feeling as when he did it to Beako, but Petra was heavier compared to her—it was because she was undergoing growth.

Subaru: “You’re not at the age where I can carry you anymore, huh…”

Petra: “That’s obvious! …But, if you’re gonna have such a saddened face, I guess I can keep you company.”

Subaru: “Oh, thanks!”

Although she turned her face away from him, she was allowing him to be selfish. Taking advantage of Petra’s kindness, Subaru spent some more time lamenting over parting ways with her childhood.

Gazing at the two of them was,

Ryuzu: “Well, well, I’m clueless about which one is the child.”

Ryuzu, who murmured that out with her young visage, in the manner of an elderly person.

2

—Splashing and splattering, Subaru was showered by blackish blood from his head, and the shifting scenes of his life flashing before his eyes ended abruptly.

The one thing in common between the scene and reality was liquid being poured over his head, but if he told Petra that memory fragment involving her was remembered at this very moment, he imagined the situation rolling out into her being furious with him over it.

However, in order to be chastised like that, Subaru couldn’t afford to stop in his tracks here.

Subaru: “Why did the hunter’s arrow hit the snake…?!”

What obstructed his grand escapade, with Louis reluctantly held in his arms, was the huge snake that was hiding itself inside of the forest.

Right as its gaping jaws were about to swallow Subaru whole, a powerful obstruction was wedged itself between the two, and he was fortunate to have an extremely narrow escape from death.

Subaru: “…”

What perforated the snake’s body, thick as three Subarus bunched up together, was an arrow fired by the hunter, who had been tormenting him and Rem, giving them a hard time until this moment.

He thought of the likelihood that the hunter had unexpectedly missed their mark, but since the arrow had gone through the very center of the snake, he felt like the possibility of a misfire was terribly low.

Which meant—

Subaru: “They saved me…?!”

Although he couldn’t understand it at all, no other answer came to his mind.

He was sure the hunter didn’t act on a whim, and it was also difficult to imagine the situation suddenly unraveling into a shounen manga-like development, such as, “I’ll be the one who’ll kill you!”.

However, if Subaru only considered what had occurred, then he was rescued by the hunter. And adding to that, the effect of the single strike wasn’t limited to halting the huge snake’s impending fangs during this moment.

Snake witchbeast: “—϶϶!!”

Its body pierced through by the arrow, the bleeding snake let out a shriek that made the sky tremble, sounding like it two things were grated against one another to produce an ear-splitting screech.

Like that, instead of chasing after Subaru, who was trying to get away from it, the snake turned in the direction the arrow came flying from—setting its sights on the bowman that plowed through its body, beginning to slither through the forest, uncaring of how many plants it damaged along its way.

It was overwhelming to see a ten-meter long snake crawling on the forest floor, drawing closer to its prey.

Without giving off the feeling of being sluggish in spite of its gigantic body, the sight of it moving on the ground as if gliding across the surface, felt like the ground that supported the forest itself was in motion.

The hunter counterattacked the snake’s approach with an arrow, but it didn’t connect.

Snake witchbeast: “—))!!”

Baring its fangs, saliva dripping from them, the huge snake aimed for the hunter as it pounced onto them.

Jumping out of the way, the hunter avoided it, firing an arrow at point-blank range, going in for the kill.

A violent battle between man and witchbeast, in an attempt to kill each other, was unfolding beyond the trees.

In midst of the sounds of crashes and blasts being scattered all over the place, courtesy of the ongoing fight where both the hunter and snake weren’t budging an inch, Subaru dashed back to the large hole Rem was at, keeping Louis held firmly in his arms.

And then—

Subaru: “Rem, give me your hand! We’re using the opportunity to run!”

Rem: “—hk, is the girl safe?”

Subaru: “Yeah, she’s sound asleep to the point it’s getting on my nerves! Here, hurry up!”

He reached a hand out to Rem, who was leaning against the wall inside of the large hole. However, Rem glanced at his hand, before shaking her head with a “No.” and set her hands on the edge of the hole by herself.

It was a gesture out of stubbornness, saying she wouldn’t take the hand Subaru had extended to her. If that was the case, then that was fine. Subaru withdrew his hand, pulling his whip out instead and using it to tie Louis to his back.

If Subaru threw her out, then conflict would arise between him and Rem once again. He wanted to avoid such a thing.

Subaru: “In addition to that—!”

Rem: “Wai…”

After he fixed Louis's body to his back tightly, checking to see if he wouldn't drop her, Subaru forcefully scooped Rem, who crawled out of the large hole, into his arms.

With it resulting in her being princess carried, Rem hardened her expression from Subaru's unanticipated move.

However—

Subaru: "Think! Me or the hunter or the snake, which one is more preferable right now?!"

Rem: "…If I could communicate with it, then it's the snake."

Subaru: "You can't, so please bear with me, the runner-up! Let's go!"

Subaru turned his eyes away from Rem, who was unable to prevent her inner turmoil from showing up on her face, although he believed their priorities were rather obvious. Glancing at the continuous battle between the hunter and the snake from the corner of his eye, Subaru broke away from the battlefield, running with all his might.

Whether the victor was the hunter or the huge snake, Subaru expected them to start chasing after him and Rem as soon as the fight was over. He didn't know when exactly would it end, or if it would be settled sooner or later, but he wanted to keep a distance from them to the best of his ability.

Rem: "—What are you going to do?"

Subaru: "Both of them are really accustomed to the forest, compared to us…! We need a way to throw them off their pursuit, but it's hopeless to escape from the snake because of my body odor. So…"

He wanted to pray for the hunter to be victorious.

If the hunter was a pursuer with no connection to the Witch's miasma that surrounded him, then the methods to throw them off their tracks would be worth putting into practice.

Subaru: “Choosing the path where I won’t leave too many footprints, erasing the tracks as much as possible, and after that is…”

Rem: “Leaving traces in a separate direction, isn’t that right?”

Rem said as she snapped off a twig that nearly made contact with her body, tossing it far away and letting it scratch the trees that were positioned at a different direction from their escape route.

If the tracks were distributed into two places, one being the broken twig, and the other being the mark on the tree, would their opponent be puzzled by those?

Subaru: “…”

As Subaru continued to run with Rem in his arms, a deep emotion, unsuitable for the occasion, somewhat feeling like nostalgia, crossed his mind. Long ago, he had the experience of racing through the forest while being chased by witchbeasts, similar to the current situation.

However, the person he had been carrying wasn’t Rem, but it was Ram.

Subaru: “Nee-sama has also forgotten, so it’s only me… ha… who, remembers it, but…”

Rem: “You’re running out of breath. They will catch up if this goes on.”

Subaru: “I know! Damn, both of you sisters… ha… really have no shred of mercy…!”

The person in his arms wasn’t Ram, but the harshness of her words was practically identical to her sister.

A strong emotion coursed through him upon recognizing their similarities, and it gave an encouraging push to his back. Subaru urged himself to keep running despite his breathlessness, entrusting the role of monitoring whatever was happening behind them to Rem, and desperately rushed across the forest.

Anyhow, Subaru had been running around all day today.

He was exhausted, worn out physically and mentally, and he wanted to sprawl across the ground if possible. Actually, he was going to do that once he lost his pursuer. He would sleep for eight hours straight.

Subaru: “So, please put up with it until I can do that, dear body—!!”

Rem: “—hk, wait!”

Subaru: “Owowowow?! What the heck was that for?!”

While Subaru was spurring himself to action by shouting at his body to move, Rem, who was carried in his arms, gave his ear a sharp tug. As he frowned from the pain, Rem pointed towards a direction straying off the path they were on,

Rem: “I can hear the sound of water. A flowing… river? Perhaps you could erase your tracks with it? Also, you were saying you needed water as well.”

Subaru: “You were actually listening to me talking about my survival knowledge… I’m touched, but that can wait. You’re right, it’d be great if there’s a river! If we crossed the river for the time being, they surely can’t chase after us without any difficulty…!”

Unfortunately, the sound of running water wasn’t audible to Subaru, due to the bothersome noise caused by his rapid heartbeat and breathing, but he had no reason to doubt Rem’s hearing at this place, during this time.

Obeying Rem, who pointed her finger towards the direction, saying “That way.”, Subaru changed courses, dashing through the forest while he searched for the river.

And then, as he passed by the clump of trees and leapt over the patches of grass, just as the road opened up into—

Subaru: “—A river! …B~u~t~?”

The moment the forest cleared up and his field of view was broadened, Subaru was finally able to hear the sound of running water at a tremendous volume—yes, a tremendous volume.

Of course a sound like that would reach his ears, since its source was a great river. As far as Subaru and Rem could see, gazing down at it, the water was gushing down a cliff nearly ten meters tall.

Rem: “No matter how you look at it, this is…”

Inside of his arms, Rem stifled a gasp, gazing at the humongous river below them.

Taking the raging momentum of the water and the height of the cliff into account, it was natural for her to be dismayed at the sight. She was probably also reproaching herself for leading them here, all because she relied on her instincts.

However, there was no time to blame her for what she was already regretting, nor was there time to do the opposite and comfort her.

Subaru: “—Shit, is the fight over?!”

From the forest behind him, a distant, ferocious roar thundered into the sky.

It sounded like the cry of the huge snake, brimming with some sort of emotion. Whether it was a sign of victory or a sign of defeat, the one who survived would come after Subaru and Rem.

Subaru: “Before that happens, we gotta…”

Rem: “—Leave me.”

As Subaru thought about the need to depart from the area, Rem, still held close to his chest area, declared that.

Hearing her strained voice, Subaru blew out a short breath, and,

Subaru: “Wh…at?”

Rem: “Leave me. It’s my fault I made you take an unnecessary detour. A single moment can’t be lost. I will try to tie down the enemy in one way or another, so…”

Subaru: “D-Don’t be ridiculous! Leaving you is something I can’t…”

Rem: “Then, what the hell are you going to do?! How can you, who brought a child and a woman who can’t move her legs, out of breath and your knees shaking, do anything more than this?!”

Subaru: “…”

Rem snapped at him in close proximity, her face flushing with anger. It wasn’t as if Subaru was overwhelmed by the intensity of her words, but he was unable to make an immediate retort.

Subaru wasn’t smart enough to instantly propose an alternative plan upon being asked.

However, because he wasn’t smart, he could come up with an answer that didn’t require it.

Subaru: “—No, that wouldn’t do. I won’t leave you here.”

Rem: “—fh, that stubbornness of yours…”

Subaru: “Which one of us is being more stubborn, huh?! I understand you feel responsible for it! But, you know, you’re demonstrating your sense of responsibility at the wrong place in the wrong time! I can’t just leave you behind!”

Rem: “Wha…”

Subaru: “It’s meaningless if you aren’t there with me! If you’re going to die, it’s better if I died instead. What can I do to make you understand it?!”

Subaru spoke his mind earnestly, trying to withdraw Rem’s idea from the table.

His words came from his heart. Of course, Subaru didn’t want to die as well. Even if “Return by Death” granted him an opportunity, he didn’t want to die. That’s why it was only about being stuck in a dilemma, seeking out the best option between the worst choice and the most unwanted choice.

Even so—

Subaru: “I’ll pick the method that won’t get either of us killed.”

Rem: “…What are you going to do about that girl on your back?”

Subaru: “I would like to use her as bait if I were allowed to, but it’s going to be a problem getting complaints directed at me for doing so. So, for now, I’ll be on the run while also bringing her with me.”

Anyway, it was getting under his skin with how Louis was always getting caught in the problems between him and Rem.

However, if he threw Louis out right now, his relationship with Rem would be damaged beyond repair. That choice was off the table. That’s why, no matter how loathsome she was, Subaru couldn’t abandon her.

Rem: “…”

Listening to Subaru’s words that came from his resolute will, Rem widened her eyes, falling silent.

Even now, Subaru could catch a glimpse of Rem’s inner conflict, unable to comprehend how she should judge him, who was engulfed in a wicked scent that she couldn’t bear to take in.

Keeping her uncertain expression in the corner of his eye, Subaru surveyed his surroundings, searching for an escape route.

However, a path leading to their survival wasn’t something that could be found so conveniently. Subaru could see that the situation provided enough of a reason for Rem to start telling him to use her as a decoy.

If so, their remaining option was—

Subaru: “—To fly.”

Rem: “Wha… Wa-Wait! That’s what you call being reckless! Do you understand the situation we're in?!"

Subaru: "There's me, who's exhausted from the weight strapped against my back, who's carrying Rem who can't move her legs, who has three of my fingers broken, and who's ribcage is in a state that's a bit suspicious…"

Rem: "About your fingers… Anyway! It's absurd to try something like that in your condition! From this height… the moment you jump in, you're only going to fall unconscious and drown!"

Pointing at the gigantic river below them, Rem stated her realistic disagreements to Subaru's plan.

The height was ten meters, and they were in a position where the injured person had to look after two people who couldn't even move around properly. If they had to somehow reach the opposite bank while braving through the violent waters, it was natural to think of it as a suicidal act.

Subaru: "But, it's not suicide. Even if it was, when we die, we'll die together."

Rem: "Absolutely not!"

Subaru: "Yeow!"

Rem gave him a splendid slap across his smile that showed his gleaming teeth. His neck twisted to the side from the power put into the blow, and while he uttered a, "Ow ow," the cheek where he had gotten slapped reddening in color, and,

Subaru: "I got it. Since you're saying that, I won't die."

Rem: "…"

Subaru: "I'm the one who'll grant your wish. —Because, I'm your hero."

Hearing his words, Rem stared at him, wide-eyed.

It wasn't because her memories had unconsciously throbbed, but it was out of surprise at the fact that Subaru had shamelessly repeated the same, untrustworthy declaration he had made right after she awakened, without learning from the disaster it resulted in.

But, that was alright.

He didn't necessarily want to make Rem listen to what he said just now. —All he wanted to do was to cast a spell on the man reflected in Rem's light blue eyes, who concealed his patheticness behind a bluff.

Subaru: "Hold on tight."

Subaru exhaled as he said that, sensing danger drawing near them.

Rem was attempting to resist even as of now, but Subaru had already pushed off against the ground with his feet, while he was carefully selecting the words to get her to stop. Bracing herself for the fall, Rem grabbed onto Subaru's clothes firmly with her hand.

And then—

Rem: "—I won't forgive you if you die!"

"Ahh, I can't die if you say so," Subaru laughed wryly as he gave a strong kick against the cliff.

3

A column of water rose into the air from the impact, his body swallowed by a vicious force, and he spun around, round and round.

Because he managed to plunge into the water feet-first, he kept the damage he received from the fall to a minimum.

However, its power was enough to cause him to receive minimal damage, and for Subaru, whose health bar was already in the red zone, he couldn't erase the impression that he had clenched his teeth and rode it out with his meager amount of willpower.

Although, there was no need to erase it.

Subaru: “Gah, bh,”

Without needing to wipe away such an impression, Subaru’s whole body was soaking wet. He was tossed about by the rushing water’s momentum, as if he was a towel being stirred inside of a washing machine.

He wanted to somehow rise up to the surface of the water, and breathe. Yet, he did not have the freedom to do so. Even if he wanted to flail his limbs around in an attempt to float, he couldn’t do that because he was carrying what was dear to him in his arms.

Subaru: “…”

He was being squeezed and crumpled up by the water, but he felt the targets of his affection and hatred in his arms and on his back respectively. Neither the whip fastened to himself, nor his arms that strongly embraced the girl, were coming apart.

Subaru: “Gabh… gabh…”

Due to the impact from diving into the water, most of the air he had breathed in before jumping had escaped from his lungs.

He wasn’t going to swim, but he needed both stamina and oxygen to retain his sanity. Since both of them were on the verge of depletion, he couldn’t stay leisurely and take things easy.

Subaru: “Gabh, gabh…”

Water flowed into his mouth from his nose, and he felt like it was also spilling into his eyes and ears as well.

His floundering feet paddled the water meaninglessly, and he also felt as if he was powerless to do anything as he was being transported into the stomach of a giant creature’s esophagus—which could be said to be the humongous river. Once he arrived “there”, it would not be possible to undo it.

Before he made it there, he needed to do something.

Subaru: “Gabh… gabh…”

When he desperately fumbled around in the water, many unnecessary thoughts wriggled around in his head.

Just like how he remembered Petra and Ryuzu when he was showered with blood, just like how he remembered carrying Ram while he ran around the forest, many things crossed his mind.

Are Emilia, Beatrice, Ram, and Meili safe? What are Julius, Anastasia, and Echidna doing? Everyone would feel at ease if Patrasche was there. If Patrasche was here, she would've rescued him. Saving and getting saved. He had repeated that cycle many times, and Rem was supposed to be the person he had repeated it with the most, but she broke his fingers. He didn't think of it until now, but he did a good job in not crying out, even though it really hurt. Well done. He didn't want to do anything dumb in front of Rem. In front of Emilia, in front of Beatrice, and in front of Petra and Garfiel as well. Otto, Clind, and Frederica knew how pathetic he was, so it didn't matter with them. Things would take a wrong turn into something frightening if Roswaal knew about it, so he needed to continue hiding it somehow. He needed to return to Pristella quickly, help the people who were in dire need of it, the Royal Selection, tomorrow, everyone—

Subaru: "Gabuh… gabh…"

Every, one—

4

Subaru: "—Gahgk,"

Reaching his hand out with all his might, Subaru pulled himself close to the branch he managed to grab onto. He took a hold of it with his left hand, and excruciating pain shot through his three crippled fingers, but he wasn't bothered by it.

His whole body was chilled to the bone, and his senses were distant and dull. There was a possibility that instead of three fingers, every finger on his left hand was broken, but he had little to no interest in that matter.

Subaru: “Oergh, bhleh,”

He broke out into a coughing fit, vomiting large amounts of the water that had filled his stomach.

While doing so, he was able to draw the heaviness in his right arm closer to himself, making it so her face appeared above the surface of the water. Staring at her unconscious face from the side, he rushed to crawl up the bank, relying on the branch.

Subaru: “Gaghk, urgh,”

On the bank he finally made it to, he left it to his nausea to make him spew out an enormous volume of water. And then, fighting the sensation of having water left inside his body still, he laid the girl he dragged out of the water onto the ground.

Subaru: “…”

Bringing his ear near her mouth, he checked her breathing. There was no reaction. He bit his lip, pushing against her chest area with force, carrying out CPR on her.

However, she didn’t come back to life. Right as he bent over, his face coming near her as he wondered if he should perform artificial respiration, she threw up some water along with a small cough. Tilting her face to the side, Subaru let her expel the water from her body.

Subaru: “Hah, ha…”

Enduring the fatigue that spread across his entire body, he unfastened the whip he tied against himself, lowering the weight on his back. Perhaps the fact that she was unconscious from the beginning proved to be fortunate, as the lowered weight was letting out weak breaths.

That meant… everyone was… safe—

Subaru: “S… a… fe…”

His head swayed to the side, in midst of his dizziness, and he collapsed on the spot.

He thought he had to somehow leave the bank and at least hide in the thickets and bushes, but his body wasn't listening to him at all. His stamina had been completely emptied.

Unable to move a single finger, his consciousness gradually fell deep into the darkness.

As if he had been trapped in an ant lion's pit, descending into the dark, obscure world, forever and ever.

What he wished for before he passed out, was for neither the hunter nor the snake, but for someone else to—

Subaru: "Save… Rem…"

There was only one wish, for someone to at least save Rem, even if it was just her.

5

—.

—.

—.

Subaru: "—ah,"

Slowly, his consciousness was pulled out of the depths of the cold, bitter darkness.

Silently, he remembered he had forgotten how to breathe, then he gulped and ingested air into his empty body. More, more. He desired more oxygen as if he had been drowning, opening his mouth wide—

???: "—Shut it with your wheezing and panting, you."

Subaru: "Mrgh,"

Something was forcefully thrusted into his open jaws, and he was bathed in verbal abuse.

He widened his eyes, unable to grasp the situation, but he wasn't able to see anything. It seemed like something had been wrapped around his face, covering his eyes. However, he knew some wild fellow had shoved something into his mouth.

The taste of soil and earth, and a large, solid texture—he could immediately guess that it was a shoe.

Someone was digging the tip of his shoe into Subaru's mouth.

Subaru: "Oergh! Bweh! Wha, what… guweh!"

???: "Why the hell are you defying me? Don't you understand the position you're in?"

Subaru: "Ghurgh, gargh,"

Subaru was struck in his solar plexus with a good, hard kick delivered by the tip of the man's shoe, after Subaru had spat it out without thinking. As his breath caught in his throat from the impact, followed by a bout of coughing, the wild fellow spat on him.

While the man was doing that, Subaru's mind was jumbled up in a great deal of confusion.

He couldn't see and he was utterly befuddled, yet violence had been inflicted onto him.

Adding to that, even if he tried to rub his aching chest, he couldn't do that because his arms were tied behind his back. His legs were bound as well, so it was impossible to stand up and escape.

Subaru: "Wh-Wha… what's…"

???: "Aah? How long are you gonna be fooling ar…"

????: "—Hey, hey, chill out! He's completely clueless! It can't be helped! Rather than that, here! Let's take off his blindfold!"

???: “Tch.”

Two men seemed to be having an argument in front of Subaru, who was curled up on the ground with saliva spilling out of his mouth. The man that arrived later had persuaded the violent man, and Subaru sensed that the rough, boorish presence had distanced himself from the area.

After that, the voice of the composed man reached his ears with a, “Well,”

????: “Sorry that was done to you right after you woke up. I think you’re probably feeling muddled and all, but I’ll just take off your blindfold, okay? Though, I can’t remove the rope around your hands and feet, so you gotta bear with it.”

Subaru: “…”

As Subaru remained silent, the man gently placed his hands on his head, unfastening the blindfold that was tightly wrapped around his head. He felt the air against his skin, along with a tiny prick of pain, and waited for his vision to return as he took in a deep breath, withstanding the throbbing ache in his chest.

And then—

Subaru: “—Where… the hell is this.”

In his newly-recovered field of view, the clearing was dotted with many tents and campfires. Along with those, there were men equipped with swords and armor, giving off a fierce feeling, and restlessly going to and fro around the area.

Rendered completely speechless, Subaru thought of the most appropriate picture that would be representing the sight at hand in his mind—

Subaru: “…I’ve seen something like this in a long-running TV series.”

The reason he thought of it wasn’t because he had encountered a gigantic river right before all of this, but what crossed his mind was a scene from one of those TV series—the camp of a military unit, busied by preparations before the official battle began.

It was as if the sight in front of him was a replica of—no, it wasn't.

????: "We found you right as we went out to fetch some water, yeah. Sorry, but you've been captured. You're our prisoner."

Was the person who walked in front of him the man that took off his blindfold?

Putting a hand to his hip, he spoke to Subaru with a genuine-looking, troubled expression.

—Natsuki Subaru had been taken prisoner.

Chapter 6:
The Land Faraway in the South

1

???: “Hey, what’s the worst thing that’s happened to you as a traveling merchant?”

???: “And there it is. Yet another unpleasant question…”

In his room, Otto was staring at documents, when Subaru presented this question, causing him to frown.

Wrinkles were already present in-between his brows, but thanks to the question they leveled up to one hundred.

Subaru: “You see, Garfiel and I were having a little chat about one-man journeys. I guess it’s a bit different in your case, but you were a traveling merchant, so you’re familiar with that sort of thing, right?”

Otto: “I would not say you are wrong, but I had Frufoo with me, at the very least. Thanks to my Divine Protection, I always had someone I could talk to, so it did not really feel like I was traveling alone.”

As he spoke, Otto rubbed his eyes and placed the documents on the desk. Then, in front of the desk where the mountain of papers rested, he directed his gaze towards the two guests who sat on the sofa with a Shatranj board spread between them—Subaru and Garfiel.

Although it was Subaru who had the upper hand in this game, each move that he made kept alternately securing or endangering his position.

Otto: “…Garfiel, move the merchant two squares forward.”

Subaru: “Hey! Otto, you bastard!”

Garfiel: “Hm? Ooooh! So that’s it! Ya really bailed me outta this one, Otto-bro!”

With just a quick glance, Otto discerned the most advantageous move to make, receiving two different reactions from Subaru and Garfiel respectively. Ignoring how Subaru struggled in the situation that he was instantly put into, “Still,” Otto muttered,

Otto: “Garfiel, are you interested in traveling alone?”

Garfiel: “If I’m interested, ya say? ‘Course I am. But ya kno’, I spent a whole lotta time stuck in tha ‘Sanctuary’, so I neve’ got to travel or anythin’.”

Otto: “Ah, I see. You really are interested, are you not? Well, with your self-sufficiency and self-defense skills as high as they are, I think you would do just fine. Unlike Natsuki-san.”

Subaru: “Hey hey, don’t you underestimate me like that. My mentor’s been praising my progress a lot lately, just so you know.”

Otto: “It seems like he decided to use praise to motivate you. It is hard to be sure if praise or scolding works better with you, after all.”

Otto’s comments were so soft towards Garfiel, yet so hard towards Subaru.

However, considering how strict Garfiel was with himself, and how prone Subaru was to get carried away, it was probably the correct approach.

But that aside—

Subaru: “Anyway, what’s that worst moment you’ve had as a traveling merchant?”

Otto: “Why are you so insistent on knowing that?”

Garfiel: “Tha Captain may just be askin’ outta curiosity, but I’m seriously interested here, Otto-bro. Knowin’ ya’re such a tough guy, I imagine ya’d be fine unless ya encountered a huge dragon or somethin'."

Otto: "Garfiel, don't you think your expectations of me are way too high?!"

It would take an emergency of such grandiosity to truly place Otto in a tight spot.

Garfiel's strong trust in Otto led him to harbor such conception, which was, albeit slightly exaggerated, not all that different from Subaru's assessment of Otto's crisis response capabilities.

If one were to ask the members of the faction who the most dangerous person was, it was undoubted that they all would unanimously reply saying Otto's name.

Subaru: "Well, I can't really see something like that happening anyway…"

Otto: "What are you grumbling about? …I have been in several risky situations during my life indeed, but I would say the worst one was that one time I was held captive by a certain dangerous group."

Garfiel: "Whatcha mean, dangerous guys? Were ya attacked by bandits or somethin'?"

Otto: "—. Well, something similar to that. They separated me from Frufoo and my carriage, and then left me wrapped up in a mat, without any weapons or tools at hand; and so, I prepared myself to die."

Otto murmured, a distant look on his eyes. As they listened, Subaru and Garfiel turned to look at each other.

The fear that he had experienced was surely no little matter. Otto's words carried a weight that was not typical of him.

Garfiel: "A dead end, huh. Guess that's what it's like ta be 'forsaken on the Decou Plateau,' ain't it."

Otto: "It really was like that. If it were not for some kind people that happened to come across me by chance, I would have lost my life that day. —And that, I will never forget.”

Subaru: “I see. Everyone’s got their own story, after all.”

Arms crossed, Subaru nodded as he reflected on Otto’s adversities.

Tied by bandits, stripped of his belongings, his very right to live or die completely subject to somebody else’s whim: such circumstances were not something that Subaru faced often, yet also not something that he was a stranger to.

Subaru: “Still, it’s thanks to their help that our Otto is here with us now. Those guys who found you deserve a proper thanks, don’t you think?”

Otto: “—. Yes, you are right.”

Subaru: “—? What’s with the lukewarm reply? You’re making me uneasy, man.”

Subaru scowled at Otto’s unexpected reaction. Despite Subaru’s response, Otto stayed oddly calm and composed, his posture like that of a deity.

While Subaru felt shivers going down his spine, Garfiel clenched his fist with a “But hey,” Garfiel: “Now I know all the stuff you’ve gone thru, Otto-bro. But rest assured. Ya’d better believe I won’t be lettin’ that stuff happen ta ya ever again, a’ight?”

Otto: “Oh, really? Well, I do know I can depend on you, Garfiel. Natsuki-san, on the other hand…”

Subaru: “You can’t just compare me with Garfiel in terms of combat strength! You’ll make me feel like all the hard work I’ve done so far isn’t worth a damn!”

Subaru moved his empty hand as if he brandished a whip with it. With a gesture of his own, Garfiel pretended to crush it with his fangs, making his opponent aware of his powerlessness.

“Ugh…!” Subaru groaned as Garfiel’s victory made him openly display joy; while witnessing the two, a despondent “Ha” escaped Otto’s mouth,

Otto: “Garfiel, move the merchant diagonally to the right. Let us show him what we merchants are made of.”

Subaru: “Argh! D-Damn it, Otto, you jerk!”

Garfiel: “Hm? Ooooh! Look, it’s a checkmate! Captain, what a weaklin’ y’are!!”

Subaru: “You didn’t do it alone, though!!”

Surrounding the Shatranj board, Subaru cried out along with his cornered army. From the moment the alliance between Garfiel and Otto was formed, there was only one thing that he would be given the chance to do—to retreat as he bawled like the sore loser he was.

2

—A prisoner of war.

As soon as he heard those words, what coursed through Subaru’s mind was the chatter of nights like those. He’d had his weapons and tools taken away from him, along with his freedom, held captive by someone he did not know. It was pretty much like Otto had said, this was a natural situation to resign yourself to “death”.

Subaru: “…”

The place where Subaru was being held captive looked quite like encampments raised for war that he’d seen in stuff like a Taiga Drama.

He could see many a tent lined up, along with rows of armor and weapons waiting to be equipped. Men with a heavy atmosphere about them went by, and it seemed like their forces contained both humans and demi-humans.

Subaru was sitting atop some solid ground, with nothing but a barebones curtain fixed at that place to ward off the wind. His hands were tied behind his back, and his feet were restrained as well, making him unable to move.

However, to Subaru, what mattered a lot more was…

Subaru: “Rem… There should have been a girl with me. What happened to her?”

???: “Oh, so we tell you you’re our prisoner of war, and the first thing that pops into your head are girls? Am I right to think that this means these girls are important to you?”

The man who’d been crouching down just before—Namely, the young man who seemed to have stopped the violent man who’d shoved his shoe in Subaru’s mouth—batted one of his eyes shut in response to his muted question.

The youth had bright orange hair, and looked to be just a little older than Subaru. He was smiling quite amiably, but that didn’t put him at ease, given that the situation was what it was.

He wasn’t clad in a full suit of armor per se, but since he was wearing some light garb as his armor, he was probably one of the warriors in the encampment as well. —A warrior, not a knight.

Subaru: “…”

He’d managed to somehow spend over a year in this other world, and several times he’d been blessed with the opportunities to eye the differences between warriors and knights. Of course they had differences in their positions or their influence, but there were visible differences between them, which weren’t only those practical ones.

Knights were glitzy, whereas warriors were coarse—Not in the bad sense. They just differed in what was required.

Of course, knights abounded in skill, yet they needed to be able to procure the reassurance of people’s hearts. On that point, it was necessary for them to be noble of appearance. People like Julius or Reinhard were testaments to this.

On the flipside, what was needed from a warrior was only the strength to fight.

Thus, the men gathered in this encampment were warriors, the youth in front of him was no exception either.

Subaru: “…I’m going to ask you again. Where’s the girl I was with?”

Orange Haired Youth: “So darn stubborn. Though, not like I dislike that… She’s safe and sound. Both of them are full of vim and vigor. A little too full of if you ask me.”

Subaru: “…! For real?!”

Subaru grabbed onto the youth’s answer as the latter gave him a strained smile. He leaned forward so he could hear the answer he wanted to, however the youth pushed him back by the forehead, letting out a “Whoa there”, preventing him from leaning any closer.

Orange Haired Youth: “Both your hands and feet are tied up. Won’t you fall over and bite your tongue if you work yourself up that much? Oh, don’t look at me like that. Both of them are safe and sound, I’m not lying.”

Subaru: “Both of them my ass; quit giving me half-assed answers. I’m happy so long as the blue-haired girl is safe and sound.”

Orange Haired Youth: “That’s an awfully cruel answer, wouldn’t you say?!”

No word of exaggeration, those were his true feelings, however there’d probably be no point telling that to the youth.

In any case, he would believe what the youth had said, for the time being. The next issue at hand was Subaru and Rem’s position. Earlier, he’d said he’d taken Subaru as a prisoner of war…

Subaru: “I find it difficult to accept being a prisoner of war, but let’s say I do… why am I being kept away from them?”

Orange Haired Youth: “If you wanna see them, I’ll let you do so afterwards. If you answer our questions honestly… Right now, those girls are in the slammer.”

Subaru: “In jail?! Why would you do that?!”

The harsh conditions associated with that flashed through his mind straight after he heard the word slammer. However, as he tried to get more details about it, his three broken fingers on his left hand cried out in pain.

Gghha…! Subaru saw stars in his eyes, making him clench his teeth. Behind him, the man sporting an eyepatch over one of his eyes had stomped his shoe on his injured fingers, whereby his hands were tied behind his back.

The man brutely stomped Subaru’s broken fingers, and said,

Man with an Eyepatch: “If you were paying attention before, you’re a guy who fuckin’ lacks the self-awareness of being a prisoner. You just need to answer the questions you’re asked, or am I wrong here? Huh?”

Orange Haired Youth: “Jamal, knock it off! You’re gonna end up making him faint again!”

Jamal: “Really fuckin’ boils my blood that he doesn’t get the position he’s in. So long as his neck ‘n above are fine, he can talk. Anyways, if three of ‘em are broken, what harm would there be in havin’ two more…”

Orange Haired Youth: “…Jamal.”

The man who’d given Subaru’s hand a kick—Jamal—leered at him wickedly as he declared that. But as he did, the youth abruptly called out his name in a hushed tone of voice.

Hearing that caused Jamal’s breath to hitch, and so, he reluctantly moved his foot away with an “Alright then.”

Subaru: “Ghh, ghkk…!”

Jamal: “Tsk. You owe your thanks to Todd. Makes me wanna hurl.”

With the burden removed from his broken fingers, Subaru was able to breathe again, to which Jamal spat at him. And with that said and done, Jamal turned his back away and left the tent in a huff.

When the sound of his footsteps was far off in the distance, the youth—Todd—gave his head a scratch.

Todd: “Dear oh dear. I’m sorry about that. That Jamal dude is quite prickly. After all it was his unit that found you people by the riverbank; but…”

Subaru: “But…?”

Todd: “Well, apparently the girl accompanying you put up quite the fight. The people in his unit were half wrecked, and he, being the commander, lost face.”

Subaru: “Oh…”

Having now gotten a rough idea about what had happened, Subaru too wanted to hold his head in exasperation.

This probably happened after Subaru had crawled up the riverbank and lost consciousness. Having woken up before him, Rem had given Jamal, along with his men, a beating when they turned up. That’s why Jamal was in a foul mood.

Rem would have looked like a sweet girl who couldn’t move her legs at a glance, so there was no reason to blame Jamal and his men for having allowed her to get in the first strike. And even though there was no reason…

Subaru: “I… hate… that guy…”

Todd: “Haha, what a coincidence! I don’t like him much either. That said, we’re getting off-topic. How are your fingers?”

Subaru: “They’re broken… Though the pain’s gotten better.”

Even so, the tattoo of the pounding pain was relentless. Yet, Subaru firmly gritted his teeth together and shut out the weaknesses of groaning in pain for the time being. He would, time permitting, face the pain-debt that would have accumulated up later. Right now, he had the things in front of him to face…

Subaru: “Todd, right?”

Todd: “Oh? So you were paying proper attention. Yeah, the name’s Todd. And here’s a question from your local Todd-san. I did say this before, but…”

Subaru: “That I should answer honestly I guess… What is it that you want to hear?”

In the end, he was nothing more than just the Other Worlder Natsuki Subaru.

He had no clue about anything like the means whereby he crossed worlds, nor did he unfortunately have the expertise to use knowledge cheats which were so conventional with Isekai stuff. Zip, zilch, nada. Made him cry when he really thought about it.

Subaru: “What can I, with that kind of lot in life, really answer for you?”

Todd: “What sort of obsequious display is that? Anyways, it’s a shot in the dark, but there’s just one thing I’d like to ask you. —Are you one of the Shudraq?”

Subaru: “…Shudraq?”

That was the imperious youth’s—Todd’s—question, but Subaru had never heard this word before.

Nevertheless, as soon as Todd heard Subaru responding by flipping the question back at him, he brought one of his hands to his forehead and said:

Todd: “See, I knew it. I could tell by your reaction that you’ve got nothing to do with them.”

Subaru: “Heyhey, wait up. I still haven’t answered anything. Aren’t you just being too hasty here…”

Todd: “Not at all. No one would lie when they’re asked about their own warrior clan. Even those who’ve never heard of ‘em before. So, like that, even if you tell us you’re “Shudraqian”, no one’s gonna believe you.”

Subaru: “…”

Though his words felt conclusive, they didn’t sound like a bluff.

Even Subaru couldn’t refuse them; the way Todd had put it, full of conviction, was that persuasive. But in that case…

Subaru: “Just what are these Shudraqians?”

Todd: “They’re the people we’re searching for. They’re somewhere in that huge forest… In the Buddheim Jungle.”

Todd answered Subaru’s question and pointed behind him. However, Subaru’s hands and feet were tied up, so he couldn’t look back that easily. Todd then put his hand on Subaru’s shoulder with a “There’s no helping that”, and turned him around.

Subaru: “…The Buddheim Jungle.”

Todd: “The whole place from here is forest. It’s going to take many years, or whatever, to search it well and good.”

Though Todd muttered those words unenergetically, what he was saying was understandable. This was quite the vast forest.

The greenery continued on to the ends of the horizon both on his left and right, as seen from the encampment where Subaru was being held captive. If its depth was like that to boot, then metaphors aside, it could be on the same level as the Amazon.

And they had to find these Shudraqians or whatever he’d called them, in such a vast forest.

Subaru: “…Isn’t that going to be practically impossible? To say the least.”

Todd: “You reckon so too? Well, nah, I’ve really thrown in the towel here. If it takes me years to go back home, my fiancée will end up turning away from me ya know."

The sorrows of a soldier who'd been taken away from his lover and sent to the field of battle.

Todd's words made Subaru feel something similar to that, evoking a little sympathy out of him. However, his sympathy didn't last long either, since currently he was separated from the person he cherished. And other than that, the problem he had at hand was way more of a big deal.

Subaru: "Hey, Todd-san. In your view, I think I've answered honestly. So, I'd really like it if you kept your promise as well."

Todd: "You're asking me to let you see a woman, even though there's a person who's ruing the fact they can't see their fiancée? What a heart of stone you have."

Subaru: "No way I want to hear that coming from the companion of a guy who steps on an injured guy's broken fingers."

Todd: "Haha, that's for sure."

Although Subaru's answer was quite the bold one, Todd burst out in laughter rather than anger. He then crouched down by his side and loosened the ropes that had been tightly binding Subaru's feet, enough so he could walk.

Todd: "You should be able to at least walk by taking short steps. I'll take you over to the jail."

Todd brought his hands under Subaru's armpits and lifted him up in one go. As soon as he stood up, his legs could move freely, albeit about only half of his usual step.

He could walk like this. Thank god for having short legs. If his legs had been as long as a model's, then he would have been thrown out of balance quite a bit.

Subaru: "Well then, please guide me there."

Todd: “How very impudent of you… You must be a noble, right?”

With a wry smile on his face, Todd gave Subaru a clap on the back as the latter began to walk out, taking small steps.

He felt the inquisitive looks of the men around them, looking at Subaru walking along bit by bit, being led out of the tent that housed prisoners of war. He could see some of them looking like they were sneering, but Subaru cared not a fig about them. Rather, on the flip-side, it was he who observed them.

It was just as he’d thought. He could see an encampment prepared for war.

They’d covered the perimeters of the encampment with impromptu-made wooden fencing and stuff. There appeared to be over a hundred men here. Nevertheless, searching the entire forest with a hundred men was practically impossible. Subaru could understand why Todd was bemoaning that.

With that said, Subaru had expressed his sympathies both to Todd, who was in that state, and his fiancée. Yet, posed towards him was…

Todd: “Oh, talking of nobles, I just remembered… Where did you get that knife that popped up when we fished through your belongings?”

Subaru: “…”

Subaru’s brows furrowed for a moment when he heard Todd’s suddenly remembered question; then he instantly recalled the knife in question.

He’d received the knife from the masked man in the forest. It had really helped him get through the many obstacles posed by the forest, as well as the traps Rem had set. —It was too late for that now, but perhaps that masked man had been one of the Shudraqians they were searching for.

If it was like that, then telling them about him would only be tantamount to a betrayal of his benefactor.

Todd: “What’s up?”

Subaru: “No, nothing…”

Though Todd was suspicious of his silence, Subaru was also stuck between a rock and a hard place, internally.

Given that he’d been taken as a prisoner of war, Todd was treating him in a relatively reasonable manner. But make no mistake, he was still perceived as a prisoner of war. He was someone Subaru would find difficult to describe as being friendly.

On the other hand, it was pretty likely that he’d never see the masked man again. However, not only had he given him some effective advice on the matter of searching for Rem, he’d also given him that knife to boot. He was someone high in the benefactor level.

Meaning…

Todd: “Hey, what’s up?”

Subaru: “—. That knife is something from my family. It’s a family heirloom.”

Todd: “Is that so? Heyhey, then you must be quite the something, right?”

Subaru: “Huh?”

He decided to protect his benefactor in his mind, after mulling it over.

Todd’s voice raised a bit in surprise in response, with Subaru having lied with those thoughts in mind. Subaru didn’t know why it had, but nevertheless, Todd continued,

Todd: “After all, your knife’s got our national emblem, the Sword Wolf, on it. From what I’ve heard, those sorts of things are given personally from the Emperor to his retainers. Meaning, you must be from a family of honor as well?”

Subaru: "…Wait just a sec."

Todd's voice grew excited. Meanwhile, Subaru's breath hitched after he heard what he'd said.

The backstory behind the knife he'd received was good enough in all. He would put that matter to one side for the time being, even though there seemed to be an anecdote well worth of his surprise there.

The Sword Wolf, and the Emperor.

Subaru: "…"

Subaru stopped in his tracks, his lips still pursed together as he looked around his surroundings once again.

There he could see many a tent, bonfires, sneering men, the humongous forest… And a blue flag fluttering in the wind, right next to a large tent.

…Painted smack dab in the middle of this blue flag, was a black wolf pierced by swords.

Over a year had passed for Subaru as well, since he'd come to this other world. The opportunities in which he'd be introduced as Emilia's one and only knight were increasing, thus he was in the middle of studying stuff such as what passed as common knowledge in this world, such that he wouldn't sit cross-legged as an other worlder forever.

The fruits of his studies matched with this flag of a wolf pierced by swords—the Sword Wolf.

Namely…

Subaru: "…The Sacred Vollachian Empire."

The national emblem of the Empire that bordered the south of the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica.

It was right now that Subaru first realized that they'd crossed the border between the Kingdom and Empire, having been hurled into a foreign country.

3

—The Sacred Vollachian Empire.

That was the name of the land—No, the name of the country where Subaru was being held prisoner.

The impression Subaru had towards Vollachia was, as a result of his isekai studies, something like: “It’s like that in games or whatever, Empires kinda tend to be like lairs of evil.”

Just like the Kingdom of Lugunica, the Vollachian Empire was one of the four great countries that conserved the balance of power in the world. It was the one that held the largest amount of land, holding its dominion over the south of the world map.

Vollachia was blessed with richer soils compared to Gusteko in the north and Kararagi in the west, along with fertile lands and a warm climate. Apparently, a system of “The Survival of the Fittest” had taken shape there, as if it were a matter of course.

Many tribes and races were mixed in together, with the strong gaining everything and the weak parting with their possessions, the latter oppressed by the former.

Such brutality went unpunished in the Vollachian Empire—In other words, this was a land with people that had the worst compatibility possible for Natsuki Subaru.

Subaru: “…The Sacred Vollachian Empire.”

Those words slipped out from him without even realizing on the very moment he’d set his eyes on the flag swaying beside the tent. Hearing Subaru’s shocked mutter, Todd raised his brows a bit, and then,

Todd: “…Long live Vollachia!”

Subaru: “Whoa?!”

A voice suddenly boomed from right behind him, taking Subaru aback. He sprang back in surprise, causing Todd to laugh at his reaction.

Todd: “Hahaha. What’s with that reaction. You’re the one who brought it up.”

Subaru: “Long live Vollachia?”

Todd: “Long live Vollachia.”

Though those were accusations he had no awareness of, he kind of understood them.

Whenever you said The Sacred Vollachian Empire out loud, they would answer with: “Long Live Vollachia.” That was what they were used to, a part of their national creed.

And so, there was one more thing which Subaru now knew.

Subaru: “…I cannot carelessly reveal that I’m a Lugunican.”

That was a really huge blow for him.

Subaru’s position right now was as Emilia’s one and only knight, she being one of the candidates in the Royal Selection that was taking place in the Kingdom of Lugunica. Subaru had been officially knighted under Roswaal’s patronage, and thus was actually, for a limited amount of time, part of the Lugunican nobility.

Regardless of that, there shouldn’t be anyone in the Kingdom of Lugunica who didn’t know about the matter of the Royal Selection.

Thus, if he were to reveal his position, he would have been in a position to ask for a favor. —At the very least, he’d imagined he would have talked about it to Todd once Rem’s safety had been assured, given that words got through to him.

But, it was a different matter altogether provided they were currently in the Vollachian Empire.

Subaru: "…"

Having read the history books of this world, Subaru knew all too well about the poor relations between the Kingdom of Lugunica and the Vollachian Empire.

More than four hundred years ago, both countries had waged many great wars between them over territory. Ever since the Kingdom of Lugunica made a covenant with the Divine Dragon four hundred years ago, the two countries have strayed away from any major conflicts.

However, some small-scale, sporadic battles had broken out since then, and even now, there was no shadow of a doubt the two countries were in a state of cold war. He'd heard that before the start of the Royal Selection was announced, arrangements were made so that the Empire would not take advantage to lay war on them.

What would become of him were he to tell them he was part of the Lugunican nobility, right here inside the Vollachian Empire.

Maybe this would be possible if it were an Imperial noble with some common sense, but the place they were in was an encampment at the edge of a battlefield.

Todd aside, could he really hope to be treated as a guest of the nation by so many of these impulsive lot like Jamal?

Subaru: "That's a definite no-go."

Meaning that Subaru could not carelessly divulge his position.

Now that things were like this, the fact that he was here with Rem, who had forgotten even Subaru's position, was a blessing in disguise—Truly a small blessing amongst a sea of misfortune.

Todd: "Hey, what's the actual matter? Are your legs useless, as well as your fingers?"

Subaru: "Nah, that's not it. It's just that when I heard you say "Long live Vollachia", I couldn't contain the shudders of awe welling up from deep inside my chest…”

Todd: “Oh, I see. No helpin’ that. ‘Tis only natural that you’d be struck at heart by how the Empire is, given that you’re connected to the Imperial nobility. I was the one who lacked consideration.”

Subaru: “Haha, well, hahaha.”

He would have scratched his head if he could, yet he could only let out a forced laugh at Todd’s answer.

This was the “Empire” indeed, even though his world view on it came only from literature.

The mantra of the Empire permeated all the way down to run-of-the-mill soldiers like Todd. Realizing that it was showing in the man’s behavior right now, Subaru gritted his teeth.

His trump card of sorts, as in, revealing his social standing and returning back to the Mathers Domain, could safely be assumed to have been blocked.

Or maybe a sensible citizen of the Empire would respect his position, but…

Subaru: “…The odds would be stacked against me a little too much, were I to gamble on those two choices.”

Todd: “What are you grumbling about? Looky here, your long-awaited meeting.”

Subaru: “…ah”

Subaru, who’d been shuffling along, was pushed by his back, before then receiving a clap on the shoulder.

He lifted his head up straight after Todd told him that. And when he did, he’d been brought along to some iron cells situated near one edge of the encampment. Within one of those iron cells, all of them lined up neat and tidy, a girl sat flumped down.

Subaru: “Rem!”

Rem: “—hk, it’s you.”

Having found the figure of the girl he was searching for, Subaru flew over to the cell. Rem took notice of him and frowned, all the while glaring at him with the same hostility.

Yet, he didn’t care. So long as, first of all, he could check that she was alright…

Subaru: “Oh, thank goodness. Did they do anything to you? Are you in any pa… Hbwaah!”

Todd: “Whoa, whoa, that looks like it’s gonna hurt.”

Since Subaru had been shuffling along quickly, his feet got tangled up, making him fall forward. He couldn’t use his hands to support himself of course, so he crashed face-first into the iron cell.

And just like that, Subaru let out a groan as he fell over backwards.

Rem: “Wai… What’s with that all of a sudden?!”

Subaru: “Ah nothing, my bad… I… I didn’t mean to scare you…”

Rem: “As if I would be! Stop looking down on me please… Were your nose and teeth and stuff alright?”

Subaru: “Huh?! Are you worried about me?”

Rem: “Wha? No?”

Subaru managed to lift his body up, in the way a caterpillar would, and sniffled. The answer he got from Rem was glacial.

Nevertheless, as he was gazed at by those light-blue eyes, Subaru let out a sigh of relief. However, this caused Rem’s face to tense up even more, still inside her cell.

Todd: “Alrighty then, I get that this is quite the emotional meeting, but you two ain’t quite on the same page, no? Lemme see then, so, um, you must be Rem, right?”

Rem: "—. Who knows."

Todd: "Heyhey, what a pain. Like, there's got to be a limit to how stubborn you can get."

Todd butted in between Subaru and Rem's unexpected meeting, sporting a sullen look on his face.

Rem tsunishly turned her face away, however, it seemed like her cold attitude wasn't just limited to Subaru. It seemed to also be consistently pointed towards the encampment—against the people of the Empire, Todd included.

Though all things said, you could say this was really typical of Rem and her bossy at home, yet timid on the streets temperament.

Subaru: "If you're going to be snapping at whoever comes by, they're gonna nickname you with stuff like "Mad Dog"."

Rem: "And now he has the absolute cheek of calling me a dog. Not only do you stink, but you're also quite the rude person, aren't you?"

Subaru: "What are you trying to say, me stinking is being rude? Like, you mean I lack in the cleanliness department? Even so, cleanliness is something which I've never really properly grasped."

There was a saying that went something like: When you hate someone, you come to hate everything related to the person. Rem's manner of interactions with Subaru matched that sort of stuff to a T.

The fact he had ended up coming to a place like this, while still unable to shake off that poor first impression he gave, was a real bummer.

Subaru: "Anyways, she is indeed called Rem. Thanks for helping me out… Though, that said, it's hard for me to express my gratitude when I see how she's been put in this cell."

Todd: "Didn't I tell you? The people in Jamal's unit were beaten up. If I didn't let myself do at least this, then even I would lose face.

Either way, it’s not like we’re gonna hurt her.”

Subaru: “…Can I really trust you on that?”

Todd: “We have the credence of the Imperial Nobility here after all. Even Jamal can’t complain about that.”

Todd rifled through his bosom and pulled out that knife while saying that. Subaru’s eyes swung wide open as Todd unsheathed it and cut away the rope around his hands and feet.

Feeling himself freed from his restraints, Subaru let out an exhale with an “Oh.”

Subaru: “You’re just going to let me go?”

Todd: “I wanna say “Yeah, and take your girl wherever”… But I can’t.”

Subaru: “…”

Todd: “Don’t give me such a scary look. It’s not like I’m doing you a disservice. As you’ve gathered, we’ve prepared our ranks to fight the Shudraqians in the forest. But, it’s not just us who’ve been deployed. If you wander around all willy-nilly, then you’re gonna get captured by the guys at some other encampment.”

In other words, there were several encampments scattered around the land, waiting to raid the vast forest.

Were Subaru and his party to carelessly intrude into another encampment, they would most likely be captured and questioned, just like it had happened here.

But even worse—

Subaru: “With so many Jamals in these encampments, I might even be forced to eat another damn shoe.”

Todd: “I don’t mean to brag, but in the Imperial Army you’d be hard-pressed to find many like myself. I really dislike violence, so if there’s a chance for dialog, I’ll always go with that first, you see.”

Rem: “So we should expect most of them to be as abusive as that rude gentleman, is what you are saying?”

Todd: “Well, he did offend you, so he kinda deserves it, I guess.”

An intense hatred could be heard in Rem’s voice as she firmly spoke.

She could not bring herself to like Subaru either, but her first meeting with Jamal had been simply awful. Judging from the fact that Todd, despite knowing the situation, was not on Jamal’s side either, it could be inferred that not even his allies could defend his actions.

Subaru: “Todd-san, I get that you’re worried about our safety. But what should we do? Just like you, I really don’t want to stay put until they’re done raiding the forest.”

Todd: “I know, plus we’re gonna get shouted at if we let outsiders stay at our encampment for too long. But no matter what we do, a supply convoy will set out for a nearby town in some days from now. If y’all leave the encampment along with them, you’ll probably be able to get out without causing any unneeded ruckus.”

Subaru: “I see, a supply convoy…”

It was a no-brainer, you needed the appropriate amount of food and water to feed all of these people. There was no way they could provide that using the land around them, and so the units that brought in supplies were as important as the troops set out for combat.

That’s why Todd had recommended them to go with the people charged with providing such things for the encampments.

Subaru: “Then is it okay if we depend on you for a little while longer…?”

Todd: “I reckon so. The battle shouldn’t progress any time soon… So just make sure you don’t go near that damn Jamal. Unless you wanna be forced to eat another shoe.”

Subaru: “Yeah, I really feel that… Rem, are you alright with his plan?”

Rem: “…”

Rem gave him no reply, her face still tsunishly turned away from him.

Nevertheless, she did not reject it to his face, so she probably didn’t have any objections or alternatives in mind. He would just take it as being a cute act of defiance from her.

Todd: “You two have a weird relationship though. What sort of people are you?”

Subaru: “Uhm, you can think of us as wanderers or travelers. Rem’s my beloved girl, and the other girl we were with is someone I don’t know.”

Rem: “You’re still saying that stuff…”

Upon hearing Todd’s question, Rem’s distrust grew stronger. Subaru too thought he’d messed up, but on the other hand, he absolutely didn’t want to recognize Louis as being one of their companions.

In all honesty, he’d be all for the Empire taking her from them.

Subaru: “Which reminds me, she hasn’t been thrown into a cell along with Rem. Where did she go?”

Rem: “—. She was taken away for treatment. It seems she cut her forehead somewhere when we recklessly jumped into the river.”

Subaru: “Treatment… Treatment?”

Subaru reacted in astonishment when he heard Rem’s answer, who’d averted her gaze away. Then his expression turned serious, and he jumped towards the cell.

Subaru: “Did you say treatment?!”

Rem: “Wh-What? Indeed I did. Or are you saying you don’t want that girl you detest to even get treatment for her injuries?”

Subaru: “You’re not wrong there either, but that’s not the issue. Hey, Todd-san! Where’s that damned Louis getting treated? Which tent?!”

Subaru had turned around, making Todd react with a surprised “Wha?” in response to his threatening attitude. However, he did not understand the gravity of the situation one bit. Subaru grabbed him by the shoulders and asked once again: “Where is she?”

Todd: “If she’s receiving treatment, she’ll be in that tent with a red flag. But what’s going on with you so suddenly?”

Subaru: “Just like whatever, everyone’s going to die!”

Subaru pushed Todd’s shoulder away, the latter’s eyes peeled wide open, as the former hurried over to the tent with the red flag. Rem and Todd unconsciously exchanged looks with one another seeing the vigor that drove Subaru.

Todd: “What the…? Well, whatever, I’ll go after him, but…”

Rem: “Please do. He’s probably going to do something rash unless you stop him.”

Todd: “Though, why do you have to be the one to tell me that…”

Todd scratched his head and hurriedly went after Subaru, as the latter rushed forward.

And, as soon as she couldn’t see Subaru anymore,

Rem: “Like what the hell? That guy’s just been acting as he pleases with me all this time.”

Rem muttered that under her breath.

Subaru: “…”

And on the other hand, having heard what Todd had said earlier, Subaru was looking around, searching for the red tent. Hearing

Louis was receiving treatment; the worst possibility swept across Subaru‘s mind.

Namely, the possibility that Louis, who seemed to have lost her mind somehow, would turn back to normal with treatment and be re-established as one of the Sin Archbishops of Gluttony.

In that case, both Subaru, and of course the amnesiac Rem, would not be able to contend with her. Even if Todd, Jamal and the people of the Empire in this encampment got together, there would probably be many, many casualties.

He wasn’t going to let that happen. Impatience filled Subaru’s mind, as if saying, That must never happen.

Then, he turned towards a red tent that had caught his eyes and he quickly made his way over to it…

Subaru: “I’m sorry! Is there a vile golden haired kid here—”

???: “Auuuaa!!”

A golden bullet came hurtling out from the inside at terrific speed the moment he’d tried to open the tent’s flap.

True to its aim, it scored a direct hit under his nose—right against the center of his body, causing both his consciousness and upper body to jolt unsteadily. And just like that, he fell down flat on his ass.

As a result, he ended up putting down his left hand on the ground, in an instant move. —His left hand, where three of his fingers were broken.

Subaru: “GYHAAAAAAAAA!!”

Louis: “Ahh! Ahh! Uaaah!”

Subaru’s consciousness flickered from the fierce pain. Present was a demon, making merry, squealing happily while straddled over Subaru, who was writing in agony. —Louis.

She was still the same as the time when she'd woken Subaru up in that grassy plain. There was a smile plastered on her face, a smile that looked just like the very manifestation of innocent evil, as she snuggled up to his chest.

He really wanted to brush her away, but his consciousness, scorching with pain, didn't let him do so.

Subaru: "Gh, khh, a-ahh…!"

Todd: "Whoa there, you used your left hand? Well that's, damn, pretty rough… But from what I can see, this girl looks back to her usual. Like, the wound on her forehead's been patched up too."

Todd caught up to Subaru, who was writhing in agony, and gently lifted the happy Louis up from his chest. Louis flapped her arms and legs while letting out an "Auuh", however, Todd paid her no heed.

Just like Todd had said, there was a bandage wrapped around Louis' head. It looked like they had given her some treatment for her forehead cut. Not with magic though, but with simple first-aid techniques.

Subaru: "Kh, ah… I-Is that so? So that's what you meant by treating her head…"

He'd been so sure they were going to heal her wound with magic, so he'd gotten all panicky. However, with the method they had resorted to, there would be no way its healing would treat any aspects he didn't wish to be treated.

It looked like Subaru's fears had ended up being needless, for now.

Todd: "You treat this girl who's so attached to you as someone you don't know, yet the girl you hold as being so precious treats you so coldly… I don't really get it, but that sounds like a dang mess."

Subaru: "…Can't deny that. There's hardly anyone around who finds themselves in as many messes as I do."

If there were a limit to the amount of hardships a person went through in their life, then was this just a lifetime worth of hardships closing in on him? Or was the count reset with each Return by Death? Would a time when he would be able to feel at ease never ever come?

Just the thought of that was terrifying. And although it was terrifying…

Subaru: "I'm alive for now. That's what matters."

Todd: "Sure feels like you set your targets low… So, what will you do? Are we okay to go along with you guys accompanying the supply convoy in a few days time?"

Subaru: "Oh, yeah, yes please. My apologies though, for having to stay in your care."

Todd: "Mhm? Then no need to fret, since I ain't gonna be leaving y'all to mooch off us."

Subaru, who was sitting cross-legged, raised his face at Todd's words and said: "Huh?" Following that, Todd brought Louis back to the ground as she flapped her legs around, and placed one of his hands to his hips.

After that, he pointed to the Empire's encampment that stretched out behind him, and said,

Todd: "This is quite the encampment. No matter how many hands we have on deck, it's never enough. There's tons of work, so I'm gonna have to get you to help out with some stuff."

Subaru: "…He who does not work, shall not eat, I guess that's what you're saying?"

Subaru quietly murmured those words, causing Todd to repeat them back as soon as he heard them.

Todd: "He who does not work… Yes indeed. That's spot on. You sure know some good words."

Todd nodded his head, and to his side, Louis nodded as well, as if copying him.

Subaru loudly cracked his neck bones while looking up at the two of them.

Subaru: “…I guess this is way better than being told “Don’t do anything”, or being forced to eat a shoe, huh.”

Chapter 7:
Being a Man was Tough

1

Subaru: “Ouch.”

Subaru gave a reflexive grimace as he felt a sharp pain run through his finger.

He looked down and saw a drop of blood beading down from a shallow cut on the tip of his index finger. He’d been tidying up some documents scattered around on the desk, yet it seemed like he’d cut his finger on them.

Subaru: “Shit, I really messed up there. Guess this is the initiation I get for having underestimated the isekai paper making technology…”

???: “My, Subaru-kun, whaaaaat’s the matter? Did you cut your finger on some paper?”

Subaru: “I can tell what you’re thinking here, Roz-chi: “Oh, how miserable of youuuu, weaker even than paper.” I just screwed up a bit… Can’t you fix this up like it’s nothing?”

Subaru showed his aching finger to the owner of the mansion, Roswaal, as he posed his question.

Roswaal was facing his desk, in his office, having been busying himself with some paperwork. He placed his quill down, before then taking a look at the scratch on Subaru’s finger.

Roswaal: “Let me see. Oh my, it looks paaaainful. That said, ‘tis but a scratch. It should heal pretty quickly if you give it a lick. Oooor, should I lick it for you?”

Subaru: “No thank you. I’d just go ahead and stick it in Beako’s mouth or something, if I was going to get it licked by you, Roz-chi.”

Roswaal: “Haha, how amuuuuusing… It seems like you and Beatrice are getting along swimmingly, doesn’t it.”

Roswaal let go of Subaru’s finger and beamed at him while resting his elbows on the desk. Subaru tilted his head, saying “Is that so?” after hearing what he had to say.

The relationship Subaru and Beatrice had was a complex one, nigh impossible to express. Though putting it as such was an exaggeration, he hadn’t really been able to get much compromise from Beatrice.

Subaru: “It’s fun teasing her after all, and it’s me who’s actively doing the provoking, though I’m not too sure how she feels about it.”

Roswaal: “Oh no, no need to wooooorry about that. Beatrice is quite the forthright girl with these kinds of things after all. If she really felt like rejecting you, you probably wouldn’t be able to go in and out of the Forbidden Library either.”

Subaru: “I see…”

Roswaal: “Since aaaaafter all, she won’t allow me into the Forbidden Library currently.”

Subaru: “I see?”

Roswaal placed one of his hands to his chest as he said that with feigned indifference, before giving him a strained smile.

That said, Roswaal was just like Subaru in that it looked like he considered Beatrice as a teasable girl. That, and they’d also been acquainted with each other far longer than Subaru had.

Subaru: “So like, you’re misanalysing the sense of distance between you two and letting it fester, or something? Wouldn’t it have been better to apologize?”

Roswaal: “Well, you’re not too far off there. In regards to an apology… Just a little tooooo much time has ended up passing for both me and Beatrice.”

Subaru: “I don’t think it’s great to not give her an apology and blame time for that, but…”

Roswaal: “Hmmm, this keeps getting more and more painful to hear.”

Roswaal loosened his lips and picked up his quill again. Realizing that was a sign for him to get back to work, Subaru once again took to organizing the bookshelves with a shrug of his shoulders.

Luckily, it seemed like the blood from his cut finger had stopped.

Roswaal: “If your finger does actually hurt, you could get Rem or Beatrice to heal it up; otherwise, have the esteemed Great Spirit do it.”

Subaru: “Roz-chi, can’t you heal it? Are you being spartan?”

Roswaal: “Nooooo, not at all. —You see, I can’t use healing magic.”

Subaru: “Is that so? And here I was thinking you were a versatile mage who can do just about anything.”

Subaru lifted his brows slightly at Roswaal’s unexpected confession.

He could burn forests, herds of witchbeasts included, to nothing with hellfire. He could soar up to the skies like the wind. So as soon as Subaru had heard Roswaal held great renown as a mage, Subaru had been so sure Roswaal’d mastered every single kind of basic magic.

Yet Roswaal had shook his head at what Subaru had said.

Roswaal: “My apologies for not living up to your expectations, but you see, magic heavily depends on the aptitude one possesses from birth. I’ve been lucky enough to have been blessed with many talents for magic, but even that’s not sufficient to completely handle every single bit of magic that there is in the world.”

Subaru: “So, healing magic aside, got any others you can’t use?”

Roswaal: “Nope, I can pretty much use all the others.”

Subaru: “Seriously just the one flaw?!”

Roswaal only had one weakness, coming in stark contrast to his heavy preface.

That said, the fact of the matter was: his flaw meant he couldn’t use healing magic. And it felt to him like this was a surprisingly large flaw, one that would be difficult to make up for.

Subaru: “I reckon being unable to heal your wounds or not is a pretty big deal, like when you’re in the middle of a fight or whatever.”

Roswaal: “Oh? So that’s what you think as well, Subaru-kun?”

Subaru: “Well, I graduated from the kinds of power play where you can just win by selecting the “Fight” command, and ignoring the effects of buffs and debuffs, in elementary school. I’m the type who likes to compete with talented people by making full use of my resourcefulness, even though I lack talent, just like in those kinds of mangas.”

Roswaal: “It seems like you’re saying stuff that’s tough to figure out, but in fact, I haven’t even viewed it like so.”

They’d only known each other for a few weeks, yet it looked like Roswaal had seen through to the truth behind his chatter, causing Subaru to stick his tongue out at him with a scratch of his head.

Roswaal batted one of his eyes shut and winked at him with his blue one.

Roswaal: “It’s actually as you say, Subaru-kun. You could say having healing magic or not will change the battlefield, in a way. That’s why it’s such a valuable ability.”

Subaru: “Yeah? But Puck, Beako and Rem can use it, right?”

Roswaal: “The first two are speeeecial. And as for Rem… She’s got the disposition for it too I guess. After all, I’ve focused myself on helping her hone that talent for healing of hers.”

According to what Roswaal had said after, apparently the usefulness of healing magic was regarded so importantly, even in magic, a master-apprentice system was in place in specialized hospitals.

Rem could have learnt it there, but she'd said Roswaal had guided her teachings directly since she didn't want to be separated from Ram.

Roswaal: "And so, come a time you get injured, there's the fear that you'll end up forgetting to grit and bear it, if you entrench yourself too deeply with healing magic, I suppoooooose."

Subaru: "Well…So you mean you'd lose your tolerance for pain? I guess that would happen."

Just like people raised up in sterile rooms did not gain any resistance against viruses and such, pain could well become fatal in a time where one cannot rely on healing magic, in the case where you'd immediately get rid of your pains with its use.

With that in mind, Subaru glanced at his injured finger.

Subaru: "I get it. This cut ain't worth fussing about, I'll grin and bear this pain as a lesson for myself."

Roswaal: "It's just a teeeeensy cut on your finger; aren't you making a meaaaaal of it? It won't really matter if you heal a cut like this, so why not get Rem to do it?"

Subaru: "Sounds like a sweet trap to lure people into slothfulness! …No thanks, I'm perfectly fine as I am. Got no issues."

Roswaal's words felt like they had a touch of banter in them, yet Subaru thought he had a point.

Subaru already knew from the two incidents that had happened at the Royal Capital and the Mansion that his life in another world wasn't going to be easy. It was best to just not experience anything like unbearable pain.

However…

Subaru: “I’ll be ready, for when the unavoidable comes.”

Roswaal: “It’s just a cut on your finger thouuuuuuugh.”

Roswaal gave Subaru a wry smile as the latter emphasized what he said by firmly raising his index finger up.

Nevertheless, Subaru’s enthusiasm proved to be in vain. As soon as he finished cleaning up the office, he met up with Rem and the others, and right after that, Rem noticed his cut and immediately healed it up.

Subaru: “Ughghghghgh…!”

???: “Come on, bite down on the brace or something. This is really gonna hurt.”

Todd straightened the fingers on Subaru’s left hand as he said that, before then applying a pungent medicine on his blotched fingers. After that, he nimbly put a splint around his fingers and wound some bandages around them. And with that, he finished patching him up.

Todd: “All’s that left is this potion to finish things up. It should ease your pain a bit.”

Todd passed a bottle over to Subaru, drenched in cold sweat, containing some medicine. It was filled with a thick, viscous, green liquid. However, there was nothing he could do about it if he was told it was medicine.

Subaru steeled himself and swigged it down.

Subaru: “Blargh! Gross! Th-This heavy liquid is gonna get stuck in my throat…!”

Todd: “’Tis a medicine that’s renown for being difficult to swallow after all. But I guarantee you, it will do the trick. It’s an asset that’s heavily used by the troops. It’ll speed up how quickly your wounds heal.”

Subaru gulped it down, holding the now empty bottle between his fingers as Todd flashed him a smile. Subaru lowered his head, saying “Sorry,” in response to Todd, as he wiped his mouth.

Subaru: “You let yourself share something so valuable to a weirdo like me.”

Todd: “No worries at all. In fact, if we were to leave you as you are, your fingers would rot away and fall off. Like, think of it as me having done a favor for a guy who’s been granted a Sword Wolf Dagger.”

Subaru lowered his brows at Todd’s good-natured, generous answer, before then chewing on his lip.

Todd, who appeared to be a soldier from the Vollachian Empire, was under the impression that Subaru was a noble, due to the knife he’d received in the forest. He’d been treated much better thanks to that, even if he was a prisoner of war.

However, it was precisely because of this that he felt sorry for deceiving him.

And in addition, a particular question had been weighing over Subaru’s mind.

Namely…

Subaru: “But, yeah. In times like these, if we had Healing Magic at hand, we could heal my wounds in a jiffy.”

Subaru muttered that out, pretending to put it casually as he checked how his left hand was doing. Hearing that, Todd raised his eyebrows.

Todd: “Oh? Yet again with saying these extravagant things. Like, as if I’ve been able to lay my eyes on anything like that.”

Subaru: “—. So it’s just as I thought.”

Todd: “Guess so. It sure would be useful if wounds and illness could be healed the same as creating a breeze or fire or whatever. Even your left hand would be healed up lickety-split.”

Subaru cast his gaze down as Todd spoke in a solemn tone of voice with a shrug of his shoulders.

Both unease and relief rose inside of him simultaneously for hitting the nail on the head with his prediction.

Subaru and Roswaal had talked about how rare Healing Magic was, back when his plots were yet to be exposed, when he’d deemed him as just being an upbeat, clownish noble.

Roswaal had told him magic depended on one’s talent, as well as that Healing Magic users were precious.

Adding on to that information, medicinal herbs and potion bottles were lined together in the tent that the encampment had set up for healing. A host of medicinal tools, rather than magic, had been prepared there.

Todd, who’d told him he’d get him patched up, had resorted to the use of medicinal herbs and splints, rather than relying on anything magical. Thus, there were no doubts anymore.

Subaru: “Healing Magic is rare.”

Todd: “At the very least, it’s something I’ve never seen. From what I’ve heard, the Imperial Capital keeps mages who can use it close, within its bounds. Whatever the case, ‘tis but a tale of a faraway world for the average person.”

Subaru: “…”

Todd: “I’m more surprised you said something like “Healing Magic”. Not like it’s an option for me y’know?”

In the first place, you wouldn’t even be able to come up with things unfamiliar to you; they wouldn’t even pop up at the edge of your thoughts.

That was just how unfamiliar Healing Magic was in the Empire—At least, for Todd and his gang.

Subaru had been expecting him to answer like that, so he shook his head and said,

Subaru: “Well, as you can see, I’m actually a traveler. I’m traveling all over the place, so I have come across people who use Healing Magic.”

Todd: “I see, a traveler huh. I did think you were dressed weirdly, since the garb y’all are in doesn’t at all suit the heat around here.”

Todd looked at Subaru from head to toe as he stated that. Subaru was still dressed in the clothes they’d devised to ward off the sand back when they had passed through the sand sea to capture the Pleiades Watchtower.

The Augria Dunes had been contrary to his impressions of a desert since they hadn’t been hot; however, he’d ended up practically covering almost all of his skin to stave off the sand winds. That’s why one would have to say they weren’t quite dressed for the seasons, here in Vollachia, where the temperatures and the humidity were high.

Todd: “So you’re saying you came across some kind of Healing Artist when you were traveling and you were tainted by its convenience.”

Subaru: “What a terrible way of putting it! Even if it is actually convenient.”

In fact, Subaru had been indebted to Healing Magic a few times— Or rather, quite a few times.

It would have been practically impossible to come back alive from the first hurdle, had it not been for Beatrice’s Healing Magic when he was first summoned into this other world.

If Beatrice hadn’t been there for him back then, Subaru would still be living life with his belly sliced open and his guts drooping out.

Subaru: “Like I ever want to go through the experience of tripping over my own guts again.”

Todd: “Healing Magic, huh.”

Subaru: “…? Todd-san?”

As Subaru reflected on his somewhat uncommon experience, standing in front of him, Todd let out a quiet sigh. Subaru frowned at the change in atmosphere, yet Todd closed one of his eyes and said,

Todd: “Well, I reckon Healing Magic is rather cruel, I’m glad it’s not around where I’m at.”

Subaru: “Cruel… Why? Shouldn’t it be the opposite?”

Subaru showed how baffled he was by Todd’s point of view. To which, Todd, with one of his eyes still closed, continued with,

Todd: “Like, after all, your wounds healing up means you won’t die. They won’t pull you back to recuperate either. They’ll heal you up and force you to fight again, on and on. That’s what it means to have your wounds healed.”

Subaru: “…”

Todd: “I can’t help but be terrified by it. Just how much must the guy who came up with the idea of Healing Magic in the first place have loved to fight? It just feels like we’re being shown that plain and clear.”

Subaru was unable to come up with a response after hearing Todd’s calm words.

He found it to be quite a biased way of thinking. In actuality, Healing Magic played a role not only on the battlefield, but also to save people from accidents or disease as part of daily life.

On the other side though, there was some truth to Todd’s way of thinking as well.

They would patch up those wounded on the battlefield and push them to fight anew. —Subaru couldn’t deny his own feelings; he feared that he could not deny such an aspect did exist, after all.

Todd: “My bad, I went off-topic. I didn’t mean to make you furrow your brows like that.”

Todd said that to bring the mood back to normal, seeing how Subaru had sunk into silence. Subaru nodded back at him, and said, “It’s alright”, in response to those values that he himself hadn’t considered.

Todd then shifted his attention to the outside of the tent, in an effort to change the subject.

Todd: “But, if that’s the case, shouldn’t the lil’ missy inside the cell also be one of your traveling companions? But even then, why are you being snapped at so much?”

Subaru: “…An unforeseen accident, I guess. We used to be pretty much on the same wavelength, but now things have gotten completely one-sided, due to one reason or another. I’d be grateful if you looked at the long term here.”

Todd: “It’s fine by me, but it seems rather tough for you… But, in that case…”

Todd didn’t probe too deep into the complex circumstances surrounding Subaru and Rem, instead, he glanced away while brushing his chin.

Todd was looking at Subaru’s right arm, which the latter was deliberately ignoring. And clinging to Subaru’s right arm since quite a while ago…

???: “Ah?”

Was Louis, who said that blankly with a dopey look on her face.

She was still clinging to Subaru’s right arm, smiling away as if something was fun, while occasionally fiddling with his fingers, entwining her hair around them and doing whatever she pleased.

Todd: “You’re obviously not old enough for her to be y’all’s daughter, right? What is she to you?”

Subaru: “How many times do I have to say this, she’s just some stranger. Though I’m dead certain she isn’t a decent person.”

Todd: “You’re being harsh there… But the lil’ miss in her cell seems to care about this girl, no?”

Subaru: “That’s what’s so troublesome…”

Having had that pointed out by Todd once again, Subaru let out a sigh, feeling just how complicated the situation he was put in was.

Right now, Subaru’s feelings towards Rem were spinning around completely in vain. With her memories now gone, Rem’s cold attitude was mostly born out of Subaru’s disdain for Louis.

Nevertheless, Subaru could not accept Louis, even if he knew that was the cause.

It was a no-brainer. She was a Sin Archbishop, a person of pure evil. Someone he could by no means ever get on with.

Subaru: “How is this happening? What the hell are you scheming, what the hell do you want from me?!”

Louis: “Ooh? Aah, Awoh”

Louis merely gave him a frivolous smile, offering no answer to him in return.

Her behavior was absolutely annoying. Of course, it’d spell trouble were she to act as unscrupulously as she had in the Hall of Memories, but it would probably keep things more clear for him, to view her as an enemy as much as he could.

It’d be a better situation compared to now, having her act like a baby or toddler, leaving only Subaru himself able to recognize her dangerous nature.

Todd: “Either way, she’s one of your traveling companions. No matter where it is you’re off to, y’all oughta work on improving your relationship a bit more.”

Subaru: "—. Who's that advice for?"

Todd: "Adv…? Well, it's up to you how you take it."

Todd stood up while cocking his head in confusion at the word he'd never heard before.

They were in the tent designated for healing right now, so the people there probably would rather they didn't stay there too long chattering away. Subaru followed in Todd's wake, Louis still clinging to his right hand.

Todd: "Anyways, now that you're all patched up… Let's get down to business, may I ask you to do something for me?"

Subaru: "Mhm, yeah. That way I'm not gonna be as guilty compared to being left with nothing to do. Let me know whatever you need. I'm ready for anything, so long as the task doesn't involve eatin' shoes."

Todd: "Seems like Jamal really tried your patience… Okay, I getcha, I won't let him behave like that. At least for now."

What Todd had glanced over to as he thought about that was a group of black tents.

Subaru followed his gaze and looked over at those tents before asking him "What are these for?"

Todd: "They hold the stockpiles for our encampment. We've brought them here because we need them for one reason or another, but I suck at tidying 'em up properly. So that's where you come in, considering you pride yourself in keeping stuff neat and tidy."

Subaru: "…Did I ever even say that?"

Todd: "You didn't? Still, I was hoping it was. And if it's not, then you'll still surely give it your all, out of gratitude for me helping you out."

Subaru: "…What a fantastic personality you have, Todd-san."

Todd said something rather mean-spirited, all the while with a good-natured smile on his face. Subaru's expression grew stiff at his words, before then eyeing up the group of black tents.

There were around twenty tents at a glance; if those were all filled with their stockpiles, and worse, if as Todd had said, they were in need of a tidy-up, then the going was going to get tough.

Subaru: "Doubt I'll finish this in a day or two…"

Todd: "All's good so long as you tidy 'em up by the time the Dragon Carriage from the Supply Group turns up. Hahaha."

Subaru: "Hahaha…"

That meant he had to hurry.

The difficulty level went up a bit once the injuries on his left hand were factored in, but there was nothing he could do about that.

Subaru: "This is so I can earn my bread for today, this is so I can go back to Emilia-tan along with Rem…"

Louis: "Uuuh!"

Louis raised her voice beside Subaru as the latter firmly clenched his fist, ready to go and challenge the hard work. She was still dangling down from his right arm, eliciting a loathsome grimace from Subaru.

The Sin Archbishop was burdening Subaru's mind and body, with the look on her face seemingly like she had no idea what was going on. With her craftiness still there, she was a formidable foe who gave the awfully strong impression she'd become hard to handle.

Subaru: "The rate at which I get involved with people I have no recollection of, kinda like with Shaula, is way too high…"

Louis: "Aah, Uuuh."

Whether she understood him or not, Subaru made his way over to the black tents while pulling Louis along, with her seemingly in a good mood.

Unlike with Shaula, where they'd finally comprehended each other at the end, he could not get through to Louis in the first place. He made his way over all the while thinking how it would be impossible to comprehend each other.

3

Rem: "…So, you were tidying away the tent until dark."

Sitting on the floor with her legs folded sideways, Rem greeted Subaru like that, who had returned after finishing a bout of strenuous work.

As Subaru lowered the corners of his eyebrows at her, Rem narrowed her eyes at his reaction,

Rem: "I'm not greeting you."

Subaru: "Don't read my mind… But, they let you out of the prison, right?"

Rem: "—. The people here seemed like they didn't bear any hostility towards me, at least."

The reason she cast down her eyes was probably the meeting engagement that had occurred by the side of the river, which Subaru had heard of—and the guilt that manifested from that unfavorable first meeting between Jamal's squad and Rem.

Rem was generally unfriendly towards those she did not trust.

Her attitude towards Subaru had softened quite a bit after getting to know him, but her old characteristic was beginning to resurface as of now, since she lost her memories. He believed she was reflecting on it.

Subaru: "Though, well done for being able to self-reflect, Rem. That's deserving of a hanamaru."

Rem: "…From whose perspective are you looking at me? Even if you compliment me, it means nothing to me. In the first place,”

Aiming a stinging retort at the smiling Subaru, Rem lifted her gaze up.

Although Subaru was lured into doing the same, all he saw was the cone-shaped, thin ceiling of the tent. He tilted his head, wondering what she was going on about. And then, Rem clicked her tongue in a soured mood,

Rem: “Why are you in the same tent as us? I don’t want to be asking for too much, but couldn’t they be more considerate…”

Subaru: “No, I think this is the incarnation of being considerate. I told Todd-san we’re companions going on the same journey, so if it’s… owowowowowow!”

Rem: “Don’t just say things as you please!”

The moment he sat down next to her, Rem’s hand squeezed the area around his hip bone in an iron grip. She glared at him while he suffered from the creaking bones in his lower back.

However, a tiny silhouette barged in between them, stopping Rem’s actions with an “Ahh!”.

That was—

Rem: “Again, you…”

???: “Uuu!”

Leaning heavily against Rem’s hand, which was gripping onto Subaru’s waist, Louis used her whole body to raise her objections.

Rem, who indulged with Louis for some reason, let out a sigh of resignation at her efforts, and reluctantly broke off her punishment towards Subaru. She pulled Louis closer to her knees instead.

Like that, she placed Louis’s head on her legs, which she couldn’t move around too much, and gently caressed her body.

Subaru: “Tch.”

Rem: “…Why are you clicking your tongue this time? I don’t understand how you could be so cold-hearted, when she is attached to you like this.”

Rem’s reaction towards Subaru’s unsavory attitude wasn’t very good.

All he could do was observe each and every one of Louis’s movements, who was lying down on Rem’s lap, so he could protect Rem whenever Louis decided to show her true colors.

—Ordered by Todd, Subaru had begun cleaning up the interior of the black tent.

Just as he had initially thought, sorting out the inside of the tent wasn’t something that could be finished in a short time. Of course, part of the reason was Subaru’s left hand’s condition being far from perfect, but it was also because the rules on how to organize things didn’t seem to apply to the Vollachians, far more than he had expected. Adding to that—

Subaru: “This one keeps interfering with every little bit of my work. I exerted all that effort tidying up their stuff, but she topples it over and scatters it around, one after another. Thanks to her, I’m not making any progress at all.”

Rem: “She doesn’t know anything, so it can’t be helped.”

Subaru: “You don’t know anything as well. But, you wouldn’t do anything like what she did. That’s all, thus it has been demonstrated! QED!”

Rem: “You’re saying things that don’t make any sense at all, again!”

Knowing that the cause of Rem’s unwelcoming treatment towards Subaru was lying within Louis, how could he not act towards Louis with the same attitude?

He knew this was a unfavorable spiral of treating each other badly, but he couldn’t bring himself to get along with Louis, even if it was just on the surface. —He simply could not stand her with every fiber of his being, and it was something he was unable to conceal.

Subaru: "…"

Feeling greatly disheartened, Subaru sprawled down on the floor on his back.

The tent with only three people, Subaru, Rem, and Louis—it was only for a few days, but Todd had distributed it to them as a place to stay.

Since his allies didn't come back after entering the forest, Todd had smiled at Subaru's group in the midst of setting up camp, saying they could use the ownerless tent as they liked.

Subaru: "No, it's not a thing to smile at, but…"

Despite that, he highly appreciated that Todd had given them a spare tent.

Setting aside Subaru himself, he was worried about leaving Rem in a womanless camp. Todd told them they would be treated as guests, but it was unknown how far his word had spread.

Not to mention, Rem had already incurred Jamal's displeasure.

If possible, Subaru wished she would stay by his side, so he could keep her within his sight while he busied himself with chores—

Rem: "Don't just keep sulking, and eat."

Subaru: "Eh?"

Subaru was absorbed in his thoughts, lying flat on his back. What blocked his view was the skewer that Rem held out above his face.

When he sat up spontaneously, Rem turned away from him, shoving the skewer closer to him.

Subaru: "This is…?"

Rem: “They say it’s a meal. It was being distributed among the people in the camp, so I also went and received some… Because, even if it’s just little by little, I need to practice my movements.”

She murmured, rubbing her leg with her free hand.

Neither of them knew when the condition of her legs would be back to normal, restored from their incapacitated state, but Rem herself was probably feeling more troubled and anxious over them than Subaru.

Surrounded by people she didn’t know in their encampment, not in possession of her memories, and standing in an uncertain position in this mess. Even if she wanted to take action to know about something, her legs were not free to act.

Rem: “…Can you just take it? My hand is becoming tired.”

Subaru: “I-I got it, I got it. Uhh, did you eat already?”

Rem: “Huh? Why would I eat first when the girl hasn’t eaten yet? There’s no way I can do something as selfish at that.”

Snapping at him, Rem drew the container made out of bones that was placed aside at the edge of the tent closer to her, removing the cloth that covered it and lifting the skewer to Louis’s mouth.

Spoiled by Rem, Louis gladly accepted her act of kindness, gnawing at the meat bit by bit like a chick pecking at food that was given by its parents.

Rem: “Fufu.”

Rem watched over Louis with a tender smile as she continued to peck at her meal.

Unable to tear his eyes away from the sight, Subaru munched at the skewer he had been given. With it seemingly being simply pierced through and cooked, he had no idea what kind of meat was used for it.

Anyway, it was stiff and bland, something that couldn’t exactly be described as tasty.

Subaru: “It’s matched pretty evenly with Emilia-tan and Beako’s cooking…”

Rem: “What are you muttering on ab… ah,”

Subaru: “—?”

As Rem glanced over at Subaru, who stated his miscellaneous thoughts about the meal out loud, her eyes suddenly widened. Subaru frowned at her reaction, wondering what was going on.

Her blue eyes were locked onto Subaru’s face. If so, he speculated that the reason for her astonishment belonged to his face, but…

Subaru: “What’s wrong? Wait, don’t say anything sad like, “It’s the first time I looked at your face properly.”“

Rem: “That’s… not it, but… uhm, your tears…”

Subaru: “Tears?”

Rem: “…Tears… are rolling down your face. Haven’t you realized?”

Subaru’s breath caught in his throat at Rem’s words, who so hesitantly begun to speak. After that, he slowly and timidly touched his own cheek, surprised by the warm droplet that met the tip of his fingers.

It was not a ridiculous lie made up by Rem, it was the truth.

Subaru: “Huh? I’m… crying?”

Rem: “Ye… yes, you’re crying. What’s the matter? Did the injuries on your fingers…?”

Using a hand to wipe away the tears that spilled over his cheeks, Subaru was confused by the waves of emotion churning within him. However, the cause of his tears wasn’t the pain from his broken fingers.

The cause was something more different. Maybe it was because of the calm, quiet moment that he was spending together with Rem.

Subaru: “…”

The situation was far from being settled.

He was separated from Emilia and the others, didn’t know how to get in touch with them, in a land that would drag him through a terrible experience if his background was ever discovered, and he was also in a wretched state, lacking any sort of relationship with the amnesiac Rem. On top of that, he had a Sin Archbishop who was the embodiment of the evils in this world as company, and they were led by Natsuki Subaru, the person who had the complete set of ignorance, incompetence, impotence, and incautiousness.

A single reason for him to be optimistic did not exist. Not a single reason existed, but—

Subaru: “…We’re talking and eating together, like this. That… made me happy.”

Rem: “…”

Subaru: “S-Sorry, you don’t understand what I’m saying, right? I’m spouting nonsense again. It’s natural for you to think I’m being disgusting… But, I’m being truthful.”

Giving up on pushing back his tears by shutting his eyes, they continued running down his face as he sniffed, gazing at Rem.

Subaru: “For such a long time, I’ve wanted to spend time with you like this again, peacefully.”

Placing the half-eaten skewer on his lap, Subaru practically squeezed the words out of his throat.

Wiping his flowing tears with a sleeve, the sound of him stifling his running nose echoed inside the silent tent.

For a while, all that was produced in the tent was the awkward noise, but—

Rem: "…I don't understand what you're saying."

Out of the blue, Rem spoke in a voice that sounded like a brief sigh.

Rubbing away his tears, Subaru held his breath. He also embraced the feeling of embarrassment, thinking Rem's hardened, icy tone to be a just reaction.

A man she did not know, who had an unlikable scent drifting around him to boot, was bawling his eyes out in front of her. No one would look at him and not think of him as suspicious in that case.

He had damaged Rem's trust yet again. This time, it was a fatal, irreparable…

Rem: "But, I don't think I would laugh at you while you weep. I do find it… eerie, but not to the point of it being disgusting."

Subaru: "—Eh?"

Subaru widened his eyes, lifting his face at the unexpected words.

In front of him, Rem caressed Louis's head on her lap, her eyes continuing to be turned away from him, her lips trembling as if she was carefully choosing her words.

Rem: "…That's all. Finish your meal quickly. I'm tired… for today."

Subaru: "—ah,"

Rem said quickly with her eyes closed, and Subaru's reaction was belayed as he was momentarily confused about what she was referring to. However, when he realized she had been talking about the half-eaten skewer on his lap, he hurriedly chomped down on it.

Subaru: "Ri-Right. Yeah, it's tasty. Salty and tasty."

Rem: "It's salty because of your tears… My meal doesn't feel delicious because of your body odor. It's unfair."

Subaru: "That's… uhh, I will think of a remedial plan, yes."

Rem’s manner of speaking was chilly, and sharp.

Yet, she hadn’t told him to go away, nor had she told him she didn’t want to eat together. Then all that was left was for Subaru to come up with a different plan.

Otherwise, he wouldn’t be able to keep this leisurely time going.

Subaru: “…But, if you’re going to talk about it being “unfair”, then I’ve got something I want to say too.”

Rem: “Something you want to say? What is it? If it’s about your finger…”

Subaru: “—About her. About that girl who’s sleeping all fine and dandy on your lap.”

Subaru jerked a finger at Louis and frowned as she enjoyed her lap pillow from Rem. Seeing that, Rem narrowed her eyes, as if she were saying “There you go again.”

However, Subaru was trying to convey a different point to what he had repeated up till now.

Subaru: “Rem, you keep mentioning my body odor… I don’t really like the way you’ve been putting it mind you, but she must smell like me too. Yet you’re ignoring that?”

The lingering scent of the Witch grew stronger each time he Returned by Death.

But, if that was something that came to having some affinity with the Witch—in it being related to the Witch Factors—then naturally the Sin Archbishop Louis should possess the same stench wafting off her.

Thinking back to Rem’s rage-filled reaction to those of the Witch Cult, that should have been a certainty…

Rem: “…? What are you talking about? Don’t lump this girl together with you.”

Subaru: "…Huh?"

Rem: "You know, she doesn't smell anything like you. Please don't act so desperate, spouting out such ridiculous things."

However, the response Rem gave to Subaru's previous words was rather unexpected.

He reflexively stared back at Rem, but he couldn't see anything strange about her expression. She did not seem to be lying, nor did it seem like she was trying to deceive Subaru.

Meaning that she truly did not sense the lingering scent of the Witch, the miasma, from Louis.

Subaru: "It couldn't be that she can mask her miasma, right? No way, but for what purpose?"

From all that he'd experienced until now, there'd only been a scarce few who could sense the miasma, otherwise known as the lingering scent of the Witch. Rem aside, who had reacted the most to it, a severely limited number of people had shown a reaction to it, such as Beatrice and Ryuzu.

And besides, he didn't think that Witch Cultists even thought of concealing that sort of stuff.

Those people were Apostles of Treason who infringed on the world as if they owned the damn place. And yet…

Rem: "Is that quite enough? If you're done eating, I'd like to get ready for bed soon, since it looks like this girl wants to hit the hay too…"

Subaru: "Oh, Uhm… Well, are you for sure about what you said before?"

Rem: "How insolent."

Rem flat out shut Subaru's question down.

However, it looked like her attitude was proving all the more that what she was feeling was no lie.

Subaru: "…You can't sense any miasma from Louis?"

Subaru didn't really know what significance that had.

Though, all he felt a horrible sensation, like something awfully eerie was going on, like something that would bode poorly for him.

Rem: "Sorry, but could you put your bowl away? I'll prepare the beds."

Subaru: "Oh, yeah, sure. Like, I'm not gonna get up to no good, so no need to worry."

Rem: "—. That makes me all the more uneasy."

With her saying that rather stiffly, Subaru dejectedly slinked out of the tent to put away the bowl housing the skewer he'd just finished eating.

Campfire lights were visible in the dead of the night, dotted around various places of the encampment. No one from Subaru's group had been ordered to do so, but there would likely be some people keeping watch as the night went by.

Preparing for war was tough, albeit he only knew about this from manga and games.

Subaru: "…I'd like to get away from here as soon as possible."

Todd was a nice guy, but even so, it didn't look like Subaru was ever going to get used to the atmosphere of the battlefield.

He needed to get out of here as soon as possible and find a way to meet back up with Emilia and the others.

That was what Subaru decided. And as he firmly clutched his bowl, he noticed something.

Subaru: "…Huh, my fingers aren't hurting. No way, did the medicine already do its trick?"

He'd clutched the bowl tightly with the fingers of his left hand without even realizing. He looked down at them, surprised at how effective the medicine was.

They still felt uncomfortable. But the numbing heat he felt going through them served as proof that his left hand was starting to work properly.

Subaru: "He chatted so much crap about Healing Magic, but doesn't medicine also more than do the trick…"

Subaru gave his left hand a small shake as he thought back on what Todd had said, before continuing on his way.

He had so many things that he needed to think about. Regarding Rem, Louis and himself.

Though there were so many, he would improve each one; one by one.

???: "…"

A lone silhouette watched Subaru as he left the tent and slowly walked off.

The man, who had an eyepatch covering one of his eyes, narrowed his remaining eye and let out a tch towards the back of the figure who was walking away all lackadaisical.

And then…

???: "He has the damn nerve to strut around like that. Such bullshit."

Those words he muttered.

Chapter 8: Name

1

???: “Subaru, you sure are suuuch a busy bee, aren’t you?”

Subaru: “Huh, really?”

Subaru’s nostrils puffed out as he was praised by the silver bell-like voice.

He’d just finished wringing out a cloth that he’d pulled out from a bucket of water, enthusiastically wiping the floor with it, busy cleaning the room they used for guests, when Emilia, the one the voice belonged to, popped in.

She gave him a casual nod as she ran her fingers through her long silver hair,

Emilia: “Yeah. It’s like, you’ve only just recovered, and you’ve already started working. Even though it’s just after all that ruckus with those witchbeasts. It really caught me off guard.”

Subaru: “Hehe, it’s nothing really… Wait, what?! Could it be that you’re lecturing me, telling me that those who are recovering mustn’t over do it?!”

Emilia: “Huh, that wasn’t my intention… But now that you mention it, I guess so. We can’t be having this, Subaru. You need to rest some more.”

Subaru: “Ghaa, I shot myself in the foot.”

Subaru rued how he’d read too much into it, thinking it would have been better if he’d just taken her compliment in stride.

However, a third voice came chiming in from Emilia’s shoulder, before Subaru could reflect on it. And there, a gray kitten squirmed out from amidst Emilia’s silver hair.

Puck: “Fufufu, took you long enough, Subaru. Here was I, thinking that if I allowed Lia to give you some honest praise, you’d try and read between the lines, and fall in way too deep. Just as I had intended.”

Subaru: “Puck, you little… What’s with these devious tricks! The heck do you want?!”

Puck: “Heh, it’s obvious, isn’t it? I’m a fickle cat spirit, that’s the reason. My nature is a mischievous one, leading the hearts of people astray with the help of my cuteness and furriness… Meowmeowmeow”

Emilia: “Jeez, come on Puck, you’re saying strange stuff again. Quit putting Subaru on the spot.”

The little cat spirit had quite the dastardly look on his face, yet defeated he was when Emilia pinched him by the ear halfway through confessing his wicked deeds. She apologized to Subaru, Puck still dangling from her hand by the ear.

Emilia: “I’m sorry, I’d just taken a break from studying, and was taking a stroll around the mansion, when Puck said he’d found you, so I…”

Subaru: “Oh, no, it’s completely fine. As far as I’m concerned, I want to spend as many seconds of the day as possible with you, Emilia-tan. I’ve gotta be thanking Puck here, for having devised that.”

Emilia: “Is that so? I don’t really get you, but I’m glad you’re not angry, what a relief.”

Subaru: “So she didn’t get me! Even though I told it to her straight, to the point it was embarrassing?!”

Abandoning the smile on her face, Emilia furrowed her shapely brows as she listened to Subaru complaining, before then tilting her head in confusion.

Though what he had expressed had been out of relative fondness, sadly, it didn’t look like it had gotten through properly to Emilia.

So, he had no choice but to get even more direct, if he wanted to go further.

Subaru: “Wanting to choose the situation, the mood, and the right day to tell her, it’s all part of a young man’s disposition…”

Puck: “I’d recommend nighttime, otherwise if I’m up, I’d definitely get in the way.”

Subaru: “You sure are showing your upstanding paternal side more and more, ain’tcha.”

It was pretty common for the fathers in this generation to forbid their daughters from having relationships, however, he could clearly tell Puck was the same just by looking at him, fluffball from a different world or not.

As he looked at Puck reproachfully, the cat spirit puffed his chest out, still on Emilia’s shoulder.

Puck: “Of course, considering how cute Lia is, the sheer amount of flies hovering approaching her gets way over the top. There’d be no end to them if I don’t work hard to brush them away, no?”

Subaru: “Oh no, I just thought it’d be handy to pick out one of those flies here ahead of time.”

Puck: “I’ll pass on any flies with such ugly-looking eyes. Besides, it’d be weird for me to let any flies get close to Lia. I’ll search for a proper suitor for Lia, even if it takes me nigh a thousand years.”

Subaru: “That scale’s on the mythical level!”

Though it took the concept of being a doting father way too far, the problem remained that, considering they were a duo of half-elf and spirit, there was a chance they’d seriously end up waiting nigh a thousand years.

Unfortunately, Subaru was a human, so he couldn’t hold a candle to that order of magnitude.

Subaru: “I guess I could at most reach 120 if I really tried hard…”

Emilia: “…? What do you mean?”

Subaru: “Oh, I was talking about my lifespan.”

Emilia: “Your lifespan… Quit it Subaru, that’s weird. You’re still a boy, it’s way too early to worry about these things.”

Subaru: “Well, depends how you look at it…”

Emilia placed a hand over her mouth, stifling a giggle, and then laughed as if she’d heard a joke of the highest quality.

He responded back to her smile with a strained one, however, the man in him was happy to see the girl who was always on his mind smiling. Things were complicated, but first things first, he needed her to recognize this.

Subaru: “At least I won’t need to step into the ring, so long as they keep treating me like a kid.”

Puck: “Pretty good attitude to have, huh, Subaru. Right, the first thing you gotta do is stand on your own two feet as an adult. If you can’t do that, I won’t let you set foot into my house.”

Emilia: “Isn’t this Roswaal’s mansion? What’s this about not letting him set foot there?”

Emilia posed her questions to Puck, who’d listened to Subaru’s quiet determination with his short arms folded.

With that all said and done, Subaru was not discouraged, even after hearing what Puck’d said. If what needed to be done had been decided, then all that was left for him was to make a beeline straight towards his goal.

Subaru: “Heh, look at me, Puck. You see, I’m the sort who has no qualms doing the same thing over and over again day in and day out. Like levelling up for a game!”

Puck: “Puahaha, foolish human. In that case, prove to me that you’re not just a rookie who’s all talk. I shall be waiting with the Princess in the innermost part of the castle. Let us go, Princess!”

Emilia: “Do you mean me? Hmph, but I’m aiming to be a King, not a Princess.”

As Subaru and Puck got worked up without caring about anyone around them, Emilia flashed Subaru a smile as the latter was busy wringing his cloth dry. All this, while dealing with the pair’s contrasting attitudes.

Emilia: “Even so, do your best at your work. If you give it your all, then surely someone will be there to see it.”

Subaru: “But I’d like it to be Emilia-tan, rather than some randomer…”

Emilia: “Yeah, yeah, I get that. I can’t watch over you all the time, but I’ll drop in every so often. Besides…”

Emilia lowered her brows slightly, and paused mid-sentence. Then, she turned towards Subaru, as he waited for her to continue, a charming smile appearing on her face,

Emilia: “You’re the one who sees your hard work the most, no? That’s why you’ve gotta give it your all, so that you don’t let yourself down.”

And so, while hitting the nail right on the head of what it meant to put effort in, she made Subaru fall in love with her anew.

2

Subaru: “Man, I just remembered that time I fell in love with Emilia again… Still, it’s getting tough.”

Subaru looked around the messy tent with a scratch of his head.

He’d found himself taken to an encampment of soldiers from the Vollachian Empire; there, he’d been put to work doing odd jobs, while waiting for the supply convoy headed to the village to come.

Subaru was devoting himself to his “He who does not work, shall not eat” mantra for Rem’s sake, who couldn’t move, as well as the freeloading Louis. Thus, he held no shred of hesitation in helping Todd and the other Imperials, since they'd provided him food and shelter, and had treated their injuries as well.

However…

Subaru: "Gotta gear myself up, no matter what's going on."

Subaru muttered those words as he packed the content of their stockpiles, now scattered all over the ground, back into their sacks.

Of course, regardless of how disorderly and violent these Imperials were, there was no way they were storing the items that would be supporting their front-lines in such a "whatever works", unorganized manner.

After all, Subaru had tidied the stockpiles within this tent the day before with great effort. The reason why it was in such a mess was but one.

Subaru: "I'm being harassed by a certain mean-spirited someone…"

Louis: "Ahh."

Subaru: "Oh, I guess there's also the chance you snuck out and caused this mess during the night. Are you feeling like revealing your vile, true nature, Sin Archbishop?"

Louis: "Uuh?"

He glared at Louis as he tidied up the stuff scattered about, her peering at his hand meanwhile.

However, Louis merely offered a vague reply to Subaru's question, biting on her own finger. It looked like she still had no intention of revealing her true nature.

It sure would come in handy for him if she just kept it hidden away forever.

Subaru: "…I have no idea what to think about what Rem told me yesterday."

This morning as well, Louis had tottered along with Subaru from the moment he woke up.

The grim look he'd gotten from Rem, at the time they split up for her legs' rehab, flashed through his mind. However it was unreasonable, considering Subaru was the one who found being followed like this bothersome.

In any case, another reason had been added as to why Subaru could barely handle her, compared to the previous day. And that was because of the information Rem had told him—the testimony that she couldn't sense the lingering scent of the Witch coming from Louis.

Subaru: "…"

Although Subaru hadn't given it much thought thus far, it was pretty unlikely that the lingering scent of the Witch was something only he had.

In fact, he felt like Rem had used those words before when facing Witch Cultists. She must have reacted like that against Petelgeuse, along with the Witch Cultists that man led.

In that respect, the fact that Subaru's miasma grew stronger each time he Returned by Death seemed like something strange even from Rem's point of view, back when she had been on good terms with him.

Subaru: "The power of my miasma has come in handy from time to time… Like against the Ulgarm and the White Whale. But, in the end, it's basically just something that brings me way too many misfortunes."

Even if there had been times where his miasma had come in handy, currently, it served merely as a reason to attract Rem's ire. Thus, his impression towards it was at its absolute lowest.

And, no matter how much he tried to think about it…

Subaru: "There's no damn way that the people in the Witch Cult… And the Sin Archbishops don't have something to do with the miasma."

That was the conclusion Subaru had reached.

Given that he did not know anything about the causes of the miasma, or anything about its finer details, he could only describe it as a theory on the table. Even so, it was something he found difficult to speak about.

The link between the Sin Archbishops and the Witch was plain and clear. The Witch Cultists were quintessentially the manifestation of evil.

Nevertheless…

Subaru: "As paradoxical as it may seem, can we really think that those who don't emit miasma aren't related to the Witch Cult? Like, when we've got this girl right in front of me, are we for real?"

Louis: "Awooh?"

Standing by Subaru's side, as he brooded about the issue, Louis merely groaned with a blank look on her face.

Letting out a sigh, Subaru lifted himself up and began to tidy up the tent.

The tools he'd placed in an upright position had been knocked over, and the parcels he'd arranged in a row had been opened, the stuff inside scattered everywhere.

It was exactly like something a child would do.

Subaru: "Well, I guess this harassment must be something that's not out of the ordinary…"

The reason why the tents he'd tidied up were in a state of disarray was not because of Louis sneaking off. It was more likely that someone else in the encampment was the one harrying him and interfering.

Obviously, since he was in an Imperial encampment, he'd come into contact with people other than Todd. And in most cases, he could hardly call the attitudes they had towards him amicable.

In that respect, it went as Todd had said; he was the odd one out.

Subaru: “That said, it’s still way better than getting socked all of a sudden, or being forced to eat a shoe.”

He couldn’t really deny that his standards in regards to happiness and normalcy had taken a hit, were he to say it out loud. But, the fact remained that it was safe to say that things were easier on account of not being treated to that painful of a welcome.

Though Subaru hated to admit it, he was well used to being shunned, or being disliked.

Like, it wasn’t as if he’d flubbed the battle of his debut during High School so gaudily, and gotten cut off from everyone for nearly two years and all. He’d never been bullied per se, but he was a pro at dealing with the mood around him being acrid.

Thinking about it, his classmates back in High School must have been pretty good people.

Even if they’d treat Subaru like he wasn’t there, it didn’t seem to him like they had harassed him, nor had they found pleasure in making him suffer.

Subaru: “I hope life’s worked out well for all you kind-hearted people out there on the other side. It would be nice if people like Inahata-kun, who went out of his way to give me those flyers, made it big.”

Subaru finished tidying up the tent quicker than he had the previous day, and to the same degree of quality, while recalling the vague memories of this classmate, his face a blur.

That said, it was like the hole had been filled, and he had to re-dig it again. So, the net of the work he had done today had swung into the negative.

Subaru wanted to use those words Emilia had told him before, that someone would see his hard work, or at least, he himself would. He wanted to use them as a prop as well. However.

Subaru: “Not like I can gear myself up if you’re the only one watching me right now. My mood would be a lot different if Rem was the one watching, but…”

Louis: “Ooh, uwaa”

Louis today wasn’t getting in the way of Subaru’s work for now, as if she’d learned from him being angry. While thankful for that, Subaru headed outside, off to the next tent…

Subaru: “…Whoa?!”

He caught his foot on something just as left the tent, and fell over in a heap.

He reflexively pushed his hands against the ground, however, his right hand aside, his left still ached a bit. Even though it was healing up, the after-effects that Rem had left behind had yet to heal completely.

Hence, while groaning in pain, Subaru looked behind him,

???: “Heya, you pussy. What’re you doin’ groveling down on the ground?”

Subaru: “You’re…”

Subaru widened his eyes in surprise. Standing before him, right by the entrance of the tent, was a vulgar-looking man.

He wore an eyepatch over his right eye, had a stubbled face, and his appearance was the epitome of roughness. And to boot, he was the guy who’d made Subaru eat his shoe, in this camp.

If he recalled correctly, Todd had said his name was…

Subaru: “He said it was Jamal, ri… Ghaaa?!”

Jamal: “That’s Jamal-san to you. You, along with those women who keep you company, y'all got no manners, huh. HEY."

The instant he'd deemed that Subaru hadn't been addressing him using "san", the man, Jamal, immediately sprung into action.

Jamal stepped on the fingers of Subaru's left hand, which were still wrapped up in bandages and fitted with their brace, and pushed his heel down as he lay on the floor.

The pain in his fingers returned to him once again as they were grated back and forth. Yet, Subaru endured it, stifling a scream that had been building inside his throat.

Louis: "Awuuu!"

Jamal: "Huh?"

As she let out a yell, Louis clung to Jamal's leg as he stomped on Subaru's hand. She didn't weigh much, and with how built Jamal was, he did not budge an inch.

And just like that, he grabbed Louis by her long hair and tore her off him by force.

Subaru: "Hey, she's just a child!"

Seeing what was happening, Subaru flew into a rage and blurted that out without thinking.

Jamal frowned unpleasantly upon hearing his complaint. He firmly pulled Louis up by her hair, causing her to let out a scream.

Jamal: "Who gives a fuck if she's just a kid? From what I've heard more or less, haven't you been treating this kid awfully coldly? What's with changing your mind all of a sudden?"

Subaru: "It's not like tha… You're going to be the one who'll end up regretting it, if you provoke her too much."

Jamal: "How the fuck do you have the gall to say that. Make up some better excuse."

Jamal snorted, swung his arm and threw Louis down to the ground. The fallen Louis tugged at her hair which had previously been seized, clutched her head and glared at Jamal with tears in her eyes, letting out an "Uuuh".

In all honesty, there was always the chance that Jamal's act of violence could serve as the trigger that would turn Louis back to how she was previously. It wasn't like the desperate words that Subaru had blurted out were completely ad hoc.

Luckily enough, it didn't look like Louis' pain and anger would serve to re-awaken her original personality. It was hard to judge for whom it was a blessing though.

Jamal: "What an ill-mannered brat. No, it ain't just the damn brat. I don't like you, nor the other girl, not a single one of you!"

Subaru: "Gwhooa!"

As he was talking, Jamal grew angry and kicked the side of Subaru's face. The unexpected blow caused Subaru's mouth to open, the violent force cracking a tooth. Blood began to drip from his mouth. The moment the smell and taste of iron spread across his tongue, Subaru looked up at Jamal.

Subaru: "Ngghh… I guess we can say Todd-san is verifying my identity, or rather you've gotten permission to spend time here…"

Jamal: "Hmph, "Todd-san", huh. He's quite fond of you, ain't he? That your last ray of hope?"

Subaru: "…"

Jamal: "Sorry, but I outrank that guy. I listened to his request as a favor, but there's no reason I gotta comply."

Speaking in a rough voice, Jamal once again stepped on Subaru. Subaru curled up at once to protect his head, but this time a kick was thrust into his abdomen. The tip of Jamal's boot caused Subaru's stomach to churn and he groaned from the impact, but the relentless kicking went on.

Jamal: “First, that bitch of yours hurt two of my men. Those who can’t be useful anymore have to be sent back. Such bad luck. And instead of getting something to make up for it… that bastard Todd found something extra.”

Subaru: “…tch.”

Jamal: “If you hadn’t been carrying that knife, I would’ve torn you apart limb from limb on the spot. It’s tough to be a soldier, ain’t it?”

His persistent kicking and remarks struck a nerve. Even without looking up to meet Jamal’s one-eyed glare, his opponent’s aim was clear.

Jamal’s aim was not to hurt Subaru. It was beyond that.

Mostly, his goal was to rile Subaru up and provoke him into counterattacking, and he was likely being rude for that purpose too.

Jamal said he didn’t have to listen to Todd’s words, but the fact he couldn’t completely disregard them could be inferred from their interaction the first time Jamal dealt him a blow with his foot. That’s why Jamal wanted a reason. A reason to kill Subaru.

Not only that, but also a reason to carry out retaliation against Rem. Because of that, Subaru wouldn’t let himself be provoked. As long as Jamal didn’t turn his petty spite towards Rem, whether Subaru’s left-hand fingers were broken again or his remaining fingers were broken, it would be Subaru’s victory. For that reason, he would endure endure endure, endure—

???: “…Oi, what’re you doing over there?”

Jamal: “Tch.”

And like that, in the midst of Subaru continuing to endure, a particular voice came flying out to Jamal. At that moment, Jamal clicked his tongue and drew back his foot, and slowly backed off. Thereupon, with noisy footsteps came along an orange haired youth.

Todd: “Even though no one has any business here, when I heard something coming from over here I expected it had to be you.”

Jamal: “If it isn’t Todd. Aren’t you awfully overprotective. Have you really taken such a liking to that imperial dagger? So you’ll fawn over this coward until he sells it, huh.”

Todd: “…Jamal.”

Squinting his eye, Jamal scowled at Todd. Between the two of them a dangerous air flowed, but that tension was cut by Jamal saying “I’ll stop.”

The one who single-handedly cleared the air was Jamal, who until just then had been kicking Subaru and looking down on him,

Jamal: “If you’ve learned your lesson, be careful not to get underfoot outside the range of my eye. If you fall over again like you did just now, who knows what will happen? Hahahahaha!”

Like that, without any concern for the show of extraordinary violence toward Subaru, he passed by Todd’s side and left. Subaru also had no words to stop him. If he were to bring attention to his injuries here, it would only provoke Jamal the same way.

As soon as Jamal’s back vanished from sight, Subaru lifted his body off the ground.

Subaru: “Ahh, shit… ow… That bastard, such a girly-lookin’ guy has no right to be so persistent. What he did was downright malicious…”

He made a show of being full of resentment towards Rem, but basically, he just had a nasty personality. In the first place, he said Rem attacked him at the start, but wouldn’t that be because he provoked Rem who was already in a high-stress situation?

Certainly, there was the possibility that because she had no memories Rem had jumped to the wrong conclusion when a hand reached out to her.

Subaru: “Well, Rem doesn’t know anything, so it can’t be helped.”

While passing kind judgment on Rem, Subaru spit out some of the blood mixed with saliva in his mouth, and slowly stood up on the spot.

Todd: “You alright? Getting mixed up with Jamal was bad luck, wasn’t it.”

To Subaru, who was in shaky condition, Todd frowned when greeting him. Had he not arrived, Jamal’s assault would still be ongoing.

Subaru was grateful for that interruption. But, leaving that aside—

Subaru: “I’m fine. More importantly, Rem…”

Todd: “If you’re talking about that young girl, she’s helping out with the cooking. It’s a task you can do sitting down. Jamal also won’t do anything in public view… surely.”

Todd’s words lacked conclusive proof, so Subaru couldn’t be reassured. Wiping blood from his mouth, Subaru looked at his own left hand. The brace had slipped off and the bandages had come undone. His fingers, which should have been left to heal for a while, began to turn an unpleasant color again.

Todd: “Ahh… If that’s how it is, guess I have to take care of you again. Seriously, that Jamal.”

Subaru: “…That guy, what kind of man is he?”

Todd: “Jamal? He became a soldier at the same time as me, and he’s the most successful. He’s from a lower noble family, so promotion to General Third-Class isn’t just a dream as well… Ah, do you know what General Third-Class means?”

Subaru: “Nope, sure don’t. Is it a rank?”

When Subaru shook his head, Todd nodded and said “I see”, and put up his fingers.

According to his explanation, in the Imperial Army of Vollachia being called General was apparently part of their ranking system.

Private, Private First-Class, General Third-Class, General Second-Class and above that—

Todd: "When it comes to Generals of the First-Class, there are only nine people in the Empire who are extraordinary. The military personnel who serve the Emperor directly are called the Nine Divine Generals. Well, if you make it that far, it's no longer a matter of lineage or achievement."

Subaru: "Is it talent?"

Todd: "Yeah, that's how it is. That's why General Third-Class is the highest ordinary people like us can aim for."

Listening to the story of the not miserable Todd, Subaru thought back on the behavior of Jamal from before.

General seemed to be a position that served the same function as an officer in the military, but Jamal hardly seemed to have that capacity. He was self-centered and his empathy was low by nature. It was easy to understand that he'd be the incompetent type of superior officer.

Subaru: "On the battlefield, they say quite a few soldiers die because they were hit from behind by a stray arrow. Tell that guy from your own mouth would you?"

Todd: "That's an exaggeration. Anyway, shall we get your medical treatment?"

Subaru: "Can I ask a favor? …Before that, I'd like to see Rem's face."

Todd: "My my, aren't you deeply in love… That poor young girl."

Despite the pain in his fingers, confirming Rem's safety was top priority. Todd shrugged his shoulders at Subaru's attitude and drew his attention towards Louis, who was curled up in a ball in front of the tent.

She wrapped the hair Jamal had pulled around her fingers and growled low like a beast.

Todd: “Your deceptive face doesn’t suit your nature. I like strong children with fighting spirit.”

Louis: “Aah—! Ooh, aah—!”

Turning towards Todd’s laughter, Louis howled as if in response.

“If you like her, you can take her” was on the tip of his tongue, but he didn’t want that to reach Rem’s ears and have her getting angry again, so Subaru kept his mouth shut.

3

Rem: “—That stench, have you gotten injured again?”

Subaru: “Oh… you knew?”

Rem: “I know. Since the child is watching, please keep in mind the behavior we spoke about.”

Saying that, as they gathered around the same table for lunchtime, Rem warned him.

Although there was a part of that matter he couldn’t agree to, there was no merit in going against her so he nodded his assent. At Subaru’s side, Louis mimicked him and nodded.

Subaru had been on the receiving end of Jamal’s vicious bullying and Todd’s kind offer of help after. Once Rem’s safety had been confirmed, Subaru accepted treatment at the medical tent.

—The person in charge of the medical tent had been shocked to see Subaru come again, but after that was taken care of, he finished up cleaning another tent, and they came together for lunch.

Since lunch at the encampment was rationed, a suitable amount was gathered from what had been made by the people at the distribution station, and the clean up system assigned sequentially.

With Rem helping to prepare and serve the meal, and since they were considered outsiders, Subaru’s group held back until the end and mostly ate what looked like leftovers.

Subaru: “Well, this can’t be called living in luxury. Eating as much as you can would be most satisfactory.”

Said Subaru, as he brought his and Rem’s portions and placed them on the small table. Louis too, cheekily set down her own portion in the same way as Subaru.

Like that, each of the three reluctantly sat down at the table to eat a somewhat late lunch.

Subaru: “How were you up till now? You didn’t run into any kind of trouble?”

Rem: “There was nothing in particular. I had to take care with my legs, so… The only thing I helped with was a bit of cooking. Besides, I’m helping while being taught.”

Subaru: “While being taught… Did your body remember how to do that sort of thing?”

Rem: “…”

In response to Subaru’s urgent question, Rem’s pale blue eyes narrowed and her lips pursed.

Subaru panicked as to whether he had put too much force into that reaction, but Rem immediately let out a sigh and said,

Rem: “…If I said I didn’t hope for that, I’d be lying.”

Subaru: “Rem…”

Rem: “I thought if I tried doing this and that, maybe there would be things my hands are familiar with. But, that would be too convenient right?”

Quietly looking down at her own hands, Rem murmured as if ashamed of her own foolishness.

But who would deride Rem’s hopes as foolish? In a situation of being unable to remember the parts that make up oneself, Rem's attitude of clinging onto a solution, who could tell her that?

Rem: "…Why are you making such a bitter face?"

Subaru: "Why you ask, that's…"

Rem: "—. You knew me before. I understand that. There's no reason to doubt it."

Fixing her gaze on Subaru who had cast down his eyes, Rem surprised him by saying that.

Until now, Rem had only expressed negative opinions of Subaru, but for the first time she made something of a concession.

Understanding that, hope sprouted in Subaru's chest.

However—

Rem: "But no matter how many times you call me Rem, I cannot accept that it is my name. I wonder what that even means."

Louis: "Aaah…"

Rem: "If, by some chance, this child spoke to me, maybe it would be different but,"

While saying that, Rem looked happy as she stroked Louis' hair. Being gently patted, Louis was absorbed in finishing up her own portion which lay under her nose.

Despite her carefree attitude, and unfortunately, even if she had a speck of self-consciousness, she would not be able to talk about Rem with her own mouth. Even supposing she was able to speak, Subaru would not let her. No matter what, Subaru's unending hostility would make it so.

Todd: "What the heck, you're scowling. You shouldn't be so gloomy at the dinner table."

Taking a seat at the dinner table of these three people, Todd cut in with a friendly tone.

An uneasy silence fell as a result of his intrusion. Relieved by the sudden change in atmosphere, Subaru looked at the man seated next to him, letting out a “Todd-san, huh”. After the aforementioned incident with Jamal, Subaru felt he was a nice guy for having saved him.

Subaru: “Thanks for looking out for me earlier, but shouldn’t you eat with your friends?”

Todd: “Hmm? Well, after socializing with the same guys for such a long time, not eating together for a day or two won’t change our relationship much. I’d rather gain influence with you lot.”

Subaru: “Even if you did, we don’t have much to offer.”

Todd: “That’s the idea of yield, or repaying a debt after achieving success. Think of it as in up-front investment.”

Though Todd spoke lightly, he changed the atmosphere whether he had been meaning to or not. And then, Todd said “At any rate”, and suddenly put his arm around Subaru’s shoulder.

As Subaru immediately drew back in surprise, he leaned in close to Subaru’s ear,

Todd: “Compared to yesterday, it looks like you can talk properly. Were you able to make up?”

Subaru: “Make up… I wonder. I want to think my sincerity was able to reach her a little but…”

Rem: “—. I can hear you. If you think you can speak freely without reserve you are mistaken.”

Louis: “Oooh!”

With a sharp look, Rem expressed her displeasure with the two men’s conversation. It looked like Louis was cooperating with her as she feigned innocence, perhaps because she intended to make Rem her ally. The synergistic effect of Rem's cold answer and her acceptance of Louis made Subaru's chest heavier.

It seemed that it was transmitted to Todd with his arm wrapped around Subaru, "Hey now," he said, bringing his arm around to tap Subaru's shoulder…

Todd: "This is depressing. At least you two are at a place and distance where you can speak. That alone would be much better than me."

Subaru: "Ah, come to think of it, you did mention you're separated from your fiancée."

Todd: "Right, my fiancée is living in the Imperial Capital. It's true that I have to complete this mission, but the time we've been separated is too long to begin with. Why oh why, do I have to be so lonely and suffer? Y'know?"

Subaru: "Is that loneliness the reason you're keeping us company?"

Todd: "That's right. So, let me do that as much as possible. It's worth the trouble."

It might be because he didn't let things get out of hand here, but on the inside Subaru was grateful for Todd's concern. It would be tactless to thank him directly though. He also benefited from the state of affairs. In that manner, the four of them went ahead with their meal but—

Subaru: "Actually, we were told our group could catch a ride in the vehicle of the supply team, but how long is Todd's group likely to stay on this mission?"

Todd: "Didn't I say? Until we find the people of Shudraq hidden in the forest… If we don't find them, we could be stuck here for years. It's not easy to serve the palace."

Subaru: "The people of Shudraq…"

Picking up his wooden spoon with a bitter face, Todd answered Subaru's pondering.

People of Shudraq—At first, when Todd told him at the encampment, Subaru guessed it was what the masked man he met in the woods was called. Thanks to him giving Subaru the knife, he owed him a debt of gratitude. So he didn't tell Todd about his existence, but now that seemed ungrateful.

In terms of gratitude, Todd had helped just as much as the masked man.

Then, what was the reason honoring his debt to the masked man over Todd?

Subaru: "If Todd's group finds those people of Shudraq, what will you do? You set up an encampment like this, so do you intend to… fight them?"

"…"

As best he could, Subaru tried to pose his query in an unconcerned manner. However, a sense of urgency he couldn't hide remained in his voice.

In fact, though she didn't go into the topic, Rem's face expressed her reaction to what he said. Even if she wasn't paying attention, there's a reaction to avoiding the word 'fight'.

And when asked, Todd closed his eyes to Subaru's words,

Todd: "Nah, it seems the Generals don't want to fight if at all possible. I don't know the details, but it seems the people of Shudraq are a very powerful tribe. It's certain that we would have a very tough battle if we fought, so the objective this time is negotiations."

Subaru: "Negotiations? What would you negotiate about with a forest tribe?"

Todd: "Don't ask an underling like me so many questions okay?! … I'm not fully in-the-know, but the Imperial Capital or even His Excellency the Emperor himself wants them as a vassal tribe of sorts, probably."

Subaru: “Do the people of Shudraq not obey the Emperor of Vollachia?”

Todd: “There are those who don’t. That’s just the Vollachian way.”

Laughing like a stereotypical soldier, Subaru could only raise his eyebrows in surprise at Todd’s reply. He quietly muttered to himself “Long Live Vollachia” and decided to leave the conversation at that. If he were to believe Todd’s words, the Imperial Army wanted to avoid conflict with the people of Shudraq as well. If that were the case, Subaru could avoid unnecessary bloodshed and conflict between the two groups if he were to offer information.

Even so, Subaru did not have information of much value and if he were to explain why he had hidden this information in the first place, he would have to explain why he had lied about his background.

Subaru: “Ugh, what a dilemma. Can’t get everything I want can I…”

Rem: “…You know, your brows are always furrowed whenever I look at you. I cannot say that you have a very friendly looking face, so shouldn’t you at least try smiling to counteract that?”

Subaru: “That’s some harsh advice…! So if I were to speak with you with a cheery face, would you talk to me in a more kind and cheery manner too?”

Rem: “haaah?”

Rem’s genuinely baffled response hurt Subaru to his core. Seeing Subaru attempt to mask his dismay with a trembling smile, Todd laughed.

Todd: “Well, the journey won’t start if you don’t take the first step. I’ll watch your oh-so-noble efforts, so don’t worry about it.”

Subaru: “Thanks Todd… So what’s the real reason you can’t meet your fiancée?”

Todd: “Hahaha, that’s right, suffer suffer.”

Subaru: “Damn it all!”

Was he getting consoled or teased?

Either way, it didn’t change the fact that it was this attitude of Todd’s that saved Subaru. There was no doubt that this crisis would be worse if not for him. That was why the least Subaru could do was to wish them a speedy completion of their mission.

Subaru: “How long is it actually going to take to clear the forest?”

Todd: “Once the other camps are set up, the plan’s to go all in. The jungle’s big and dense though, so the ground we can cover in a day isn’t much…”

Subaru: “I see. Well, I guess you can’t just speed your way through the forest. You never know what’s inside it, and there’s huge witchbeasts lurking about inside it and all.”

The masked man Subaru suspected to be a member of the people of Shudraq; the hunter who also had a chance to be a member of the tribe; the area in which the massive snake witchbeast had appeared while Subaru was fighting the hunter was full of Rem’s traps as well.

Subaru could easily guess how much trouble Todd’s group were going to have, going through that jungle. Even if he couldn’t explain the context surrounding them, he should at least tell Todd about Rem’s traps. He didn’t want any unnecessary setbacks to—

Todd: “—witchbeasts?”

Todd, who was drinking water while Subaru was lost in thought, widened his eyes in surprise. Wiping his mouth with his sleeve, he stared at Subaru with a startled expression.

Failing to understand why Todd was so surprised, Subaru could only stare back with a puzzled expression.

Todd: “Just now, you said witchbeast right? You’re saying there’s a witchbeast in that forest?”

Subaru: “Uh, well, yeah, I did say that but… Did I say something weird?”

Todd: “Of course you did. You don’t just run into a witchbeast everyday do ya? Now it’s a different story if you’re talking about the witchbeast Kingdom of Lugunica, but they don’t appear anywhere within Vollachia’s borders.”

Subaru: “…”

Todd: “This isn’t a joke right? Right miss?”

Subaru was speechless and could only stay perplexed at Todd’s increasingly serious tone. Todd switched targets to Rem.

Finding herself to be the subject of questioning, Rem answered Todd with a simple “Yes”.

Todd: “Answer me miss. Did you see a witchbeast too? In the Buddheim Jungle?”

Rem: “The witchbeast, though I am not sure exactly what it was… I can say I definitely saw a large, green creature.”

Todd: “Was there a horn on its head?”

Rem: “A horn? …There was something white and crooked, for sure.”

Upon hearing that reply, a grimacing Todd leapt up. He looked over at Subaru again,

Todd: “What kind of witchbeast was it? What’d it look like?”

Subaru: “A-A snake. A giant snake. About 10 meters. One super giant one.”

Todd: “One, just one is it… Shit, how’re we supposed to know if it’s just one lurking in this massive jungle? But, you don’t seem like you’re lying. The situation’s changed!”

Violently scratching his head, Todd faced away from them, his demeanor completely changed. He started walking off before stopping midway with an audible “Ah”, coming to a realization of some sort. He turned around and returned to Subaru and the others,

Todd: “That was some important information. Things could’ve turned ugly if we didn’t know. You saved us.”

Subaru: “—Uh huh”

Todd proceeded to vigorously pat the still seated Subaru and Rem’s heads. Failing to react in time to the sudden patting, the duo could only look at him in shock. Paying no mind to their bewilderment, Todd turned away once again.

He then started moving towards the people still in the middle of their lunch.

Todd: “Camp Captains, gather up! We’re going to the General! It’s important news!”

He clapped his hands together as he started assembling some people. The sounds of many footsteps could be heard as the camp was whipped up into a frenzy. Todd continued on to a tent at the back – which was probably where war meetings and other such important discussions were held.

The two could only watch on absentmindedly at the intense energy that now took over the camp.

Rem: “…That was quite the reaction. That creature… Is a witchbeast that important? Of course, I know that it is a dangerous being but.”

Subaru: “—. Actually, I might not have been properly acknowledging how dangerous it was.”

Rem: “I see…”

Rem was unconvinced, to say the least, but Subaru himself had yet to fully organize his thoughts in order.

That was how shocking this revelation had been to Subaru.

Subaru: “witchbeasts are……rare here.”

That had been unexpected to put it mildly, but moreover, it had never even crossed his mind.

To Subaru, life in another world and the existence of witchbeasts were concepts inseparable from one another. One could not break this bond no matter how hard they tried. Excluding his first day at the capital, witchbeasts had always been a major factor in the numerous events that unfolded after he was transported here.

The witchbeast scuffle that Meili set in motion starred the Ulgarms, the White Whale that was needed to fulfill Wilheim’s deepest wish, and the Great Rabbit that had tried to devour the Sanctuary.

Though witchbeasts were nowhere to be found in Priestella, the place he went to after – Pleiades Watchtower – could be called without exaggeration, witchbeast headquarters.

Needless to say, the most memorable witchbeast to Subaru would be the Crimson Scorpion.

Subaru: “…I got myself a little down but, anyway… I arrived here with my own assumptions so I never would have thought that witchbeasts were rare.”

He thought for sure that witchbeasts would pop up anywhere in the world like a monster from an RPG. Yet, that did not seem to be the case.

If he thought about it, even back in his original world, it was not like you could find lions or giraffes anywhere in the world. So in a way, this should have been obvious.

Subaru: “I also found out for the first time that Lugunica’s called the witchbeast Kingdom.”

Even if it was a large threat, Todd’s entire attitude did a complete one-eighty in reaction to one witchbeast. If you compared that “normal reaction” in Vollachia to someone in Lugunica, it was no wonder why Lugunica was called the witchbeast Kingdom.

Someone like Meili must sound like a fairy-tale.

Subaru: “So does that mean that if she went to a country or place with not that many witchbeasts around, she could live like a normal child…?”

Rem: “Hey, excuse me.”

Rem called out to him while Subaru held his head at an angle, pondering about the future of Meili, who he was now separated from.

Wondering what was up, Subaru looked to see Rem pointing on top of the table. There, he found Louis sleeping with her plate empty.

Rem: “It seems she ate herself full and has fallen asleep. Though I despise it, could you please help me carry her.”

Subaru: “You’d go as far to say you despise it…”

Bitterly laughing at Rem’s words, Subaru cocked his head in resignation. After cleaning up four plates – the fourth being Todd’s forgotten lunch, Subaru reluctantly lifted Louis up.

He knew this because Louis would sometimes latch onto him but she was light. Her appearance made her look like a normal young girl. Honestly, only her appearance made her look like a normal young girl.

Subaru: “Are you good to go Rem? My back is free…”

Rem: “What a displeasing offer. There is no need for your assistance. I can at least take care of myself…”

Saying that, Rem took hold of a wooden cane leaning on the table—though, it was a “wooden cane” in name only, as it looked more like a random, thick branch that had been picked up somewhere.

The handle was wrapped in cloth, likely to prevent any splinters. It was a simple and improvised cane. Setting the cane, Rem stood up.

Her stance and gait still left much to be desired.

Rem: “—I’m, okay.”

Subaru: “…Are you sure? There’s no need to be so stubborn you know. If you’re in trouble you can rely on me.”

Rem: “I will not rely on you. This is nothing. You make sure you do not drop her.”

Subaru: “Haih, alright. But, you should know this. The only reason I’m carrying this person is not because I want to, but because it’s for you.”

Rem: “What in the world is compelling you to say stuff like that…”

Simply, Subaru did not want Rem to find out his view of Louis was becoming positive of his own accord. Getting tired of his comments, Rem followed Subaru with her cane, albeit with some difficulty.

Subaru returned Rem and Louis to the tent they were borrowing. He would probably be going back to clean up the tents again. —Although, he was curious at what Todd’s group was going to do.

Rem: “—. Are you concerned about them?”

Subaru: “…m? Uh, yeah, you could say that. It’s just that…even I have the self-awareness that I’m being dishonest towards our saviors. The talk about the witchbeast may have been careless from me too.”

Rem: “—our, saviors.”

Thinking on it, Subaru could only see himself as a scoundrel who kept on lying. He could only feel deflated and low-spirited on that thought.

However, while listening to Subaru, Rem muttered thoughtfully.

“Savior”, the word she had taken out of Subaru’s speech was said in a tone that was hard to decipher. Though it definitely did not seem to have a positive emotion attached to it.

Subaru: “Rem?”

Rem: “ —. No, it’s nothing. Please forget about it.”

Subaru: “Well, It’s impossible to forget about it now. The way this conversation is going, you’re gonna have to tell me.”

Rem: “Is that so. Would you kindly stop talking to me then.”

Subaru: “Isn’t the distance between us increasing! Don’t just leave me hanging, finish what you were going to say! I’m really curious!”

Subaru was matching his walk speed to Rem, so they were walking at a rather slow pace. It might have been her frustration towards Subaru walking with her, but for one reason or another, Rem let out a small sigh.

Sensing that Subaru was not going to back out, she slowly turned to face him,

Rem: “Um, Todd was it…? I do not hold such a good impression of him.”

Subaru: “Huh? Why? He let useless people like us stay at the camp. He even protects us from the bad guy who makes people eat shoes. I don’t see how you can’t feel grateful.”

Rem: “It is not that I don’t feel grateful. I am thankful of course. Just…”

Subaru: “Just?”

Cutting off her sentence there, Rem showed slight hesitation as Subaru urged her on to continue. The silence that had fallen during the pause had only lasted two seconds when Rem with a deep exhale said,

Rem: “—People who do not ask for others’ names are difficult to trust in my opinion.”

Subaru: “…”

Being told that, Subaru unconsciously stopped his breath.

Wanting to disprove her statement, he thought over the past few days.

—People who do not ask for others' names, is what Rem said.

Keeping that in mind while reflecting back; technically it was correct.

Todd had, to this very day, not called Subaru by his name. He would always say "you" or something similar. If he didn't know his name, that would be the obvious course of action.

However—

Subaru: "Isn't it just a coincidence? Even you Rem, you don't call me by my name do—"

Rem: "—It's Natsuki Subaru, correct? Knowing the name and choosing not to call it, and not even bothering to learn the others' name have two different meanings. That is all."

Subaru: "…"

Rem: "That is just my opinion. There is no choice but to rely on them anyway."

Saying that, Rem overtook a standstill Subaru and continued forward.

Watching Rem slowly advance on, Subaru found himself unable to say anything.

Unfortunately, Subaru didn't have the solution to Rem's hard-heartedness.

As it had been made clear with that exchange regarding the witchbeast, Subaru was still ignorant about a lot of things in this world. He wasn't completely satisfied with the Kingdom and yet, the unknown lands of the Empire were good in its own ways.

Maybe in here, asking for a name or not had a special meaning attached to it. Perhaps asking for a name before offering yours was considered rude.

Even if there was a rule like that in place, Subaru could not tell Rem about it. His lack of knowledge, his lack of cultural awareness, he hated those to no end.

Rem: "…How long do you plan to stand there for?"

Subaru: "Ah…"

Glancing up at the voice, he saw Rem slightly ahead, facing back towards him.

With a hint of impatience in her expression, she leaned on her cane with both hands, glaring at Subaru. Seeing her wait for him, Subaru felt his chest tighten up.

His knees almost buckled.

Subaru: "G…uh"

Rem: "Are… Wh-What happened?! Don't tell me your finger……"

Subaru: "No, I just thought about how you were waiting for me and I…"

Rem: "I wasted my time."

She said that with an expressionless voice and face. This time she turned her back on Subaru to truly leave him.

Frantically chasing after her, Subaru went to apologize to Rem. He thought back to their conversation before and smiled gently.

Rem's probably just overthinking things, he debated to himself.

4

—Like that, the deep-seated doubt that lurked in the bottom of his heart was lifted the next day.

After Subaru and his group parted ways with Todd, the man had attended a meeting with the Generals of the encampment, and the council of war had apparently dragged on until late at night.

Eventually, Subaru ended up bringing Rem and Louis back into their tent, and he had to engage in the tasks assigned to him, all the while saddled with uneasiness. To add to that, Rem had given him the cold shoulder more blatantly than the day before, making him feel like he didn't belong anywhere.

However—

???: "—Oi, wake up, wake up. Until when are you planning to sleep in?"

Subaru: "Nnh… Ah?"

Having his shoulder shaken, Subaru was jerked awake by someone.

Being woken up easily was one of Subaru's few merits, but when he compared waking up on his own to being woken up by someone else, he could reaffirm that it was different from what he was used to. Once he blinked open his eyes, spinning his sluggish thoughts into motion, lying down on the ground, Todd's face popped into his field of vision.

Subaru: "…Todd-san?"

Todd: "Yeah, you look tired. I guess that's reasonable, 'cause we made you do jobs you weren't used to. Anyway, thanks to you…"

Subaru: "—Natsuki Subaru."

Todd: "Hm?"

Todd spoke rapidly to Subaru, who sat up slowly, and he also widened his eyes as Subaru introduced himself to him.

For a moment, it seemed like he had not understood the meaning of Subaru's introduction, but,

Subaru: "Natsuki Subaru, that's my name."

Todd: “Nn… Ahh, were you bothered that I kept referring to you as just “you” by any chance?”

Subaru: “Ah, no, it’s not to the point that it was bothering me, but… I haven’t introduced myself to you, so I thought I might’ve been super rude or something.”

Todd: “Haha, you think too much about it. But, Natsuki Subaru, right? I gotcha, I gotcha.”

While chuckling, Todd clapped the shoulder of Subaru, who lowered his gaze out of embarrassment. Seeing that he was acting the same as always, Subaru felt relieved to an extent.

Apparently, Rem’s worries from yesterday were simply her overthinking the situation, and Subaru’s uneasiness was also groundless.

Todd appeared to be just a careless person for real. Murmuring, “My mistake, my mistake,”

Todd: “Though, that’s an important topic, but I’m here to talk about something even more important. Thanks to what you told me yesterday, the Generals’ plans changed course.”

Subaru: “Changed course… you mean, the conquering of the forest?”

Todd: “Yep, yep. At any rate, if it’s really witchbeasts inhabiting the area, adding that to the reclamation of an unknown forest, then it becomes quite a different story. Even the casualties on our side will be by no means negligible. So…”

Taking a pause in his words, a wide grin spread across his face. And then, he took the half-awake Subaru’s face in his hands, and,

Todd: “Our military operations were called off immediately.”

Subaru: “Immediately? Then, Todd-san, does it mean you can return to your fiancée’s place?”

Todd: “Haha, that’s right!”

“Whoa!” Subaru exclaimed, sharing his joy with Todd, who nodded vigorously.

If the soldier-dispatching operation that would last for years had been changed, and Todd could return to his hometown, then he must’ve felt especially ecstatic. Subaru placed his hands together with the jubilant man, dancing inside of the tent with him.

Then, naturally—

???: “…Um, can you be a little more quiet?”

Subaru: “Ah, sorry, Rem.”

Sitting up on her bed, Rem glared at the two men with a scowl on her face.

He guessed that her soured mood was not because of having just woken up. The reason was none other than her dreams being disrupted by the dance steps of the two men.

She then gave a light shake of her head, murmuring, “Oh well…”

Rem: “—? Doesn’t it smell… somewhat strange?”

Subaru: “Smell?”

Rem: “Yes. It’s different from your body odor.”

Sniffing at the air, Rem waved at Subaru as if she was brushing off a smelly object. Her gesture wounded him to a certain degree, but Todd immediately apologized with, “My bad, my bad.”

Todd: “I thought ‘twas alright because there’s some distance, but I guess you’d know if you have a good sense of smell. But, doesn’t it feel wrong to not hurry up and do something that has already been settled upon?”

Subaru: “Todd-san?”

Saying that, Todd opened the tent flap, and motioned with a hand for the two to come out.

So, Subaru exchanged glances with Rem, before handing her wooden cane over to her, moving towards the entrance.

They lined up next to Todd after that, and saw.

Subaru: “—Huh?”

A dense plume of black smoke was being spouted with tremendous momentum, and a fierce smell of something burning hung in the air.

The great jungle that had filled up every inch of his vision left and right, no matter the distance or where he looked—Subaru was greeted by the sight of the Buddheim Jungle engulfed in scarlet flames, burning and blazing furiously.

Rem: “This is…”

Next to Subaru who stood there in shock, Rem was left speechless by witnessing the same view as him.

Both Subaru and Rem stood still as a stone, staring at the forest that flared with red as if it were a nightmare, staring at the incinerated jungle, and staring at the world that was coming to an end.

Todd: "If it comes to witchbeasts prowling around, there's no telling the number of casualties on our side. When I insisted on that, General Second-Class Zikr, our commander, agreed to it."

Subaru: "…"

Todd: "Thanks to the information you provided us, we ended up with no casualties. You've been very helpful."

He laughed after he finished speaking, slapping Subaru on the back with the palm of his hand. Struck by the friendly impact of the blow, Subaru's lips trembled. His lungs shivered, his throat shook, and his voice quivered as well.

Against Todd's unchanging, amiable attitude, Subaru's wavering voice formed the following words—

Subaru: "Wh… why…?"

Todd: "Why? What do you mean by that?"

Subaru: "But, you said… you didn't want to fight the Shudraqians… right?"

A difficult fight was inevitable if a battle was going to break out, and negotiations were the most desirable to make the people of Shudraq pledge their loyalty to the Emperor.

That was what Todd had told Subaru while they were eating yesterday.

If so, there wouldn't be a battle. Relief had seeped into Subaru's heart back then.

Subaru: "But, this… more so than battle, it's…!"

Todd: "Yeah, we didn't wanna fight them. We don't know how many victims the battle will claim on our side. I could've died too. But, because I was able to obtain what's needed to persuade the General, the issue was taken care of. The Shudraqians won't be able to oppose His Excellency the Emperor as well."

Subaru: "—hk,"

Todd: "I can also go home early, back to my fiancée. Really, really, you were a great find. I told the Generals about you, so you'll definitely receive a reward."

"Maybe you might be given a second dagger," Todd joked, clapping Subaru on the back once more.

And then, as if he just remembered something, he murmured out an, "Oh,"

Todd: "I was told to return after showing you our military gains from this. Sorry, but I might be a little late to breakfast. But, you don't have to tidy up the tents anymore. After a while, we're gonna end up lifting the camp."

Subaru: "—Ah, eh?"

Todd: "Well, well, get a hold of yourself. —Don't make the lil' missy feel uneasy."

Whispering his last sentence in Subaru's ear, Todd gave him a genuine, well-intentioned smile before leaving the area.

In the end, Subaru could not utter a single word at the back of the man who was going far away in his line of sight, unable to do anything but remain silent.

Subaru: "…"

However, no matter if he stayed quiet, or if he was tormented by the confusion whirling within his heart, the scene of the blazing forest both far away and in front of him would never change.

The erupting flames would consume everything, and it would eventually burn down every single sliver of life on the land here.

The gigantic snake witchbeast, or the Masked Man who lived in the forest, and the hunter that had sought Subaru's life weren't exceptions, either. —Everything would be reduced to ashes.

Rem: "—h,"

Next to Subaru, who grinded his teeth together from the shocking realization, Rem suddenly staggered.

When he instinctively supported her slender body with a hand, Rem stiffened the moment he touched her. And then, as she gazed up at him, fear and a sense of rejection began bubbling over into her expression.

Subaru: "Ah…"

Rem: "It's not like this is your fault… I know that. But,"

Subaru: "…"

Rem: "Don't… touch me."

She stifled the fright that threatened to overwhelm her for a moment, slowly pushing Subaru's hand away. She didn't brush it off nor broke it, but she simply pushed it away.

Her words were her honest thoughts. Rem did understand that this situation wasn't what Subaru intended to cause. However, it only brought a meager amount of comfort to him.

Like this, facing the incident that had actually occurred, the comfort was too small—.

Rem: "…It seems like she has woken up."

Rem said, glancing away from Subaru, averting her eyes from the burning forest, and as if looking away from what she did not want to see, she turned to face Louis, who was inside the tent.

Staring at her back, Subaru couldn't call for her immediately.

Even he had trouble wrapping his head around what had happened. As of now, only dialog choices that would be incorrect no matter what he said came to his mind.

So, he could not stop Rem, who was leaving his side at the speed of a crawling infant with difficulty.

He couldn't stop her—

Subaru: "—oh?"

Subaru bit his lip, gazing at Rem's petite back after being rejected by her. He then noticed the tiny sensation that suddenly thumped against his back, letting out a gasp in the process.

He spun around, wondering what had happened, but he did not see anything or anyone that could have touched him from behind. However, the moment he turned his body, he caught a glimpse of something zipping through the corner of his eyes.

It was almost as if it had pivoted around him just as he turned around—

Louis: "Uuuu!!"

The next second, like an explosive fit of a child's tantrum, Louis raised her voice inside the tent.

The Sin Archbishop was irritatingly loud from the moment she woke up, but there was a situation in front of him that he had to prioritize, more so than the Sin Archbishop who was no different than a toddler. Although, it wasn't like he could do anything about it.

Louis: "Uah, Aaa! Aaaaa!!"

Subaru: "—kh, shut it! We're in a dire situation right now! There's no time to dote on,"

You, he tried to shout at the wailing Louis, and knitted his brows together.

He reacted like that because Rem, sitting on the floor and her arms locked around the thrashing child, also had a sudden change in her expression.

Different compared to the fear and sense of rejection from before, she displayed astonishment that purely asked, “Why?”. Her wide blue eyes honed in on Subaru—no, it was not on him to be precise, but,

Subaru: “…My back?”

Judging from the slightly unaligned angle of her stare, Subaru deduced the target of the focus of her gaze. He followed her eyes and turned his head around, peering into his own back.

And then, he realized it too late. —The true identity of the thing that had pivoted around him just a while ago.

Subaru: “—The… arrow’s feather,”

That was exactly what had whizzed past his sight.

Then it was only natural, but the actual arrow itself was attached to the feather, and if the feather was swaying on his back, then that meant—

Subaru: “—Ah.”

Simply, the released arrow had been shot straight into Subaru’s back.

Subaru: “…”

Feeling dizzy, Subaru collapsed on the spot, unable to stand for any longer. His hand immediately shot out, grabbing onto the entrance of the tent, and the tent tilted sideways with the momentum of being toppled over.

However, he could not afford to be bothered by it, as his body had already fallen sideways.

Rem: “Aaaaaaaaaahh—!”

Witnessing the ordeal, Rem let out a shrill scream.

His thoughts swirling inside his head, Subaru absently noted it was the first time he had ever heard Rem's normal scream. The useless comment flooded the inside of his head, overflowing and spilling out of his ears.

Louis: "Aaa, Uuaaa!"

Scrambling up on all fours, Louis approached the fallen Subaru. She shook his body violently, but he was unable to reprimand her, nor did he have any strength to resist.

How could one arrow reduce him into this sorry state?

Rem: "Someone! Someone, please some—! …This… Something like this must be nothing! Such a… shallow injury from an arrow can't possibly…!"

Rem tossed away her cane and rushed to his side as she fell, frantically called out to him while looking at the wound on his back.

Ahh, Rem is really kind, Subaru thought. Even if Rem could not bring herself to believe him because of the miasma, even if he had created a world set on fire with a careless word, if Subaru had collapsed before her eyes, despite all of it, she would raise her voice in an effort to save him.

Subaru thought he did not want to show his weak side in front of this Rem.

If it's just a wound caused by an arrow, then why don't you show 'em by standing back up like it's nothing, Natsuki Subaru.

When he watched long-running TV shows or historical dramas, he often believed the people who died or were immobilized from being stabbed by such thin arrows did not have enough willpower.

Well, even if he excluded the case where his chest had been penetrated by a large arrow, the arrow in his back was not really powerful, just as Rem said. In actuality, it bumped into him so gently that he thought he had been patted on the back.

Why would an arrow like that be—

Subaru: “—Geh, bh, uehk,”

Rem: “—hk, could it be… poison?”

As Subaru retched out the scorching sensation rising up in his throat, Rem arrived at the same conclusion as him.

He was not going to be killed by the impact of the arrow. The poison slathered on the arrow was eating away at him.

His limbs no longer moved, and his mind was sluggish as if he had been struck by a high fever. Something flowed out of his eyes and nose and ears, and his whole body began convulsing.

His ears began ringing thunderously, and he could not hear the voice of the worried Rem. He could not hear Louis’s shrieking that hurt his ears. He could no longer hear them.

The poison, poison, the poison, who, why, the arrow, hunter, forest’s, burning, scorching and flaring, Subaru had unnecessarily, the witchbeast, Todd, burning, Rem, Rem, Rem—.

His consciousness fading in and out, a groan escaped his throat as blood bubbled and frothed out of his lips. And then, opening his bloodshot eyes wide, he tried to take a look at Rem’s face no matter what it took, and noticed.

—Around thirty meters away from the tent, there was a tiny, tiny silhouette glowering at him in a location easily reachable in less than ten seconds if one ran for it.

Subaru: “…”

A child. A small child who was not too different from Louis.

She was a small child with mean-looking eyes. —No, that wasn’t it. She did not have mean-looking eyes. She was glaring at Subaru. With eyes clouded over by hatred, her gaze pierced through Subaru with the intent to kill.

Her hair and face dirtied with soot, it was a girl holding a small bow with hate-filled eyes.

With those fingers, that hand, and the will to do so, she had shot Subaru with a poisoned arrow.

Subaru: "…"

It was natural that he was hated by her.

It was also natural for her to want to kill him.

The results Subaru had brought about caused the girl to pursue her hatred, a fate like that.

If so, this… the retribution that arrived before him—

???: "—No! Wait! Please, wait. Wait…"

Beside his ear, he heard a desperate voice.

He wanted to wait for her. He wanted to stop in his tracks for her. He wanted to lead her by the hand, and smile at her.

He could not do any of those.

He remained unable to do any of those.

Bubbling and churning, he gurgled out blood-red foam, his body convulsed, his eyes rolled into the back of his head, urine seeped across the floor, and he threw up his guzzling, melting organs, while falling down towards the darkness.

???: "Wait…!"

The unsightly, filthy, and thoughtless fool plunged deeper into the darkness.

Descendi—

Chapter 9:
The Way of the Empire

1

A menace that consumed him, bit by bit. An anguish that seemed to turn his very blood into magma. Together, they tore away at Natsuki Subaru's existence, trying to bare his unvarnished self.

An overtime of such cruelty, like peeling off a scab that hadn't fully healed, and exposing the raw wound beneath to the cold air. —His soul brushed against a reality that couldn't be protected.

Would it be pain, grief or sorrow that would come?

Or perhaps, it would be something entirely different; Subaru had no idea.

If there was something he did understand, if there was something that served as salvation, it was but one thing only.

Namely, that the hopelessness he felt would be severed before he could reach an answer, and that the false sense of freedom would—

???: "…Shut it with your wheezing and panting, you."

Subaru: "Mrgh"

Having been liberated from his earlier anguish, Subaru opened his mouth wide, which should have been foaming with blood.

His body was empty, like someone had punched a hole in his lungs, as it gasped for oxygen. And just as he tried to relish its tasteless goodness to his heart's content, something was shoved into his mouth against his will.

Subaru was showered in verbal abuse as he recoiled from the unforeseen blow, coughing and spluttering.

Yet, he could not tell what was going on. He could not see properly.

The tightness he felt on his face served as proof that something was wrapped around his eyes. His face had been bound.

—Actually, no, his face was not the only thing that had been bound. His arms and legs were tied up too.

And with him in this state, someone had forced something into his mouth.

Subaru: “Oergh! Bweh! Wh-Why am I tied u…Guweh?!”

???: “Why the hell are you defying me? Don’t you understand the position you’re in?”

Subaru: “Gha, Gghhk…!”

Subaru was kicked in the pit of his stomach by that violent figure, straight after he had spat out whatever had been stuck into his mouth. The wind was knocked out of him by the impact as he fell over, his opponent spitting after him.

Even the humiliation of being showered in their spit paled before the pain he felt piercing his chest. Nevertheless, Subaru’s mind was engulfed by a sea of confusion as his deprived vision flickered red in pain.

…The stuff that had happened a few dozen seconds prior was churning around his mind.

Subaru: “…”

Subaru had been woken up by Todd, taken outside the tent, and there, the great forest had been set ablaze. And straight after he found out that they had made it happen due to his own gaffe, he had been struck by an arrow in the back and toppled over. The one who had fired it had been a young-looking girl. The moment he had looked at her, his strength had abandoned him, his entire body breaking into convulsions.

He’d suffered while foaming up blood, he’d heard Rem’s voice as she rushed over to him, he’d tried to hold onto his fading consciousness…

Subaru: “This place is…”

???: “Aah? How long are you gonna be fooling ar…”

???: “—Hey, hey, chill out! He’s completely clueless! It can’t be helped! Rather than that, here! Let’s take off his blindfold!”

Subaru: “…Ah”

His thoughts, engulfed in a maelstrom of chaos, were brought back to reality by the conversation happening overhead.

A conversation between two men. One of the voices was gruff, belonging to a man who was like the very embodiment of boorishness and roughness. The other one sounded like velvet, and gave a good impression of someone who could smooth stuff over.

…The faces that went with those voices popped up as a matter of course in Subaru’s mind.

???: “Tch”

With the sound of a tch and that of footsteps, the man who’d kicked Subaru moved away from him. And straight after that, Subaru heard a sigh which came interlaced with shocked exasperation and wryness.

????: “Sorry that was done to you right after you woke up. I think you’re probably feeling muddled and all, but I’ll just take off your blindfold, okay? Though, I can’t remove the rope around your hands and feet, so you gotta bear with it.”

Subaru: “…”

Saying that as he walked up to Subaru, he unfastened the blindfold that was wrapped around Subaru’s head.

Subaru took a deep breath before relishing the feeling of freedom, along with the slight pain that accompanied it. Then he took another one, and another one, before finally holding his breath slightly.

After that, he opened his eyelids and slowly waited for his sight to return.

And…

Subaru: "…I knew it."

What unfurled itself before Subaru's eyes, as soon as his dimmed vision gradually sharpened, were tents, fires and the figures of Imperial Soldiers bustling about.

Subaru was in the familiar, though not so familiar, Imperial Encampment—The place they'd expropriated, where he'd scurried to and fro, doing odd jobs.

Subaru: "…"

There wasn't anything strange regarding the scene itself.

After all, it was here in this encampment that he'd been felled by the arrow wound. Then what was so weird about waking up here, following his treatment after regaining consciousness?

Nevertheless, he still couldn't explain things like the first blow—the fact he'd had a shoe forced into his mouth, and the fact his hands and legs were still tied up, to be sure of his hypothesis.

Even considering how estranged Subaru was from how the Empire did things, if no one batted an eye at this kind of common sense, where the people would tie up one's hands and feet every time the latter was treated, then he would wish for the country's ruin.

In other words, if that was not the case, then it meant that…

Subaru: "I guess I must have died…?"

—It was the most natural to think he had "Returned by Death".

Ironically enough, he readily came up with an idea to confirm that. He would just need to swing his head around and set his gaze on the green forest beyond the encampment.

The result of Subaru's own gaffe had been the jungle burning down, letting the Imperial Soldiers get away with that recklessness.

Black smoke should have been billowing out from the forest, enveloped by the fires of hell. Yet, there it still stood. On his left, on his right, the green jungle stretched across the horizon, in perfect condition.

Subaru: "…"

The scenes vividly popped back into his mind, right after confirming this.

Subaru had fallen due to his arrow wound, foaming at the mouth. Rem had crawled over to him, and there he'd heard her voice, her presence, her entreaty, begging him to not die.

Yet, Subaru had betrayed her there. He ended up dying miserably before her eyes.

The man who knew her, even if she detested him, had ended up dying in this godforsaken land. Just imagining the amount of fear and anxiety the amnesiac Rem would have experienced tore his heart asunder.

While at the same time, he thought. —I never want to make her feel that ever again.

???: "We found you right as we went out to fetch some water, yeah. Sorry, but you've been captured. You're our prisoner."

And thus, the man squatted down in front of him, as his heart was filled with strong emotion.

The individual flashed him a velvety smile, his eyes beaming. Subaru knew who he was. —Todd, the only person who'd acted friendly towards Subaru and Rem, in this encampment full of Imperial Soldiers.

He was the man who had patiently spent his time with Subaru, the latter knowing so little about the Empire; Subaru even considered the fact he'd been picked up by him at first, a stroke of good fortune.

That was, until he'd backed burning the forest to the ground, using Subaru's words as a pretext.

Subaru: "…"

Hardly ten minutes had passed physically, but his carefree report had sent chills running down Subaru's spine.

The Imperial Soldiers had ruthlessly burnt the forest to the ground, straight after they'd decided that entering the forest to invade the people of Shudraq, the purpose for which the troops had been dispatched for, would prove troublesome. And adding to that, they'd lauded Subaru for his contributions, since he'd provided them the information that ended up being the clincher for their choice.

In the Sacred Vollachian Empire, the strong were revered and the weak were oppressed.

It was a great nation which went by the creed that only in the Sword Wolf, the symbol of a wolf pierced by swords, were there the qualifications to live.

A mentality like Todd's probably wasn't at all unusual in the Empire.

He could even understand them going ahead with the plan to set the forest on fire, once they'd heard there was a witchbeast inside.

Nevertheless, they would not mesh well with the people of the Kingdom of Lugunica, let alone Subaru. Maybe Roswaal at best, since he was a clump of rationalism.

Either way, he must not allow them to burn the forest down this time.

Subaru: "…"

Subaru let out a gulp as he took what had happened last time as being his failure.

The fact that Subaru had ended up getting himself killed was whatever, but the fact that they'd burnt the forest down was taking it too far, even if the Imperial Soldiers had done it as a safety measure.

If not for Subaru's gaffe, the chance remained that Todd and the others would have established a place to discuss things amiably, and have their negotiations succeed without spilling any blood.

He'd taken away that possibility, and brought danger upon the people inside the forest—No, he should not dodge the responsibility he bore here. There was absolutely no way that there would be no casualties in that inferno.

Due to his own gaffe, Natsuki Subaru had reaped the lives of the people who lived in the forest.

Even if he could not meddle with what happened in that world-line, due to Returning by Death, the fact still remained. —Subaru would never forget it.

Subaru: "…"

Thus, Subaru resolved to himself, that he would not repeat the same mistake twice.

"Death" was a heavy thing, and regardless of whether it was him, or others, he would never let it repeat again. With those thoughts clouding his mind, it was a small mercy that he was redoing his first encounter with Todd and Jamal here.

The restart point of his Return by Death had been updated. He'd returned to the point after he'd been knocked unconscious by Rem in the grassland, after he'd fled from the Hunter in the forest, and the fierce attack of the witchbeast, to where he'd been picked up by the Imperial Encampment.

From here on out, he would establish friendly ties with Todd, as well as with Jamal, if possible, and get them to open negotiations in a way that would not make them rend asunder the Shudraqians in the forest.

So, for that, he would…

Todd: “Hey you, are you listening? I get that you’re confused about being called a prisoner out of nowhere, but…”

Subaru: “—. Well, yeah, I guess. I am confused. But even if I am, well, you see…”

Squatting in front of the taciturn Subaru, Todd gave his feelings some consideration. Subaru sunk into thought, deciding on what to say next as he took in Todd’s stance.

His relationship with Todd had been good, last time. Subaru really needed to maintain it, and him and Rem would be getting the most out of that thread.

What’s more, Subaru needed to choose what he knew carefully, so to restrain his extreme behavior.

Subaru: “You startled me, but I do know that I’ve been taken prisoner. I also remember diving into the river. If y’all rescued me from there, then you must be our saviors—”

Todd: “Wait up just a second.”

Subaru: “Huh?”

Taking first things first, Subaru examined the situation he was in carefully. Then, he tried to put on an act that looked natural, resembling a person who’d just been dragged out of a river.

However, Todd stuck his hand out towards Subaru’s face, interrupting what the latter was saying.

The palm of his hand, along with his five spread out fingers, blocked Subaru’s vision, causing Subaru to hitch in response.

Then…

Todd: “…Why were you looking at me like that just now?”

And just after catching wind of Todd’s cold, hard voice, Subaru felt something sharp being thrust into his right shoulder.

With his field of view obstructed, Subaru's reaction to Todd's actions were slow. He swung his eyes over to where his right shoulder was smarting, and then realized what had happened.

—The sharp point of a dagger had been thrust into his right shoulder.

2

Subaru: "—Hhh?!"

The moment he realized what had happened, a voiceless scream arose in Subaru's throat.

A sensation much like burning exploded in Subaru's right shoulder, and with sharp pain came a feeling of being pierced by pins and needles, which extended through his whole body. Had he not instinctively stretched and dispersed the pain in his entire body, the maximum level of tolerance would have been exceeded and he would be unable to keep his mind from reaching the breaking point.

The shock of the unexpected stab wound was just that immense.

Subaru: "Guh, GYAAAAAaaaahhhh!!"

Moments later, following the voiceless cry, came the delayed scream, drawn out by pain.

He wanted to writhe, to move his shoulder around and rub it, to apply pressure to it, or take any kind of action to lessen the pain. But Subaru's hands and feet were bound, and there was nothing he could do to pull out the knife thrust into his shoulder. It hurts, it hurts, it hurts, it hurts.

???: "H-Hey! What was that scream just now!"

In pain and agony, Subaru screamed over and over. It was Jamal, the rough-looking man with an eyepatch, who hurriedly rushed in upon hearing the alarming sound.

Jamal, who had been kicking Subaru just before in a violent display of power, opened his eyes wide seeing the image of Subaru with a knife in his right shoulder screaming bloody murder.

And then,

Jamal: “Todd, this isn’t what we agreed on! Weren’t you the one who said you’d reach out a hand to them since they were carrying that aristocratic knife?!”

Todd: “Ahh, that had been the plan because I didn’t know these guys’ lineage. I should’ve known you’d get angry about it just because it’s different from what I had said. My bad, my bad.”

Jamal: “…If you’re saying that, does that mean you know who this guy is?”

Although he spoke in a rough voice, he recovered his composure after hearing Todd’s answer. However, in response to Jamal’s question, Todd just said “Who knows?” and tilted his head.

Without pause, Todd knocked over Subaru who let out a cry of pain, and stepped on him.

Todd: “I haven’t heard where he’s from or who he is, so I have no idea. But there’s a high possibility he’s our enemy. So, it was a preemptive strike.”

Subaru: “Guh, gyaaahh!”

Todd: “Oh, that looks painful. We can’t avoid having you suffer a bit, but you seem like you have some pain tolerance, y’know. Where’s your self-respect?”

With his foot heavily pressing into Subaru’s body, Todd asked calmly.

However, with Todd’s weight pressing the fallen Subaru into the ground, the knife in his shoulder was pushed even deeper into the wound, and the return of unbearable agony left no room for him to answer Todd.

His vision flickered, his throat burned, bloody screams rose up over and over again. No matter how many times that was repeated, the pain showed no sign of easing. Without missing a beat, it became fresh despair and continued to assault Subaru like waves crashing against the shore.

Todd: “He’s not answering. How defiant. Looks like he’s an enemy after all.”

Jamal: “…If he’s being rolled like that, he won’t be able to answer even if he could y’know.”

Todd: “Hm? Is that so? Oops. When I’m sluggish from pain, I always mess up in these kinds of situations. My bad, my bad.”

Saying that, Todd finally moved his foot away from Subaru’s body.

The additional pain vanished, but the intermittent pain continued to sting Subaru, and the unbearable agony had caused him to bite his lip and blood streamed out from his mouth.

From the corners of his eyes tears also flowed, and miserably he could not even wipe them away.

Jamal: “You… After this, I don’t know how you can warn me about my bad behavior…”

Todd: “…? Don’t you hit prisoners of war and your subordinates to relieve stress? So don’t joke around acting all high and mighty. I’m only doing what is necessary.”

On the other hand, ignoring Subaru’s disgraceful sight, the two men continued talking above his head.

With Jamal pacifying Todd and pointing out Subaru’s bloodshed, a scene unthinkable a short while ago had unfolded.

What the heck was going on?

Although most of his mental resources were devoted to enduring the pain, this view was too incoherent.

Why would Todd, who had treated Subaru and his group so well, take such action—

Jamal: “So, why did you stab him?”

Strangely, Jamal raised to Todd the same question Subaru had.

When asked, Todd closed one eye and looked in the direction of Subaru, who was writhing in agony.

Todd: “When I took off his blindfold and he looked at me, his eyes were intent on manipulating me. I could understand being nervous or uneasy. Crying from fear would also be fine… But trying to manipulate me is suspicious, no?”

Jamal: “Manipulate, huh.”

Todd: “This guy was unconscious, he’s kicked awake and his blindfold removed, and the first thing he tries to do is to use the first face he saw? There may be such a guy, but that sorta guy is frightening and simply cannot be handled. We should kill him quickly.”

Todd persistently expressed his own well-reasoned opinion in contrast with the thoughtful Jamal.

The reason Subaru had been stabbed was because Todd had judged Subaru to be dangerous. And the best way to deal with dangerous opponents was to neutralize them.

That was why Todd had stabbed Subaru’s right shoulder. Because Todd knew that the fingers of Subaru’s left hand had been broken, and were thereby useless.

With his right shoulder stabbed and his left-hand fingers broken, the function of both of Subaru’s arms was greatly reduced.

To ensure his own safety, Todd immediately made a decision and just acted on it.

—“Just”, that is.

Jamal: “I dunno how you can think about that sorta thing right after you wake up. I might still be in the middle of waking up, straining my ears standing here tryna to listen to this…”

Todd: “No, that’s not it. He must’ve been pretending to be asleep the whole time I watched him. If he had regained consciousness along the way somewhere he should’ve had some kind of physical reaction. Supposing I overlooked him pretending to sleep, then…”

Jamal: “Then?”

Todd: “Then he planned to try to manipulate me while deceiving me and pretending to be asleep, isn’t that right? That method is even more frightening. As I thought, killing him would be the correct answer, it seems.”

Hearing that, Subaru gasped and shivered as he fought off the pain.

While listening to Todd’s explanation, Jamal’s tone gradually weakened. At first he must’ve been shocked and angry at the fact that Todd had stabbed Subaru, but little by little his fury was dismantled.

Todd’s tone of voice and way of speaking held a charm that softened the other person’s emotions.

Observing from the position of a third party, he could finally see that.

Todd would get close to the other person, show his understanding, and then offer attractive proposals that were beneficial to them on top of that. First the momentum was killed, then as the other person became more open-minded, the offered proposal would be carefully considered, and against one’s better judgement it would become desirable to go through with it.

That’s exactly what was happening to Jamal right now, before his eyes.

And that was also what had happened to Subaru just before he used

Return by Death.

Todd: “The young ladies with him are also suspicious, but the two of them are straightforward and easy to interact with. Let’s get rid of this one before there’s any trouble.”

Jamal: “Well, I guess that’s fine, but…”

Todd: “Or, do you want to be the one to do it? To stop your anger from getting out of control over that blue-haired girl injuring your men, you need someone to relieve your stress right?”

Jamal: “…That’s also true.”

In response to Todd’s calm proposal, a vulgar smile appeared on Jamal’s face.

Just like that, Jamal passed by Todd’s side while cracking his knuckles. The signs of violence Jamal displayed made Subaru cower, but Todd’s remark made him tremble even more.

Much akin to how he had offered Subaru to Jamal for stress relief, Todd was willing to investigate his intentions in a different way, if he ended up eliminating Subaru here.

For that purpose he would use Rem, as well as Louis.

But no matter what was asked, the two of them would not be able to answer. No matter how harsh the torture, Rem had no information to reveal.

In other words…

Subaru: “…tch”

Biting down harshly with his molars, the taste of blood exploded in his mouth, as Subaru searched for a way to prevent Rem from tasting the same. In a few seconds, Jamal’s violence would resume, and Subaru would either be killed or left half-dead by his brutal attack. Even if Jamal had a conscience, Todd would not keep Subaru alive.

Todd, who would be able to set fire to the forest, would likewise not bat an eye when it came to extinguishing Subaru's life.

Step by step, Jamal drew closer.

In that time, Subaru's brain went into overdrive, searching within himself for the answer. To break the deadlock of the current state of affairs, some kind of plan, a possibility, he needed a miracle,—

Jamal: "To relieve my stress, you better scream as much as you can, you son of a bitch. For your girl's part too, I'm gonna make your body pay—"

Subaru: "People of Shudraq."

Jamal: "…"

Jamal spat out his stereotypical violent threats right on the verge of striking Subaru,—but Subaru's lips put together those words.

At that moment, Jamal's movement stopped, and Todd's expression in the background changed too. Jamal's face showed clear surprise, while Todd cocked one eyebrow, "Oh?", and grinned.

Todd: "People of Shudraq… You decided to play that card now? Seems you're well aware of how to gamble."

Jamal: "Todd, what this brat is saying…"

Todd: "Just wait, just wait Jamal. You can hit and kick him after. But it's hard to understand the voice of someone with their tongue and throat crushed. It's best if we listen here."

Jamal: "Fuck!"

With nowhere to direct his anger, Jamal roughly kicked the nearby wooden railing.

Todd looked sideways at the literal dispersion of anger, and turned toward Subaru. The smile on his face was, horrifyingly, no different from the one Subaru knew.

Just as he had done when treating Subaru's fingers, inviting Subaru to eat, and praising Subaru for his contribution to burning the forest, Todd grinned at Subaru, as the latter stood on the precipice between life and death.

Todd: "So, the name of the People of Shudraq came up. I wonder, can I expect to hear something from you that will make me happy?"

Subaru: "…Ah. You know, the location of the People of Shudraq in the forest?"

Todd: "— ! Oh, that's great!"

Smiling, Todd clapped his hands in front of his chest in a show of joy.

Seeing his reaction, Subaru was confident that the miracle he had pulled out of himself had helped put off the impending predicament. However, at the same time, it was a double-edged sword for Subaru.

After all, Subaru did not know the location of the People of Shudraq.

The masked man who had handed him the knife, the hunter who had shot arrows at him… Perhaps either or both of them were related to the People of Shudraq, but he had no means of contacting them or knowing specifically where they were.

—In other words, Subaru was staking his life on this big gamble.

Todd: "How is it you know the location of the People of Shudraq?"

Subaru: "…Because I'm one of the People of Shudraq."

Todd: "I see, after all that's how it is. Setting aside skin color, it's the black hair, y'know? So I was wondering if that was the case. Since it's a famous rumor that Shudraqians have black hair."

Subaru: "…"

Subaru was greatly relieved as fortune smiled upon him and he received this information that had been entirely unknown to him.

His whole body was covered in greasy sweat, and the tension of the conversation had caused Subaru to break out in cold sweat in addition. The pain in his shoulder was increasing, and the pain in the fingers of his left hand was beginning to bug him as well.

On top of that, his body had yet to recover from the turmoil at the Pleiades Watchtower or from the trouble with Rem in the forest or from the burden of the escape to the river right after that.

Barely hanging on to his fleeting consciousness and breaking spirit, he continued the questioning. One wrong answer would result in his death. —Everything was to survive and save Rem.

To return to Emilia and Beatrice and everyone, and to reunite Ram and Rem.

Todd: "So basically, you're a scout. And your clothing and knife were prepared to blend in with us."

Subaru: "—. I stole the knife from a traveler. Same goes for the clothes. And…"

Todd: "You tried to get some info on us. A pretty bold plan I gotta say. Seems like you were actually drowning and there was a chance that we wouldn't notice the knife…"

Subaru: "But it was more realistic that way, wasn't it?"

Even as his supposed plan was pointed out as careless and flawed, Subaru laughed it off, saying that it had been all on purpose.

Putting a brazen smile on his face, he bared his teeth and made his mean eyes look more menacing. This was his act to make his bluff more believable.

Todd squinted at Subaru, trying to scrutinize his real motive.

Todd: "…"

The silence was deafening and the noose on Subaru's neck tightened every second.

Truth be told, he had no idea if his words were persuasive at all. Neither could he tell if his act was convincing. The pain and stress he felt were too much to even give a second thought to his performance.

It felt to him, like he was making comical excuses, where it'd be no wonder if, the next moment, he'd crack his head open after dismissing him as being ludicrous with a snort.

Unable to read Todd's expression, the tension in the room spurred up.

And after some time—

Todd: "—You, would you sell out your tribe for your life?"

Todd asked with one eye closed. Subaru gulped.

He would bring out the words he needed to bring out. All he needed to do was to not answer incorrectly.

He would sell out his tribe for his life.

After stating that he was a member of the people of Shudraq, he would sell out the people of Shudraq.

He could not let them discover that this was a farce. To aid him, he would adopt the necessary expression and voice.

—The expression and voice of a deplorable bootlicker who would sell out his own tribe for his life.

Subaru: "…Yeh, yeah, that's right. I'll sell them out."

Todd: "…"

Subaru: "Please, I'll do anything. I'll even lure them out if you want. Anything, I'll do anything!"

Stammering, twitching his cheeks, smeared in cold sweat, Subaru begged for his life.

Clinging on to his life, disregarding the lives of others, not letting others see him in any positive light, he had to transform himself into selfishness personified.

But he only had to act.

Over the course of his time in this world, Subaru had seen many people with that way of thinking.

He did not think the day would come where he would model himself after the most inhumane among inhumans, the Sin Archbishops.

Jamal: “You’re a rotten guy you know. Hate that no-good look in your eye.”

Jamal spat out his true feelings, hearing Subaru plead for his life. His disdain and anger were evident.

It seemed that Subaru’s performance had steered Jamal into having a negative opinion of him. But to be completely honest, though he felt bad, he had no time to deal with Jamal’s shenanigans.

Right now, the right to decide Subaru’s fate belonged to Todd.

A person’s ranking or standing did not matter here. The strong eat the weak. He would follow the Empire’s motto to the tee.

Todd: “—. That seriousness, you don’t seem to be lying.”

Todd finally replied to Subaru, who with great effort, kept a docile face.

Hearing that, Subaru almost jumped in joy at his tiny victory. Though, he prayed it was not a premature celebration. At the same time, Jamal spoke up, unhappy about it.

Jamal: “Oi, Todd! You trust what this guy says? This piece of shit who would sell out his people for his own life would…”

Todd: “Hang on, hang on. What are you saying Jamal? These are the words of a bootlicker who would betray his people for his own sake. Of course he’d show how much worth he has. Otherwise, he wouldn’t be able to save his own precious life.”

Jamal: “…Tsk”

Jamal’s outburst was silenced by Todd’s reasoning.

Of course, this “subservient and servile bootlicker” was the exact image Subaru wanted Todd to have of him. The type of person who would double-cross his comrades just to save his own neck. To make his story believable, Subaru would have to drag his reputation to rock-bottom.

On that point, the big scene he had caused after getting stabbed in the shoulder should have helped in that regard too.

Though, the pain he had to suffer as a result was too great for consolation.

Jamal: “Don’t blame me if anything happens!”

In the end, exactly to Subaru’s plan, Jamal was persuaded by Todd.

Admonishing him, Todd tapped Jamal’s shoulders saying “Trust him, trust him”.

Todd: “There’s no mistake he’s attached to life. —Whether it’s his or not.”

Todd said as he looked at the meek, downcast Subaru.

3

Rem: “—! Wait a moment! What do you plan to do with that person?!”

Rem yelled out angrily, grabbing onto the bars of the metal cage she was confined in.

They were currently in the Imperial army’s campground. Todd and Jamal, after listening to Subaru's claims, dragged him out straight away and were now on the way out of the camp.

Rem—who had been put in a cage after her turbulent capture—had started shouting out when the trio just so happened to pass by.

Subaru: "…"

Rem glared at a tattered and worn out Subaru.

Having been dragged out of the river, his half-dried clothes were still heavy. Additionally, the stab wound on his right shoulder had received the bare minimum treatment and the broken fingers on his left hand had received none. Even if the restraints on his legs were gone, the cuffs on his arms robbed him of his freedom.

Looking no different from a slave worker, the person who was being led outside of the camp, Natsuki Subaru.

Seeing this Subaru, Rem's emotions were all over the place. Shock and surprise, all of it in turmoil. Of course, Subaru was unable to explain the situation to her.

Having Returned by Death, what little progress that had been achieved in the relationship between Subaru and Rem was reset, and needed to be redone from scratch again.

Rem saw Subaru as an enemy based on the witch's scent that clung to him. Subaru was given no time or opportunity to solve that misunderstanding. Also—

Rem: "—?! The smell has become worse since last time… What is this exactly?"

The miasma that would thicken with each consecutive Return by Death. Having smelled it, Rem's caution rose to another level.

To her, Natsuki Subaru might as well have been a child of darkness.

It pained Subaru's heart, but he could not afford to perform any action that could fix that misconception, lest he be found out.

Todd: "…You two have a pretty convoluted relationship don't you? The way she's acting. Didn't you bring that girl along with you?"

Subaru: "That girl… No, the two that were together."

Todd: "The two of them?"

Subaru: "—. I bought them as tools to help when meeting you guys."

For a moment, he was unsure how to reply. But he donned his inhumane mask and answered frankly.

Subaru, right now, was a cold-blooded person who would sell off his comrades' lives to save his own. Naturally, he felt nothing for Rem and Louis. He needed to be one-hundred percent filled with his selfish love for his life.

He could not let the scenario where the two of them—well, at least, Rem be taken as hostages to occur.

Subaru: "So I don't know anything about them. There's no point asking them this and that…Though you seemed to have gotten the gist of it already."

Todd: "Well, it didn't seem to be an act, I guess? The little missy seems to be actually nuts in the head and the missy here ain't lying. Even so, her reason for rampaging being so vague is a bit troublesome."

Jamal: "tsk"

Todd scratched his cheek with a bitter smile, while Jamal clicked his tongue in annoyance.

With the two of them at the head, a group of twenty or so Imperial soldiers would be leaving the camp with Subaru. Subaru was to bring this group into the jungle and show them where the people of Shudraq resided.

He would show them their settlement and bring the Empire one step closer to victory. And as a reward for that, his life would be saved. Terrible people live long lives after all, so that was the plan.

A plan that would get average reviews as a bootlicker's success story.

Though, that would only happen if one ignored just how impossible it was.

Subaru: "Isn't it better if you threw them out? I did buy them. If you don't need them, I'm happy to have them after they've done their work…"

Todd: "You're a hasty one, aren't ya? It's good to be thinking ahead but don't forget your life depends on whether you can do your job properly or not. Rather than what's going to happen to them, you should worry about yourself first."

Subaru: "Hehe, oh yeah, that's right. My desire for what comes after slipped out."

If he were to make a fuss over this, his attachment to Rem would be found out instantly and the tables would be flipped on Subaru.

He couldn't rub his hands together because of his bindings, but in his heart, that was the manner in which he interacted with Todd. Thankfully, Todd did not look deeper into his words. Waving his hand at the caged Rem,

Todd: "Behave yourself missy. If nothing happens, nothing will happen to you."

Rem: "Do you think your words hold any weight?"

Todd: "I don't know about weight, but believing me or not is your problem, ain't it missy?"

Having been told that by Todd, Rem had no choice but to quiet down, annoyed.

Frustrated that he was unable to support Rem or even talk to her any more than this, Subaru burned her figure and voice into his mind. He would use those as fuel for his spirit.

—One way or another, he had to bring Rem out of the camp and escape.

Building a friendly relationship with Todd's group and getting them to protect him and Rem was no longer a thought Subaru entertained. —They were a threat, both as an enemy and as an ally.

They could not be controlled even when allied and he did not need to state how dangerous they would be as an enemy.

To begin with, he should avoid teaming up with the people of Vollachia as much as possible.

Subaru's standing in Vollachia was extremely complex, and if he were to slip up, it would not be a problem that affected just himself. That was another secret he held.

Todd: "Alright, let's go. Stay sharp everyone."

Jamal: "I'm the one giving orders!"

Todd called out to his crew, bringing along a hyperconscious Subaru.

Among the Imperial soldier's replies to Todd's call, Jamal's reply was very openly angry.

4

—After that, the group trespassed onto the Buddheim Jungle with Subaru at the very front.

Their destination was the village of the Shudraqians who lived in the forest, and their objective was to pinpoint their location. —However, Subaru the navigator was pulling a bluff, as he didn't know where the village was.

Far from that, he was making a gamble while only vaguely knowing about the identities of the people of Shudraq.

Subaru: "…"

Walking through the thickly-wooded forest, Subaru was waiting for an opportunity to somehow sneak away from the group.

He was against a large number of people, and even if they were wearing light armor, said equipment did not allow them to move around quicker than he could. If he could take advantage of their carelessness and run away, it might be possible to return to the encampment quicker than them, and bring Rem with him on his escape. Actually, that was his only plan as of now.

Fortunately, the cage that Rem had been put in could be easily unlocked from the outside.

The important things were Subaru obtaining the right to do so from Rem, and the hope that she would believe in him and follow him out once he unlocked the cage. And, there was the matter of Louis's existence as well.

Subaru: "If I say that I am leaving Louis behind, Rem will never come with me…"

In addition to the current situation, he had shaved off a significant amount of Rem's trust with the added miasma via Return by Death.

Even if Subaru desperately rushed back to the camp in that state, Rem would not welcome his decision to leave Louis behind. Far from that, she would beat him into the ground on the spot, rescue Louis from him by herself, and there was also the possibility of her deserting him in the Empire's encampment.

Subaru: "…I guess that's not going to happen, even if Rem is hostile to me. Her legs aren't free to move around, after all."

She couldn't go through with these events he imagined solely due to the condition of her legs, so were she to be physically fit, then Subaru wouldn't put it past her to actually carry it out. That was what he thought, but it would cause him trouble if she did so.

So, if Subaru was going to take her out of that place, then he had to bring Louis along with them as well. Thus, it forced Subaru to face the hardship of being unable to abandon this negative factor, which should be referred to as a shackle, no matter where he went or what he did.

And then—

Todd: “So, how long will it take until we arrive at the village?”

Subaru: “…Around two to three hours.”

Todd: “Two to three hours! That’s pretty quick. If that’s all it takes, then I could wish for nothing more. From our point of view, this was supposed to be a mission that’d take years to complete.”

Obtaining an answer to his question, Todd broke into a smile, seemingly considering his situation to be one of good fortune.

Hearing his words, and seeing him clad in his light armor with a hatchet hanging from his waist, Subaru remembered that Todd had joined the mission whilst leaving his fiancée behind.

That should be glaringly obvious, but even if he made a decision that inflicted wounds upon Subaru, it wasn’t like the story behind his circumstances would change completely.

Todd was dispatched to the jungle as an Imperial Soldier following his orders, and he was unavoidably separated from his fiancée to do so.

The same could be said for some of Todd’s fellow soldiers, such as Jamal. They too had their own circumstances behind their actions, and so every one of them must have a reason to be engaged in the mission like this.

In that sense, there was no reason for Subaru and Todd’s group to be at odds with each other.

Subaru was purely unlucky. His misfortune had piled up on top of itself. The situation was turning against him. That would be what this whole thing was, if he were to line up an assortment of words in this manner.

However—

Subaru: “…I don’t think this is for me to say, but isn’t this unsafe? Only bringing this many people, even though we’re heading for the Shudraqian village…”

Walking at the front of the line as the leader, Subaru called out to Todd, who was right behind him.

There were about twenty Imperial Soldiers in the group. Even though they had a guide with them, it wasn’t possible to say that there were enough people to explore the extensive forest.

Todd shrugged his shoulders in response to Subaru’s doubts,

Todd: “It can’t be helped. You’re a splendid source of information, but the higher-ups aren’t expecting much from your story. The information only becomes worth it when we go out and confirm it. Also…”

Subaru: “Also?”

Todd: “If this turns out to be your trap, and my group doesn’t return, our absence will inform our allies back at the encampment that it’s dangerous to enter the forest. Haha, long live Vollachia.”

Imperial Soldiers: “—Long live Vollachia!”

Making sacrifices in order to attain victory was inevitable. Todd seemed to display that with his easy-going attitude, the Imperial Soldiers following his chant with their own.

Long live Vollachia! Their voices caused the atmosphere of the forest to tremble, sounding like an indication of how devoted they were to the country that valued strength above all.

In any case—

???: “Is this the time to be worrying about us, eh? After this is done, there’s no guarantee that your head and body will stay connected. At least do your best to humor us.”

Subaru: “Jamal-san…”

Jamal: “Don’t call my name, you shitty traitor. You’ll be cut up into pieces and dumped somewhere, and the woman and child will… hm… maybe I’ll offer them to the Womanizer, General Second-Class Zikr. He’ll definitely be overjoyed.”

Todd: “Jamal… don’t say anything too stupid. It tires me out.”

Acting as if he absolutely hated Subaru’s guts, Jamal’s gaze and voice were filled with foul intent.

Adding to that, Subaru and Rem were also not getting along with each other, so if he made Jamal hold the casting vote for the situation, then the results could very well turn out as the worst for Subaru.

As expected, it was Todd who tried to quell Jamal’s anger, saying, “Calm down,”

Todd: “Rather, don’t forget it’s us who have to humor this guy. He’ll provide us with the necessary information to save his skin. We’ll rescue him in exchange for that. If not, we’re gonna get jumped by the Shudraq the moment we arrive at the village.”

Jamal: “Bring it on. If they’re gonna pull something like that, we can exterminate…”

Todd: “—Are you serious? I can’t get on board with a fight I see no chance of winning in. You don’t want to turn your little sister into a widow before she gets married, either. Right? Brother-in-law?”

Jamal: “Gh…”

Todd persuaded Jamal, who often spoke while disregarding all thought.

Subaru caught a glimpse of the unknown relationship between them, but it unfortunately did not move his feelings. He had already steeled his resolve against Todd and his group.

—Their encounter, the situation, his luck. All of those were terrible.

Subaru: “—But, Rem is more important to me.”

That was why Subaru decided to put them in harm's way.

Imperial Soldier: "—?"

Suddenly, at the back of the search party that was organized in a line, one of the Imperial Soldiers made a small sound in his throat. He cocked his head as if he had noticed something, searching for the cause of it in his field of view.

The faintest feeling of something being wrong. He searched for it, unable to simply ignore it, his gaze whizzing around the jungle in circles, and then—

Imperial Soldier: "—Ah?"

Amidst the darkness of the forest, his eyes met with a red glimmer that rose to the surface.

Imperial Soldier: "It's a witchbeast—!!"

Other Imperial Soldiers: "—?!"

Immediately after making eye contact, the Imperial Soldier who found "it" instantaneously alerted his allies to take caution.

His reaction had been perfect up to this point, and it could be said that there was no fault on the soldier's part. The same could be said for his allies, who readied themselves for a fight, having listened to the first soldier's call.

However, they wasted no time in attacking the witchbeast the moment they unsheathed their swords.

—This could be exactly noted as being rash.

Imperial Soldier: "Uwooooh!!"

An Imperial Soldier drew his sword, running through the forest and lunging at his opponent, a humongous snake that twisted its giant body around—it was a serpentine witchbeast, enclosed in green-colored scales and its full height around ten meters long.

Being the same species as the witchbeast Subaru had encountered in the forest, its existence was like a bolt from the blue to the Imperial Soldiers, who did not know of the existence of witchbeasts in the forest.

However, their attempt to deal with the witchbeast immediately, knowing full well of how dangerous it could be, had been a mistake precisely because it was the right decision. —The witchbeast was not after them.

Its target was none other than Natsuki Subaru, who was shrouded in a gigantic amount of miasma.

Snake witchbeast: “—ッッ!!”

Catching the released sword strike with its scales, the large snake roared as it sent the Imperial Soldier flying with its huge tail. The red glint in its eyes gleamed savagely, and the group was hit by a tremendous bellow.

With one year that had passed ever since he started acting as a decoy against witchbeasts, Subaru knew what it was all about, being a professional who went down this path.

Most of the time, the concerned witchbeast would actively go after Subaru, encircled by the miasma as he was, but it was a different story if harm were caused to the witchbeast itself. That was their unchangeable nature, no matter if the witchbeast was the White Whale or this snake.

The White Whale had aimed for Wilhelm, who had been chopping it up, and the gigantic snake had bore its fangs against the hunter that had shot it.

The rule took effect even in the present situation. The snake’s aim had shifted from Subaru over to the Imperial Soldiers, who were covered in matching equipment, their hostility leveled towards the witchbeast.

Jamal: “—a witchbeast?! I wasn’t told about it!!”

Having the roaring snake’s malevolence directed against himself, Jamal drew out a pair of swords, his voice trembling with rage. Unexpectedly, he dauntlessly threw himself at the witchbeast with surprising swiftness, putting his combative capabilities on display.

However, Subaru could not cheer for Jamal's unanticipated, courageous fight.

Subaru had been meaning for this to happen, having walked in the forest with Todd for a few hours, with this objective.

The soldiers who did not know of the witchbeast's existence, and the witchbeast that was pulled closer to them by Subaru's miasma. He always made use of witchbeasts with his body odor every time, but Subaru was also a proud "witchbeast Master".

He had multiple accomplishments, enough to fight against Meili with the title of the "witchbeast Master" on the line.

However, now was not the time to fuss over that.

Subaru: "I should—"

Taking advantage of this opportunity, he would return to the encampment and free Rem.

He tried to make a break for it in order to do so, but felt dread pricking at the back of his neck. Conforming to the frightening sensation, Subaru lowered his head regardless of how ridiculous he would look in the eyes of others.

The very next moment, an axe sliced through the place where his head had previously been, wedging itself into the large tree right beside him.

Subaru: "—kh,"

He would have been dead had he not lowered his head just now.

Shaken by that fact, Subaru only moved his gaze behind him, looking at the person who had made that attempt on his life.

Subaru: "…"

His gaze crossed Todd’s, who was glaring at him, a piercing look in his eyes.

Subaru: “—hk,”

Refusing to be caught in his gaze, Subaru began running inside the forest with all his might.

He would be caught by Todd if he stopped in his tracks. If he were caught, then Todd would unquestioningly claim his life. Those eyes had that kind of firm, strong will. They were darkened with pitch-black intent.

Subaru felt a different kind of fear compared to what he had experienced with the Sin Archbishops, witchbeasts, and even Reid Astrea.

Those eyes were brimming with vindictiveness—pitch-black intent to kill.

Subaru: “Gah?!”

A forceful impact penetrated Subaru’s back as he ran, unable to turn around.

What struck the area around his shoulder blade was a knife that had been thrown at him— it was returned to him in an awful manner, strangely enough.

Leaving the knife hanging from his shoulder, Subaru blew out a ragged breath, continuing his desperate escape.

Behind him, he felt like the battle between witchbeast and Imperial Soldiers was still ongoing, but Subaru was also desperately hoping he would not be intercepted by other witchbeasts, and that he would not be chased after by Todd as well.

Desperately, urgently, and frantically, Subaru carried on running, and ran, and ran, and ran.

Out of breath, spitting out blood, nearly tripping multiple times, actually falling over, and still running even with his whole body being covered in mud, he was growing more frenzied to return to the Empire's camp.

Subaru: "Rem… Rem… Re, m…"

Growing slower to the point a walking child would be faster, panting for breath with his dried throat, and in a condition in which his oxygen and stamina and mental fortitude were on the verge of running out, Subaru clung to the only attachment he had.

He would reach Rem, bring Rem out of that place, save Rem, and go back home, back where everyone was.

He would return to the place where Emilia and Beatrice, Ram and Petra and Frederica, Garfiel and Otto, and even Roswaal were at, and then, he would give Rem her peaceful, mellow time back.

The time she was supposed to have spent, her dear time, like that—

Subaru: "—Ah,"

Reaching his hand out as if seeking for such a fleeting dream, Subaru's legs kicked empty air.

Losing his footing abruptly and unable to use his arms to support his unbalanced posture, he plunged downwards head-first.

Towards somewhere, he was falling upside down. He couldn't scream. His throat wouldn't open.

Falling. Purely, utterly, simply, falling.

Descending, plummeting down. Almost as if his dreams were bursting apart like a bubble, faint and broken.

Subaru: "—Rem."

Sounding empty and meaningless, he let out a hoarse voice, and Subaru's consciousness was cut off during that moment.

5

???: "…Until when do you plan on sleeping, fool?"

Subaru: “Gah?!”

Subaru’s consciousness was pulled up from the depths of the abyss by a sudden strike.

The blow to his temple felt almost as if the side of his head had been stepped on—No, not almost as if, rather, that was exactly what had happened.

As far as he could tell, the right side of his head was being pushed into the ground while the left was being stepped on. Resulting in the sharp sandwich of pain that awoke him.

Subaru: “…Wha… t? I’m… ugh…”

Tasting blood in the back of his throat, Subaru sat up in a daze.

Suddenly, Subaru became acutely aware of the intense pain that emanated from his right shoulder, back, left hand, legs and various other places on his body.

The terrible agony caused his field of vision to turn red, his body falling back on the floor and he shivered like a fish on dry land.

The adrenaline allowed him to ignore the pain for a bit, but that had been the result of having passed out and returned to consciousness. However, each part of his body hurting like this meant—

Subaru: “I’m not… dead.”

???: “Obviously. Do the dead speak? I will say, your reaction entertains me more than some second-rate jester’s half baked acts. I will grant you a compliment for that.”

Subaru: “Hah?”

The word slipped out of a dumbfounded Subaru who was doing a once over on himself as he was showered in arrogant speech.

As his understanding caught up to what had been said, Subaru slowly rose again, wary of the pain that would return.

Looking at his surroundings, Subaru could see thick branches protruding from the ground where he'd been lying— No, it was a wooden lattice.

Remembering Rem for the umpteenth time, Subaru realized he was imprisoned in a wooden cage. His head was in further chaos.

No way, did he fail to escape and was once again captured by Todd and his group? He started to fret—

???: "Do not panic. Your pursuers are not here. Although to say everything is alright would be a rather bold lie to the current predicament we are in."

Subaru: "You're…"

???: "Seriously, I never thought I would look upon your face again, Natsuki Subaru."

Like that, his companion smirked and laughed, calling the wide-eyed Subaru by name.

Because he wore a mask and so only the shape of his eyes could be seen, it was not possible to say for sure that he was smiling, yet Subaru could tell.

Trapped in the same wooden cage and situation as Subaru, that arrogant masked man laughed.

Chapter 10:
The People of Shudrak

1

Faced by that conceited and prideful smile flashing through his mask, Subaru held his breath.

There was no difference between this arrogant man and the man who had shown Subaru the way and given him the knife, when he had gotten separated from Rem at the grassland. Subaru could not say for sure because of his masked appearance, but he remembered his voice as well as his attitude. The fact that the man knew his name also proved it.

Subaru: "…"

Laid on the bare ground inside the wooden cage, Subaru's fate seemed to be continuing onwards instead of being cut off, even though his whole body was worn out, not just his hands and feet.

He had entered the forest, bringing Todd and the Imperial Soldiers together with him, summoned the witchbeast by luring it with his miasma, tried to escape by taking advantage of the opportunity that had arisen after making the witchbeast attack the soldiers, and—

Subaru: "And then, I…"

Masked man: "From what I have heard, it seems like you had been caught in a trap while loitering around the forest. Those of the village were making a great fuss over a human being caught in a trap meant for capturing beasts."

Subaru: "A trap, and village…?"

Receiving an explanation from the masked man, Subaru shook his pounding head, as he directed his attention outside of the cage.

The wooden cage that imprisoned him was of poor construction, compared to the ones he had seen in the Imperial Soldiers' camp, which were in turn made out of iron. It looked simple, or more like it had been built in a rush.

And then, outside of the cage, he saw groups of tall trees, and land that had been created by clearing a part of the forest—Subaru's impression was something close to the village in the Sanctuary.

The Sanctuary was also a village built deep inside a forest, called the Forest of Kremaldy. However, unlike the Sanctuary which had buildings such as houses and a church despite existing in a forest, the village here only had log cabins, putting it nicely, and primitive dwellings, if put in a bad way.

Subaru thought it would be better to beat around the bush by saying they preferred being naturalistic.

Besides, what was more important to Subaru was not the shabby-looking village, but who lived here.

That meant—

Subaru: "—The People of Shudraq?"

Masked man: "Huh, so you did know. Well, looking at your unsightly state, I suppose you were burdened with hardships all within a single day. Have you found the woman you had been separated from?"

Subaru: "…Yeah, thanks to you."

As the man questioned him after hearing what he had mumbled out, Subaru breathed out a deep sigh.

The masked man did not soften his confident attitude. However, he was also inside the cage, much like Subaru. Unless he was an important member of the village and had a commendable preference of entering the cage together with his captive, they would be in the same exact position.

Subaru had already been held captive at the Empire's camp, but he had gotten captured here as well.

However, there were a few points that told him that wasn't all it amounted to.

Subaru: "—The wounds on my shoulder and back… did they treat my injuries?"

Touching his shoulder and back, Subaru knew the bleeding had been stopped, judging from the sensation of something being fastened tightly against his wounds. The pungent scent that stung his nostrils felt similar to a sort of liquid medicine, such as disinfectant.

The masked man sniffed at Subaru's doubts with a, "Hmph,"

Masked man: "You would have died just like that had your injuries been left untreated. Those of the village must have been confused with how to handle you. Wondering what is the correct choice, similarly to myself."

Subaru: "Where do you get your composure from…"

Masked man: "If I must say, then it is from my soul. Rather, when will you stop exhibiting such disgraceful behavior? Natsuki Subaru."

Subaru: "It's none of your—"

Business, he tried to retort, before grinding the back of his teeth together from the pain brought by his wounds.

His injuries had been bandaged only the bare minimum as to not let Subaru die, not to close his wounds rapidly, nor to get rid of the pain. In contrast to what he had received at the Empire's camp, he was in an inferior environment.

As he thought about the Empire's camp, Subaru had a realization.

He had a reason for having to arrive at the camp as soon as possible.

Subaru: "Damn… how long has it been since I was brought here?!"

Masked man: "—. Hmm, around two hours, perhaps. I will tell you beforehand, but I am being lenient enough with you already. If I did not think much of it, then I would have woken you s—"

Subaru: "Why didn't you wake me sooner?!"

Masked man: "…"

As Subaru sank down on his trembling knees complaining, the man narrowed his eyes.

To him, it would look like Subaru was picking a fight with him, something that was uncalled for. As for why he had let Subaru stay asleep for two whole hours, who had been on the verge of death, covered with cuts and bruises upon being brought in, it was because he had deemed rest to be necessary, probably.

After that, if his act of stepping on Subaru's head had been an offense carried out by his impatience, then it could be said he was also the owner of a Vollachia-like nature. However, if so—

Subaru: "You should've reached the end of your patience sooner."

Masked man: "What a strange thing to say. Do you understand what you are saying? You are telling me that you wished I had stepped on your head sooner."

Subaru: "Yeah, that's what I'm saying! What else… ugh, kh…!"

As he continued blurting out unreasonable, irrational logic, his vision flashed red.

His whole body was aching, but what caused him the most pain was on his back, the newly created stab wound in the vicinity of his shoulder blade—the blow from Todd using the knife, who targeted the escaping Subaru the last time they met.

Thinking back, the knife he had been stabbed with was the same one he had been given by the masked man in front of him. Reuniting with him, in an injured state, due to the wound his knife had inflicted on him, seemed like an unfortunate chain of events.

Anyhow—

Subaru: “I left Rem at the Empire’s camp… Before the Imperial Soldiers I sicced against the witchbeasts return there, if I don’t go back, then Rem will…”

There was no time until Todd’s group left the forest, returned to their camp, and finished reporting everything to the higher-ups.

When the giant snake broke the soldiers’ formation into disarray, Jamal and the others had naturally dealt with the witchbeast as a priority. However, among them, only Todd had made killing Subaru his first concern.

Todd might have suspected it had been Subaru who had drawn the witchbeast towards them. And then, in order to make sure another would not be attracted, Todd had attempted to dispose of him immediately on the spot. His judgement and his ability to get things done—what he had demonstrated within that single moment could not, and should not be underestimated.

At least, Subaru had put emphasis on how he was not even related to Rem and Louis in the slightest, having intended to place the impression that any information on him could not be gleaned from them, but—

Masked man: “If there is no definite evidence, then they are capable of trying out torture.”

There was a certain terrorizing aspect to Todd and the Vollachia Empire that led Subaru to believe it.

To make sure they could not carry out such a thing, Subaru had to go back and save Rem.

But—

Subaru: “In a place like this…!”

Masked man: “—. I see. Judging from your words, that “Rem” is the woman you were searching for. It seems like you have gone through a considerable experience after you parted ways with me. Is it about the Imperial Soldiers outside the forest?”

Subaru: “Yeah, that’s right! I was held captive by them! And then, I played a trick on them so I could run away… but, I couldn’t bring Rem with me. So…”

Masked man: “So that is the origin of your desperation. No wonder you appear to have grown accustomed to being a captive.”

Subaru: “Who looks accustomed to being a captive?! In the first place—”

The masked man was in the same predicament as him, wasn’t he?

Although Subaru was indebted to him, he nearly shouted in anger as he did not have the mental capacity to think about anything else at the moment. However, a sudden realization stunted his rash behavior.

Subaru: “…”

Amidst that exchange of harsh words, having been focused on his argument with the masked man, Subaru felt a new pair of eyes boring into the side of his face.

When he turned around, he saw two specks of light outside the cage, peeking inside from between the bars. Building a picture of the person, Subaru saw that those were green-colored eyes.

The owner of the pair of eyes blinked when Subaru’s gaze turned towards them,

???: “—Ah, he noticed Uu.”

Subaru: “Wha…”

???: “Need to tell Mii.”

Saying that, the person swiftly distanced itself from the wooden lattice. Subaru tried to stop them, calling out, “Wait!” but his words did not make it in time.

By the time he threw himself at the bars of the cage, the person had already vacated the area, sprinting away without taking any notice of him.

Subaru: “Just now, that was…”

Masked man: “A Shudraqian girl. She must be very inquisitive. Even when I was by myself, she paid a few visits and even peered inside. “Show me your face!”, “Take off your mask!”, she was saying. Her irksomeness knows no bounds…”

Subaru: “…”

The masked man grumbled as he crossed his arms, seemingly dissatisfied by the attitude of the sneaky person.

Unfortunately, Subaru did not have the mind to respond to his complaints. That was because his focus had been stolen away by the person who had just left—the young girl.

She was a young girl with brown skin, somewhere around ten years old.

She wore a light outfit that exposed her skin, having white clothes wrapped around her body. It was probably a choice of attire that had been made to adapt to this land, which gave off the feeling of a subtropical zone.

The reason for the pink tips of her uniquely colored, bob cut-esque hair was because it had been dyed, most likely. The roots of her hair were black, matching Todd’s explanation of the Shudraqians having black hair.

However, what shocked Subaru the most about the girl’s appearance was not how peculiar she looked, but the fact that was not the first time he had seen her.

Subaru: “She’s…”

The one who killed me, Subaru’s memories insisted.

She was the girl who had used a poisoned arrow to shoot Subaru in the back, resulting in his death.

With the jungle having been set on fire because of Subaru's careless remark, the girl had escaped from the land where those spreading flames blazed, glaring at Subaru with hate-filled eyes—.

Subaru connected the dots together.

Back then, the girl had been glowering at Subaru with an expression of pure abhorrence for only a single reason. —Retribution towards the cause that had incinerated both her land and allies into ashes.

Masked man: "Why did you suddenly become so meek, as if just doused with water?"

Subaru: "—ah."

As Subaru bit his lip with his head resting against the wooden lattice, the voice came out from over his shoulder.

The masked man had been sitting in the same position from the start, and watched Subaru and his violently fluctuating emotions intently.

Masked man: "You are a difficult man to grasp. In any event, it's good if you rant and rave. It will be troublesome if it gets quiet here. Idleness is a waste of energy too. Without each and every shout—"

Subaru: "Without shouting…?"

Masked man: "—From over there, they shall arrive to hear our conversation. Look."

In the direction the man had jerked his chin, Subaru turned around and opened his eyes wide.

A flame slowly illuminated the gloomy view—It was the light of a torch. The figures of several people appeared, holding the torches in hand, headed towards the cage Subaru and the man were inside.

Leading them was a woman of tall stature with a strong, well-trained body. The woman appeared to have hair originally black in color, but had been dyed red, and her dark-brown-skinned face and body were covered in designs of white paint. Her green eyes conveyed a strong sense of purpose that left a powerful impression.

Hiding behind such a woman, happened to be the little girl from before. A group of about ten people had come their way, and all of them appeared to be women.

Subaru: "…"

However, Subaru was involuntarily overpowered by that feeling of oppression.

The wild air of the group was unlike the chivalric Order of Knights of Lugunica, or even unlike what he had seen of the Vollachian military; it had a beauty like that of a troop of beasts that were commanded by instinct.

The impression was one of a group built on instinct at its core, rather than logic.

Subaru held that sort of impression on their development, and as they stood before the cage in which they had imprisoned Subaru, the women—The People of Shudraq, fixed their gazes on the two people inside the cage.

And then—

???: "Looks like you're up huh. —You lot, who the hell are you lot anyway?"

The question was asked of Subaru and the masked man together.

@floating_here

2

—Who are you?

It was relatively common in stories, but in practice, it was the kind of question that was not often asked.

A situation where someone was suspicious of your identity and questioned you was not exactly a normal event in real life. Whether on the side of the questioner or the listener, with the exception of businesses such things needed to be asked, you could potentially go your whole life without having said those words.

In that sense, it was a question Subaru was not familiar with.

Nevertheless, he could still clearly recall the first time in his life that he heard that question.

Who is Subaru and what is his purpose?

The first time Subaru was asked that, the question had come from none other than Rem, who had doubted his identity at the mansion.

Subaru: “Not you, but you lot…?”

As he tried to shake off those memories, he questioned the question.

Although they were put in the same prison, the connection between Subaru and the masked man was flimsy. Or rather, it was for convenience that they had been put in the same prison, and Subaru’s level of involvement was equal to zero.

Was it not a rather careless way of thinking, to treat them as if they were the same because of that?

Masked man: “Do not get caught up in trivial matters. I have informed them that you and I are acquainted with each other. That is the sole reason for the inquiry.”

Subaru: “You…gh! Saying we know each other… That’s taking it a bit far no?!”

Masked man: “I did not lie. If we looked upon each other, you and I would both know the identity of the other. What more is required to consider someone else a person you are acquainted with?”

Subaru: “Wh-What an unreasonable tone…”

It was an excessively high-handed way of speaking, but Subaru remembered that high-handed tone.

There was one person he knew in particular, a character who would wield that sort of logic to talk down to Subaru and other people.

Such troublesome people, the thought as to whether there were many more like them made Subaru’s head dizzy but—

???: “Oi, what are you talking about all sneaky-like. Answer the question.”

Subaru: “Ah, ah, my name is Natsuki Subaru. As you can see, a pitiful, worn-out and miserable lost child! And next, the one behind me is… umm?”

Masked man: “—Abel.”

Subaru: “Right, Abel! He wears a mask to hide his face and has an arrogant and disagreeable personality, but he also hands knives to people who are lost. He’s a playboy who’s made many girls cry due to the gap brought about by that element of unpredictability, so at this time please go ahead and introduce yourself!”

???: “Oh, ohh…? I’m Mizelda but…”

Overwhelmed by the energy with which Subaru pressed for an answer, the lead woman— Mizelda gave her name.

As Subaru took the time to look properly at the opposing party, starting with Mizelda, an extremely fitting word to describe the aura of the women came to mind. Amazons.

They were of a small tribe composed mainly of women, with strong, disciplined bodies and body paint that seemed to fit the image, and some even carried bows.

Subaru definitely recognized the People of Shudraq as Amazons.

Subaru: “To be honest, I was actually surprised that Mask Man’s name turned out to be Abel but…”

Abel: “…”

Subaru: “Let’s put that off for now! Listen to me, Mizelda-san, and everyone of Shudraq!”

Having put off the allusion to the masked man—Abel, Subaru raised his voice to the assembled women.

Judging from appearances, it was no use arguing with the women, as they seemed to have no intention of killing Subaru. That much could be surmised from how they had treated him and the fact that they showed willingness to listen to what he had to say.

In that case, if he talked with them sincerely and earnestly, they might understand.

Subaru: “You might already know this, but outside this forest an encampment of Imperial Soldiers is being established. A girl who is very important to me is being held captive there, and if I don’t return immediately it could be dangerous! So please, let me go!”

Mizelda: “…”

Subaru: “After that, the soldiers are aiming for the People of Shudraq. They said it’d be fine if they could talk but, in the worst case, they are also prepared for battle. If that happens, I…”

Will help smooth things over, he was going to say, but he shut his mouth.

If it could be achieved, there might not be a battle between the Imperial Soldiers and the People of Shudraq, but most likely, it would be impossible for Subaru to help with that.

Todd and his group recognized Subaru as the main culprit who had sprung the witchbeast trap on them. Since he could not be trusted, that would be asking too much.

Subaru had precisely weighed the options of Rem and Todd.

And he chose to harm them in order to help Rem. He could not escape the responsibility of that choice.

Subaru: “Sorry, let me correct myself. The truth is the soldiers are targeting everyone in Shudraq. There are quite a number of people in the camp, so even if you fight…”

Mizelda: “—You saying we’d lose?”

Subaru: “Ah…”

Because of the discrepancy in resources and strategies that could be taken, it was undeniable that they were at a disadvantage.

Interrupting Subaru as he tried to convey that, Mizelda spoke bluntly in a quiet voice.

Hearing that reaction, Subaru understood he had chosen the wrong words.

The People of Shudraq were likely a tribe of hunters.

Those who honed their skills and were constantly improving their abilities. The method of trying to persuade them with the point that they would lose the fight could easily set them off. It was an argument that should not be made.

Mizelda: “About the Vollachian soldiers coming, we know. But there is an old promise between those guys and us. There shouldn’t be conflict.”

Subaru: “—hk, no, wait! I don’t know anything about that promise but, even so, those guys are serious about you…”

Mizelda: “Enough!”

Subaru: "—gh!"

Subaru tried to get closer, but was struck through the wooden lattice and fell over from the impact. Mizelda had banged her fist against the bars, but it was her eyes that conveyed her indignation.

Once again, Subaru had chosen the wrong words.

Just like taking pride in a fight, old promises and the like were important to them.

Subaru had trampled on that, rudely and unknowingly. Again.

Mizelda: "The Vollachian soldiers moved their troops outside the forest to train. They have done that many times."

Subaru: "Moving troops to train… What, like a military exercise?"

It seemed that term was unfamiliar, and Mizelda frowned at Subaru's words. However, Subaru was gradually beginning to see the big picture of the trap that had been set by the Vollachian side.

It was common for Vollachian soldiers to set up encampments around the Buddheim Jungle, in the name of military exercises. The People of Shudraq were accustomed to it. By taking advantage of their inattention to those exercises, the Vollachian military was going to surround the Buddheim Jungle, and capture all of the People of Shudraq in one fell swoop.

If that was their concern—

Subaru: "Why go so far to aim for these people?"

Of course, much like Mizelda, who stood before his eyes, the People of Shudraq were an undoubtedly powerful tribe.

However, Subaru had no idea why Vollachia would have to send an army to siege the jungle and capture them.

With the current state of affairs, they looked like they would be unwilling to leave the forest. They lived, breathed, and labored here.

And yet—

Mizelda: “Neither Natsuki Subaru nor Abel speak the truth. In which case they do not suit us.”

Subaru: “—gh, are you serious?”

Mizelda: “…”

Mizelda shook her head back and forth, signaling the end of the conversation.

None of the People of Shudraq offered any counter-arguments against her dispassionate rejection. It seemed as though she was the leader of the current group of Shudraqians, if not the entire settlement.

Obeying her commands, the People of Shudraq turned their backs on Subaru’s accusations and decided to leave him and Abel be.

Still carrying their torches, the group started to leave.

Subaru: “Wait! It’s not a lie! It’s not a lie! Everyone’s in danger! The promise… The promise will be broken! Everyone’s in, Rem’s also in danger!”

Watching them disperse, Subaru desperately tried to warn them.

However, having already received the decision of their leader, the People of Shudraq would not stop. The only one who acknowledged him in the slightest was the little girl, who glanced at him periodically. Even then, she did it as she walked away.

Subaru shouted himself hoarse, hacking up bloody phlegm. Still, no one would listen to him.

Subaru: “Khoff… Damn, it. Why, is it always like this…!”

Sinking down into the ground, Subaru bemoaned his situation as he hit his forehead against the bars.

He could not even vent out his anger on the cage. His right hand was unusable due to the injury on his shoulder and his left hand still held broken fingers. Subaru was a useless person, riddled with wounds, and his speech could not even be persuasive.

If that was the case, what worth did Natsuki Subaru have left?

Subaru: "…Is it just how bad I am at giving up and my slyness?"

His eyes clouded over as he tasted despair. However, Subaru determinedly refused to admit defeat. He would grit his teeth and rise above.

If it were the Subaru of the past, he would have set his limits on a whim.

Looking back at the events that had happened until this point, he recognized that the path he had walked to get here had not been an easy one. The Subaru of the now was a little different.

He got slightly worse at giving up. That was the light that guided him on his pitch-black path.

Abel: "That was a rather pointless discussion that was had."

Subaru: "…"

Those words mixed with disdain and scorn reached Subaru, who was currently gripping on to the bars, scheming for a way to create a gap where he could slip through.

Though it was irritating, he could not retort. Subaru had in fact splendidly stepped on a taboo landmine and failed the negotiations. He was surely at the peak of thoughtlessness.

However—

Subaru: "If that was pointless, wouldn't that mean there was no point for you too? Anyway, didn't I tell you? There are dangerous people in the jungle, so don't go inside."

Abel: "Yes, that is correct. Those instructions became my guidance. I shall give my thanks for that."

Subaru: “But you still got caught even after being told that. I feel so helpless… Dammit, isn’t it loose anywhere?”

Even after hitting the wooden cage with his body, there were no signs of breakage anywhere. The log-like bars had been inserted deep into the ground individually and were sturdy enough to believe that heavy machinery had been used in its construction.

Of course, since no such machinery existed in this world, it had to be the product of manual labor. Either they had done it with a large number of people, or they had someone among their ranks with superhuman strength somewhere on the level of Emilia and Garfiel.

Subaru: “What a thing they’ve built, considering the whole place is full of girls…”

Abel: “Do not underestimate the People of Shudraq. They are a matriarchal tribe that birth only women, and have lived in this jungle for hundreds of years as descendants of war gods. They have no need for males, except to birth their children. It is even customary to abduct those males from elsewhere.”

Subaru: “They’re Amazons for real… Wait, don’t tell me the reason we’re caught is…”

Capturing males, using them as tools to make offspring.

That notion and line of thinking only existed in places like poor, mountainous villages of old. Even so, being that he was in a foreign country in another world, where Subaru’s normal would not apply, this could be a very real belief held by people.

Abel mockingly laughed at Subaru’s words however,

Abel: “Calm yourself. They choose their children. —Any child of a person who speaks falsehoods to attempt to deceive them would only end up a disgrace. That kind of offspring is not desired, I imagine.”

Subaru: “…Falsehoods”

Accepting Abel’s statement, Subaru cursed his incompetent attempt at an explanation.

The reason Mizelda and the other Shudraqians had not believed him, though in part due to his impatience, was because of his poor setup of an argument.

If one did not understand what the opponent's characteristics were, and where did their pride lay, even an argument full of sincerity and seriousness would not be any different from an insult or physical offense. It would not be different at all.

Subaru: "But, it's no lie. The Empire's soldiers are targeting the Shudraqians. And…"

Abel: "And…?"

Subaru: "As a last resort… Actually, no. As a first resort, they'll set this whole place on fire."

At Subaru's declaration, Abel for the first time quietly held his breath.

The flaming jungle had been an event that occurred after Todd had learned of the witchbeast lurking in the woods. Last time, the Imperial Army had chosen to burn away the Buddheim Jungle going off Subaru's testimony only.

If they confirmed the witchbeast's existence themselves, the forest being burnt down would be difficult to avoid.

Subaru: "…Though, if Todd and the others got wiped out, that'd be a different story."

He had already heavily considered that possibility after deciding to incite the witchbeast.

Calling upon an potentially deadly enemy was tantamount to indirect murder. Knowing this, Subaru had gone ahead with his bait plan nonetheless. In reality, people might have actually died.

Thinking about this, a lump grew heavy in his chest. His heart pained like it was being stuffed.

Nevertheless, setting aside the feelings of aversion and guilt for those murders as ones he would carry for life, he focused on another, more important point—Todd and the others had, most likely, not been completely wiped out.

Subaru: “…”

Todd’s group was around twenty people strong, all with little to no experience fighting witchbeasts.

Even so, adding together Todd’s decision-making to Jamal’s surprising assertiveness, it was impossible to hope for that one Snake witchbeast to destroy the entire group.

Naturally, it was better to believe that Todd’s group had survived, and were retreating back to the camp from the jungle.

After getting back to the camp, Todd’s group would report on Subaru’s betrayal and the existence of the witchbeast. Depending on the situation, they could still believe that Subaru was one of the People of Shudraq and have concluded that the Shudraqians had taken an offensive course of action against them.

If that were to happen, it would be the same as last time. Wanting to minimize casualties, the Imperial Soldiers would set the jungle ablaze without hesitation. —The People of Shudraq would no doubt be burnt to a crisp.

Abel: “—What is that, that look in your eye.”

Subaru: “Nothing…”

Abel commented on Subaru’s gaze. Subaru immediately looked away, but was still preoccupied with thoughts on Abel’s end in the last loop.

Most likely, Abel had been captured by the People of Shudraq, similar to the current situation. In those circumstances, considering the jungle had been set on fire, he had probably perished in flames alongside them.

It was a stretch to think that the People of Shudraq would help someone like a prisoner escape from that inferno. Worst case scenario, he had not been able to escape the cage in time and burned to death.

If that were the case—

Subaru: "—The People of Shudraq, Abel. I basically killed all of them."

His own life, Rem's life, Abel's life and the People of Shudraq's lives. He did not want to lose any of them.

That was why Subaru would stand up and devise a way to break out of his current predicament.

Abel: "Do you not understand it is useless? They are not a group so lacking that they would leave an opening for someone of your strength. Much less someone as injured as you are. Why do you exert yourself that far for just one woman?"

Abel said to Subaru in exasperation, the latter continuing to grip onto the wood, still fervently resisting.

Those words lit a fire in Subaru.

Subaru: "It's because that girl to me, isn't just one woman. That isn't nearly enough to describe her. There's no replacement. Rem is, the one and only Rem."

Abel: "…"

Subaru: "And you. Do you have the time to be picking on me constantly? I don't know why you're here, but surely you're not going "Yeah I'm finished, I'm done", after being caught are ya?"

Upon first meeting him, Abel had worn his concealment cloak and looked as though he had come to the jungle to fulfill some task. Even if that were not the case, he was the type of person to readily give away a knife. Which, according to Todd, was the sort of knife that would only be gifted by an Emperor.

To say that he was here for no reason at all would be a fact difficult to imagine and quite frankly unbelievable.

Subaru: “Sitting on the cold ground over there, what do you want to do?”

Abel: “—I was merely waiting for an opportunity.”

Abel responded deathly quietly to Subaru’s question.

His response had been unlike the goading and mocking comments previously made to Subaru. It held a different tone, sounding more like Abel’s true feelings, spilled out into words.

Subaru: “Waiting for an, opportunity? Opportunity as in, a chance? What chance were you waiting for…”

Abel: “I do not know of this chance you speak of, but I was waiting for the pieces to be set. Until they had been organized, any unnecessary action by myself would have muddied the waters. That is why I was forced to observe. Actually, I believed having the group outside the jungle make their move first was the correct move, however…”

Subaru: “…”

Abel: “If they are willing to burn down this jungle, I cannot be sitting here cross-legged forever.”

Saying that, Abel uncrossed his arms and slowly stood up.

Looking at his long and slender posture, Subaru froze stiff in surprise at his words.

Abel: “What is the matter? That stupefied face of yours. That is quite a disrespectful face you are presenting me with.”

Subaru: “Dun-dunno about disrespectful but… You, believe what I said? Cause, the People of Shudraq…”

Abel: “I did not believe you. Tainting their pride, rejecting the age-old promise which is held with great respect, saying it amounts to nothing. Truly, it was a failed negotiation for the ages.”

Subaru: “Uguu…u”

He knew that there was no defense for his choice of words, so it left him no choice but to be pummeled by Abel’s assessment.

As Subaru frowned, Abel continued his speech with, “But…”. And then, through his disguise, he gazed at Subaru, who raised his head —

Abel: “I am not a part of the Shudraqians. Their pride and meaningful contracts are as good as dust. What is necessary is the truth you brought about, free of any falsehood.”

Subaru: “…What will you do if I am lying?”

Abel: “It is obvious. —You shall pay with your life.”

His words were heavy, carrying a clear distinction from those who spoke of death in jest.

Abel was earnestly telling Subaru to atone with his death, should he make a wrong move. This was neither a game, nor was it said on a whim, but it was a scene that would put his real determination to the test.

Getting that feeling from Abel, Subaru subconsciously straightened his posture.

He stopped fighting the bars of the cage before he knew it, facing Abel, who was right in front of him. Staring into Subaru’s black eyes, the menacing look inside of the piercing light in Abel’s eyes intensified.

Abel: “You are to choose each and every one of your words with utmost care, Natsuki Subaru. —Do you have the resolve to sacrifice everything, in order to save what you desire to save?”

Subaru: “…”

His question had been straightforward, unforgiving of any hesitation to answer, as well as any lies being stated.

If Subaru answered it by interweaving truth and fiction, he would be a dead man. Yes, the man called Abel held a certain power in his voice, enough to make Subaru put his trust in him.

Subaru received Abel's question in his heart.

Did he have the necessary resolve to save everything, to save what he wanted to save, at the cost of sacrificing everything else?

His answer to the question would be—

Subaru: "—I don't have the resolve to do that."

Abel: "…"

Subaru: "All I can offer is myself. —If it's just that, then I can put all of it on the line."

Instead of his right arm that had been stabbed, Subaru put the arm with broken fingers on his chest, responding to the inquiry.

It was Subaru's answer to Abel's question, containing not a speck of dishonesty.

Even if he were told to forfeit everything and everyone, there was no way he would be able to accept that.

In order to do so, this world had too many things important to Subaru, and too many radiant things he had not witnessed yet.

That was why—

Abel: "You gave me a presumptuous answer, you vexing jester."

Subaru: "…"

Abel: "However, you did not state any falsehoods. In that case, you will not be incinerated."

Subaru realized his life had been spared, after Abel stated that as a result of hearing the answer to his question.

Cold sweat suddenly began flowing out of his body, and he understood that his life was in the palm of Abel's hand.

As Subaru had evaluated Abel earlier, when they first came across each other at the grassland, he was not extraordinarily strong.

Comparing the masked man to the powerful people Subaru had either seen, or interacted with in the past and to this day, his strength did not step over the bounds of an ordinary person. However, even considering that, Subaru felt as if he just had narrowly escaped death.

A power dissimilar to pure physical strength and sword skills resided within Abel. That was what Subaru thought.

Abel: "Then, that will save us time. —Hey, you. The girl over there."

???: "Ukyan?!"

Ignoring Subaru, who was sweating heavily from having his life spared, Abel suddenly called out to someone. Immediately, a small cry was emitted from the shadows, reacting to the tone of his voice.

When Subaru spun around in surprise, he saw a girl staring shyly at them under the shade of a tree ahead of Abel's line of sight.

The girl, with the tips of her hair dyed pink, hurriedly tried to escape from the gazes of Subaru and Abel, but—

Abel: "You will lose your opportunity if you run, girl. Surely, that must not be what you intend."

Girl: "Ough…"

Beaten to the punch by Abel, the girl groaned softly. After that, with an embarrassed look on her face, she walked towards them with dejected steps.

And then, her lips trembled as she said, "Uu is, Uu is…"

Girl: "Mii said not to listen to men. But, Uu is curious. Curious about you."

Subaru: “…Me?”

Saying that, the girl who had called herself “Uu” pointed a finger in Subaru’s direction. Receiving the unexpected indication that she was curious about him, Subaru widened his eyes while the girl nodded at him.

Girl: “You were doing your best. We are in danger. But, Mii won’t listen.”

Subaru: “Ah…”

Girl: “Why were you trying so hard? You have nothing to do with us.”

Why were you interfering, even though you have nothing to do with us?

Subaru’s breath hitched for a moment, wondering if his nosiness was being pointed out. However, the girl’s words did not seem to have that purpose. She was genuinely inquisitive.

Why was Subaru desperate about not only himself, but the People of Shudraq as well?

The answer to that was something not even Subaru himself knew, but—

Subaru: “…I think, I don’t want you to have that expression on your face.”

Girl: “—?”

Subaru: “I don’t want you to have that… feeling of having to loathe your enemies, clouded by hatred.”

The girl who had shot her opponent with a poisoned arrow, watching his death to the end with hate-filled eyes.

To this day, the girl’s feelings of loathing, and his guilt from the extreme events that had led her to that point, still remained in his eyes. They were surging up and whirling around. They had morphed into thorns, causing him pain.

That… must not be piled on top of one other. It must never recur.

There was nothing better than not Returning by Death.

However, by losing his life, in a world where he had to start over, if there was a way he could bring the people involved with him onto a better path—

Subaru: "I think… the purpose of me trying my best with all my might lies there."

Girl: "…Uu doesn't understand."

Despite hearing his answer, what he had really meant had been not conveyed to the girl. It was only natural. Speak of this to someone who did not know of Return by Death, and they would not understand a thing.

And Subaru was not thinking of having her understand that, either. Knowing that such a reality had existed was an unnecessary addition to the girl's life.

Abel: "—Are you satisfied? It should be the same for me and you, to not have the time for a long chat."

Subaru: "Ye… yeah, sorry."

Uninterested in the conversation between Subaru and the girl, Abel cut it off without any hesitation.

When he turned to face the girl, she grew tense and gazed up at him, perhaps perceiving the same pressure Subaru had felt previously.

Abel: "I do not plan on blithering on with you, girl. The woman from earlier… Mizelda, was it? Bring that one here. That is the chieftain, no?"

Girl: "Mii? What will you talk about with Mii?"

Abel: “It is trivial. I merely have a suggestion to make.”

Girl: “Suggestion?”

Stared at by Subaru and the girl, who were tilting their heads, Abel nodded deeply.

And then, he smiled just as Subaru had expected, although it could not be seen under his mask,

Abel: “—Tell her that we will be undergoing the Lifeblood Ritual. It is the fastest way to persuade them.”

He told her, just like that.

Chapter 11:
The Lifeblood Ceremony

1

Subaru: “—So what’s this “Lifeblood Ritual”?”

Abel: “An absolutely unignorable custom belonging to the people of Shudraq, who place great value on pride and commitment. We will hear more about it from them. More importantly…”

Abel stared at Subaru, only giving him a rough answer to his question.

The Shudraqian girl had set off to deliver Abel’s earlier message to the chief, Mizelda, leaving only Subaru and Abel behind.

Meaning that the time they had left for a private chat was limited.

Abel: “Fill me in, you said you were taken prisoner in an encampment outside the forest, right. How did they treat you?”

Subaru: “…I’ve got to thank them for the injuries to my shoulder and back. That, and they made me do some odd jobs.”

To be precise, the odd jobs and abuse had happened in different loops, however, pressured by Abel’s intimidating atmosphere, Subaru had blurted it all out.

Abel narrowed his eyes, letting out a “Hmmm” upon hearing him, before looking at Subaru’s left hand,

Abel: “Seeing that you did not touch on the matter of your fingers, I guess that must be a different issue. It must have been done to you by the woman you were after.”

Subaru: “Ugh… What’s that got to do with this?!”

Abel: “It serves as proof that you are a fool to yearn for a woman who goes and breaks your fingers.”

It was hard to say that Abel's statement was one that described Subaru and Rem's relationship appropriately. However, Subaru had neither the time nor the obligation to dwell on it with him, and fill him in on the details.

Then, Abel quickly shifted his focus from the state of Subaru's left hand.

Abel: "So, by saying you have performed "odd jobs", you are implying that you have seen inside the camp. What is the layout like? Rack your empty brains, draw it out from your memory."

Subaru: "There were a bunch of tents, and when it comes to the number of people in the camp… Hey, what's up with that?"

Abel: "Do you not get it? It goes without saying, that the people you saw were…"

Abel snorted at Subaru after asking him one question after another, the latter's face scrunched into a frown.

However, Abel was unable to answer Subaru's question, due to the sound of several footsteps pattering towards the cage again.

They belonged to Mizelda, and her group, being dragged along by the girl.

Mizelda: "I heard everything from Utakata. She said you're both going to take the Lifeblood Ritual."

Mizelda, her hair dyed red, placed her hand on the head of the girl clinging to her leg—the girl called Utakata. Then she sent a piercing look at both Subaru and Abel.

Her gaze was filled with sharpness that rivalled the drive from earlier, when Subaru had trampled over their pride as warriors.

Mizelda: "Where the heck did you find out about the Lifeblood Ritual? It's supposed to be a rite that's passed down only for us Shudraq."

Abel: "Do not make me laugh, young chief of the Shudraq. Do you seriously think that no one knows about your traditions in this day and age? Two people, that is all it takes for a secret to leak out. Abandon your pipe dream of thinking that you are all as one."

Mizelda: "…"

Abel: "Your precious "Lifeblood Ritual" is no exception either. In actual fact, I know both what kind of ritual it is, as well as what happened in the past."

Mizelda's gaze turned stern as Abel's response grew in zeal.

Subaru could tell that the Shudraqians' expressions in their vicinity, and not just Mizelda's at that, were growing more and more tense, faced with Abel's lofty words. Subaru took a sizable heavy gulp himself.

Right now, Subaru was the only one being left behind, not knowing anything about the details of this "Lifeblood Ritual" that had been mentioned by Abel. Nevertheless, the fact remained that the ritual was an important one to Mizelda and the others, and that Abel would not welcome him making light of how they felt about it.

And so, in order to prevent the situation from causing any further confusion, Subaru spoke up, interjecting with an, "Um!".

Subaru: "Sorry to interrupt when your discussion was starting to become more lively, but can you tell me more about this "Lifeblood Ritual"? I'm probably not unrelated to it, right?"

Mizelda: "…Why do you think so?"

Subaru: "Ah, I just got threatened by this masked prick a while ago. Stuff like asking me whether I could sacrifice everything or not. "Hell no" was my answer, though."

Mizelda: "Then…"

Subaru: "All I can put on the line is myself. That guy's overestimating his influence a little too much."

Sacrificing everything. That kind of remark was only allowed to be made by people who were quite powerful.

Unfortunately for Subaru and Abel, both of them were helpless as they had been captured by the People of Shudraq, so they were not qualified to be faced with such a grandiose choice.

So, all he could wager were only whatever cards he held firmly in his hand. And as of now, "Natsuki Subaru" was his sole card.

Subaru: "But, just as Abel said, it'll be difficult for us if you won't listen. It's going to be a repetition of what I previously said, but I'll keep saying the same thing as many times as I need. At worst, I need you to at least let me out, so I can protect what's precious to me, else I will be stumped on what to do."

Mizelda: "…I see. It seems like you're qualified to undergo the Lifeblood Ritual."

As Subaru made his appeal to her, wanting to keep their conversation going, Mizelda muttered with a hushed tone.

Subaru widened his eyes at her answer, and Abel made a small noise in his throat. However, there was one person who proceeded to overreact upon hearing her chief's words.

Amidst the group that surrounded Mizelda, the person, a woman with hair dyed blue, was standing right beside her.

???: "Sister! Are you sure? Believing the words of these men…"

Mizelda: "It's not like I believe them, Taritta. I just thought it would be a waste to disregard their words."

Taritta: "Sister…"

The woman called Taritta hung her head, listening to Mizelda's response, who she had referred to as "Sister".

It seemed like they were sisters, related by blood. Once their connection had been pointed out to Subaru, he realized that they were actually quite similar, especially the fierce impression given off by their eyes.

Then, after Mizelda had rejected her younger sister's words, she looked at Subaru once more, and,

Mizelda: "You've heard about the Lifeblood Ritual. It's a ritual to make the tribe acknowledge oneself, passed down to us Shudraqians since ancient times. You can call it a coming of age ritual."

Subaru: "Coming of age… ah, it's that kind of thing. But, we aren't really…"

Abel: "A part of the Shudraq. It is needless to say that, as everyone is aware of it. Do not waste any time with your foolish antics. What matters most is the true nature of this ritual."

Subaru had made Abel seem exasperated, the former perplexed by his newfound knowledge of the ritual, that it existed so that those who completed it would be treated as an adult. Subaru's cheeks stiffened from Abel's callous words, but he understood what the masked man wanted to say.

The true nature of the coming of age ritual laid within making the group acknowledge the challenger as an adult. That meant, the true nature of the "Lifeblood Ritual" was—

Subaru: "A rite of passage… To ensure the Shudraqians would listen to us as their equals…"

Abel: "Exactly."

Affirming Subaru's belief, Abel folded his arms, glancing over at Mizelda. Soon after receiving his gaze, Mizelda drew back her chin, and then,

Mizelda: "If you are challenging the Lifeblood Ritual, then you must prepare yourselves."

Abel: "What will happen if the challenge were withdrawn? Will you claim that you will release us, right here and now? Unfortunately, I do not possess a mind so unsophisticated as to hope for something too good to be true. That goes for me, as well as this Natsuki Subaru over here."

Subaru: “Ueh?!”

With the discussion between Mizelda and Abel suddenly becoming heated, Subaru was surprised to hear himself included as one of the people who were determined to complete the ritual. However, Abel did not seem to care about what he thought.

While being shoved around by Abel’s current momentum, Mizelda asked him, “What will you do?”, he responded with,

Subaru: “…I’ll do it. If there’s no other way, then I’ll go through that ritual and make sure you listen to what I have to say. But, it’ll be a problem if the ritual’s going to take a few days…”

Mizelda: “That’s true. We do not want that, either. If that’s it…”

Taritta: “Sister, won’t the Elgina be enough, then?”

As Subaru steeled himself to undergo the ritual, Taritta offered a helpful suggestion to Mizelda, who was preoccupied with her own thoughts. Hearing her sister’s opinion, Mizelda nodded deeply, and then,

Mizelda: “Good idea. When the Lifeblood Ritual is carried out, the greatest obstacle will be chosen.”

Subaru: “The greatest obstacle… That’s…”

Mizelda: “—The Elgina.”

Mizelda repeated the word as Subaru swallowed audibly.

Utakata shrunk away, her shoulders jolting at the mention of the word, and the air around the Shudraqian women became wrapped with tension.

Since they took pride in being warriors, their reactions were more than enough to provoke Subaru’s feeling of uneasiness.

However—

Abel: “You and I both cannot back out of this. Have you hardened your resolve?”

Subaru: “You’re acting all arrogant, even though you brought the conversation to this point without asking me anything. Aren’t you doing things as you please a bit too much, just because I’m indebted to you…?”

It was true that Subaru was in Abel’s debt for the knife he had been given, but any positive, calm feelings he held towards that had been blown away by their interactions inside the cage. Though, of course, he also appreciated the fact that Abel had undone Subaru’s mistake and created a chance for the Shudraqians to listen to him.

Subaru: “As far as I know, those who hide their faces are never good people!”

Abel: “There is a reason for why I am hiding my face, however. — You are being insolent, but I will not deny that.”

If a character who hides their face happened to appear in a story, then there was a high possibility for them to be related to the main character in one way or another. In this case, Subaru would be in the position of the protagonist, but—

Subaru: “You’re thinner than my dad, and your voice is also different. More so, there’s no way I would mistake my dad for another person.”

Abel: “…It seems like you are spouting out nonsense.”

Subaru: “It’s not nonsense, it’s about my dad. He’s the most annoying and also the coolest in the world.”

Abel: “…”

Perhaps the topic did not pique Abel’s interest, as what little warmth he had in his gaze had been visibly diminished.

In fact, Subaru had only mentioned that since he was in the Empire, and a masked person had made their appearance, comparing his situation to a movie about a war in outer space from a long time ago. Subaru could probably consider Abel to be a stranger who hid his face… maybe.

Ignoring his nonsensical thoughts, Mizelda proceeded to issue orders to her fellow Shudraqians, and then,

Mizelda: “Abel and Natsuki Subaru, we will bring both of you to the Elgina. Prove to us whether you can complete the Lifeblood Ritual admirably, or not!”

As she made her declaration, the cage was opened, and Subaru and Abel were taken outside.

2

Subaru and Abel were let out of the cage without blindfolds or restraints, and the Shudraqians surrounded them and walked them outside of the village.

In the deep, dense jungle, Subaru walked as if he were groping around in the dark, which nearly caused him to trip and fall many times. But each time, one of the surrounding Shudraqians saved him.

Subaru: “Oops, my bad. You had to help me again…”

Blonde woman: “Nooo problem~. Me, I’m a strong woman so it’s toootally fine~.”

Saying that, the woman, who dyed her hair yellow, supported Subaru as he tumbled.

The woman speaking had a plump figure and soft features. She was a rare type in Shudraq, where many women had firm and muscular bodies, but she had an air about her that made her very easy to get along with.

Blonde woman: “Are your injuries okay~? I’m the one who did your medical treatment~.”

Subaru: “Oh, this was thanks to you? Ahh, I’m alright. It’s still a little, well, I mean it hurts quite a bit, but it’s better.”

Blonde woman: “Ahahaha, you’re an honest guy ain’tcha~?”

Saying that, the woman laughed in a carefree manner, and her attitude also helped Subaru. Practically speaking, she had treated his wounds, so he should say he was helped in two ways.

Subaru naturally relaxed in the presence of such a big-hearted and kind woman. But he was rather concerned about the meat bone she always carried in her other hand.

Blonde woman: “Yeah? You hungry~? Wanna have some meat~?”

Subaru: “Ah, no, I’m good. Not that I’m not hungry, but if I eat I won’t be able to move well.”

Blonde woman: “Ahaha, that’s how it is~. Besides, if your stomach is full you’ll suffer when you die too~.”

Subaru: “Haha…”

Even while gnawing on her ham bone, and despite with her gentle looks, she was Shudraqian through-and-through.

In any case, Subaru and Abel were led someplace by the Shudraq in this manner, without feeling any hostility from them.

Mizelda had been like that at first, but once Subaru and Abel resolved to face the Lifeblood Ritual, it appeared that the effect of the failure of initial negotiations had been nullified.

In other words, whatever the outcome of the trial, the rehabilitation of their image with the women was a success.

If that was the case, even if the outcome of the trial were not favorable, it might be possible to get back to the negotiating table again.

Abel: “—Your face appears like you are thinking of something convenient.”

Subaru: “…Don’t read whether a person is thinking this or that just from the color of their face and the look in their eyes. I get that you're like that, but are people in the Empire always that sort?"

Abel: "I do not know the cause of your bewilderment. Moreover I have no interest in whom you may be comparing me to. It is simply that, in order to live, humans in the Empire learn to look closely at their opponents. It is different from the Kingdom."

Subaru: "Look closely at their opponents, huh…"

Abel, who was being taken away with him, impressed Subaru with his words.

That was a lesson many people without outstanding military power should be aware of, not just the people of the Empire. For Subaru too, without careful observation of his opponents, would be unable to grasp a chance of success even under normal circumstances.

It was a tough, tough issue that he needed to be aware of from now on.

Abel: "By the way, are you not thinking of fleeing when you have the chance?"

While Subaru was entertained by those thoughts, Abel whispered a new one in his ear.

Subaru narrowed his eyes, surprised at Abel's dispassion to the matter.

Subaru: "Could you stop coming up with such weird temptations? I'm sure you can't help thinking about it, but it can't be done."

Abel: "Oho, why not? There is a better chance to escape now than when you were in that cage. If you create a good opportunity, you could slip out of the Shudraq's sight."

Subaru: "Well, I've also started running in that sort of reckless manner before, when getting too hot-headed, but…"

Abel's words were like that of a carefree criminal's, and Subaru once again surveyed his surroundings.

The depths of the forest were so dark that Subaru could only see a few meters ahead. In the end, the direction and distance of the encampment Subaru must get back to were not clear, so there was no point in escaping.

On top of that, all of the surrounding Shudraqians were much more capable than Subaru with his two injured hands.

Blonde woman: "—? What's the matter?"

Utakata: "Definitely in love with Hol. Hol is the prettiest girl in village."

Blonde woman: "Wahaa~, Me, that's so embarrassing~"

Peeping into Subaru's line of sight, Utakata spoke to the woman at her side.

The woman shook her head from side to side in denial, blushing. It was awfully cute, but there was no opening. If Subaru tried to flee, she would certainly pin him down in an instant.

Above all—

Subaru: "If I ran, what exactly would happen to you?"

Abel: "—. I see. When it comes down to it, you are that kind of fellow, hm? A detestable, idiotic, wannabe hero."

Subaru: "And?"

Averting his gaze, Abel spat out those words.

Annoyed by that declaration, Subaru snapped at the masked man's profile. However, before he could enquire about the real meaning of his words, the feet of Mizelda, who stood at the vanguard, came to a halt.

Mizelda: "We're here."

Subaru: "You say we're here, but I can't see anything…"

Even with a raised torch to illuminate the surroundings, it was only possible to see a range of a few meters at best. To Subaru, the view of the forest spread before him seemed unchanged.

What on earth is here—

Mizelda: “Go ahead and you’ll see.”

Subaru: “Whoa-aa?!”

Straining to see in the darkness, Subaru pitched forward. His back was pushed by Taritta, who was behind him, and upon taking one or two steps forward, his feet stepped on thin air.

It was proof that a foothold was missing, that a foundation to stand on was missing.

Subaru: “This feeling… Oh no, not again?!”

Without thinking, Subaru shouted as he faced the earthen void—A steep slope to be precise. He put his feet to the incline and slid down so as not to start tumbling.

He traveled down the steep slope, and, someway or another, managed to catch his breath at the bottom.

Subaru: “Ah, that was dangerous… Even though I’m untouched, what was with that all of the sudden?!”

Abel: “Move.”

There was a strong impact on his back that had barely come to a halt, causing him to stumble and fall forward in the end. When he looked over his shoulder reproachfully, Subaru saw that the one who had collided with his back was Abel.

It seemed he had been pushed down the steep incline, just like Subaru.

Subaru: “From the looks of it, it just seems like the bottom of a hole but… is this where the ritual’s happening?”

Abel: “Indeed it is. Now then, what will reveal itself? Elgina, they called it.”

Subaru: “You got any idea what that is?”

Abel: ““El” has the meaning of large but… hm.”

While Subaru and Abel conversed at the bottom of the slope where they had been dropped, something was thrown in. At Abel’s feet, a bundle of cloth rolled to a stop.

And peeking out from inside the package was—

Abel: “It’s my luggage and your garbage.”

Subaru: “Mine is luggage too!”

Subaru and Abel picked up their equipment, which had been tossed down.

Inside was the Guiltywhip, naturally, and the knife that had been stuck in Subaru’s shoulder. He had received it from Abel, but after being bounced around from one place to the next, it had returned here.

Abel also picked up his own things, a sword and a mantle, and quickly put them on.

Subaru: “But, what the hell does this mean…?”

Utakata: “Uu’s watching too! Good luck!”

Following Abel, a high-pitched voice answered Subaru’s question as he recovered his equipment. He looked over and saw Utakata waving both hands atop the slope. It looked like that girl had thrown in the equipment.

Mizelda and Taritta did not raise their voices against her actions either. It seemed this level of assistance would not hinder the ritual.

And then, at the same time—

Blonde woman: “I want you to do your best, okay~?!”

Subaru: “Seriously…?”

He saw the woman from before, her hair dyed yellow, with a calm voice and a carefree manner, smiling nonchalantly while blocking the entrance to the slope with a large boulder.

There was no mistaking it, judging from the rumbling of the earth, it could be nothing else.

Unbelievable superhuman strength. —It was clear whose hands had made that solid, improvised cage.

With the entrance closed, Subaru and Abel were enclosed in an empty valley about twenty meters across from left to right.

Opposite the entrance, darkness spread out in front of the pair. It looked like they could escape if they ran straight ahead, but such a naive idea should be abandoned.

Abel: “Natsuki Subaru, how much are you able to move your hands?”

Subaru: “Huh? My hands… they’re as bad as they look. I can’t raise my right hand, and my left hand can’t grip strongly either. Naturally, I also can’t do fine movements…Woah?!”

Abel: “Put this on your finger in best condition! There is no time.”

Abel then threw a ring from his belongings to Subaru. Without saying yes or no, Subaru accepted it immediately and put it on the middle finger of his left hand.

The ring was inlaid with a black jewel, which gave it an air of luxury, as well as a strange sense of intimidation.

Subaru: “This is?”

Abel: “A ring with magic sealed inside it. Kiss it before using it. It spews fire, but it is limited.”

Subaru: “Huh? Magic? Kiss? What do you…”

Abel: “—Here it comes.”

Unable to keep up with the stream of rapid-fire information, Subaru was hung out to dry by Abel, who readied his sword. Swept up in the moment by a determined-looking Abel, Subaru hurriedly drew his whip out.

And so, just as the preparation of their equipment was more or less completed—

Subaru: “…Oi oi, you gotta be kidding me.”

Backs facing the sloped surface that blocked their exit, Subaru stood alongside Abel as he stared in shock at the sight in front of him.

The figure that appeared as it slowly slithered along the ground from the darkness was a collection of scales. All green, shiny and dripping with water—It was a Snake witchbeast.

A witchbeast that Subaru had already encountered in this Buddheim Jungle twice before.

Subaru: “Don’t tell me, Elgina…?”

Snake witchbeast: “—ℨℨ!!”

Subaru questioned fearfully, swallowing his breath.

The Snake witchbeast opened its giant maw and, as if it were agreeing with Subaru, roared loudly. Enveloped in the fierce wind pressure of the roar, Subaru froze up.

Elgina is the Snake witchbeast, and undertaking the Lifeblood Ritual meant facing the most difficult challenge available.

If that were the case, the wall that Subaru and Abel had to break through was—

Mizelda: “Now, it is time to fight. Show that you are warriors. Shudraq’s eyes, the eyes of the hunters will see you through.”

Subaru: “Daaah! Of course it’s something like this!”

The booming voice of Mizelda reverberated around the arena, along with other blaring voices of cheer from the other Shudraqians. They stood on the surrounding cliffs, overlooking Subaru and Abel’s match against the witchbeast.

Subaru took to heart the questioningly cheerful and encouraging shouts. Meanwhile, the Snake witchbeast took a stance—

Abel: “—Here it comes, Natsuki Subaru!”

Subaru: “I can see that! Dammit, all I’ve been doing is facing trials lately!”

The Snake witchbeast surged forward ferociously as if to silence Subaru’s whining. And so, the Lifeblood Ritual had begun.

3

—The witchbeast that inhabited the Buddheim Jungle, Elgina.

According to Abel, “El” meant “Large”. Therefore, “Gina” was probably the word for “Snake”.

Or it could be that that was the People of Shudraq’s unique way of naming the witchbeast.

Nevertheless, verifying that claim and contributing to the history of cultural anthropology would have to come later.

Subaru: “The enemy in front of me comes first!”

Snapping its mouth open, the Snake witchbeast charged, baring its sharp fangs. Its body was at least ten meters in length and it resembled a large, sentient tree thrashing about in a forest.

Its torso was as thick as a bundle of logs and its flailing tail had enough power to cause serious injuries with just a graze.

As always, witchbeasts would try to kill with their physicality.

Subaru: “Bea—”

—ko. Calling out to his absent partner, Subaru grit his teeth.

The course of action Subaru would usually take when thrust into an unexpected situation was to, before even giving it a thought, let his trusted partner Beatrice handle it with her judgement and adaptability. That was what he had decided to be for the best.

In this situation however, this line of thinking would illuminate Subaru’s lack of adaptability—.

Abel: “Fool! This is not the time to be dawdling!”

Stiffening up at the realization of his blunder, an angry shout rang out as Subaru’s head, along with his hair, was grabbed. Bent backwards and falling, Subaru yelped before being dragged down.

Above the head of Subaru’s fallen body, the fangs of the Snake witchbeast snapped shut without mercy. An intense sound roared overhead, choking the atmosphere with bloodlust. At the same time, the resulting smoke and wind violently kicked up the soil.

Snake witchbeast: “Oooooaaaa—!”

Pushed by the strong gales, Subaru, unable to bear against it, rolled along the ground. Still, he could not stay rolling forever. Only a fool would pick their life up by the skin of their teeth and lose it immediately after.

Using the momentum to stand up, he tried to put some distance between him and the Snake witchbeast.

Abel: “Do not make me repeat myself, fool. Hold your breath.”

Subaru: “Ugoh.”

Subaru’s head was forcibly pushed down, pinning his body to the ground. Looking up, he saw a dust-covered Abel wrapping the both of them under his cloak.

However, the cloak was not that big. It was too small to wrap the two of them fully and currently, Abel was straddling Subaru's back.

Subaru: "What, what are you… Oh right, the Concealment Cloak!"

Abel: "Correct. If we stifle our breath, it will not find us immediately… Still, how unfortunate. If the Lifeblood Ritual were anything but a test of strength, we would have had a chance."

Looking out for any signs of the Snake witchbeast in the immediate vicinity, Abel's eyes were mixed with anger and frustration.

Hearing Abel's thoughts, Subaru could painfully relate to his thinking.

The contents of the Lifeblood Ritual seemed to differ with each attempt.

There must have been other trials that did not involve fighting a witchbeast. However, fighting the Snake witchbeast was the path thrust to Subaru and Abel to prove their status as warriors.

Subaru: "Both my hands are damaged and Abel's swordsmanship is second-rate… What a shit situation we're in."

Abel: "My swordsmanship is second-rate, you say? Considering your current state, your arms cannot even be used to drag me down."

Subaru: "I still got my mouth to talk back to you… Oh yeah, about before."

Inside the dense smoke, Subaru lifted his left hand up to show the ring on his middle finger.

The ring that had been thrown at him by Abel. The ring with much needed explaining. Having to kiss it, it spewing out fire, various inexplicable facts were said but—

Subaru: "How do I use it?"

Abel: "I told you before. Kiss the jewel and have it acknowledge you as its holder. The rest is akin to using magic."

Subaru: “What the hell is that. A ring that’s like a weapon from a light novel…!”

Staring at the ring in half-belief half-doubt, Subaru frowned at the explanation. Ignoring Subaru’s reaction, Abel searched for movements of the Snake witchbeast through the plumes of dust.

Although he had looked relaxed when trapped in the cage, he could not hide his tension when faced with a genuine threat. Breathing heavily, Abel tightly gripped his sword,

Abel: “Even if we get close, it is doubtful that we can pierce its scales. The places without scales… The eyes or mouth. If we do not pierce those places, or those places where the scales are thin, our attacks will be ineffective, I imagine.”

Subaru: “That’s kinda impossible if we don’t create an opening. If we could just do that somehow…”

Abel: “You create that opening. Why do you think you and I are working together?”

Subaru: “I was thinking of saying it but, being told to be a decoy really does my head in…!”

Having said that though, looking at the duo’s equipment and physical condition, those were the only roles they could realistically accept.

Subaru on support and Abel on offense. A familiar role for Subaru, as being in the role of an assistant was always Natsuki Subaru’s job.

Abel: “Currently, the witchbeast has lost sight of us. Draw its attention with fire. That will be the opening.”

Subaru: “Yeah, I get—”

Investing your resources at the start to reap the biggest reward possible was a fundamental tenet of battle.

Utilizing the cover of smoke that the witchbeast had coincidentally created, they would use their environment to their advantage to defeat the enemy.

Just as Subaru finished that thought, he felt a sense of wrongness.

The source of that wrongness was the witchbeast, Elgina.

The witchbeast that appeared to be a large snake. Its large size made it comparable to anacondas and the like. However, because it actively hunted humans, its threat level was above that of an anaconda.

And, if the witchbeast were snake-like, if its biology was similar to that of a snake—

Subaru: “—Uh.”

Trembling with fear, Subaru unconsciously pressed his lips to the ring. He then raised the ring above him and faced it towards the plumes of dust Abel was watching over.

Faster than Abel could question his actions, Subaru opened his mouth and—

Subaru: “—Goa.”

Immediately after, the Snake witchbeast aiming for Subaru and Abel burst through the smoke. And right in front of its nose, a flame exploded out.

4

—Snakes possess an organ specialized in detection of heat, called a ‘pit organ’.

As nocturnal critters inhabiting dense forests and boulder crevices, they require the ability to track their prey in the dark. That is why they are equipped with the pit organ from birth, which allows them to track and capture their prey by sensing their heat in total darkness.

In practice, this principle is known as thermography. But snakes are born with this ability, and thus have earned their moniker as an assassin cloaked in darkness.

So in turn, this giant snake was also equipped with the same pit organ.

Abel: "—!!"

It slithered near, but was met with a counterblow right as it attempted to strike. As its snout was singed with a blast of heat, it raised its neck upwards. And Abel took his chance immediately.

His swordsmanship was one of not letting any chances slide. He thrust with great might, the edge of his sharp blade poised to slide through the giant snake's underneck. The strike connected with its scales, cold steel hissing—But to no avail.

Abel: "Gh…!"

Abel groaned as the strike was deflected.

The tip of his sword had barely pierced the snake's scales. While his stance may have not been the best, his whole backbone had definitely been put into that strike.

Even so, he was not permitted entry.

Subaru: "One more!!"

Glaring at Abel as he took a step back, it attempted to strike once more, only for a fireball to smash into the side of its face.

Even though the dense forest lit up in red and its damp air sizzled, the great snake looked to have taken little to no damage. Its long tongue flicked over its burnt side, then moved its eyes to Subaru and out rose a great bellow from within its gaping maw.

Subaru: "Shit—"

A mere thirty seconds had elapsed since this fight started.

Within that timeframe alone, he had determined they possessed no chance of winning this fight. Abel's sword could not pierce through its scales, and, as hurt as he was, Subaru's petty and cheap tricks had no place in this fight.

After all, Subaru had no means of standing up to the face of overwhelming violence. Those were always his worst obstacles.

Subaru: "Goa! Goa! And again, Goa!!"

With a short wave of his hand, Subaru haphazardly shot multiple rounds of magic at the giant snake just as it was lunging at him.

Each shot blossomed with a brilliant flash of light as the fire from his ring shot past the witchbeast, smashed into the precipice of the ravine they were fighting in, and caused a collapse of debris, separating Subaru and Abel from the witchbeast, albeit temporarily.

Subaru: "Oi, Mizelda-san! This is-—"

Getting worse by the minute, he had wanted to say, but swallowed his words.

The Shudraqians, who were supposed to protect them during their difficult battle—They had instead set up arrows on their bows, their sights aimed at Subaru and co.

Subaru: "…"

With cold, hardened gazes, the Shudraqians sized up their prey.

Mizelda, Taritta, the lady with the blonde hair, and even Utakata; Without exception, all glared at Subaru's party.

Subaru: "—Oh."

Abel: "We set this in motion. There is no way to run from the "Lifeblood Ritual". If we do not kill it, forget your little wish, we shall not even be left with our own lives."

Abel informed Subaru, who was frozen stiff under the Shudraqians' cold gaze.

He understood this. It was a difference in values, in morals. He had felt this from the moment he had been flung to Vollachia, and throughout the trek he had made from the military encampment until this place. —The People of Shudraq were the kind who could sing and laugh with their fellow comrades one moment, then turn their blades on them the other.

One glance at Utakata told him everything. This was the result of being brought up with these values. It was a difference in their nurturing environment.

To ponder on or ask whether these values were right or wrong was meaningless.

Here, was not the place for an argument about ethics.

What was necessary at this moment, was to follow their rules, participate in the “Lifeblood Ritual”, and win.

Abel: “I cannot pierce its scaly hide. If cutting out its heart through its chest is impossible, should I aim for its brain through the eyes or mouth instead?”

Subaru: “That’s the thing about all living beings, the brain’s the weak spot, but… That might be a bit too hard to pull off. What we should really aim for is that area right above its pit organ. That’s our ticket to victory.”

Winning via a death blow was a hurdle too high to cross.

Then all that remained were victories earned by means other than that. Were this its nest, perhaps taking its eggs hostage to force it into surrender may have been the best, albeit the scummiest, course of action. Of course, that was not the case.

Thus, what remained was to take advantage of that one weakness all witchbeasts possessed.

Subaru: “We break its horn. The beast will submit itself to whoever breaks it. —That’s the only way.”

Abel: “And your plan—”

Subaru: “Like I said before. I’ll be the bait, and you, my suspicious hooded stranger, will be the attacker.”

Abel: “I beg your pardon? There’s naught but hooded nobility here.”

Once their brief conversation ended with one of Abel’s usual comebacks, Subaru took in a deep breath, then exhaled.

They had exchanged their objectives. It was set in stone.

Behind and overhead, the Shudraqians observed them with a frozen gaze. With targets painted on their backs, the two stood back up, a show of their resolve as warriors, and then headed back into the fight against the giant snake that had claimed the great forest as its own.

Not that they desired, nor was a warrior’s resolve a fit for them, but regardless—

Subaru: “But if that’s what it takes, that is exactly what I’ll do.”

—As his mind drifted to Rem, whom he had left behind in the encampment of the Imperial Army, Subaru put strength into his stride forward.

Snake witchbeast: “—ℨℨ!!”

Its great maw agape, the giant snake burst through the smoke.

Subaru thrust his left arm forward. The witchbeast’s yellow eyes took notice, and immediately closed its mouth and turned to the side.

While the lowest level of flames would not deal any significant damage, it seemed that Subaru had managed to make it become averse to being hit.

However, that proved to be its undoing. Subaru did not actually have the ring on his left hand, at that moment.

Subaru: “My left hand’s not aiming for the side of your face, but right above that!”

As he shouted, the tip of a whip lashed out of his left hand.

Able to use the whip with ease using either hand thanks to Clind’s teachings, Subaru opted to exert his left arm, which could be used to easily handle the weapon with merely two fingers as his crutch, as opposed to his right, which he could barely lift above from his shoulders onwards.

The tip of his whip was not aimed at the snake’s scales, but rather at the thick branches overhead. With his whip firmly wrapped around a branch, Subaru leapt into the air.

Snake witchbeast: “—ッッ!!”

Below, the snake’s maw opened, chasing after him.

Had he not folded up his knees midair, everything below his thighs would have been ripped off by the giant snake’s jaws just now.

Taritta: “—Tch, sister! That man, he’s running away!!”

Mizelda: “No—”

Taritta shouted to Mizelda, then nocked, her sight and arrow aimed at Subaru’s back as he rose out of the ravine delegated as their battlefield. Mizelda, however, put her hand on the bow and lowered it.

Mizelda’s green eyes shone like gems, fixated on Subaru,

Mizelda: “He’s not running away, he’s going to fight!!”

She shouted in cheer as Subaru whirled through the air using his whip.

His trajectory drawing circles in the sky much like an amusement park attraction, Subaru aimed the ring with his right hand at the edges of the cliff.

Subaru: “Gooooooooo—!!”

It was more of a war cry, rather than a chant.

Fire erupted from his right hand as he raised his voice, dousing the edges of the ravine in flames—The vines and branches all caught fire, turning the ravine into a sea of hellfire.

Utakata: “Ukyaaa—?!”

Blonde woman: “Wawawawa! Utakata, look out~!”

Taritta: “Aaaah, sister! Sister! Should I? Should I?!”

As they watched the ravine burn, the People of Shudraq began to panic.

Utakata and the blonde-haired Shudraqian embraced each other, while Taritta kept insisting on permission to put an arrow through Subaru. However, Mizelda took no notice of her, eyes sparkling with excitement.

She only balled her fist, her eyes nailed to Subaru.

Mizelda: “Amazing! Wonderful! This is getting exciting!”

Mizelda & Subaru: “AAAAaaAaaAaaa—!!”

Mizelda’s cheers and Subaru’s yell, prolonged right until he ran out of breath, overlapped.

The ring’s light faded, but with one final bellow, a fireball sprung forth and shot straight at the precipice of a cliff, causing a landslide of rocks, forcing the giant snake to stand down to avoid the falling debris.

However—

Snake witchbeast: “…”

The snake, while slowly drawing itself backwards, understood that it had no way to escape, its surroundings blocked off.

The fire spreading over the fallen trees, the valley was brightened with shimmering flames, to the point the light of a torch would be considered unnecessary.

More than that, the splendidly scattered flames—

Abel: “Perhaps it has a technique that allows it to see heat. —That will no longer be effective.”

The giant snake had lost sight of Abel, who had hidden himself under the cape of “Concealment” and leapt towards the beast.

Snake witchbeast: “—϶϶!!”

Sensing a dangerous presence, the snake kept a watchful eye on its surroundings. However, above its head was Subaru with miasma wafting out of his body, its heat detecting ability had been rendered useless by the flames, and Abel’s figure was unperceivable.

Moving onto a pathway with weaker flames was all the witchbeast could do.

And that was a false escape route Subaru had created, by intentionally spreading the flames—

Abel: “Haaaa—!!”

Instantaneously, Abel sprung off the cliff, assaulting the snake’s head as it attempted to flee.

The sword drew an arc as it was swung, a silver flash streaking towards the snake’s head, where its gnarled horn was located. The blade diagonally entered the center of the horn, with enough force to bisect it in one clean stroke—

Snake witchbeast: “—϶϶!!”

It was right as the snake’s horn was about to be sliced off, which would signify the battle drawing near its end due to the snake losing its sense of self.

The giant snake roared, twisting its head in as a last act of desperation, attempting to avoid the sword strike. However, a fruitless struggle was still fruitless. Acting out of desperation like that would not be effective.

—But that was only if the single attack had been that of a warrior's.

Abel: "Gh—!"

His strike dislodged by the snake's twisting head, Abel's attack stopped midway through its horn. Like that, before he could pour additional strength into his arms to resume his attack, a tail lashed out and collided with his body.

Tossed about by that impact, Abel's slender frame was blasted sideways. He rolled across the burning valley, unable to break his fall, spitting out blood from his throat as he coughed.

Abel: "Kfuh…kh, how careless of me…! I suppose it will not turn out like how it did with the fool…"

The large snake turned its face towards Abel, who was still coughing up blood, down on his hands and knees.

Catching a glimpse of its golden opportunity, the chance of a lifetime to turn the tables, the snake's eyes glinted with malice as it slithered towards Abel. Having received a blow from its tail earlier, Abel was unable to stand up, and neither did he have the time to curl up in his "Concealment".

Its jaws wide open, the snake lunged at Abel to swallow him whole.

Upon witnessing that, Subaru had no time to spare for thought.

Subaru: "I can… Return by Dea—"

It felt like it had been quite a while since he had last declared that out loud.

However, to Subaru, who had traced his own steps through the Books of the Dead inside the Pleiades Watchtower, his experience of attempting to lure witchbeasts towards himself was fresh in his memory, almost as if he had just done that the day before.

That was why he had come up with that on the spur of the moment.

Subaru: “Gih, gah—!”

Once the color faded from the world, all sound disappeared, and Subaru could no longer feel the flow of air, what visited him instead was a black shadow, streaming into that static world.

It was identical to that tremendous mass of shadows that had surged towards Subaru back then, when he had dealt with the Trials, lost Shaula, and had been overwhelmed with everything that had happened—

???: “—I love you.”

Subaru: “…Yeah, I’m sick of hearing that so many times.”

He responded to the short phrase, just like that.

Immediately after that, the palm of a hand slid into him, seizing his heart. Uncontrollable pain consumed him, making him feel as if his whole body was being ground into dust, starting from his fingertips. Rather than his vision being stained red, a force that felt like his eyeballs had exploded tore him down.

Pain that he could never become accustomed to, and the attachment and hopelessness that would not foretell when it would end.

However, once those had eventually withdrawn—

Subaru: “Eyes… on… me—!!”

Snake witchbeast: “—϶϶!!”

Right after the color, sound, smell, and sensation had returned to the world, Subaru let out a fierce shout.

Along with the reappearance of Subaru, the snake spun around, having detected the increased amount of miasma. It did not face the feeble, masked man in front of itself, despite being able to kill him at any second, but it faced Subaru, who was above its head, all smelly and full of energy.

Subaru: “It’s all up to you—!”

The moment his eyes met with the snake’s as it turned around, Subaru brought the ring on his right hand to his lips.

Letting go of the whip at once, Subaru’s body drew a parabola as he flew towards the giant snake. —In order to reach the snake’s head, he needed it to turn around and face him.

The confession of Return by Death was for that. And a very little small fraction of the reason was to not let Abel die, as well.

And then—

Subaru: “Aaaaaaaahhhh—!!”

Placing his feet on the snake’s upper jaw, Subaru jumped forward, although he looked like he was falling ungracefully.

In front of his eyes was the white horn, with the blade of a sword jammed halfway through it. Subaru twisted his body so that he was facing the hilt of the sword, guessing that the weapon would be able to sever the horn after one last push, and slammed his right fist into it with all his might.

Of course, he did not think he could cut apart the thick horn with only his fist.

However, his strike was not a simple swing of his fist. —It was a devastating blow, joined with the magic stone and loaded with magic.

Subaru: “…”

The jewel embedded in the ring cracked as it connected with the sword’s hilt, vermillion light pouring out.

The next moment, the leaking light swelled, detonating with Subaru’s right arm and the snake’s horn at the center of the explosion, and everything in his vision, as well as all sound in his ears, vanished.

Subaru: “Hh,”

Subaru spun around as he fell to the ground, rolling across it around two or three times.

His whole body hit the ground with intense force, but he could not recognize the damage it had taken. The right half of his body was scorching hot, almost as if it was on fire, and he could not even perceive his physical condition.

Subaru: “…”

His body began convulsing while he was lying flat on his back, and as yellowish stomach fluid dripped out of the corner of his mouth, Subaru felt the ground rumble.

As he was on the verge of death, his body riddled with critical injuries impossible to overlook, he did not realize that the source of that sound was the giant snake that had collapsed onto the ground beside him, having lost its head.

However—

???: “—Natsuki Subaru! Hey, Natsuki Subaru! Stand up! Stand up at once!”

Although he was barely maintaining his consciousness by a single thread that was about to be torn off, someone scrambled towards him, calling out to him and shaking his body.

Subaru did not know which part of his body the person was grabbing as he was shaken, but he was being jerked from side to side. The scorching sensation worsened, and he let out a soundless voice, fluids spilling out of every hole on his face.

He could not process anything anymore.

He wanted the person to allow him to lose hold of his consciousness. Pain, heat, a burning thirst, and suffering, every negative-sounding word that existed in the world swirled around in his head—

???: “There is something you must stand up and pronounce, no?! The woman… What will become of that woman called Rem?!”

Subaru: “—ah,”

???: “Speak with your own mouth! Your desires cannot be expressed by me!”

A strong, passionate plea was wedged into his ears, and his body was forced to sit up on top of that. Even if he were in a state where he could not comprehend whether it was his head or feet on top, he had been propped up.

He could not lift his body. Perhaps, only the upper half of his body had been held up.

???: “Listen, People of Shudraq! This is just as you are witnessing it! We have completed the Lifeblood Ritual, establishing the proof that we are warriors! If so, as our comrades-in-arms, is there not anything you all must carry out?”

????: “—Yes, I, Mizelda, the chief of the Shudraq, have seen your endeavors with my own eyes! Dear warrior, our fellow comrade! What do you desire? What will you shout out for us to do?”

Voices emerged from his side and right above him, resonating inside of his head.

It was as if his brain had lost its source of protection, the voices passing straight through into his head. Even as he could not fathom what their words meant, his shoulder was shook, his head rocked back and forth, and his soul was stirred.

???: “Answer me, Natsuki Subaru. Speak of what you desire. Squeeze and wring out all that you have.”

Subaru: “—h,”

???: “Envision what you wish for behind those closed eyelids of yours. Nothing can be granted to those who cannot disclose what they seek. —There is no food to be given to a slothful pig!”

Think up and envision what you wish for behind those closed eyelids.

He could see a silver-haired girl. A young girl with cream-colored hair, a pink-haired girl, a gray-haired youth and a golden-haired boy. He could also see many faces, the faces of other people, and,

—He was happy to see a blue-haired girl standing among them.

Subaru: “S…ave…”

???: “What is it?!”

Subaru: “Rem…”

???: “…”

Feeling as if he himself was being peeled off slowly, Subaru made out his words with his lips. The moment he said that, the force behind the hand that was gripping his shoulder, or what was most likely his shoulder, grew stronger.

And then, the owner of the voice nodded quietly with an, “I see.”

???: “You have heard him, People of Shudraq. This is the wish of your new comrade. He must have validated it by making a gamble with his own life. What he desires… If you have seen his act, then…!”

????: “Say no more. —We have dignity, as well as courage.”

Subaru: “…”

His body grew limp as it lost its strength, and his consciousness started fading into the distance.

The voice that had previously attempted to keep him awake by force did not try a second time. Slowly, gradually, and bit by bit, his consciousness faded—

???: “—You have fulfilled your duty. Leave the woman to us.”

At the very end, although he did not understand the meaning, he heard a trustworthy voice. He felt like he had heard it.

He felt like he had heard it.

Chapter 12:
The Vollachia Empire

1

—He felt like something, something horrible was swirling around him.

A vortex, indeed, it was a vortex.

The vortex was swirling round and around, spinning fast, swallowing everything.

Swirling round and around who knows where, actually, no, it was swirling around his core.

This horrible black vortex, as ferocious as a storm, as stark as a bolt of lightning, as scorching as magma, was going to end up swallowing everything in its path as it swirled around.

Perhaps it was the horrible malediction that had been sleeping for so long deep inside his body.

A malediction of “Death”, that had never been removed, always intertwined, tied together, linked forevermore.

A curse befitting greed, which would not sell his life over to anyone, as if saying: “it has already been pledged.”

These begrudged curses, which should by all means have eaten away at his life, meddled with each other, detested each other, refused to hand him over to the other, opposed each other, and fought with each other. —And as a result, they reached a conflicting answer.

The curses would have it so they would not let this vessel perish.

The vortex was swirling round and around, spinning fast, swallowing everything.

Smack-dab at the core of this vessel, which had been cursed by Beast and Dragon, swirling round and around…

2

Tents with a red flag were for medical treatment. There were five of them in total within the encampment.

Tents with a black flag were for their stores. There were twenty-five of them in total within the encampment.

Tents with a white flag were for the top brass. There were three of them in total within the encampment.

The tent with a golden flag was for the commander. There was just the one within the encampment.

He'd been given the freedom to bustle around the place, acting as a handyman. So even though the time he'd spent there had been brief, he'd managed to pay attention to various areas, surprisingly enough.

The Empire marked the second time Subaru had seen an actual military encampment.

The first time was around the time of the White Whale Battle in the Kingdom of Lugunica.

Back when they'd set up around the Flugel Tree, to prepare for the White Whale's arrival, they'd prepared something like an encampment. Though that one did not have the scale this one had.

Following that, he did have some more chances to set up camp, though on a much smaller scale. That said, all of them had been far simpler; hardly any of them had been a full-blown camp, like the one in the Empire.

Thus, he thought he'd take note of things here and there, with curiosity being a helping factor.

Naturally, the Imperial Soldiers bar one did not seem to hold favorable impressions of him, so had he made any attempt to enter anywhere possessing anything of importance, they would have probably separated Subaru's head from his body, and that was just if he were lucky.

However, even having this much knowledge was…

???: "…Plenty useful. There is a world of difference between having some information and having nothing… And most of all, knowing their formation should give us a rough idea of the enemy's strength. All that is left now is…"

???: "To show our courage and strength. This I know, my brethren."

???: "Indeed, then show it. Show the pride and velour of the people of Shudraq, the valiant warriors who once swept down enemy after enemy, standing alongside the Emperor lauded as the Martial Emperor."

He felt exhausted, as if he were wearily drifting through warm water.

In the midst of this, the voices of a man and woman brimming with ambition became audible to him.

???: "…"

And many other sounds of breathing could be heard, apart from that of the man and woman the voices belonged to.

He could feel the presence of a great number of people.

He could feel something akin to the fervent, fervent zeal of a great number of people.

He could feel those things swelling up rather strangely, with him smack-dab in the middle.

???: "…Then let us begin, Shudraq! We shall raise the beacons of our counterattack from here on!!"

???: "Oooooooooh—!!"

A cacophony of battle cries echoed throughout, as if crunching the entire world into pieces.

???: "…Whoa?!"

Feeling something cold and wet squelched against his face, Subaru's whole body jumped up in surprise. While wondering what had happened, his awareness swiftly rose, and his vision was covered in white as he blinked in surprise. —Actually, no, this was the answer to the wetness he felt.

A wet cloth, that had barely been wrung, was what was covering Subaru's face.

He'd once read in a book that there existed a kind of torture where someone would cover your face with a towel and pour water on top of it. All that was needed was a towel and some water, and then it would be easy to make someone feel like they were drowning, just like in the hellish waterboarding technique.

Subaru: "I-I've got nothing that I can tell you…!"

???: "Oh, Suu, you're up. Uu too is glad you're in good spirits."

Subaru: "A… Ah…?"

Subaru could hear a voice, that for a torturer, was rather young. He shook his face in surprise. Following that, the cloth that had been covering his face slid off, allowing him to recover his normal vision.

It didn't seem like it was torture, and in his unobstructed field of view he could see the sky, with the leaves of some large trees slightly clogging his view. And then, suddenly poking her face around, as if hiding the sky was…

Subaru: "Y… You're…"

Utakata: "Utakata! Uu's your guard, Suu! And nurse! And babysitter! Thank goodness you're awake!"

Subaru: "…I still don't get what you're on about."

A black-haired girl with the ends dyed pink let out a shrill cackle and asserted herself—Right, it was Utakata.

This girl was one of the people of Shudraq, someone he'd met in their village. —The one who'd once killed Subaru with a poisoned arrow.

However, from the smile on her face, it looked like currently they'd established an amicable relationship, so he probably didn't need to worry about having his life snuffed out by a poisoned arrow like that one.

Subaru: "Of course, there's no sign of me being waterboarded… Is there? Umm…"

Utakata: "Suu, the Lifeblood Ritual, you finished it. Elgina, you beat it. Uu and Mii and Hoo, everyone and everybody surprised!"

Subaru: "…It's starting to come back to me. That's right, I was forced into the Lifeblood Ritual."

To get the people of Shudraq to acknowledge Subaru and Abel, they had challenged the Lifeblood Ritual.

It was a traditional Shudraqian rite of passage and it was used to recognize one's coming of age. The then-caught Subaru and Abel had challenged it together.

The opponent for the ritual had been a giant snake that inhabited the Buddheim Jungle, the witchbeast Elgina.

Subaru and Abel had put their lives on the line to try and break the Snake witchbeast's horn—

Subaru: "…It's no use. Dunno if it's because I was super absorbed during the fight or not, but I can't recall anything from the last half. If I'm alive, does that mean Abel managed to pull it off…?"

Utakata: "—? Suu, you don't remember? Mii, was in stitches."

Subaru: "In stitches as in laughing at my pathetic self? Gimme a break… Wait."

Frowning at Utakata who had her head tilted in puzzlement, Subaru tried to sit upright. In the process of doing that, Subaru felt a weird sensation as his right hand touched the ground.

It was not a normal kind of weird sensation, like touching a floor that was wet or walking over something rocky. No, the source of this weird sensation felt much closer to home than usual.

To put it frankly, it was not the ground, but more likely, Subaru's arm that was the source of the sensation.

Subaru: "—. Um, Utakata-san? Is something happening with my right hand?"

Utakata: "Suu's right hand? Oh yeah, it was cool! It went all like guju guju and bwahhh."

Subaru: "Guju guju and bwahhh?!"

Only getting bad feelings from those onomatopoeias, Subaru widened his eyes in surprise.

Repeatedly taking deep breaths, he settled his heart down, before readying himself for his next course of action. First, he turned his neck towards his left hand. Three of his fingers were broken. They hurt, but he felt relief from that.

Then slowly, he moved his gaze towards his right hand and—

Subaru: "… What the heck is this."

For a moment he questioned what he was looking at. That was how unnatural the circumstances were.

Originally, Subaru's right arm was covered in an unnerving, mottled, black pattern. That was an outcome of the fight with the Sin Archbishop of Lust, at the Watergate City of Priestella.

The Sin Archbishop of Lust Capella declared her own blood to be dragon's blood and had dripped it on Subaru and Crusch. As a result, Crusch received an injury that could not be healed and Subaru had a black pattern etched onto his right arm, as he took in the repulsive blood that ran over her body.

Despite all of that, it did not seem to have any negative side-effects. Subaru would wear long sleeves to hide the black pattern as they showed no signs of special behavior.

But now, that black pattern—

Subaru: "…"

Actually, this was not the time to talk about the pattern.

Subaru's right arm, from his fingertips to wrist and wrist to elbow, the distal half of his arm was clad in black, as if he were wearing a black glove.

Swallowing his saliva, Subaru tentatively touched his black right hand with his left hand.

His left hand contacted something with a soft and flabby elasticity. On the other hand, he could barely feel his right hand being touched. It felt like he was wearing a rubber glove, so its movement was sluggish as well, and—

Subaru: "…Hang on, actually, is this?"

He felt something familiar within the weird sensation. To help that feeling take shape, Subaru strongly dug his left hand's fingernails into the black hand. Forcing his fingers in, he made a motion like clawing it.

At which point, the black parts of his right hand peeled off like paint.

Yelping in surprise, Subaru bore his fingers into the peeled pieces. He then continued to peel off the remaining black areas with enough fervor to make others think that he was possessed. In the end, he peeled off all the black spots from his fingertips to the front half of his right arm, and out came a clean, fresh new right hand for Natsuki Subaru.

Subaru: "Oh, oh my gooooddd?!"

Utakata: “Ukyan?!”

Witnessing the shocking event unfurling just before his very own eyes, no less on his own flesh, Subaru yelled out. Surprised by his yell, Utakata fell on her bottom.

However, Subaru had no time to spare to even give a helping hand to the fallen girl.

Subaru: “Wh, wh, wh… What’s going on with my hand! This is my hand… right?”

Still in a state of shock, Subaru opened and closed the new right hand. He also hesitantly touched his own face and prodded the ground with it.

In terms of its sense of touch and movement, there were no problems. It was completely normal.

The black pattern originally on his right arm was also gone. Subaru’s clean right hand was unmistakably the same as the one which had been tossed and knocked about during his year in another world. It was the right arm of the Lolimancer.

Subaru: “Wait, who’s calling who a Lolimancer?!”

Abel: “—I thought I heard you talking, what nonsense are you spouting?”

Confused, Subaru confirmed his right hand was in good health, and somebody came along. —No, it was not just somebody. He knew only two people with such a haughty and arrogant way of speaking, and it was easy to distinguish between the two since they were separated by gender.

This was the voice of a man, namely—

Subaru: “Abel, huh? Guess you lived.”

Abel: “Naturally. I am much more level-headed than you.”

Speaking with a snort, it was Abel, wearing his unchanged disguise.

Subaru was becoming used to seeing it.

He had challenged the Lifeblood Ritual with Subaru, but somehow survived the battle with the Elgina. Rather, it should be said that it was thanks to him that Subaru had survived.

Because, most likely, it had been him who had brought down the Elgina.

Abel: "—Mm. You, how is your right arm? Are you done looking repulsive?"

Subaru: "Can you please stop talking like I can change the color of my right hand at will? This isn't a Western-style video game character creation screen y'know, I don't have that kind of freedom… The black part came off cleanly when I picked at it. Right, Utakata?"

Utakata: "Yep. Suu's right hand peeled off dry and crumbly! Gross!"

Subaru: "I get it but geez!"

His cheeks stiffened from Utakata's straightforward reaction, Subaru stuck out his right hand to Abel. Abel scrutinized it and muttered, "I see".

Abel: "In any event, I do not care if it is returned to its previous state. I certainly had not expected a strike using the entirety of the magical sealing stone ring. Everything below the wrist was gone, and I believed you to be beyond saving."

Subaru: "Wait wait wait, are you trying to scare me? Everything below who's wrist was gone?"

Abel: "Yours."

Utakata: "Suu's!"

Abel answered with his arms crossed, and Utakata cheerfully thrust his right hand into the air.

Subaru shuddered at their answer, and stared at his lovely right hand. Not only had it been blown off, his right hand was now in brand new condition.

Subaru: “Th-There you go again, saying that sort of thing. If it was gone, then what’s with this right hand?”

Abel: “It was a disgusting and curious phenomenon. Your arm was gone, and on the verge of death I had you speak your last words. I thought you were a dying man but… from your hand, black sludge flooded out.”

Subaru: “Slu-Sludge…?”

Abel: “In the blink of an eye it took shape, and formed a black arm. If you wish to ask me what happened, I would have to inquiry you back about the meaning of what you were doing to yourself.”

Pierced by his sharp look, Subaru’s breath caught in his throat.

His eyes returned to his right hand immediately, but no matter what Abel said, even Subaru did not understand what had happened to cause this result. However, the black pattern that had been engraved on his arm for some time—its disappearance was not unrelated, that much was certain.

Perhaps it was really the effect of the dragon blood at work but—

Subaru: “Still, it becomes a question of why it wasn’t triggered up until now…”

That being said, close to three months had passed since the incident where Subaru had been showered in dragon’s blood.

Afterwards, during the journey through the Augria Sand Dunes and in the midst of the deadly struggle at the Pleiades Watchtower, Subaru had walked the line between life and death more times than ever before, and in the end entered the Empire.

During that time, numerous literally deadly situations came about, however, nothing conveniently happened to heal his wounds.

So why here, why now—

Subaru: "…There's no point thinking about what I don't understand. Besides, except for my right hand, my wounds haven't healed at all."

Subaru grumbled, as he checked his whole body. The broken fingers of his left hand, the wound on his back by his scapula, the strange burns overlapping on the nape of his neck, the numerous other bruises as well, none had healed.

Honestly, since only his right hand had been healed, it raised the possibility that, much to his misfortune, it had only been healed because of the black markings.

Subaru: "And what was on my right hand is gone too, so it probably won't heal again… If you asked me to blow off my hand once more to test it, I couldn't do it."

Abel: "Ultimately, you are saying it is a situation you cannot speak of. You have a considerable amount of secrets it seems."

Subaru: "I don't want to be told that by a guy who hides his face…"

Subaru answered while making a bitter expression, and exhaled with an "ah".

He had been leisurely thinking about the strangeness of his right hand, and checking on Abel's safety, but he remembered there was something he had to prioritize over that.

He had participated in the Lifeblood Ritual, and if the end of the ritual had proceeded without him dying, that meant time had kept on flowing even while Subaru was unconscious.

That is to say, a number of hours had passed since then—

Subaru: "—Rem. That's right, Rem! I can't sit here like this, I need to…"

His goal from the start was to bring back Rem, whom he had left behind.

For that reason he had challenged the Lifeblood Ritual, but if too much time had passed for her to be rescued, the meaning of risking his life in battle would be lost just like that.

Utakata: “Ah! Suu, don’t be silly! You’ll die!”

Subaru: “Fuck that! Even if I don’t die, if Rem dies there’s no—Gghh”

Compelled by the anxiety in his heart, Subaru shifted his posture to get out of the bed.

It was at this point that Subaru noticed the apparent strangeness of the bed—He had been sleeping in a portable shrine-like box made of crossed logs seemingly taken out of a building.

From there Subaru came down with great force, groaning as pain pierced his entire body.

Subaru: “Gah, haah… hh”

Abel: “What foolishness. Did you truly think your body would recover from the verge of death simply because your right arm grew back? I told you. I witnessed you as a dying man. Do you think I erred in my judgement?”

Subaru: “That’s…”

Looking down at Subaru balled up in pain, Abel’s cold voice came down like rain.

As if to affirm Abel’s words, Subaru noticed a sensation deep within his own body, as if something was slowly but steadily oozing out.

Having experienced fatal injuries many times, Subaru knew this was a bad sign.

Like a balloon or a bucket with a hole where it should not be, with water or air or whatever else inside, it was a feeling as though what had been keeping him inflated was spilling out—

Subaru: “But, Rem needs…”

Abel: "—. In this situation still, rather than yourself, you worry about that woman? Well, fine. I knew as much. Since that was what you desired, even at the cost of your right hand."

Subaru: "…Aaah?"

Abel: "This way."

Subaru cared more about the safety of Rem, who was not here, than about his own life.

Abel let out a sigh of exasperation at Subaru's words, and jerked his chin. Immediately, he walked off without a second glance at Subaru. As if to say "Follow me".

Utakata: "Suu, can you walk? Need my shoulder?"

Subaru: "Nah, I can walk… If I used your shoulder, the height difference would just make it harder."

Seeing her expression, seeing that Utakata was worried for him, Subaru forced a smile for her sake.

And then, Subaru took a deep breath and somehow managed to stand up. Limping, he caught up with Abel walking ahead.

Abel: "…"

Abel was a little further ahead, waiting for Subaru to catch up with him.

Using rocks covered in green grass as footholds, he had a good view, looking out from near the cliff's edge. With a great deal of effort, Subaru also clambered over the large rocks and stood next to him.

And finally—

Abel: "—Look."

Once more, in accordance with the small jerk of his chin, Subaru raised his eyes.

Like that, his field of vision increased, from the high ground Subaru swept his eyes over the unbroken view and opened his mouth.

As in open-mouthed astonishment. Because over there—

Subaru: “—Ah?”

Black smoke rose up, the camp engulfed in flames—The Imperial Soldiers’ campground was swallowed up by the blaze.

3

—He could hear battle cries. They reverberated through the air along with songs of victory.

Subaru: “—mh!!”

The people who were shouting war cries, or otherwise loudly singing a song Subaru had never heard of, were a group of olive-skinned female warriors. They ran freely through the battlefield, carrying bows on their back.

Due to the surprise attack by the People of Shudraq, the Imperial Army’s camp fell into a state of ruin. The Imperial Soldiers lost the ability to counterattack and could only hope to run and escape, only to get shot one after the other.

Subaru: “This, is…”

Abel: “Go on the offensive, steal their weapons, burn their medicine and pierce a hole in their command. After losing their fingers and head, all they can do is turn tail and run without a thought of how they look. —How unsightly for so-called Sword Wolves.”

Subaru: “…”

Below, the scurrying figures of the Imperial Soldiers could be seen as they were evicted by black smoke and drawn bows.

However, escaping from the Shudraqians, whose livelihood was to hunt beasts in the jungle, would be impossible. Their arrows, which could fly far and beyond, struck the fleeing soldier’s backs, piercing their hearts with deadly accuracy.

How many had managed to escape? How many had managed to survive?

Just how many people had died?

Subaru: “This…”

Abel: “Why do you look bewildered, Natsuki Subaru? This is what you wished. The information you brought forth helped your brethren achieve these results in battle. When do you laugh, if not now?”

Looking down at the battleground-turned campsite, Subaru felt faint. On top of that, Abel strongly pushed the reality of the situation in Subaru’s face, declaring that these were the acts Subaru wished for.

Unable to bear those words, Subaru stood up with great force and grabbed Abel by the collar.

Clutching Abel with his newly-healed right arm, he glared Abel closely in the eye.

Subaru: “I wished for this? This, this kind of scene?! Don’t be stupid…”

Abel: “—Then, did you think you could fulfill your wish without any blood being spilled?”

Subaru: “—mh”

Against Subaru’s angry outburst however, Abel snapped back. Cut deep by his sharp tongue, Subaru could not retort.

Subaru: “…”

Being questioned if he thought that he could fulfill his wish without bloodshed, Subaru could not say anything in return.

He thought he could achieve it without bloodshed. He thought it was possible.

Because—

Abel: “Let me rephrase, Natsuki Subaru. —You thought you could realize your wish without any blood being spilled, aside from your own.”

Subaru: “—a”

Abel: “That thought process is moronic. A foolish and incorrigible assumption. Did you seriously think that, by spilling your blood, the warring third-party would stop? That hero mentality you strive to hold up is nothing but a ridiculous and negative quality. They are delusions of heroism.”

Subaru: “…”

Abel: “You are human, Natsuki Subaru. You are neither a Hero nor a Sage. Therefore, humans like you will repeatedly bleed, die, take and be taken.”

Still having his collar clutched, Abel showered Subaru with metaphorical blows, as Subaru’s grip slowly weakened.

Hit by those words, Subaru’s jaw trembled. He half-heartedly shook his head.

That was probably true.

That was a reality he could not deny. He understood that. Even so, Subaru could not accept it.

Until now, he had not lived in this world accepting things like that.

Even after coming to another world, Natsuki Subaru’s morals were still that of a Japanese high school student.

He could not acknowledge the tenets and commonsense of the battlefield as obvious, everyday facts.

Abel: “I do not desire to be a Hero. Nor do I cling to them, rely on them or entrust them. To shoulder various matters and advance towards a bountiful future. —A Hero cannot do that."

Subaru: "Wha, what… You, what do you want…"

Losing his strength, Subaru fell to his knees once again, unable to comprehend Abel.

Having challenged the Lifeblood Ritual together, he was the person Subaru had wrenched victory with. They unexpectedly matched each other's wavelengths and Subaru thought they had had some good chemistry between them. But now, he could not understand what he was thinking.

Of course he was unable to. —Against someone who refused to show their face, how could one come to understand the other.

Subaru: "From someone who doesn't even show their face, what do you…"

Abel: "My face, is it? —Then, let me show you."

He was not even given time to finish wording his question.

Hearing Subaru's thin, desperate retort, Abel put his hands on his face. As he undid the frayed knots on his wrapped mask with his fingers, a wind blew.

Blown by the strong winds, the mask energetically came undone, flying far away.

Flying, flying, flying past the battleground-turned encampment. Riding the outbound wind, it would travel elsewhere, anywhere, flying far and beyond—

Abel: "We will go to the Imperial Capital. —To the Capital where the throne I ought to be sitting in is."

Subaru: "…"

Watching the flying rags, Abel proclaimed those words of hyperbole.

Looking at that man, his face exposed, Subaru's breath quietly hitched, unable to look away.

He saw an attractive black-haired young adult with memorable slit eyes.

He seemed to be in his early to mid twenties, an age higher than that of Subaru. His features were enchanting enough to steal your gaze. And although his hair was unkempt and his cheeks were dirtied, likely due to his time spent in the jungle and the settlement, they only served to amplify his natural beauty.

His arms and legs were long and slender. And on top of that slim body rested that face, so you could say that his existence had been made to be perfectly attractive.

Even so, his most defining characteristic lied in his black eyes.

Eyes that seemed to make anything prostrate before him. Their gaze extruding an air of overpowering supremacy and intimidation.

Feeling the full frontal assault of those eyes, Subaru, already down on his knees, became consciously aware that there was another reason that made him unable to move, besides being injured and fatigued.

He understood it. That his soul knew he must submit to the person in front of him.

The reason for his overpowering presence was because of—

Abel: "—Vincent Abellux"

Subaru: "…What?"

Vincent Abellux: "That is my name. At least, until I sit on my throne once again, that is my name. Though, I believe using Abel is most sensible, going forward."

Saying that, Abel curled his lips in response to Subaru, struck with dumbfoundment.

Subaru realized too late that his smile was a terribly villainous and wild one.

Unable to understand the significance behind that name—

Mizelda: "—Abel! Subaru!"

Subaru: "—mh"

What woke Subaru from his stupor was a sharp voice.

Snapping his head to the voice, he saw a figure swinging their hands as they walked towards them. The figure was an amazon with red-dyed hair, the Shudraq's leader, Mizelda.

Mizelda relaxed her belligerent face into a friendly one.

Mizelda: "The takeover of the camp is complete. The casualties on our side are minimal and… oh? Abel, it's my first time seeing your face but, you're quite the lady-killer aren't ya…"

Subaru: "Mizelda…"

Mizelda: "Ahem… Subaru, I'm glad you're up. Dying back then, even as brethren, it did not come to mind."

Coughing away her momentary enchantment by Abel's true face, she looked at Subaru with kind eyes.

Her smile was warm, directed to those living, yet at death's doorstep. Seeing that smile, Subaru's heart and body shrunk. Like Abel, she had come to the conclusion that Subaru did not have long to live.

Additionally, her being able to put on a happy demeanor, even while he was dying, was because their viewpoints on life and death was different.

However, her stances on life and death were not the sole reason she could stay cheerful. Her next action confirmed it for Subaru.

Mizelda: "Holly, bring them here."

Holly: “Yeah yeah, I will~!”

When Mizelda beckoned, she received a cheerful reply in return.

Lumbering towards was the young woman with blonde hair, the one who’d effortlessly lifted a huge boulder—Holly was her name.

She strode forward with a smile on her face, in her arms was—

Holly: “Come on, stop being so fussy~. Poor little Kuna, she hasn’t even woken up yet after you sent her flying~”

Rem: “Like I’ll stop struggling…! Let me go! What do you want to do with me?!”

Holly: “Aww, come on, you’re not listening at all~”

Though Holly only pouted, the girl locked in her arms showed no signs of stopping her struggle.

He had been wanting to reunite with her, to hear her voice, to look at her blue hair and her lovely face, which was currently puffed up in anger. It was none other than—

Subaru: “—Rem!”

At that moment, Subaru forgot everything; the awe he felt for Abel, the pitiful condition he was in and even the sea of flames that this battlefield had been turned into. He tossed it all away and broke into a sprint.

He was painfully slow. Unable to simply leap off the boulder, he dragged his feet behind him, running barely faster than a toddler.

He dragged himself over to Holly, who had been carrying Rem and —

Rem: “You…”

Subaru: “Rem! Thank goodness you’re okay…”

Rem: “You, you were behind this? You scum!”

The moment he stretched out a hand to her, she slapped him across the face.

The sudden, sharp sound startled Holly, Mizelda and even Utakata. That slap had been strong enough to blow him off his feet.

But he did not crumble, nor did he even utter a sound of complaint.

After all, what was there to be dissatisfied about.

Rem was here. She was alive, awake, talking. That was all he wanted.

Subaru: "Rem…"

Rem: "—tch, you, you and your…"

Even though he had been slapped with quite the force, Subaru nevertheless held Rem in an embrace. He took her from Holly as if he were snatching her away into his chest, much to her initial surprise, but immediately after her face reddened with rage.

And to punch him with her back put into it, she closed her hand into a fist and—

Rem: "…You—"

She stopped, seemingly having noticed how he was covered in wounds.

Rem: "…"

Relief took away the strength in his knees, so Subaru plopped down to the ground right then and there, with Rem still held in his chest. And while in his chest, Rem looked—and was left speechless by the injuries on his shoulders, at his torso, legs, left hand and many other places.

Subaru: "…You were the one who broke my left hand, remember?"

Rem: "I know! But, everything other than that… You'll die! We have to treat you right away…"

Mizelda: “It’s useless.”

Rem fretted over his wounds as Subaru gave her a weak smile. However, her request was instantly denied by Mizelda’s curt answer.

Rem’s breath caught, startled by how sharp Mizelda’s denial was.

And as she raised her face to look, Mizelda met her gaze, then shook her head slowly.

Mizelda: “His wounds are deep. Too deep. Even if we tend to them, they won’t heal. Only his will is keeping him with us here right now, but even that looks to be fading away.”

Rem: “Fading away… But why! Why now, why all of a sudden…!”

Mizelda: “—? Because he got the woman he was fighting for back. Why else?”

She tilted her head to the side, slightly puzzled, then spelled it out for her as if it were the most natural conclusion.

Hearing that, Rem’s breath caught in her throat, and Subaru, unable to even lift his head, smiled bitterly.

Subaru: “Mizelda-san, that phrasing’s kinda…”

Mizelda: “Did I misspeak? It’s a comrade’s final wish. Of course we’d do our best to comply. You’ve earned that, Subaru.”

Subaru: “Haha, much obliged…”

Half of him found Mizelda’s frank display of trust refreshing, while the other half of him found it detestable.

He knew all too well that their appearance and words held no lie; they were to be taken at face value. Thus, he made Rem shoulder everything else, including his heavy legs.

Though in the end, he made his own heavy legs even heavier—.

Rem: “Why, why why why…”

Unable to even lift his face, he silently listened to Rem’s voice.

He noticed her voice crack, and at some point, their positions had been flipped. He realized he was being lifted up by her shoulder.

Her blue eyes dart to him, watching him carefully. In them rose suspicion, distrust and sadness.

Rem: “Why, why do you have to go so far? Why, do you…”

Subaru: “…”

Rem: “Why? Tell me.”

She inquired. About why he was doing such a thing.

He recalled a memory of this, of being asked the same question once before.

What had he replied back with, upon being asked this the first time? Once more, an important person was asking this of him.

But being so close to losing consciousness, he could not recall the rest of that memory.

So, he thought, he would give this girl, this girl who was on the verge of breaking into tears, the answer that was in his heart, at this moment.

Rem: “Why?”

He had been asked.

Subaru: “—Because, I want you to be happy.”

Rem: “…”

Subaru: “I want you to laugh, to smile… That’s all I really want. That’s all I need.”

I want you to be surrounded by your loved ones, in a place where you’re accepted. There, I want you to be happy.

I want you to smile like you always do, that smile like a blooming flower, like the stars that twinkle in a clear night sky, far far away.

I just, want you to be happy. That’s all I ask.

Subaru: “…”

Rem: “—Eh? Wha… Wait! Wait…!”

Subaru’s body slowly grew limp.

His head hung low, his neck became unable to support it, and his upper body was about to tumble over. Rem immediately pulled him closer to herself with a firm grip, calling out to him as his head drooped down by her side.

There was no answer.

Mizelda: “—Dear comrades, may we bring peace to the spirit of this warrior.”

Mizelda straightened her posture, expressing respect and furthering it with a melody that began flowing out of her lips.

Following her song, Holly and Utakata, as well as the other People of Shudraq, the women who had previously been singing a song of victory, all started to sing in unison.

It was a requiem to bid farewell to a warrior, who had fought until his last breath, who had upheld his dignity to the very end—

Rem: “Wait… That’s, but… to me, he’s…!”

Sent off by that requiem, Subaru was on the verge of relinquishing his hold on his life. Rem shook her head at his peaceful face, unable to accept it.

Rem: “…”

She did not know why. She did not understand it, either.

In the end, what he told her had not answered her doubts.

But, she knew the answer would be lost forever at this rate, so—

Rem: “Please, don’t die in a place like this… Don’t die, don’t die, don’t die…!”

The man who had looked at her so tenderly and compassionately, despite being encased in such an unbearable, repulsive smell that she wanted to instinctively avoid. You must not lose him here, it begged and pleaded to her soul.

Like that, Rem bit her lip, longing for salvation—

???: “Aa, uu?”

Suddenly, simultaneously with the child’s groaning voice, Rem felt a hand on her shoulder.

Rem: “—ah,”

Turning around with tear-filled eyes, Rem saw that the golden-haired girl had placed a hand on her shoulder. Still looking as if she was zoning out, the girl stared at the unconscious Subaru.

When the girl mumbled out an, “Uauu,”

Rem: “…This is…?”

Little by little, a warm sensation seeped into Rem from her shoulder, where the girl had touched her.

It was soft, a feeling that slowly tickled at the depths of her heart. Rem found it difficult to breathe, unable to hold back her tears from flowing down her cheeks.

Whatever it was that seeped into her from the girl’s palm, it was stimulating a strange sensation that laid within her.

It was swelling up, and she must not bottle it up like this. She had to set it free somewhere. Commanded by her instincts, Rem released it from her whole body.

It streamed down the girl’s palm, overflowing into Rem, like that—

Subaru: “…”

Pouring into Subaru’s body, who she had been holding, with his life in the balance.

????: “—Healing Magic, I see. Even I had not anticipated this.”

Rem: “Eh…?”

A man’s voice reached Rem’s ears, leaving her dumbfounded, unable to understand what exactly had occurred. Upon raising her head, she saw a black-haired man gazing at her through narrowed eyes, his arms folded together.

Rem was about to open her mouth to question him, and—

????: “Close your mouth, woman. Although you are doing it subconsciously, it is a type of miracle, one that has been activated due to the conditions having been met. Should your mind wander, it will be broken off and lose its effectiveness.”

Rem: “…”

????: “Leave your doubts and anger until you have finished what lies in front of you. Do not let this opportunity go to waste.”

There was a weight to the man’s words that Rem could not deny, so she closed her mouth right as she was about to argue back at him.

And then, just as the man told her, she focused on sending the warmth into Subaru’s body, placed in her arms.

She had no idea what sort of effect the heat would bring forth. However, Subaru’s breathing, which had been growing weaker as he laid in her arms, had regained a little bit of its stability.

That alone was enough for the current Rem.

Rem: “…I still don’t know what you are, for now. But,”

But, she took a pause there and then, hesitating to continue what she was about to say, and closed her eyes.

I want you to be happy. Those words she had heard did not seem like a lie.

Rem: “If you don’t stay alive, then you won’t be able to see me smile.”

She called to him, almost as if she were whispering.

—The healing light had been activated, and Natsuki Subaru’s fatal injuries were being treated.

????: “…”

While folding his arms, the man who gazed down at the scene—the person who had called himself Vincent Abellux let out a sigh, as Subaru’s life was just barely sustained.

The man considered Subaru to be terribly unlucky, but also extremely lucky at the same time. He had won over the hearts of the Shudraqians while on the verge of death, regained what he had wanted to regain on top of that, and he had also narrowly escaped from his own death.

He could also theorize that Subaru could be shrewd, having calculated that he would survive if he took back that blue-haired girl—Rem, although the chances were narrow.

Vincent: “If he were truly that clever, then he would have had the broken fingers on his left hand healed to begin with.”

Despite having his fingers broken by Rem, and leaving them without any treatment, Subaru was a man who had wished to take her back, whilst being covered in blood and mud.

If he did all of that to make his ambition come true, it had to be admitted that Subaru’s ploy was unfathomable and otherworldly. However, the brilliance of a wise man could not be felt from him, neither did he appear to be one.

Not a slightest bit, not even a glimpse of the “hero” who was mentioned in various rumors, could be seen in that man.

Vincent: “It was supposed to be an offering to a man who would have been killed in action, however… If he survives, then I suppose that is fine as it is."

Having lost the sensation that covered his face, the man narrowed his eyes while touching his face, the wind caressing his skin for the first time in a while.

Natsuki Subaru had narrowly escaped death, and a pledge of blood had been made with the People of Shudraq. It seemed as if the group of Imperial Soldiers had not been notified of anything, but that was also within the man's expectations.

The people on this land—no, the majority of the people in the Empire had yet to realize it.

They had not realized the grave crisis, the unprecedented, political upheaval that had arrived to the great power known as the Sacred Vollachian Empire.

However—

Vincent: "Prime Minister Berstetz, you traitorous Nine Divine Generals, and you foolish Imperial Soldiers who are ignorant of the apex."

Standing on the hill where the heat-laced wind was blowing, the man—Abel turned around towards the Imperial Capital, which was located at the far west.

The heart of the Sacred Vollachian Empire, the Imperial Capital Lupugana, the land that held the throne, ought to be reclaimed—

Vincent: "—Shiver and tremble as you await my return."

And then—

Vincent: "Since you have survived, after all… I shall have you accompany me, Natsuki Subaru. —To take back the Vollachian Empire into these hands of mine."

The Land of Wolves:
Death unto the Weak, No Mercy I

1

…The Graveyard of Nameless Monarchs.

At the far, far east of the Sacred Vollachian Empire, in the Buddheim Jungle, renowned to be so vast it was impossible to grasp everything it had in store, stood a lone, weathered tombstone on an empty plain.

For a place where the remains of Emperors were interred, having reigned at the top of a powerful nation, shrouded in glory, the scene was an incredibly barren one, with nary even a shred of glamour to it.

???: "…The dead cannot bring anything with them, regardless of what great deeds they achieved during their lifetime. Even Emperors cannot escape from the natural course, once reduced to mere corpses."

Before the lone tombstone, stood the slender figure of a person, their arms crossed together.

He was a man with almond-shaped eyes, and both his arms and legs were long and slender. His hair was black, which was rather rare in this world, and his voice was brimming with both ambition and majesty, to the point that its echo was wasted here, in this empty place.

Yet, the most eye-catching thing about the man's appearance—even more than the handsomeness of his face when viewed in profile—was the fact that his looks, which bore a certain tranquil fierceness to them, would attract the attention of just about everyone.

The Man: "…"

This man was alone here, gazing at the empty graveyard.

This barren graveyard was a place in the Vollachian Empire which even the Imperial Family held no knowledge of, known only to the Emperors' trusted retainers in generations past, as well as…

The Man: "…The Emperors of the past. Even though for the most part, their remains burnt to naught but ash. I sure do wonder though what they placed beneath this tombstone."

He did not mean that they had been cremated.

That boiled down to how things in the Vollachian Empire were done, regarding the Emperor Selection Ceremony, to succeed the seat of Emperor.

Past Emperors had produced many heirs, and a stark number of them were then made to compete with each other to become the next Emperor. Many of the previous Emperors had been burnt by the sword at the beginning of the war for imperial succession.

…Burnt by the flames of the Yang Sword Vollachia, which had been passed down the Emperors of Vollachia for generations.

The Man: "…"

The man quietly shook his head as he looked down at his own hands.

Then, he slowly took a step forward, and walked up to the desolate graveyard, possessing only this tombstone. The graveyard had been built atop a cliff, at the end of a grassy plain. There was a large river a little beyond—or rather, there was a grand cascade a little beyond.

It was literally the Great Cascade that proved this place was situated at the edge of the world. Gazing from afar at the sight of all of this brimming water washing away, the man lost himself in reverie for a moment.

Back when he'd learnt about this bizarre structure of the world, which everyone called the "Great Cascade", he would oftentimes wonder whether the world they were in was but an island floating atop a huge mass of water.

Even now, with his arms and legs fully-grown, and his position in the world changed, he had not cast his suspicion aside. Or perhaps the Great Cascade was imposing itself on everyone who lived on this floating island, telling them, “You are all locked in the world you live in, there can be no escape.”

The Man; “…Quell your absolute nonsense.”

The man grimaced in annoyance at what the world proclaimed, before raising his foot. He then ruthlessly placed his shoe right against the tombstone and kicked it over, showing not a shred of respect for the dead.

With a loud thud, the tombstone where the souls of the former Emperors were buried toppled over. However, the man cared not about being cursed by his own, reckless action.

He did know that the grudges of the dead, when combined with an evil spirit, could end up as a phenomenon called a “Hollow”. However, that was not possible when applied to those interred here.

That was exactly what it meant to look upon the world from the very pinnacle of the Land of the Wolf, as the Emperor of Vollachia.

The Man: “…There we go.”

The man peered down, beneath the tombstone he had kicked over as he muttered, stretching his arm out.

There was neither a coffin there, nor an urn to hold their ashes. Instead, what he found there was a sack, which he then grabbed and hauled up—And those were not the relics of the dead, nor letters of any kind.

There was naught to give to the dead, it was only the living who required things. It was precisely the one embodying that unwritten rule who was fit to be at the very top. Thus, what he found there was…

The Man: “A sword, a dagger, and… the cloak of “Concealment”, huh.”

He rifled through his sack; within it were some weapons, a magic tool, and a “Meteor”. As well as some nonperishables and camping gear. —Although only the bare necessities.

The Man: “It seems like there is no need to grieve for the fallen.”

What lay hidden in the graveyard of the former Emperors served as the final link, allowing those who fled here to stand anew.

The first thing the man reached for, inside the sack, was not the sword, nor the Meteor, but rather the white cloth wrapping them.

The man cut the cloth into strips with a knife, and wrapped them around his face. He fastened them tightly so that they would never come undone, veiling his face.

The Man: “I need to lay low for a while. Those people are never going to let up until my venerable self… No, until I return.”

Checking the feel of his masked face, the man donned the cloak, and stood up with the sword now in his hand. Slinging the sack over his shoulder, he turned away from the graveyard where those exalted souls slept, sparing it no more heed.

He was at the edge of the world, there was nowhere left to flee past this point.

The Man: “…There is no better place to start things than hither.”

And so, with the wind from the Great Cascade blowing against his back, the man turned towards the vast jungle—the Buddheim Jungle—and began walking towards it.

2

The Man: “…He’s gone, huh.”

The man silently lowered his guard after seeing the boy rush off into the forest in high spirits, the man’s knife in one hand.

It was plain as day, from the yellow-bellied way he’d approached his camp, as well as their interactions afterwards, that he wasn’t a seasoned assassin. Yet, since there was still the possibility he was an unseasoned one, he had gone and kept his guard up. However…

The Man: “I guess it was pointless to put myself so on edge when the person in question is, well…”

The man sat himself down, as he commented about the boy he’d met just a moment ago—the boy who’d said his name was Natsuki Subaru.

The man did think he was being pursued, but the only one who’d been lured to the smoulders of his campfire was a lowlife petty thief, and a lost one to boot. Things had ended up being nothing more than a small letdown.

In any case, the petty thief had told him something that was now weighing on his mind, just before he’d left.

The Man: “He came across a hunter wielding a bow in the forest… Huh.”

The man was thinking of broadening his search in a certain direction. Incidentally, the boy had pointed in the same direction. The issue at hand were the mixed emotions that had flashed through the petty thief’s eyes.

There had been unease and apprehension regarding the hunter, as well as a fair amount of fear.

The Man: “If he’d just happened to catch a glimpse of them, he would not have warned me with such a look in his eyes. Thus, he inevitably came across something worthy of his fear and apprehension… Did they attack him?”

There was no way the petty thief’s eyes would have looked like that, unless something like that had happened. Yet, if they had attacked him, that still didn’t explain how he’d survived.

Perhaps he had somehow managed to flee from his adversary’s menace thanks to a bunch of coincidences, or perhaps the one who had been attacked had been someone other than the petty thief.

Had he witnessed someone else being attacked, and informed him as gratitude for the knife?

The Man: "…'Tis naught but speculation for now. After all, who else but him could have gotten attacked? There should be no explanation if they are targeting me, regardless of the army outside the forest already being deployed."

By now, an army should have been deployed on the other side of the Buddheim Jungle, under the guise of a military exercise.

They had likely been dispatched under the pretense of negotiating with the People of Shudraq who lived in the jungle. Their true mission was to wipe out the People of Shudraq, as well as taking the head of the General hiding in the forest…

The Man: "…In other words, my head. Though, they probably cannot tell them the details, so the common soldiers must be in the dark about it."

However, they would achieve their goal if his own head were to come off in the process. And even if that did not come to pass, if they cleaned out the People of Shudraq, their plan would come to fruition.

But then again…

The Man: "…If I mess up in getting into contact with them, I probably shall not emerge unscathed."

He did not know all the details about the formation of the Imperial Soldiers outside the forest. However, there was a chance they would provoke the ire of the Shudraqians, were they to go about things too crudely.

If the mood around had gotten to the stage where they'd be keeping outsiders at bay, then things would probably get quite inconvenient for him.

His biggest concern for him, was regarding how quick the people who knew the secret about the Graveyard of Emperors would act.

The Man: “I’ve got my “Concealment”, so if anyone’s going to get caught into their net, it’s going to be that man, I reckon.”

If the man’s concerns were right, then assassins had already been set loose in the forest, who were aiming for his life.

If so, serendipitous as it may be, it had been by total fluke he’d met a man with unusual black hair here in the forest.

The knife he’d handed over to him had an engraving on it, which showed it belonged to someone from the Vollachian nobility. Thus, if an assassin killed him, chances were that they would mistake him for the wrong target, due to the colour of his hair and the things he was carrying.

The man ought to serve well as a smokescreen or decoy that would conceal him, were he to make some noise going through the forest.

The Man: “Now then…”

The man masked the traces left by his camp, shouldered his belongings, before finally donning his “Concealment” once again.

His Meteor could ultimately only trick other people’s sense of vision. It could not mask things like sound, odour and footprints. For that reason, he could nott put too much stock into it.

Keeping that in mind, the man took it upon himself to venture towards the direction Natsuki Subaru had warned him to be careful of before.

And…

The Man: “Even so, Natsuki Subaru, huh.”

The man’s brows furrowed as he recalled the man who’d given him his name as he left, all the while showing that commendable attitude.

The name was not an unfamiliar one. It was one hardly anyone would know of in the Vollachian Empire, but for those privy to news from neighbouring countries, the name was one that was inevitable to end up hearing.

You could safely say he was someone who had risen to utmost fame in the past year or so, within the neighbouring Kingdom of Lugunica. Oftentimes, the reputation that reached one’s ears came laced with lies, even if naught but a rumour. And even if the news were embellished, the degree those were flaunted about was repulsive, given just how outrageous the contents were.

Crossing into the Kingdom had been prohibited for several months now. Thus, it would be strange for someone to imitate his name and trespass into the Empire. Though not impossible.

At the very least, that was way easier to accept compared to this “Natsuki Subaru” actually making his way into the Vollachian Empire.

The Man: “I suppose I can give this some reconsideration, so long as you stay alive and are able to meet up again with the person you are looking for.”

His attitude was so different to what one would expect from someone strong. He was an outspoken rookie, who held nary a scrap of vigilance about him.

The man should never have held such expectations of him, now that this was the only impression he held.

The Man: “Am I really letting my guard down over this strange coincidence? There is no such thing as good luck showing up, unless you set it up yourself. —At least, when it comes to me.”

Admonishing himself like that, the man quickened his step and headed into the forest.

He was not qualified to boast that the world was his own, like a certain someone did. He pondered so, feeling rather irritated.

3

The Man: “…There we go.”

The man came across a contraption made of ivy, which was spread beneath him, and squatted down where he stood.

Several hours had passed since he'd parted with the self-proclaimed "Natsuki Subaru" and gone into the forest. Luckily enough, he had not caught wind of that man's dying screams, so he must have either made it, or died somewhere far away, where his screams could not reach him.

Either way, he didn't care too much about how that self-proclaimed "Natsuki Subaru" was doing. The most important thing was that he had discovered traces belonging to the People of Shudraq he had been looking for.

The Man: "Just how much do these Shudraqians know about what's going on here?"

Now that he had found what he was looking for, all that was left for him to consider was how much did these people he wanted to get in touch with know. Them not knowing about what was happening outside would be ideal if possible, however, never be optimistic.

It wasn't as if his enemies would be carrying out their schemes on an ad hoc basis. If they had been meticulous in polishing out their plan, then they would always be paying heed to the chance of revolts here and there.

The people of Shudraq would have been designated as those to most look out for, given that they had a history of having provided their aid to militant Emperors in the past. That was what he would have done, were he in the enemy's shoes, at the very least.

Therefore…

The Man: "…I am never getting an answer to this, no matter how much I brood. I need to take my chances somewhere."

The man slowly shook his head, steeled himself, and then pointed his sword at the contraption set before his eyes. It was the kind which cutting the ivy snare that had been strung out would trigger a trap covered in soil, hoisting its prey upwards.

However, the man had seen right through it, thus he didn't fall for it. Instead, the clappers dangling from atop a tree smacked together, causing a chorus of chimes to echo throughout the forest.

The contraption was the sort that would send notice that the prey had been caught, after the trap had been activated.

And so, he waited a while…

???: "Ggha, you weren't caught in it."

A woman had turned up to where the trap had been, pushing her way through the foliage with a frown on her face.

The woman was of slender build, had brown skin, and her formerly black hair was now dyed green. She was holding a dagger in her hand as she stooped down in front of the trap, and looked to be fairly proficient with it. Most likely, it was not going to be something used as a mere idle threat.

She folded her arms together and tched at the man, who had been audaciously lying in wait for her.

???: "Hey you, do you not know what this place is? If you're trespassing as you please…"

The Man: "Of course I know. Dispense the pointless chatter, it's only a waste of time."

???: "Ghwa…!"

He had cut the woman off as she had been about to threaten him, causing her to let out a strange groan. Yet, the man paid no attention to that, and brought his hand to his sword, holstered at his waist.

As soon as he did that, the woman's crestfallen gaze became sharp, however…

The Man: "Here, take it. Just do not throw it away. Make sure you keep it safe."

???: “…Wha?”

After saying that, the man unfastened his sword from his waist, along with its scabbard, and threw what could have been his weapon down at the woman’s feet. And he did not just throw down his sword, but he did likewise to his belongings and his cloak of concealment.

Since he’d already parted ways with his knife, he was now completely defenseless…

The Man: “And there’s still something else. Take this.”

???: “What are you… Whoaaaaa? A-A ring?!”

The woman’s eyes flickered in astonishment as she caught the ring he’d thrown towards her. He did like seeing confusion plaster their face, not understanding his intentions. He felt a sense of relief spreading through his long-troubled heart. But that could wait.

The Man: “Take me to your settlement. For now, I shall be captured by your people, at least until things get moving. Even if I’m to be taken captive by the Shudraq, I have no intention of taking my own life. You would do well to remember that.”

???: “S-So bossy… Like when did I even say I was one of the Shudraq…”

The Man: “I can tell by a mere glance. If you feel like hiding that fact, then get it together. I have given you my life.”

???: “Gnh, gnnnnnnnh…!”

Though it was hard to tell due to her brown skin, the woman was probably red in the face with anger. —However, since she had not attacked him at this juncture, it was safe to say his first gamble had paid off.

All that was left now was to…

The Man: “…Wait for the board to be set. To wait until the Shudraq feel like listening to me.”

He knew that the Shudraq had a rule that said “Men are to be brought to the settlement.” Men from the outside were a precious commodity for the Shudraq, a tribe of hunters made up only of women.

It was unlikely that they would treat him poorly. He could use this fact to his advantage to bring himself unto the board, if he lay low in their settlement. Though, from here on out, he would need to make more gambles. However…

The Man: “Moves ought never to be fleeting.”

The People of Shudraq, along with the Imperial Soldiers outside the forest. It would perhaps be great if he could add this self-proclaimed “Natsuki Subaru” to the cards he held—over to one side.

If this person was lucky enough to survive, and if they were to find themselves face to face again due to some kind of mistake, he would somewhat serve as a lucky charm on this board, where the pieces were swarming in.

The man let out a sigh, a wrinkle appearing between his brows, as if he were wondering whether he even needed to rely on something like that.

???: “…Let me just tell you, our chief loves a good face.”

The Man: “Are you referring to the fact that I’m hiding my face? Sorry, but I bear an utterly hideous wound. Forgive me.”

???: “As if that’s something a man who wants forgiveness says…”

The man, Vincent Abellux, followed in her wake as she led the way with some complaints. He quietly steadied his breathing and faced forward.

As if he were warning himself, that from now on, an utterly unstoppable battle would begin.

Provisional Rem's Paranoia: Empty Words of an Oni

1

—Rem, the girl who has been called that, is currently confused and in turmoil.

"…"

Tightly, she tries squeezing the iron bars in front of her eyes, putting in all her strength. However, she can't make the iron cage creak, nor bend.

Although, she couldn't come up with a way to escape even had she made a bend in the bars.

There were enough people about this area for it to be called encampment, and with the presence of each of their corresponding military strength, she could not simply catch them off guard.

Not to mention, how she couldn't put any strength into her lower half.

She couldn't sneak away from their eyes like this, and search for the one she was split from—for that girl.

"My legs don't seem like they're paralyzed…"

Rem mutters so as she lowers her hips with a plop onto the iron cage's cold floor while rubbing her own legs.

Touching them with her hands like this, she still has a sense of touch in them. Since she also felt pain when she tried pinching them, it's not like her legs are paralyzed.

Simply, it was hard for her to communicate the will to move her legs, you could say they were slow to react.

It was like that in the forest as well, she had to grab onto something to force herself to stand up, she thinks that if she had something like a cane, she could walk given a bit of time.

That said, it's not like she'll always have walls or a cane at hand to grab onto either. Her outlook was dark. Will her legs ever be able to move properly again? Or will she stay this way forever, or worse—

"No good, no good. I'm thinking way too much about the bad."

Shrugging off the previous bad thoughts by shaking her head side to side, Rem admonished herself.

In all honesty, although she was in a situation where she had no basis at all for being positive, when all is said and done, she mustn't decide how bad a future that hasn't arrived would be.

Viewing things with woe and anxiety makes you liable to cast the real future in a dark shadow.

That is the truth that Rem learned in this small span of time, that transpired since she woke up having lost her Memories.

"And that person chased us wherever we went…"

Saying that, the one Rem recalled was a black-haired boy with an evil glare.

His voice which could be said to be coaxing her, as well as his attitude and demeanor, like he was softening her up, were suspiciously cold, but the reason Rem was extremely suspicious of him, was that stench that reeked of evil wrapped around him.

Without exaggerating, she could affirm the stench was an evil one that turned her nose—To the point that it was unbelievable that the person in question did not even seem to realize it, but Rem rejected it instinctively.

To put it plainly, when that stench wafts around him, not a word coming from that boy reaches Rem's heart. As if anyone would believe the words of a monster with the smell of bloody murder lingering around them, covered head to toe in blood saying 'I'm not dangerous’.

An extreme example, that was how that boy’s appearance and demeanor looked to Rem.

“—Natsuki Subaru”

She tried speaking that name which the boy called himself time and time again.

She’s strangely bothered by the feeling that name gives off. From Rem’s little knowledge, she can’t quite tell which one is the name and which one is the surname.

Since no one else had called him by his name, even that was ambiguous to Rem.

“…”

Leaving her back to the cage’s walls, Rem observed her surroundings while taking a deep breath.

Firstly, the place Rem was in was a military encampment somewhere—Since there was a unified flag raised, it probably indicates how it belongs to some country or organization, that kind of place.

With only men in the encampment, they should number around a hundred, it might be conjecture from the number of tents, but she thinks she can’t be off by too much. Their fighting strength should be about as expected.

Though the men Rem had knocked out when she woke up by the riverbank weren’t very strong.

“Except for that Eyepatch man…”

There weren’t even 10 of them gathered, however that Eyepatch man commanding them was exceptionally strong.

Of course, Rem couldn’t move her legs, and her being less than perfect condition was big, however even if she had been in perfect condition for argument's sake she's unsure whether she could have stood up to him or not.

As a result, Rem was unceremoniously pinned down, she was dragged to the camp together with the girl and Subaru, and just like that they were made captive.

After that, whether they'd concluded that she would not speak, or they'd judged her to be a dangerous person, she was put in a cage. Currently she'd been separated from Subaru and that girl.

As expected, she was worried if they—especially that girl, were safe or not. Her head was hurt and bleeding, thus she worried if she'd been given the proper first aid or not. Subaru is fine enough.

Him being in the same encampment is something she doesn't doubt from his stench, given that she can tell it's there, even from a distance.

"…In the end, who am I, where am I, and what should I even do?"

Even thinking about this, that and whatever, Rem's suspicions reach the bottom of a dead end.

It's the plain obvious—worrying about what's in front of you is a privilege only the people who have the necessary foothold to stop and look at what's in front of them have.

In that sense, Rem doesn't even have the proper preparations done to begin problem-solving.

"Rem…"

Like that, she once again tried uttering her name—no, that word.

Countless times, Natsuki Subaru had called her that. It regrettably doesn't seem like there's anyone to be found who knows her other than him. The violent people in this encampment, and of course that girl she was with weren't much for conversation partners.

Therefore, what she can confirm herself about her current self is, the name Rem that she was called by, and the feeling of disgust from the depths of her instincts for the stench enveloping Natsuki Subaru.

“For the time being, let’s set aside the name Rem. It doesn’t feel right to me.”

She did have the expectation that with time, perhaps if you happened to have some chance encounter, memories could dramatically be brought back.

It seemed like in her own case, even when seeing the people she had something to do with and her own name, she couldn’t expect that dramatic appearance.

Although, she’s definitely thought quite a lot about the possibility that this name, Rem, is from someone she has absolutely nothing to do with, and that Natsuki Subaru is a complete fiend, just like the evil stench wrapping him indicates.

That’s right, the possibility that Natsuki Subaru is an utter fiend was high.

Yet still—

“Why…”

At the grass field and at the forest, and at the cliff’s edge afterwards before they jumped into the river, in all of those places Natsuki Subaru’s face and voice, remembering their desperate state, makes Rem’s heart creak terribly.

There was no point in believing, she could have thrown out those careless words that she couldn’t bear to listen to.

And yet why, did his voice and words, the feeling of his arms around her, still not leave her.

“…Because that person, kept acting like he knew me.”

It was a connection, for she who had nothing to cling to, that just made her think she didn’t know when to let go.

Rem admonishes herself, and once again tightly grips the iron bars using her strength.

Is that girl safe? What is Natsuki Subaru doing?

Those vague thoughts were the only things her empty, unsure self was certain of.

2

“—H-Hold it there! What will you do with him?!”

As she briefly tried to stop the men dragging Natsuki Subaru away, her complaint was abruptly denied, and so he ended up being dragged away.

Stuck in the iron cage, she can’t even be granted the chance to voice her opinion on that matter. It was just, seeing Natsuki Subaru being dragged away, Rem’s chest was dominated by righteous indignation.

—Natsuki Subaru was in terrible shape.

Running through the forest covered in mud, being chased both by the hunter and giant snake, then finally having to experience barely surviving jumping into a river, it was a matter of course that he’d be in rough shape. However, seeing him again after being separate from him, the bruise marks on him and injuries on his shoulders had increased at some point.

The fingers in his left hand that were broken by Rem were obviously painful. However it was clear from how his other injuries hadn’t been given the proper aid that his treatment hasn’t been the best.

“Is it not almost like he’s a slave like that…?”

Watching Natsuki Subaru with his hands restrained, surrounded by some imposing men, in this vulnerable state wasn’t something you could do calmly. Even Rem who did not hold a good impression of him, couldn’t help but object at that miserable state of his.

Even if, say, more and more of that evil scent had increased while he was out of sight.

“What are they going to do to that person like that, and that girl too…?”

Thinking that, Rem’s chest was wracked by anxiety.

Her relationship with the men in the encampment, having turned to the worst case from the beginning, definitely couldn’t be said to be on the road for the better.

Even wishing they treat her gentlemanly, could only be said to be awfully convenient.

“If it came to it—”

She thinks that at that time, she’d rather bravely take her own life.

If she’s going to be disgraced while kept ignorant, it’d be much better to choose death, still without any attachments. Death before disgrace, that thought felt obvious to her.

If this was the voice of her inner self, she must have been this way before losing her memories. Then in that case, even if with just that single shred of faith she’d go and cross the river of death—

So long as you’re breathing, talking, and looking around with those eyes, then all’s fine.

“…”

Again, Natsuki Subaru’s voice echoed in Rem’s head.

She was about to accept suicide as if natural and yet, his words come directly to force Rem’s decision. Impudent, and so carefreely.

Who the hell does he think he is? Her anger against that man who’d been dragged away intensified.

Like this, it was almost like she was acting exactly like he wanted. Perhaps he left her these words to stop her should Rem ever find herself about to choose death.

The only ones who could do that, were those who possess strength beyond human comprehension.

Where could that scrawny powerless boy, have that kind of strength.

“Ridiculous…”

Closing her eyes, she tries to clear away that thought from her head.

However, no matter how much she tries to shake it off, or brush it off, it doesn’t disappear.

Why, because inside of her empty self that hasn’t been awake for even half a day since she lost her memories, all there is, is that boy, Natsuki Subaru.

Whether she likes it or not, if she wants to have another look at herself, she has no choice but to face Natsuki Subaru.

More and more, that makes Rem suffer, so rather than that—

“Maybe I should break the fingers from his right hand as well.”

Thinking that, Rem closed her eyes while pulling her legs closer.

She forgets the fact that she was about to bravely choose suicide just a moment ago, and instead bravely, acknowledges the discomfort she feels towards Natsuki Subaru that can’t be put to words, and closes her eyes.

Once Natsuki Subaru is back, that’s when she’ll face her problems once again.

That’s why at least, just for now, keeping herself calm, she’ll leave her problems for later.

3

—However, Natsuki Subaru didn't come back after half a day.

In fact, the men who dragged Natsuki Subaru away—The two called Todd and Jamal disappeared into the forest with about 20 men.

Though it's the result of what she pieced together from what she overheard while the encampment suddenly became boisterous, she thinks she didn't get it too wrong for the most part.

"Uuuh, aaah?"

"Yes, it's alright. You have nothing to worry about, so just stay quiet please"

Perhaps noticing the atmosphere around her filling with trepidation, the girl resting her head in Rem's lap groaned.

Fortunately, it seems the men were not so inhuman, the girl she'd been separated from received proper treatment for the injury on her forehead, and was delivered back to Rem.

That said, their treatment still did not change and they remained imprisoned, so it was dubious whether this could be called a gentlemanly approach. Although, even that approach could turn out to be far stricter.

"…"

While soothing the girl, she silently pumps herself up.

If something were to happen, and she couldn't act fast, she'd be at a complete loss. She instinctively understood that this mentality was unmistakably necessary to survive.

In that case, there was truth in that thought Rem has, however there was also meaninglessness to it.

"—This is."

At first, what Rem sensed was a faint, off-putting smell.

It was different from the one she sensed from Subaru, however, it was still a smell of the wicked kind. One that she absolutely never wanted to get used to smelling, said plainly, it was the scent of blood.

What's more, it's not a small quantity that's being spilled, it's quite a bit. A deep stench of life and death.

She was about to alert her surroundings to that, however the other party's movements were far faster. Like they were completely out of her league, it was a perfect Ambush.

"—Gaaah!"

Thus, a voice like a scream rang out, and it spread in the next moment.

The encampment turned to pandemonium, the death throes of the men every which way reverberate all throughout.

"What is… What is happening?!"

"Aaah aaah!!"

Having woken up, in the shocked Rem's arms, the girl began crying while covering her face.

She could feel how this wasn't a trivial matter. Looking at the girl's reaction, Rem decided to begin moving like she had decided to—She grasped the bar of the cage which had taken load after load from the front, put her entire body's strength into it, and forcefully twisted off that single bar.

"We can't stay here. Can you come with me?"

Using the bar she twisted off as a cane, Rem pulled on the crying girl's arm. The girl didn't stop crying nor did she respond, yet she also didn't brush off Rem's hand.

That's fine. If she ran right now, Rem couldn't currently keep up.

Flames have already spread to every place in the encampment, marked by the presence of mayhem and combat.

Therefore, what Rem needed to chose was their own safety and nothing more—

"—I found you yeees. Definitely this girl is the girl I was looking for yeees."

When Rem was about to take the girl, and escape this battlefield, a carefree female voice struck her eardrums. But, despite the mood in her voice, Rem gasped at the speed of the hand that reached for her.

She immediately tried to swipe it away, but she grabbed her held out wrist, and was pulled in instead. And just like that, she was picked up, and lifted into the air.

"P- please let me- let me go…"

"Worry and struggle not, you're safe yeees. Mask said to take you with me yeees"

"Who is that?! P-Please stop!"

She twisted her body around flailing, but that woman—Brown skinned, with hair dyed yellow, was unyielding. Rem couldn't pull her off using the strength of her arms, her opponent's strength was monstrous, that went beyond that.

"Uuuuh! Uuuuh!"

"My my, you're together with this girl too yeees? Then, you can come along yeees."

The girl is trying to face the woman carrying Rem around with her powerless arms but she doesn't seem to mind her. Just like that, the two of them, can only submit to the woman's whims.

"Why…hic."

Why? That question that she did not know who she should ask, reverberated in futility.

An answer would come neither from the woman, nor the girl.

However, the answer to the Why which Rem held, would come after this.

After being dragged away, and meeting with that boy in a near death state who rushed towards Rem—with Natsuki Subaru, it would come from his mouth.

The Dragon Kingdom: Missing Child Search Chronicle I

—Following the disappearance of Natsuki Subaru and Rem, the group that had remained at the Pleiades Watchtower decided to mobilize a search for them.

After doing so, in order to take action as soon as possible, Emilia, with the cooperation of Beatrice and Ram, declared that they had to follow the faint trail of the two who had vanished, and reunite with them as soon as possible. However… "—It's too bad, but doin' that ain't as easy as ya think, Emilia."

"Eh?! How come, Anastasia?!"

Anastasia held up her hand, putting Emilia, who couldn't keep her impatience in check, on hold. Emilia then raised her eyebrows in astonishment due to being interrupted like that.

Although Subaru and Rem had already been gone for a few hours, they were each connected to Beatrice and Ram, so they could assure her that they were alive, but it didn't give her any peace of mind.

And though each camp had different opinions about that, they had been working together to accomplish the same thing, so she thought Anastasia and company would understand her.

"He might be weeping right about now, so we need to find Subaru and Rem as soon as we can…"

"Oh, c'mon… Don'tcha make such a face. It'll make me feel bad. I didn't really say that with any bad intentions or anythin', alright? I'm just sayin' that ya can't just leave all this behind ta go help Natsuki and the others… Our belongin's ain't light enough ta be able ta do that, got it?"

"Our belongings…" Having the word, 'belongings', said to her, Emilia quietly looked down at her hand.

Emilia understood that the thing she was referring to was not her belongings in the physical sense. However, she'd realized it once more when Anastasia said it to her.

—So this is what it means to have completed the Trials of the Pleiades Watchtower.

“Originally, at the far reaches of the Augria Sand Dunes… where the Witch of Envy was said to have been sealed away in a shrine, there are stories that talk of the Witch Cult attempting to invade it many a time. The existence of the desert, with its mystical sand barrier, as well as Miss Shaula, had served as an impediment against that, at least until now, but…” Julius said.

Ram continued, “But with the freeing of the tower, the desert's mystical barrier has dissipated, and Shaula is also gone. And now, the desert is merely a slightly threatening place, where witchbeasts are just roaming around.”

What Julius and Ram said made the reality Emilia had come to terms with a surety.

Following what they'd said, the things going on around the Pleiades Watchtower were different from before. So if such a thing came to light, the number of problems they'd have to deal with would continue to pile up like mad.

Having changed from the way it used to be, the number of obstacles preventing people from reaching the Pleiades Watchtower had gone down considerably.

“But if you're so worried about the Witch Cultists, can't we just keep all the stuff in this place a secret for a little while? Is that no good?” Emilia wondered.

“That's not too bad of a suggestion, coming from you, in fact. However, it would be quite unfeasible to do, I suppose. No matter how hard you try to keep a secret, it always somehow manages to get out from somewhere, in fact,” Beatrice replied.

Ram concurred, “Indeed, that is quite so. Back then, there was a time when you were bustling about in an attempt to conceal the Great Spirit's Magicletting Period, so there is no doubt from me that the same thing would happen again, Lady Emilia."

"B-But that was just Puck being suuuper careless, and I was bad at hiding it! I think I've grown quite a bit compared to back then, though…" Bringing up something from the past and saying it was proof she couldn't keep a secret was really embarrassing for her.

Ram had brought up something that had happened a year and a half ago when Puck caused a whole lot of chaos because of his Magicletting Period.

For beings who possessed enormous amounts of mana, not letting it out in a periodic manner led to them feeling an awful amount of discomfort. Puck had already been tormented by that condition, so he'd used his power little by little to release his stockpiled mana, resulting in the area around Roswaal's place getting covered in snow.

They had been able to turn it into a festival back then thanks to one of Subaru's outlandish ideas, but… "Unlike that lovely story, I guess we'd be hard-pressed ta turn the things that happened here inta good memories."

"So what you mean is that the big amount of snow Ram talked about came from that spiriiiit? After I'd set my cute little cursed doggy's sites on him, I was hanging around to see how it would go, and then I got reallyyy surprised when it suddenly started snowinggg out of season."

"This girl has the nerve to say such a thing like nothing even happened, I suppose… Subaru might have told you he's forgiven you, but you're making a great mistake if you think Betty will be as sentimental as him and forgive you after everything you've done, in fact."

"Oh! I'm so sorryyy," said Meili in apology to Beatrice as she stuck her tongue out and closed one of her eyes.

When she heard that, Beatrice's face puffed up with anger, but Emilia thought Meili was actually a good girl, being able to apologize for something she felt bad for, and reflecting on her own actions. She believed she really regretted it.

“Well, well, it seems like we get sidetracked too easily. Weren’t we supposed to talk about the problems surrounding finding a way to search for Natsuki and the others as soon as possible, and bringing those issues to light?” Echidna asked.

Emilia replied, “Oh, that’s right… I’m so sorry. Err, so about those issues…”

“—What we’re going to do with the Pleiades Watchtower, how we’re going to deal with the Divine Dragon, Volcanica, and as for the rest… Making preparations to get through the desert to the neighboring town.” Ram went through each of the issues in order, making it easy to understand, bringing a finger up for each.

Nodding her head, Emilia thought about solving the issues one-by-one. For now, it’ll be what we’re going to do with the Pleiades Watchtower.

“As I’ve said before, we won’t be able to handle everything ourselves, so I think we should listen to a lot of different peoples’ viewpoints. We might be able to figure this stuff out by talking with people with lots of knowledge, like the people from the Council of Elders in the royal capital, or Roswaal.”

“Frankly, Betty is quite reluctant to give Roswaal access to this place, I suppose… The Books of the Dead have a sort of dreadfulness that would revive his evil motives, in fact.”

“But if that does happen—”

“—Kindly allow Ram to bring him back to his senses by force.” Ram interrupted Emilia and Beatrice’s conversation, insistent on that point.

Ram had been standing up, holding an elbow with her hand, and though lingering fatigue could be seen in her eyes and countenance, her gaze remained sharp, and her voice stayed lucid, displaying her unwavering conviction.

Therefore, Emilia, standing next to the daunted Beatrice, nodded her head in agreement with a “Yeah,” then continued, “Mm, I understand. I’ll leave the matter of Roswaal to you, Ram. Roswaal hasn’t really seemed to be able to go hard on Petra and Frederica these days, and I can always count on my maids because they are reaaally good at handling him. Right, Beatrice?”

Beatrice replied, “…Well… I have no doubt that Ram and Petra are Roswaal’s weaknesses, I suppose. Fine then, I get it. However, you must hold on tightly to his reins, I suppose.”

“Master Roswaal’s reins… Simply hearing that has made me ever more excited about what is to come. Kindly leave it to me.” Puffing out her chest, Ram gave a dignified nod of her head, making Emilia and Beatrice feel quite relieved.

In response to that, Anastasia gave a visibly impressed nod. “Wooow,” she said. “I ain’t sure what went on after I gave my self over ta Echidna for a while, but the relationship between Ms. Emilia and everyone looks pretty dang good. Was it fun like this when you were travelin’ together with them, Julius?”

He replied, “Though it is regrettable, I am hesitant to say whether the journey was comfortable and enjoyable considering the situation we were placed in and the duty I had been charged with. Of course, the relationship between Lady Emilia, Miss Beatrice, Miss Ram, and everyone else is certainly an appealing one, which goes without saying.”

“Well, ain’t you an earnest guy? Ah well, since I’m a pretty easygoin’ gal, maybe it ain’t so bad for my knight ta be all serious about things.” Chuckling softly, Anastasia shrugged, meeting Julius’s eyes.

Ultimately, his Name had still been snatched away, and he was still in a state where his previous self had been forgotten. Even so, she couldn’t really say if Anastasia and Julius’s new relationship was better or worse when compared to their old one.

They had accepted that this was going to be the beginning of their new relationship.

Maybe, much like how everyone had managed to remember Emilia's Name, Julius's Name might also come back after a while.

I wonder what I used to think of Julius. I've never really worried about a future like that, though. After all, I'm pretty sure the old me and the old Julius were able to become good friends, I think.

As Emilia was bringing her thoughts to a close, Echidna spoke. "The matter concerning Margrave Mathers is your side's problem. Thus, I shall leave its resolution in your hands, but apart from that… I'd like to raise a topic of discussion, that being the matter pertaining to Meili."

"Meee?" said Meili, absentmindedly, surprised that she had been called out by name, perhaps thinking it was none of her concern. Atop her head sat the former Shaula, now the mini crimson scorpion, whose tail had shot up like a pen at the same time she became surprised, which looked smile-provoking.

Eeeeh?! What did this lil' ankle-biter do?! Emilia could hear Shaula's voice ringing in her head, making her heart ache with a constant dull pain.

In any case…

"I can understand Echidna's point as well. With the freeing of the Pleiades Watchtower, the only impediment keeping people from traveling through the Augria Sand Dunes are the witchbeasts that reside there. In that case…" Ram said.

Beatrice continued, "As a possessor of the Divine Protection of Magic Manipulation, Meili is our lifeline for getting through the sand dunes, in fact."

Ram and Beatrice both had the same understanding, and when Emilia reached that very same understanding, she let out a "Yeaaah…"

Yes, that's right. With the sandy wind having died down, it's possible to travel through the sand dunes now. With Meili, who can make friends with the witchbeasts, none of us will encounter any danger along the way.

"Her value shooting through the roof was inevitable. For bringing knowledgeable people here to the watchtower, I think her presence will be of absolute necessity. To the kingdom, as well as to the Witch Cult," Echidna declared.

"…"

She could see that Meili had zipped her lips shut after hearing what Echidna had quietly pointed out.

Meili has always somehow had a calm and rational air about her, but now that Echidna pointed that out, she didn't seem to be able to laugh about it anymore.

If I'm not mistaken, if the Witch Cult wants to get to the sealed shrine of the Witch of Envy, they won't be able to do so without first dealing with the problem of the witchbeasts. And Meili has become the key to solving that problem.

"…Key." Thinking to herself, that word gave Emilia an awfully unpleasant feeling.

I really don't like the thought of someone becoming a Key to solve a problem. This is related to the thing that happened when I was just a child where I lost my mom and the forest, but—

"—If Meili cooperates with the kingdom by serving the role of keeping witchbeasts away from the Augria Sand Dunes, would you be willing to forgive her for what she's done?"

"…Oh?" Anastasia brought a hand to her mouth and looked at Emilia, who'd had such a thought, with one eye closed.

Her pale blue-green eye twinkled with intense curiosity, causing Emilia's chest to tighten. However, she firmly held her head up high, not looking away. "I've yet to be able to bring this up with you, Ms. Anastasia, but Meili was a reaaally bad girl in the past. She was just doing what her mother told her to do…but they were still things that Meili did.”

“So ya thought ya had ta make her take responsibility by lettin’ her do somethin’. And now it’s her turn ta fulfill a role that’s just right for her. I see, so that’s it.”

“I wonder… Is it even okay for me to say something like that?” Emilia nervously asked Anastasia if her idea was okay or not.

Emilia was hoping a wise and knowledgeable person like Anastasia would give her a reasonable response to what she thought. However, before Anastasia could reply, Meili called out to Emilia with a “Big Sis,” then continued, “Umm, what do you meannn? Forgive me, you say…”

“It means exactly as you heard. Keeping you down in the basement of Roswaal’s mansion was only supposed to be a temporary measure. And now you have something to do to get out from down there and live a proper life, don’t you?”

“And you say you’ll forgive me with thattt?” Meili’s large eyes rounded after hearing what Emilia said, then she shook her head. Unwilling to accept it, she said, “Wait,” with a quivering voice. “Y-You say that buttt, forgiving me should be an impossible thing. Because I… took on lottts of jobs with Elsa…”

“Subaru forgave you though, didn’t he? Beatrice and I can’t just laugh off everything you’ve done and forgive you so easily, but… I think after a good scolding, we’ll be willing to.”

“Don’t put words in Betty’s mouth, I suppose…” Beatrice retorted.

Beatrice cut into Emilia’s response to Meili’s words, but she was only being dishonest with how she felt, her face showing that she wasn’t against it, which Emilia had picked up on.

Then Emilia, who was brimming full of confidence, made a compromise. “In that case, it’ll be no good if you can’t do the same thing with people other than us. If you do bad things, you need to apologize by saying, I’m sorry. Even Roswaal is able to do it.”

“—. B-But that’s only because you and Big Brother are so hopelessly good-natured! I'm… It's not like everyone would forgive…"

"Even if they don't, you need to say you're sorry. …I know it'll be hard to make up for all the things you've done, but you have to, even if it's not all of it."

"…"

Meili, after hearing what Emilia had said, remained silent, as if she had lost her voice. Emilia noticed bewilderment, fear, and anxiety peeking into Meili's eyes, and she understood those feelings all too well, to the point that it pained her.

It was only natural to be afraid of making up for something she couldn't atone for and saying sorry without forgiveness.

Emilia, who herself was at fault for causing the Great Elior Forest to be frozen in ice, needed to free the elves who had lived in there with her, and apologize to them.

They have been sleeping for over a century because of my mistake. Even though they are kind people, they wouldn't forgive me like when I was a child, since I'm an adult now. Even so—

"You have to properly say, I'm sorry. This isn't something you can gloss over, shut your eyes to, or ignore."

"…That's such a scaryyy thing."

"Yeah, it is. So we can apologize together, then. Me, Subaru, and everyone else can do it together with you."

"—Oh." After hearing that, Meili's eyes widened with the most surprise yet.

Emilia's lips relaxed at Meili's expression, which made her look like she hadn't thought about it. I guess she thought she'd have to do a scary thing like apologizing all by herself.

Nevertheless, Emilia wouldn't let her do that. Meili would, of course, have to say what she needed to say herself. However, she wouldn't have to do that on her own.

Like on the spiral staircase in the tower when Subaru promised Meili he'd go through thick and thin together with her. I think it means something like that.

"…"

Upon touching Meili's shoulders as she hung her head, the young girl gently buried her head into Emilia's chest. Then, Emilia gave a satisfied smile as she looked at the mini crimson scorpion dancing on Meili's head. "So it's settled, then. What do you think about it, Ms. Anastasia?"

"Well, I guess there's value in extenuation, considerin' that it's an Emilia-like proposition, yeah? I unfortunately ain't got no clue what sorta jobs can be done in the desert, but…"

"I can put in a good word for it, as to its feasibility. As long as you attach value to and are willing to place your faith in the testimony of this nameless knight, that is, Lady Anastasia."

"Well, ain't you eloquent. That is my area of expertise, though, but it can't be helped, can it?" As Julius looked in Emilia's direction, Anastasia stuck her tongue out at him.

It was settled that Emilia and Anastasia and co. would work together, and while that was going on, Emilia stroked Meili's back, whose face was still buried in her chest.

"Then we have an agreement. For now, let's have Meili do her best to remain vigilant against the desert, and we should have the people from the royal capital investigate the tower as soon as possible. And as for the Witch Cult…"

"I believe it will be necessary to deploy the royal knights at some point. But it isn't particularly a problem for us though, now is it?"

"Huh?"

Emilia became full of expectation when she looked at Ram, whose words exuded a great deal of conviction. What sort of amazing idea is going to come out of her mouth? She wondered.

However, Ram simply shrugged her shoulders. “Ram is not sure what to feel if you place high expectations on her. Thinking of a solution is your job, Lady Emilia.”

“My job? Err, then how about doing our best to drive away the Witch Cult or…?”

“It’s not that. It’s about making use of Volcanica, in fact. Having completed the Trials and freed the tower, it’s possible that he might listen to your words, I suppose,” said Beatrice, grasping what Ram was trying to say.

Upon hearing that, Emilia looked far up above her. In the room above where they were talking, on the first floor, she imagined that the Divine Dragon was calmly lying in wait.

“—I wonder if Volcanica will listen to what I have to say.”

There was perhaps none, no matter how wise they may be, who could have answered the unsure Emilia’s question.

Chapters 13-24

Chapter 13:
As a Mortal

1

—Swaying, tottering, wobbling.

His consciousness wavered slowly.

Like a ship traveling across the vast ocean, it wobbled to the right, and to the left.

His consciousness teetered, its feeling heavy, and it felt as if he were going to become dizzy, despite his eyes being closed.

It was not enough. He did not have enough of everything.

Blood, flesh, bones, peace, anger, and happiness. Of those various things that formed a human, there was not enough.

He did not have enough of them, almost as if everything had been spilled somewhere, falling apart like droplets.

He had to gather them up, he thought.

He had to pick them up again, pack them in again, and then he had to stand up once again.

There was a place where he had to go. He had a desire that yearned to go there.

There was a reason why he had to live. He had a wish that cried out, I want to live.

That’s why, that’s why, that’s why…

Even if there was not enough of everything in him, even if he remained flawed and imperfect, he had to keep moving.

For that reason, Natsuki Subaru would—

2

"—Ubeh." As soon as he awoke, Natsuki Subaru curled his lip at the sticky sensation on his face.

It felt like the area from his face to his chest was drenched. Its lukewarm sensation seemed similar to the sweat he would feel on the morning after he had had a nightmare.

Combined with him spacing out with his head feeling heavy, he thought he might have had a fever, perhaps.

Subaru: "…The ceiling is unfamiliar."

Subaru mumbled out what he saw in his field of vision, a shabby wooden ceiling, with the intent of making it sound like a cliché.

He was in a shack, built by putting wooden materials together in a crude manner, and far from adhering to any architectural style. Subaru was confused on what to think of it for a while, looking at the masterpiece that compensated for its inexperienced technique with raw muscle.

What had caused him to be in this shack? To remember that, Subaru recalled his memories at a gradual pace.

Subaru: "If I remember correctly, after I exited the convenience store and blinked, I found myself in another world, I met Emilia-tan there, and — it's a bit long, so let's omit the rest of the details."

It was a monologue he would not let anyone else hear, but as he continued to joke around, the speed at which he could process his thoughts returned to him.

Yes, after young Natsuki Subaru had been summoned to a different world, he had met a super beautiful silver-haired girl, had gone on various great adventures after that, finally conquered the tower of sand, and had been sent away to a neighboring country.

Subaru: "I have no idea what I'm talking about…"

Anyway, the real situation at hand was how these bizarre situations kept persisting, almost to the point he wanted to bemoan his current predicament.

And then, although he searched through his own memories, he did not remember seeing this shabby ceiling, as expected.

Subaru: "Somewhere like the place in the Sanctuary is a narrow possibility, but the building from the time I was imprisoned by Garfiel was decent."

Nowadays, the adorable Garfiel admired him and called him "Captain", but the memory of being imprisoned by him, with his hands and feet tied together, lingered inside of Subaru, despite it being a memory from a world that was lost.

It was not as if Subaru held it against him, but being imprisoned was a valuable experience, so he could not quite forget it even if he tried.

However, the memories he had of his ceiling did not match the poor environment from back then.

He had been living life in a different world, in a place where the level of civilization was rather high, after all. Subaru, a man from the modern era, realized one of his few occasions of fortune right there and then.

While he was in filled with deep emotion, thinking about how he wanted to make that realization in a better environment—

Subaru: "—Hic,"

As he organized the disorderly contents of what went through his head like that, one by one, a sudden realization pierced through him without warning, almost like a clap of thunder.

Yes, this was not the Lugunican Kingdom, but this was the Vollachian Empire.

In the neighboring country where he had been unexpectedly thrown into, the people he could rely on were not there—

Subaru: “Rem…!”

The girl who he had to protect no matter what had arrived in this country, together with him.

In addition to that, Subaru had been separated from her, and she was still with the dangerous men—

Subaru: “Am I an idiot? No, I am an idiot…! This isn’t the time to…”

???: “—What are you busying yourself and making a racket for?”

Subaru: “—Ah,”

As Subaru immediately sat upright on the verge of going out to look for Rem with great determination, upon hearing a stiff voice thrown towards him from the side, his breath caught in his throat.

Subaru only noticed it as he sat up, but it seemed like he had been placed in a bed just as shabby as the ceiling. His eyes met with a pair of blue ones beside him, staring at him with a scornful gaze.

The eyes belonged to a girl with rather short blue hair, who was looking at him, her pretty eyes narrowed in a stern manner.

Subaru: “Re…m…?”

Rem: “—. I’m not really positive about answering, “yes” to that. I still haven’t acknowledged that I am this person you call Rem, after all.”

Subaru widened his eyes as Rem spoke to him stiffly, sounding as if she were trying to sound impassive to the best of her ability.

However, she was right in front of him, she was speaking, and he could also feel her warmth and sense the gentle fragrance that wafted from her, as evidence of this being neither a dream nor an illusion. Yes, the warmness of her hand also counted.

Subaru: “Huh? A hand?”

Rem: "…"

Suddenly, Subaru was stunned as he realized his right hand was holding the girl's — Rem's hand, under the ragged cloth covering his body.

He had no recollection of what had exactly happened, however.

Subaru: "Wait, were you holding my hand until I woke up?"

Rem: "Huh? Don't say something so disgusting. You can tell by looking at it. You seized my hand and refused to let go."

Subaru: "O-Oh, I see. I guess that's right. Yeah, I'm the one who was grabbing your hand…"

He had spurred Rem's souring mood, unable to tell the difference between expectations and reality.

Apparently, he had been grasping Rem's hand the whole time he had been unconscious. —Even so, the fact she had not shaken him off weighed on his mind.

Rem: "What's that look in your eyes?"

Subaru: "N-No, no, it's nothing. Yes, it's nothing."

Rem: "I see. Let go of me already. Your hand is slimy with sweat."

Subaru: "An enormous amount of damage done to an adolescent boy…!"

When said by a cute girl, it was a blow that would inflict an incurable wound, depending on the person receiving it.

Fortunately, Subaru only got away with nearly dying because he was made of tough stuff, but when he timidly let go of Rem's hand, she brought her hand to her chest and wiped it on her clothes, resulting in him being hit by a follow-up attack.

Anyhow, aside from Subaru's inner feelings—

Subaru: “Rem, are you hurt anywhere? If you are hurt anywhere, please don’t hide it and tell me.”

Rem: “Huh?”

Subaru: “Eh, what’s that face for…? Did I say anything weird…?”

Setting aside their first interaction, Subaru wanted to be certain of Rem’s safety. However, despite his question being rooted out of concern for her wellbeing, Rem’s reaction was terribly frosty.

Subaru spontaneously panicked, wondering if he had said something he should not have, but he did not have the faintest idea of what it was.

All he had stated had been about his worry for Rem, without anything out of the ordinary.

Rem: “…You’re the one who was seriously injured. You aren’t aware of it, even though you were at death’s door?”

Subaru: “Aware…? Umm, that’s…”

Rem: “I see, it seems like you aren’t. —You can’t be trusted, just as I thought.”

Subaru swallowed as she met his eyes, all the while flinging out words of rejection at him.

She had lost her Memories, the smell of the miasma that encircled Subaru had been of assistance in making a bad impression of him, and Rem’s attitude towards him had remained consistently stand-offish and cold.

Much more than that, he had been unable to create an opportunity to bridge the rift between her and himself this time.

Subaru had been really desperate, trying his best to save Rem from the Empire’s camp—

Subaru: “—Ah,”

Another piece of his deficient memory was filled, and it felt as if he were under an illusion that caused his brain to tremble.

The astonishment he currently felt was special to the point it rivaled Rem's existence.

Subaru had risked everything to save Rem, after he had been captured by the Empire's camp.

In the end, he had come across the tribe in the forest — the People of Shudraq, and underwent their ritual, along with the prisoner of war who had been placed in the same cage with him.

And then—

Subaru: "…I have a right hand…And it's not black."

Subaru mumbled as he lifted his right arm, looking at the torn sleeve and the arm that peeked out from there.

A dreadfully dark pattern that had surfaced on his right arm. An aftereffect of an encounter with the Sin Archbishops at the Watergate City of Priestella, but it was gone without a trace, despite having been indelible until now.

—That black pattern had treated the wounds of his tattered right arm.

It was an event he remembered as a horrible memory, but it seemed like it was neither a dream nor a nightmare. No, it was a nightmare, but it appeared to be something that had really occurred.

His crippled right arm had been healed, and Rem was at his bedside.

That meant Subaru had finished the Lifeblood Ritual without dying, and he was also successful in taking back Rem. —Causing many casualties in return.

Subaru: "…"

Rem: "…You look pale. I think…you should stay in bed."

She declared that as she looked as Subaru, who grew silent as he glanced down at his unnaturally taintless arm.

Showing her concern to someone when they looked ill, even if she did not have a good opinion of them, was probably a result of her innate kindness. Or it may have been because Subaru's expression looked like a dead man's.

A part of him wanted to depend on her kindness.

However, he could not do that. There were too many things he had to make sure of.

Subaru: "Thanks for worrying about me. But, I have a lot of things I need to ask you about…Just asking, but this house belongs to someone from the People of Shudraq, right?"

Rem: "They were calling themselves that, it seems."

Subaru: "I see…If that's the case, I want to see Mizelda-san and the others. Also,"

It was a subject he did not want to ask her about, but he could not afford to not verify it.

Rem, who had been imprisoned in the Empire's camp, was here. If so, he was also curious about the person — Louis, who was similarly held captive over there.

To put it bluntly, he was worried.

Not about Louis's safety, but more about the damage that would be caused if she were to be left alone.

Subaru: "I'm gonna be honest with you, but where's that girl…Louis?"

Rem: "—. You have a disgruntled look on your face. Why do you keep her at a distance?"

Subaru: "It's hard to explain. And I have reasons you probably won't understand even if I did."

Any conversations regarding Louis would always incur Rem's displeasure.

Subaru felt pained by that, but he also thought of it as a matter that could not be communicated by talking about it.

Subaru: "Anyway, where's she? Was she left in the ca…"

Rem: "—You'd know if you looked to your left."

Subaru: "Ah?"

Pondering over what she had told him, Subaru widened his eyes, and directed them to his left — towards the side opposite to Rem, who was at his right.

And then, glancing over, Subaru's face grew stiff from the delayed bewilderment.

Laying there was—

???: "Zzz…zzz…"

Subaru: "W…ha…"

Louis was sleeping soundly, showing off her innocent, sleeping face.

She was at his left side, sleeping in the same bed and wrapped in the same, ragged cloth. Saliva dripped down from her wide-open mouth, and looking at her shameless display, Subaru finally caught onto the situation.

The identity of the stickiness and wet sensation on his chest and face, when he had awoken was—

Subaru: "—!!"

Subaru let out a soundless scream.

3

???: "Oh, Subaru! It seems like you've woken up without any problem."

The person who welcomed Subaru as he showed up at the clearing, guided by Rem, was Mizelda.

Her black hair dyed red, the young matriarch of the People of Shudraq walked over to Subaru, who exited the shack, and double-checked his condition from head to toe.

He let out a small, dry laugh at Mizelda's unreserved, yet powerful demeanor that felt rather refreshing.

Subaru: "I made it back alive, thanks to you. It seems like I've made you worry, too."

Mizelda: "Don't worry about it. If you were to die, all we have to do is return the soul of our brave comrade to the skies, and bury your corpse under the soil as we mourn. It's a good thing your soul remained instead of that happening."

Subaru: "Mizelda-san…"

Crossing her muscular arms, the olive-skinned, tall Mizelda held her head high.

Her unpretentious words bore into his chest, and Subaru felt quietly, and deeply impressed by them. Although, to be honest, back when he had been captured by the Shudraq and placed inside that prison, he had steeled himself for another death.

Like that, while Subaru was impressed by her, Mizelda narrowed her eyes with a, "By the way,"

Mizelda: "It's too bad you're taken. Rem and Louis…will you add at least one more person?"

Rem: "Mizelda-san!"

Next to Subaru, Rem raised her voice at Mizelda's somewhat mischievous-sounding offer.

She had a stern expression on her face, still shaky on her feet as she walked with her new wooden cane. Having woken up just a little while ago, Louis was clinging onto her arm, her eyes widening out of surprise at Rem's voice.

While caressing Louis's blonde hair, Rem called Mizelda by name once again, and then,

Rem: "You shouldn't say that. I do not trust, or understand this person."

Mizelda: "Then, could he be given to me?"

Rem: "Yes, of course. I will give him to you."

Subaru: "The conversation isn't reflecting my will!"

Louis: "Aaa! Uuu!"

With a prickly attitude, Rem agreed to the proposal to transfer Subaru.

When Subaru rushed to put a stop to it, Louis shouted as well, going along with the momentum of the atmosphere.

"I'm only joking," Mizelda laughed as she heard him, but Subaru could not hold back his astonishment once he saw her affable disposition.

He could barely remember what had happened right after the Lifeblood Ritual.

Even after that, he still could not define the line that distinguished his memories from his desires, made to be favorable to him. Seeing how Mizelda was acting, it did not seem like a fantasy, however.

Subaru: "So, for once, I was able to build a good relationship with someone I've met for the first time. That's great, but…"

Mizelda: "Mh, you look pale. Are you feeling unwell? I can cut off any impaired parts on your body."

Subaru: "I feel like it's going to turn out to be a disaster if I carelessly say, "Yes, please!", so I'll decline."

It was not a joke, but an earnest offer, probably.

He figured it could be a fatal mistake if he were to say, “Yes, please!” without thinking it through.

Anyhow—

Subaru: “Last time, I didn’t have the time to look around leisurely, but…”

Going around in a circle to observe the village of the Shudraqians, Subaru muttered.

The village existed deep inside a vast forest, and it looked like a world where the level of civilization’s improvement had come to a halt, including the shack where Subaru had awoken.

It was a sight befitting the impression of what would be called an ethnic minority, living in an uncultivated jungle.

Amazons who lived their lives while taking part in hunting, with no male workers — it seemed like an undeveloped area, indeed, as Subaru saw no signs of civilization in the village.

Subaru: “Their numbers are few, so they can keep living by going hunting everyday…but, I…”

Rem: “…”

Subaru murmured, knitting his eyebrows in a distressed manner while biting his lip.

Rem was wordlessly staring at his face from the side, with a cross look on her face. Whatever she was thinking in the depths of her blue eyes, the current Subaru was unable to perceive it.

He was scared of being unable to read her thoughts. He also could not smile back with ease at Mizelda, who had smiled at him.

That was why, in order to overcome this situation—

Subaru: “I want to talk to you, Mizelda-san. —I think I also need to speak to that guy…as well.”

Mizelda: “…Yeah. You said it at a good time. He’s probably at the meeting area with Taritta and the others right now.”

Hearing Subaru’s words, Mizelda nodded and jerked her chin.

She was pointing towards a large building at the back of the clearing — a place that had been referred to as the meeting area. It was most likely a place that fulfilled its role as its name suggested, and setting aside whether it was the most fine-looking construct in the village or not, it seemed as if the role had been assigned to the largest building.

Subaru: “—Let’s go.”

Locating his destination, Subaru began walking in that direction.

He held out his hand to be of assistance to Rem, just in case, but she had rejected it. Taking Louis with her, she indicated that she would walk on her own with her attitude.

Laughing dryly at the invariable response Rem sent towards him, Subaru tightened his expression.

And then, the group passed through the entrance of the meeting area, and went inside.

There—

???: “It seems like you are finally awake. Have you enjoyed yourself, Natsuki Subaru?”

Yes, he was greeted by a masked man, who sat on the ground of the meeting area with one knee raised.

4

Amidst the Shudraqians, who were surrounding a fire, a man had slipped into the center of the meeting place.

Subaru’s cheeks twitched at his reception, and he was also at a loss for words.

Subaru: “…”

???: “What is it? Surely, you shall not declare that you have lost your voice, in return for barely returning alive? A price such as that…Perhaps, it was an appropriate one to pay, looking at the results.”

Subaru: “No, I haven’t lost my voice. My voice isn’t gone, but I’m at a loss for words. What’s with that mask of yours?”

Having said that, Subaru pointed at the man who spoke in an arrogant manner.

Placed on the man’s face, where Subaru’s finger was pointing at, was what looked like an Oni mask, painted in red and white. However, since the Oni existed as a race in this world, it could not be an actual Oni mask.

A mask that simply resembled the face of something frightening. That was what the man was wearing.

The man, sounding disinterested, responded to Subaru’s indication with a, “Yes,”

???: “It is an offering. Originally, I had the intention of keeping my face hidden going forward. I suppose it will do. It was troublesome to re-wrap my face every time I washed it.”

Subaru: “Yeah, it looks like you might get itchy if it gets dirty… Wait, it’s not the time to be talking about that.”

???: “Oh?”

Grimacing at the man’s indifference, Subaru walked towards him from the front without hesitating.

And then, seated in a circle together with the man, Taritta attempted to stop him with a, “Hey.”

However—

???: “Halt, Taritta. It seems as if this person has business with me.”

Taritta: “Y-Yes…however…”

???: “When I say it is fine, then it is fine. Are there any other words that are necessary?”

Held back by none other than the man, Taritta shook her head and backed off.

It seemed like the man had won over a hefty amount of trust from the People of Shudraq, all within a short time period. —No, considering that attitude, “control” was more appropriate than “trust”.

Taritta neither acted out of fear nor trust, but respect. The same applied to the other Shudraqians that surrounded the same area, at least.

Subaru had no idea what sort of method the man had used in order to do that, however.

Subaru: “For now, I just want to speak to you, one-on-one. —Vincent Abellux.”

Vincent: “…”

Subaru declared, standing in front of the man who was sitting, gazing down at him. He could not see how the man’s expression had shifted behind his mask upon hearing Subaru’s words.

However, the air around the meeting place grew tense, and it was almost as if he could feel that the temperature had decreased.

The pressure in the atmosphere almost made him inadvertently hold his breath, but Subaru endured it with willpower alone.

And then—

Vincent: “I shall overlook the first time because of your befuddlement, so do not make me repeat myself. Therefore, know that there shall not be a third time. You shall withhold yourself from uttering my name indiscreetly."

Subaru: "…What if I say, I don't want to?"

Vincent: "I shall administer punishment accordingly. I know a great number of ways to force you to surrender."

The man stood up on the spot, glaring at Subaru while facing him directly.

Judging from the feeling of his proclamation and his demeanor, there were no falsehoods within the man's words. There was no possibility of them being a bluff, either. Even if the number of moves he could make and the measures he could take were limited, Subaru was sure the man could implement the punishment he had been talking about.

Subaru: "You're an annoying guy…"

Vincent: "Then, will you make me say it a third time?"

Subaru: "—. No, I'll pass. I didn't come here to argue. —Abel."

It's meaningless to remain stubborn, Subaru thought, giving in first.

Like that — Subaru decided he would heed the advice of the masked man and call him Abel. Drawing his chin back at Subaru's decision, Abel commented, "A wise choice."

Abel: "Had you not withdrawn, then there would have been an instance of bloodshed."

Subaru: "Ha, you wish. I'll probably offend you if I say this, but I think it'll be just barely an even match if we both went at it."

Abel: "If that is the case, you are the one who should look behind himself."

Subaru: "Behind myself…?"

Abel said to Subaru, who had received his earlier words as provocation and crinkled up his nose. When he complied and turned around, his shoulders shook as he exclaimed, “Uweh!”.

Rem was standing there, watching the argument unfold between the two men with an icy stare.

Subaru: “U-Umm, Rem-san? Your face…”

Rem: “No? It’s just…Even after you were about to die, having been asleep for three days, it seems like you’re ridiculously stubborn, refusing to take good care of your own body. Why don’t you just drop dead at the side of the road, then?”

Subaru: “Sorry! I’m sorry, I won’t do it again!”

Giving in to Rem’s cold eyes, Subaru apologized desperately.

In the end, he could not make any changes to Rem’s disappointed expression, but he had a sudden realization.

It came out of the blue, but there was a high possibility that the reason why Subaru had been able to survive, narrowly escaping from his death, was thanks to Healing Magic, unless there was some sort of miraculous elixir.

If that was the case, the person who did that was—

Abel: “Including that, I must speak with you.”

Subaru: “Abel…”

Abel had apparently deciphered Subaru’s feelings after seeing him hold his breath. He shrugged his shoulders lightly, then turned his face in Mizelda’s direction.

Abel: “Mizelda, make everyone leave. I only require myself and this man to be here.”

Mizelda: “Well, well, you’re just doing as you please, now. I would’ve been angry if you weren’t handsome.”

Taritta: “Sister, please get angry even if you’re up against a handsome man…”

While Mizelda obeyed Abel's orders without any resistance, Taritta's shoulders dropped as she looked at her sister.

However, Taritta had also followed Abel's command earlier, so her words were unconvincing.

Once Mizelda, the chief of the tribe, had been persuaded, the other People of Shudraq would not stay put.

All of them streamed out of the meeting place, one after another. The problem was whether Rem, and in addition, Louis should be placed among the wave of Shudraqians, but—

Abel: "It is inconvenient for you to speak about your desired topic if that woman is here, is it not?"

Subaru: "Gh…"

He saw through the reason of my hesitation, Subaru thought, his breath catching in his throat from Abel's words.

However, in the end, what Abel had said was correct. Subaru did not want Rem to hear the conversation that would come after this.

Subaru: "Rem, can you step outside with everyone else? It'll be over soon…Or, well, I don't know if we'll get it done soon, but we won't take too long."

Rem: "When you put that way, it sounds like I'm the one who's behaving like a spoiled child."

Subaru: "I didn't mean it like that…Then, can you step outside for now?"

Rem: "…What would you do if I were to say, "I don't want to"?"

Subaru: "Eh?!"

He was astonished by Rem's response, having believed his hands to be already full from dealing with Abel.

Subaru immediately understood she was ridiculing his interaction with Abel from a short while ago, but he was a complete pushover whenever Rem held her ground.

If it were possible, he wanted to grant any of her wishes and let her do whatever she wanted to do.

However—

Subaru: "—. ——. I think…I don't want you to…listen to this."

Rem: "I could remain here by force."

Subaru: "Then… Then, I'm being cheap, but I'll run away in that case."

If Subaru started running, then Rem would not be able to catch up to him with her speed, since she had to use a cane.

That was the only point where Subaru could clearly surpass her right now. He had to say it was rather shameful of him, as Subaru could not think of anything else other than that.

Louis: "Uuu."

Louis groaned as she pulled Rem's arm, in front of the distressed Subaru. Apparently, she was trying to take Rem out of the meeting place.

Looking at Louis, Rem chuckled,

Rem: "I'm sorry, I must've made you worry. It's just…I wanted to say mean things to this smelly person, just a little bit."

Louis: "Auu."

Subaru: "Smelly person…"

The term pierced him, deep and razor-sharp, more so than any other "mean things", but that was currently not of importance.

Just as she had told Louis, Rem quickly withdrew with a, "Well then", and left the meeting place with the blonde girl in tow, while using her cane.

Subaru scratched his cheek as he watched Rem's back, with it never turning around for her to look back at him.

Whether Rem seriously did not have any interest in Subaru, or whether she had said that out of consideration, it was hard for him to make a judgement.

Of course, he would be happier if it were the latter, however.

Subaru: "She was brought here with the worst impression of me. I won't wish for more, that's my lifestyle."

Abel: "You have downright ridiculous perseverance and vanity. — Sit, I shall listen to what you have to say."

And so, the two were left alone in the meeting area. Following what Abel said, Subaru dropped himself onto the ground, sitting cross-legged.

In front of him, Abel also seated himself on the ground, with one knee up. He watched Subaru through his mask.

Sitting opposite of the burning bonfire in the middle, the two men faced off against each other.

Subaru: "First thing I want to ask, how much of it was a dream, and how much of it was real."

Abel: "Hm. I suppose that is a question no one but you would ask. How would you like me to answer? Everything was a dream, we avoided utter catastrophe and the situation is approaching a peaceful conclusion. Would hearing that satisfy you?"

Subaru: "You know Utakata and utter cata-strophe kinda sound similar, you might confuse me with the girl if you say that…"

A young girl, one of the People of Shudraq. Subaru was pretty sure her name was Utakata.

The unintentional pun was confusing, but that was not the true meaning behind Abel's words. —No, Subaru understood what Abel had meant, and used that light joke as a brief escape.

Abel did not overlook Subaru's timidity.

Abel: "I do not plan to keep up with your cowardice, Natsuki Subaru."

Subaru: "…Yeah, I know. —Attacking the Empire's camp, that was real, correct?"

Abel: "Of course, that is correct. The Empire's camp deployed outside of Buddheim was completely destroyed with the power of the Shudraq. The scene you saw was no illusion."

—Again, Abel confirmed the reality of that scene.

Hearing that, Subaru felt something profoundly heavy pierce the back of his chest. Tightly biting his lips, he used the pain to keep his consciousness from fading.

That kind of easy escape was not permitted for Natsuki Subaru.

Subaru: "…I, I understand the situation now. You commanded the people of Shudraq and attacked the Empire's campsite, chasing them away. That's the jist of it."

Abel: "Yes. However, that explanation is lacking. Let me supplement."

Subaru: "Supplement?"

Abel: "I commanded the Shudraq to destroy the encampment. Moreover, that was done with no casualties suffered on our side."

Subaru: "—. So, is that you just bragging about how amazing your commanding ability is?"

Abel: "No, that is not the case. —This feat is your achievement."

Towards Abel, who shook his head, Subaru widened his eyes in surprise with an audible "Ah?".

It was a completely unexpected statement. Abel actually acknowledging Subaru's achievements was one thing in and of itself, but Subaru could not even fathom as to why he was getting any sort of credit.

What in the world was he talking about—

Abel: "Do you not understand? The reason why the Shudraq and I could achieve a flawless victory was because we had detailed knowledge of the enemy's organization. We got this information from none other than you yourself."

Subaru: "—Hah?"

On top of his raised knee, Abel spoke with his chin rested on his hand. Meanwhile, Subaru's thoughts came to a standstill.

Those words were completely contrary to his expectations. It did not just come out of left field, it gut-punched him from left field. Finding it difficult to accept the implications behind those words, Subaru opened and closed his mouth silently like a fish—

Abel: "If you roughly know the enemy's stationing, layout and personnel, the probability of success of a siege rises. In reality, we won with no casualties. That was your contribution. You even received a reward."

Subaru: "Re…ward…?"

Abel: "We safely rescued your woman. I reward work. I do not have the ability to reward the dead. I thought that only while you still drew breath but…hm, the devil's luck in you is strong."

Although he had been told that he had extremely good luck, Subaru was still in a state of shock.

It could be that, as far as Abel was concerned, those words were supposed to be considered a compliment or praise. However, unfortunately, Subaru did not have the capacity to accept them, nor did he have the mores rooted in him to do so.

That was natural, of course. —Why did he have to be happy about being useful as a tool of war.

Subaru: “Why did I, even talk about the campsite…”

Abel: “It was the side-effects of the medicine. After finishing the Lifeblood Ritual, you were on the verge of death. There was a need to keep you alive until the takeover of the campsite and the rescue of the woman was complete. The medicine used kept your mind in a clouded state. Hence why you spoke.”

Subaru: “I just blabbed about anything that was asked of me…?”

Aghast, Subaru held his face in his hands, his voice trembling.

It was true, Subaru had a general understanding of the particulars inside the encampment. He had once spent several days in the camp as a chore boy after all.

He knew what was where and the rough number of people that were there. He also knew where their weapons and tools were stored, so if one were to crush those locations as a first strike, it was no question that they would get the overwhelming advantage. He understood that.

He understood, but so what if he did.

Subaru: “Medicine?! Are you messing with me?! Using that kind of thing without asking me! You…!”

Abel: “However, without it, you would have died, unable to reunite with the woman. It means the woman’s Healing Magic would not have reached you, either. There is no reason for you to speak ill of me, who let a dead man live.”

Subaru: “O-Of course there is…! I…I didn’t want to assist in a war! So many people…died…but, you’re…!”

Abel: “—It seems like you are misunderstanding something.”

He said bluntly to Subaru, who was breathing heavily, positioned in a stance to denounce evil.

Pierced by the coldness in Abel's tone, Subaru stiffened his cheeks.

Subaru: "Misunderstand, you say? What am I misunderstanding, exactly?"

Abel: "For example, we shall pretend your consciousness was not befuddled by the medicine. In order to rescue that woman, you would still need the aid of the Shudraq, nevertheless. Naturally, you would disclose what you know, and give it your all…If so, you would have spoken about who is assigned to where in the camping grounds."

Subaru: "Ah, uh…"

Abel: "You understand it, do you not? The result would be the same. Whether you were on the verge of death or not, the secrets of the encampment would be exposed by your knowledge, and those soldiers would perish."

Receiving Abel's indication, Subaru searched for a way to protest against it.

However, Abel was correct, and Subaru could imagine what would have happened in that case, off the top of his head.

In fact, had he lived through the Lifeblood Ritual in a better state, and had there been a discussion on forming a plan to save Rem, then Subaru would have talked about the Empire's camp.

He would have divulged the positions of the soldiers, as well as their numbers, and he would have used his knowledge to aid him in thinking up any measures to save Rem.

Subaru: "But, I would be a part of the council of war in that case. I would've definitely been against a strategy that would result in casualties. So…"

Abel: "You claim you would have been able to convince them? Would it have been possible for you to convince the people who do not know, nor have any other means aside from bloodshed, find a more appropriate method of carrying things out, and save the woman without any casualties, peacefully and civilly?"

Subaru: “That’s…”

Abel: “I will tell you this. —That…is what would be called a pipe dream.”

Pierced by Abel’s words, Subaru’s soul shrieked as it bled out.

No!, he wanted to yell, wanted to deny Abel’s words. However, everything that came out of his mouth was baseless, driven by emotion, and it would not be able to inflict a single crack on Abel’s mask, nor make his expression waver.

The things they saw were different from one another. They led their own lives differently.

Contrasting views on life and death laid within Subaru and Abel, as well as the People of Shudraq. And, it was impossible to remove and break through such a wall.

During the short time in which he had lost Rem, at the very least. Certainly.

Subaru was sure of it.

Subaru: “…I didn’t want to give up just because of that.”

Abel: “In return for your perseverance, someone other than you would die. Perhaps, that person may be a complete stranger to you. Or they could be someone who may be akin to your other half. When you stand still and indulge in your foolish thoughts, it means you are allowing that to happen.”

Abel carried on with shoving it into his face, despite Subaru cursing the unforgivable reality while grinding his teeth.

Perhaps, in exchange for the harsh, unmerciful way of how things had been done, Abel had reeled in a definite result. However, why did he have the privilege of selecting which lives would be lost in return?

Subaru: “Who do you think you are? Do you think you’ve become a God or something...?”

Abel: “Fool. I am neither a God nor a Hero. Naturally, I am also different from those wicked Observers who look down on this world. —I am a King. A King amongst Kings.”

Subaru: “…”

Abel: “The one who stands at the apex is called the Emperor by their people. —I, am that.”

Abel announced, placing a hand on his chest daringly.

Subaru could not see his expression beyond the mask that hid his face. However, Subaru imagined Abel’s face, a face he had only seen once, displaying a bold smile, a bright fire lit within his eyes.

Emperor. Hearing that, the thought of holding his breath completely slipped from his mind.

The man had proved his existence with his own words, in such an imposing, majestic way.

And then, Abel—Vincent Abellux—continued speaking to Subaru, the latter shell-shocked, the former maintaining the dignified tone of his voice. “—The seventy-seventh Emperor of the Sacred Empire of Vollachia. That is me.”

“…”

“However, I have left my position as of now, having been ousted from the apex.”

Chapter 14:
Unbridgeable Values

1

"…"

—The Seventy-Seventh Emperor of the Sacred Vollachian Empire.

Hearing Abel give his title, Subaru's mind went blank.

The reason was not because he was unable to take in the meaning of the words, nor that he was afraid to square off against royalty.

Certainly, in this other world he was in, this was the first time Subaru had met royalty in person.

By the time when Subaru had been summoned to another world, all members of the Royal Family of the Kingdom of Lugunica had succumbed to illness. Felt was suspected of being a surviving royal, but Felt didn't recognize herself as such, and since she had nary a trace of anything like royal-ness, she didn't count.

In that respect, of all the people Subaru had met in this world, the ones of the highest station were the people he happened to see at the place of the Royal Selection, the dignitaries of the Council of Wise Men, or perhaps the Duchess Crusch.

Roswaal was also a Margrave of a remote region, which in itself was a high position. —Actually, as Emilia was a Royal Candidate in the selection of the next sovereign, what kind of position did that correspond to?

Subaru: "…Wait, this isn't time to be running away from reality."

Subaru restrained himself before his thoughts could become scattered and chaotic.

In any case, the important thing was that Abel had revealed himself to be the Emperor. Ever since he came across him on the jungle plain, Subaru had a feeling he was no ordinary person.

Still, he would never have imagined that this person actually held the position of Emperor.

Provided that—

Subaru: “Well, if it’s actually true.”

Abel: “You doubt my word?”

Subaru: “It’s only natural to doubt it. How is it in the middle of a forest I just happen to get stuck with the most preeminent person in the country? I can easily believe your brazenness is Emperor-class, but…”

Then, Subaru paused, and scowled directly at the fiendish face Abel wore.

From Abel’s side, only the sharpness of his gaze could be felt as they stood facing each other, which was not fair. Certainly, there was a strength of will in Abel’s voice that only a person of importance could possess.

Having come in contact with people of various stations in this world, Subaru’s intuition verified that. —Still, that was not what this was about.

Subaru: “It’s like I said before. How the hell am I supposed to trust a guy who doesn’t even show his face, huh?”

Opposite the open fire, through the flickering flames, Abel considered Subaru’s words.

Subaru glared harshly at Abel’s masked visage, referring to the words they had exchanged while he watched the burning encampment in a daze.

Abel’s face had been concealed by old rags rather than a mask then, but he had said the same thing to him.

And finally, having heard that, Abel had undone the binds and revealed his face of his own accord.

Abel: “You are a tiresome man, going on and on about inconsequential matters.”

While saying that, he set the mask to the side, in that same moment.

Subaru: “…”

Abel: “What is with that insolent look? There is nothing about me that is exceptionally different from you.”

Subaru: “…That’s true, in part. I’m sensing God’s spite in the arrangement.”

Staring fixedly at Abel’s face, the irony of it struck Subaru.

It could be said that Abel and Subaru were similar. However, that was only speaking in broad terms. When broken down to a finer degree, they were different on a grand scale.

Glossy black hair, an imposing sharp-eyed look. It was an overbearingly powerful impression, but his devilish face had a peculiar charm that was difficult to look away from—

That was the countenance of the Emperor of the Sacred Vollachian Empire.

Nevertheless, Subaru had no recognition of that face. From his position as a Knight of the Royal Selection Candidate Emilia, he had, somehow, also become involved in national affairs of a neighboring country.

Subaru: “Is that how it is? Even though you’re at the top of the nation, your face is…”

Abel: “There is no reason you would know it. From the beginning, my face has not been seen outside of the Imperial Capital. The reason being there are far too many in this country aiming for my head.”

Subaru: “So it’s for self-defense? You must’ve really stirred up people’s resentment, huh.”

Abel: “No. It is because being powerful is the creed of the citizens of the Empire. The weak-willed must die, the frail must die, and the cowardly must die… because the strong deserve to have it all.”

Subaru: “…”

Abel: “The position of the Emperor is also no exception. It is the grounds for the Empire’s unparalleled strength as a nation.”

Resting his chin on his own knees, Abel spoke of Vollachia’s extreme ideology, leaving Subaru at a loss.

His words were not false. Having spent a few days at the Imperial Soldiers’ camp, Subaru knew it too. Todd and the other imperial soldiers would likely greatly approve of Abel’s words just now.

Them included, the citizens of the Empire earnestly believed in the notion that victory would balance out everything.

The way they existed was the embodiment of, “Long live the Empire”.

If they could fulfil that, then they would not hesitate to burn down the jungle to exterminate a tribe.

If they could fulfil that, launching a surprise attack on their fellow countrymen and massacring the soldiers was also—

Subaru: “—Wait, that doesn’t make any sense.”

Abel: “What is it?”

Subaru: “For example… For example, if you were really the Emperor, then why did you attack the Imperial Soldiers’ camp? If you just walked over there and spoke with the camp’s higher-up, then…”

Abel: “Fool. How could I saunter over there with such nonchalance? I do not have a desire to end my own life. Do not lump me in with yourself.”

Subaru: “I don’t have a death wish either. But, suicide…?”

Subaru did not understand the reason as to why an Emperor interacting with his country’s soldiers would be referred to as a suicidal act.

To Abel, all of those Imperial Soldiers should be his subordinates. It was unreasonable to consider it as a suicidal act to interact with them. —No, there was a way to rationalize it.

That was—

Subaru: “If I haven’t misheard it, then… Did you say you were ousted from the position of the Emperor?”

Abel: “It seems like you did not fail to hear it. However, I have also announced that I will not repeat myself.”

Subaru: “Don’t joke around! It’s an important section, isn’t it. Uh, is it true that you’ve really been kicked out of the Emperor’s…”

With Abel’s unchanging expression, Subaru started to doubt whether he was a human like Subaru himself, or not.

Because if Abel’s circumstances were just as Subaru had predicted, then he must be in a situation that was practically hopeless.

The thought made Subaru hesitate to continue his words.

Abel: “Your way of thinking is correct.”

However, Abel nodded, stepping over Subaru’s hesitation with ease.

In front of Subaru, who was holding his breath, Abel’s gaze was lowered ever so slightly, staring at the burning fire. The wood crackled amidst the flames, and the faint noise sounded as if they were throes of death.

Abel closed one eye whilst listening to it, Abel: “The group of Imperial Soldiers that had been deployed outside of Buddheim were dispatched by my political opponents, in order to dispose of me. To be precise, you have become embroiled in this.”

Subaru: “But… but, the people at the camp didn’t say anything about that. They said their objective was to negotiate with the People of Shudraq in the forest.”

It was not like Subaru had the ability to see through someone’s lies.

Even with that, he thought it unrealistic to consider that everyone, in a place where dozens of people had been crowded together, had coordinated their stories to match each other’s, all just to deceive the outsiders who were Subaru and Rem.

That was why the Imperial Soldiers—Todd and his group had believed they were after the People of Shudraq.

Subaru: “Though, capturing you being their true objective is…”

Abel: “Do not beat around the bush. They were plotting an attack. You are the one who said that. And then, in order to protect yourself and the woman, you have weighed the Shudraqians and the Imperial Soldiers on a scale.”

Subaru: “No…!”

Abel: “I am not mistaken. What has already occurred cannot be changed. Those soldiers will not come back to life. The dead will not speak of anything, nor are they able to exert their influence upon the living.”

Subaru: “…”

—The dead will not come back to life.

Subaru squeezed his eyes shut, struck by Abel’s fierce words.

How dare he say whatever as he pleased, when he knew absolutely nothing?

—There was a way to revive the dead.

The method was the one and only Authority, which only Subaru was capable of holding.

Subaru: “…”

If he were to Return by Death, then there was a possibility he could go back to the time before the encampment was wiped out.

Once he did that, Subaru could warn the Imperial Soldiers and save them from their deadly fate, perhaps. However, if he did that, then the safety of the People of Shudraq would be put in jeopardy.

He was trapped in a dilemma of choosing which side would be left standing at the cost of the other side. It was difficult to save both of them, when they stood diametrically opposed to each other.

More than anything—

Subaru: “I…”

Subaru did not have the courage to Return by Death for them.

Even if he did redo it, how much of a chance did he have at being even more successful? This time, the fact that Subaru and Rem were safe could be referred to as second best, rather than the very best.

Asking for anything more than that was equivalent to confronting an endless challenge.

In order to do that, letting his own life wear down would be—

Abel: “You are a foolish man, bearing enigmatic woes.”

As Subaru asked and answered his own question, Abel’s words had abruptly disturbed his ear drums.

Subaru’s eyes flew open out of astonishment, unable to comprehend what Abel had said to him for a moment. Abel was staring at Subaru from the front, on the other side of the flickering flames.

It was almost as if Abel was pitying him with that gaze of his.

Abel: “Why would you always desire to curry favor with others?”

Subaru: “Curry favor? You’re saying… I do that?”

Abel: “You are always gazing at others. You have intentionally constructed yourself to be that way. Similar to how a warrior would hone their skills, you have concealed your own heart with a deception called charity.”

Subaru: “—hic, it’s none of your business!”

Intense rage coursed through Subaru as Abel spoke as if he understood him.

To someone who did not know anything about Subaru himself, nor about Return by Death, it was impossible for him to understand even a fraction of what Subaru was saddled with.

There was no reason for Subaru to be lectured, nor pitied.

Subaru: “You haven’t answered my question at all! The Imperial Soldiers were after the People of Shudraq. They never mentioned anything about y…”

Abel: “It is a topic that is not disclosed to the foot soldiers. I suppose even the Commander is unaware. The Emperor having left his position… Is not something that could afford to be leaked out of the Empire. Neither do I, nor those who have deposed me, wish for the Empire to be shaken.”

Subaru: “…”

Abel: “Additionally, it was inevitable that they would target the Shudraqians. Forced out of the Emperor’s throne, the only hand an Emperor can take after escaping the capital are the Shudraqians. —Therefore, killing the People of Shudraq is equivalent to cutting my hands and feet and sinking me to the bottom of water when I am already half-drowning.”

Letting Abel’s nonchalant explanation sink in, Subaru’s questions melted away.

Why Todd and the rest of the Imperial soldiers surrounded the jungle? Why they sought to negotiate with the People of Shudraq to demilitarize them or otherwise exterminate them? Only now did he understand the reason for it all.

Subaru: "…Why are the Shudraqians the only ones you can rely on?"

Abel: "An Emperor of Vollachia has saved Shudraq from a predicament in times past. Shudraqians never forget their debts. There is also the Lifeblood Ritual. They are my path to victory."

The old debt that the tribe pridefully owed to the Emperor, and the way the Shudraqians respected their rituals.

Driven away from the Imperial Capital, Abel bet on that and attempted contact with the People of Shudraq. Consequently, Abel's political opponents tried to prevent him from doing so, by dispatching Imperial soldiers to the jungle to try and entomb the Emperor.

It was a bet with terrible odds, but one could say that he had won that gamble.

Superbly defying the opponent's expectations, he repelled the enemy's first wave that was meant to corner him. However, even Subaru knew. —The opponent would not stay their hand here.

Subaru: "You, and your enemy's battle hasn't ended."

Abel: "Of course. —It would end if I were to die. However, I still draw breath. Therefore, to take back my things, I shall use my utmost power to go and reclaim them."

That was the Emperor of Vollachia, Abel—Vincent Abellux's choice.

To Subaru, the word "things" that Abel had used seemed like it had an asterisk next to it, with a note saying "this actually means country". The scale in which Abel looked at things was too big for Subaru.

At the same time as being overwhelmed by his absurdity, Subaru came to realize something far too late.

Subaru: “So, you’re planning to… start a war using the People of Shudraq?!”

Abel: “Correct. I have made them promise cooperation. The results of the Lifeblood Ritual and the pact they made with the Emperor before. People who extol pride are easy to manipulate. They will undoubtedly fight with me.”

Subaru: “You’re saying… It wasn’t enough after doing all that?!”

Retaking the Emperor’s throne. To do that, there would inevitably be more battles to come.

Resulting in war—War, a fierce battle where humans would fight other humans, with their lives on the line.

Abel: “…”

The Imperial Camp, which had been burnt to the ground. As far as Subaru knew, there had been at least a hundred Imperial Soldiers there.

If Abel and the Shudraqians had only attacked that one encampment, even if there were some who managed to escape, there had been over a hundred casualties. If not, it was probably safe to say casualties had not reached a thousand.

—During the few hours Subaru spent unconscious, over a hundred lives had been lost.

Subaru: “Just because of that…”

Throughout the days he had lived in another world, this was the experience with the most casualties.

There had been victims at the White Whale subjugation and at the fight with Petelgeuse. There were people he could not save at the fights in Priestella, and even more in times now gone.

Compared to those unpreventable casualties, the number of lives lost here was greater.

Additionally, the enemies fought were not Witchbeasts nor were they evil entities. They were human beings.

They were not people who could not be reasoned with. They were people who could come to an understanding with dialogue.

Subaru: “Why… did they have to be killed…”

Abel: “There was no other method. That is all.”

Subaru: “…Is that really true? Did you seriously try and find another way? Before all your options were snatched away by murdering them, did you try to find another option until the very end?”

Abel: “…”

Abel narrowed his eyes at Subaru’s feeble grievances.

His look told Subaru that, instead of carefully considering Subaru’s opinion, he was questioning as to why he had to do something like that. He was questioning the fundamental part of Subaru’s argument.

It was not like he did not understand the words exchanged, nor was it that he was unwilling to partake in discourse.

The reason they could not come to an understanding despite this, was because Abel’s ethics were terrifyingly secluded from his own.

Fortunately for Natsuki Subaru, until now, he had not fallen into a situation where he had to build a relationship with someone whose values greatly differed from his.

The majority of people he had encountered in this other world were rational. They lent their ears to Subaru and interacted with him, while communicating their own opinions. Once upon a time, an idiotic Subaru had failed to understand this and was thus unable to notice their tact, resulting in him throwing all that away. Even so, he managed until now.

The people he had been unable to come to an understanding, because of their different sets of values, were mostly either Witches or Sin Archbishops.

However, by defining them as “different” beings, Subaru could continue going on without having to knock morals with them.

But Abel was different. The People of Shudraq and the Imperial Soldiers were also different.

They held no ill will, they did not toy with life and death, and they did not wield tremendous power for selfish reasons.

Excluding their base principles, they were humans, just like Subaru.

But even then—

Subaru: “…I, just want to bring Rem home.”

The battle to retake Abel’s throne was going to commence.

If this were another person’s affair, or if it was a past event detailed in a biography or something similar, Subaru would eagerly turn those pages with excitement.

This was reality, however.

In a foreign country, where there was no one to rely on, a fierce internal struggle that would shake the very foundation of the country was about to take place. To intervene in this situation and try to change history, there were no plans to even entertain that thought, in Subaru.

The objective was to bring Rem and return to the Kingdom of Lugunica.

He needed to reunite with Emilia and Beatrice, his friends at Roswaal’s mansion as soon as possible. They had to celebrate Rem’s awakening, and discuss what to do moving forward.

Any issues other than that, he could not keep up with.

Subaru: "—Tell me the location of the nearest town or village. I'll find a way back from there."

Tapping his cheeks with both his hands, Subaru stated his single-minded goal.

Receiving that, Abel responded with a small sigh,

Abel: "Hoh, that makes sense. Nevertheless, it will not be a simple path."

Subaru: "Easy or difficult, if it is necessary, I will walk that path. A paved path though, if possible."

Abel: "Hmph."

Standing up in front of the snorting Abel, Subaru strongly bit the inside of his cheek.

Stimulating his brain with the pain, he struck down his rising doubts and faced forward. He looked towards Abel, who remained unmoving.

The lonely Emperor had one of his eyes closed, his gaze crossing over with Subaru.

Subaru: "I still haven't thanked you. Putting aside the method in which you did it, thank you for rescuing Rem. I'm grateful for that."

Abel: "It was not only the girl, another one was rescued too."

Subaru: "That was unnecessary… Thanks to you, my worries will stay as-is for a while."

Of course, even in the case Louis had been lost in the Imperial Camp, it did not mean that the problems Subaru held would be neatly resolved. If one were to narrow it down to just his problems with Rem, there was a rather high chance that his relationship with her would become more strained.

He did not know which was better. And because he did not know—

Subaru: “I will pick the path that I agree with. I have mixed feelings about it but… you do the best you can do. But, the People of Shudraq…”

Abel: “Are you saying I should not involve them? Either way, if you and I did not intervene, a scorched jungle was what awaited them. This is already their fight too.”

Subaru: “…”

There was no room for denial.

They were already in a position where they were forced to fight to protect themselves.

However—

Subaru: “It’s impossible for me… I don’t think I will ever be able to become like you.”

Shaking his head, Subaru muttered while looking at Abel.

Abel had one of his eyes closed—The closed eyelid was opposite of the one before. To explain further, Abel’s blinking was unique. He would blink one eye at a time, never letting both eyes be closed at the same time.

Subaru recognized that this was done so that both eyes would never be closed even for an instant.

Subaru feared the Vollachian Emperor, who lived in a world where habits like that were formed just to survive as the one on the apex of the Sword Wolf’s Empire. He feared in reverence.

Listening to his mutterings, Abel, unsurprisingly with one eye closed,

Abel: “Naturally. You, nor anyone else would be fit to be my substitute.”

Stated that.

2

Leaving the People of Shudraq, Subaru and his group would be heading to the town closest to the Buddheim Jungle.

Such a decision had been made by Subaru. After the people surrounding him had listened to it, their reaction was unexpectedly mild.

???: “I see. It’s unfortunate, but if that is my comrade’s decision, it can’t be helped.”

That was Mizelda’s reaction after hearing what Subaru had to say.

She regarded his decision with respect, her dignified face tinted with sadness to some degree, just as what her words suggested.

Truthfully, Subaru had made his declaration whilst bracing himself against verbal abuse, such as, “You’re not a warrior if you don’t fight!”, so he felt all the more regretful because of her thoughtfulness.

Once Subaru had obtained permission from the chief, no one could stand in the way of his decision.

The existence of Utakata, who appeared to be more dejected than Mizelda, made Subaru feel reluctant to leave, as if something was tugging at the back of his hair. However, it would not become a reason for him to stay here.

Utakata: “Suu is going somewhere. Uu feels sad…”

Subaru: “Yeah, I’m sorry… Hey, do you know what’s going to happen from now on?”

Subaru asked her, caressing the girl’s head as she pinched his sleeve.

Not a single doubt was held against the values and their sense of unity, and there was no mistaking the fact that Mizelda’s decision was the tribe's decision, but Utakata was still young.

If she had been pulled by the flow of the people around her without understanding anything—

Utakata: "—? A battle's going to start now. Uu will fight together with Mii, Taa, and everyone."

Subaru: "…I see."

As Utakata said that, showing off the bow she had equipped on her back, Subaru blew out a sigh.

He wanted young children to remain ignorant. As expected, such deceit was a facile idea that did not apply to this jungle.

In the first place, Utakata had once achieved putting Subaru to death by shooting him with a poisoned arrow.

Even if she did not look like it, she was definitely one of the People of Shudraq. She possessed the resolve to fight, as well as the resolve to kill her opponent.

Nevertheless—

Subaru: "Don't die, Utakata."

Utakata: "Uu won't die! Make sure you don't die, too. And do your best."

Although he attempted to cheer her on, a larger voice of encouragement was returned to him, causing Subaru to choke up, managing to respond to her by putting on a feeble smile.

In all honesty, Subaru could not imagine how much of a chance at victory that Abel and the Shudraqians would have in their battle.

Targeting Abel, who had been deprived of his status as an Emperor, their opponents had dispatched a subjugation force to the Buddheim Jungle.

That meant the enemy was in a state where they were able to move around the forces that made up the fighting strength of the Empire at their own discretion. Meanwhile, the only force that Abel held were the Shudraqians, and they were a small group of less than a hundred people.

Of course, there was a possibility that Abel would consecutively stack victory after victory, by utilizing an otherworldly, unfathomable plan similar to the one he had used to launch a one-sided assault on the Empire's Camp, forcing them to retreat, but—

???: "—Everything is all set."

Subaru: "—Hic."

While Subaru had been controlled by the very thoughts he had supposedly casted away by changing his mindset, someone called out to him from the side, like that.

Subaru immediately turned around, his shoulders jolting, and the person also widened her eyes from his momentum.

???: "—? What's the matter? Why are you so surprised?"

The person looking at the stiff-faced Subaru was Rem, who had said that.

With a wooden stick in one hand and carrying a small amount of baggage on her back, Rem appeared to have finished getting ready to leave the forest, just like Subaru.

—Yes, when Subaru had informed her that he had chosen to leave the forest, the person who had reacted to it in the most unexpected way had been none other than Rem.

To be honest, Subaru had thought she would oppose him stubbornly, therefore creating a need for him to persuade her.

In the worst case, he would forcefully take Rem outside while she was asleep, having steeled himself to part ways with the Shudraqians' village with the momentum of an escape under the cover of night.

However, Rem's reaction towards Subaru, who had revealed their circumstances to her with the expectation of being rejected, had been surprisingly simple.

Rem: "—. I understand. I will finish making preparations by tomorrow."

That was why, even when Subaru looked at Rem once she had finished making preparations for travel, he could not really accept it as something that had actually occurred.

Rem: "…Uhh?"

Subaru: "Ah! No, sorry, I'm alright. Yeah, your preparations look great, too. Cute, cute."

Rem: "Huh?"

Subaru: "I mean, you're reliable! Thank you. With you being such a responsible person, I'm such a fortunate guy."

His reply was awkward to the point Rem stared at him with a doubtful look.

It was not like he wished to curry favor with Rem. Since he was in a condition where he would be saved by Rem's lack of resistance, of course, so maintaining their current relationship was the most desirable.

Ideally, he wanted her to warm up to him, however.

Subaru: "…"

He could test that out again when he had a calmer state of mind.

For now, his honest opinion was that he wished to distance himself from the presence of war, which hung densely in the air, as soon as possible.

Rem: "So, have you finished your preparations? It seemed like you had the time to be reluctant about leaving, but…"

Subaru: “Yeah, it’s all good. I didn’t have much baggage to begin with, and you’re going to be carrying most of them.”

Rem: “…But, you’re going to be carrying me.”

With a drop in the tone of her voice, Rem snuck a glance at the handmade, wooden framework that had been placed in the clearing.

It was a wooden rack that had been assembled for Subaru to carry Rem on his back while travelling, weaved out of a combination of thick branches and vines.

Rem was able to walk with some difficulty by use of her cane, but the journey from this place to the nearest town would take a few days.

In the meantime, he did not know how time-consuming it would be if he were to walk at the same speed as Rem. Because of that, the wooden frame had been created through the cooperation of Subaru and the Shudraqians.

Subaru: “It feels pretty handmade, but there should be no issues with its durability. I already tested it out with Taritta-san, who’s heavier than you, so…”

Rem: “I’m not really concerned about heaviness or lightness, but I think you’re being rude to Taritta-san.”

Incurring Rem’s displeasure once again, Subaru scratched his cheek with a dry laugh.

And then, he directed his gaze behind Rem—towards Louis, their fellow traveling companion. It went without saying, but if Subaru were to bring Rem with him, then Louis would also be accompanying them.

Subaru: “There’s no way I could force a bomb onto everyone of the Shudraq, after all…”

Even if that was not the case, taking his eyes off a Sin Archbishop was purely preposterous.

There had been many instances where he had looked away from Louis, and that meant she had had plenty of opportunities to reveal her true nature, but he did not want to let her do that from now on.

Even if he had started to believe that Louis's behavior was not an act, but actually genuine.

Louis: "Aah, uuu."

The girl in question had her long hair tied behind her head, and also had her white clothes mended, her attire giving her a wholly different impression.

Apparently, the Shudraqians had been fond of Louis in their village, and her repaired clothes were a gift from them.

Subaru: "Sorry for making your tribe do pretty much everything for us."

Mizelda: "Don't worry about it, Subaru. You have overcome the Lifeblood Ritual, displaying the brightness of your soul. The fact that we're lending our strength to you is obviously to honor our comrade."

Subaru: "Comrade…"

Subaru dropped his eyes at Mizelda's words, as she came over to see him off, her arms crossed.

He could not face Mizelda, who has been referring to him as her comrade with such friendliness. After all, he knew that a harsh battle was looming upon them, and he was aware of being one of the very people who had involved the People of Shudraq into that, yet he was trying to flee from this place.

Would something like that be what a fellow comrade, dignified and honorable just as the tribe had described him, actually do?

Mizelda: "Don't trouble yourself about it, Subaru."

However, Mizelda said that as if she had deciphered his inner thoughts.

Subaru: “Mizelda-san…”

Mizelda: “We fight to prove our worth. However, we create our future by protecting those dear to us until the end. It’s way of thinking that’s necessary in order to protect our tribe.”

Subaru: “…”

Mizelda: “Protect Rem and Louis. That is the honor we expect from our comrade.”

Subaru felt the corners of his eyes grow hot from Mizelda’s straightforward words.

He did not feel like correcting Mizelda, saying she had misunderstood about Louis. He had to at least fulfil that role, to answer to the trust Mizelda and the others had put in him.

Or, although he would never meet the Shudraqians ever again—.

???: “We’re ready~. Now is a good opportunity to take our leave~.”

Right as Subaru had been spurred by Mizelda, a woman with yellow-tipped hair, waving her hand exaggeratedly—Holly, called over to him with a wide grin.

Next to her was Kuna, who had a slender build, her hair dyed green. The cheerful Holly and in contrast, the reticent-looking Kuna. Those two were the guardians of Subaru’s group.

Arrangements had been made so that the two Shudraqians would be protecting Subaru, Rem, and Louis, ensuring they would not be attacked by anything on their way to Guaral—the nearest town.

Subaru: “I’m super grateful for bodyguards, but I also feel like it’s too much. Even though…”

This was a foreign country, and Subaru had already died multiple times in the mere span of a few days.

He could not deny it was a unique situation, but it was the safest to take precautions. Subaru himself did not have enough prowess as a fighter to be confident in his own abilities, and it was fruitless to depend on Rem and Louis.

He could say nothing regarding Kuna, but he had also seen Holly lift a boulder effortlessly with his own eyes. They were more than reliable as the group's bodyguards during their journey.

And then—

Subaru: "—Rem, does it hurt anywhere?"

Subaru asked Rem over his shoulder, while pulling up the wooden rack.

Since they would be positioned back-to-back with the handmade frame between them, Subaru could not see Rem's face from where he was. He had tried packing in soft leaves and fabric to secure her body, but there would be a few inconveniences considering they would be traveling for a long time.

Rem: "I'm fine… Are you okay with this?"

Subaru: "I've been training myself moderately… at least. My stamina hasn't completely returned, but I want to prevent Holly and Kuna's hands from being full, in the case of emergency."

In the first place, he was immensely thankful towards the two Shudraqians for being their escorts, but making them carry Rem on top of that was something he could never dare to ask for.

Subaru, demonstrating his stubbornness, Rem, carried by him, and Louis had lined up as a group. Accompanying them were Holly and Kuna, having finished their preparations despite being lightly dressed, and they all stood together.

Then, the People of Shudraq began crowding around the entrance of the village.

Mizelda: "Well then, may the tranquility and objective of our fellow comrade, Natsuki Subaru, be fulfilled."

People of Shudraq: “—May it be fulfilled!”

Mizelda called out, standing in the front, and the other Shudraqians followed in unison.

Experiencing an illusion of feeling like the wind had blown, filling up the area, Subaru made sure to return their spirit with a, “Yeah!”, along with a smiling face.

Subaru: “Thank you, everyone. Take care of yourselves and stay happy!”

As soon as he had said it, he realized that was a greeting terribly filled with deceit.

Thinking about the turbulent path that awaited the tribe after this, “stay happy” were two words that sounded far too hollow and meaningless.

However, he could not say anything more than that. He could not wish for anything more than that.

He hoped for the pleasant, refreshing women to stay happy as they continued to live their lives.

Subaru: “…”

While wishing for that, Subaru searched for the man with the wicked mask among the line of people who had come to see his group off.

However, it was only natural that the man could not be found anywhere.

He was not someone who would send them off, nor did the relationship between him and Subaru involve something like that.

Even if Subaru were to spot the man, he would not have any words to tell him.

That was why—

Subaru: “—We’re heading off!”

Louis: “Uu!”

As Subaru said that, almost in a desperate way, Louis’s loud voice overlapped with his words.

And then, Subaru and his group split themselves from the People of Shudraq, departing for Guaral, the nearest town, in an effort to escape from the war that would take place hereafter, taking their first step in doing so.

Chapter 15:
Those I Want to Protect

1

Deer: “—MUU!”

At that instant, there was a thud and a loud cry, and animals kicked the ground and fled.

On their way through the prairie, they had happened to come across a small forest. Amidst the shade of the trees, animals resembling deer had been eating grass. They were called black deer because of their impressive antlers and black fur. They also inhabited the Kingdom of Lugunica, and could be said to be one of the major animals of this parallel world.

In the center of the herd, from where they had fled from the sound and impact, one black deer had been left behind, collapsed atop the grass.

A thick arrow had pierced the black deer’s ribs, its heart destroyed by a single shot.

Its four limbs twitched and quivered in post-mortem convulsion, but, before long, that too stopped.

In any event—

???: “I brought down the meat~!”

????: “…“Meat”. You could say black deer at least.”

???: “Huh? What did you say just now~? Kuna’s voice is soft, I can’t really hear you~”

The one who’d drawn the heavy bow and raised a cheer was Holly.

She wore a sunny smile, and the young girl beside her, Kuna, had muttered inaudibly, causing Holly to begin tilting her head to the side with a curious expression.

But, seeing that Kuna pouted her lips,

Kuna: “It was nothing! Drain the blood! Quickly now!”

Holly: “Ah, please wait~!”

Holly started lumbering to Kuna’s side, rushing after her. But before she got there, Holly stopped walking, let out an “Oh”, and spun around to look back.

There, before Holly’s eyes, was the figure of their companion—

Holly: “It’s a lot, so we’re gonna go take a short break. Subaru, you wanna take one too~?”

Subaru: “…Um, uhh, not particularly, I’m totally fine, but sure.”

Pouring sweat like a waterfall, Subaru answered Holly’s proposal of a break.

Looking at Subaru, Holly said “I’m glad”, and ran back to Kuna’s side. Watching them leave, Subaru slowly fell to his knees on the spot.

Behind the totally exhausted Subaru, being carried in a wooden backpack, Rem took a small breath,

Rem: “…Stubborn.”

And muttered too softly to be heard by Subaru.

2

Subaru: “Man, that really took a lot outta me. I was able to withstand it because I’m the eldest son. But I wouldn’t be able to do it if I were the second son or the youngest.”

Putting together the twigs he’d collected, Subaru gave his explanation in a cool breeze.

Rem listened with an unamused look, and Louis listened with a blank expression, one that made it unclear what she was thinking. Nonetheless, Rem let out a short sigh, like she was exasperated with the matter.

Rem: "I do not understand what you mean. To begin with, is there a connection between having siblings and one's perseverance?"

Subaru: "Now it's kind of a dumb cliche, but I feel like there's a correlation between one's sibling status and relative fortitude. Like, they say the firstborn son is raised strictly by his parents, and the youngest child is spoiled, right?"

Rem: "I don't know if that could be called "right". Doesn't that not apply in the case of an only child?"

Subaru: "In that case, you end up getting spoiled while being raised strictly… Naturally, since I'm an only child, that means the special characteristics of the eldest and youngest son both apply to me."

Considering his parents' closeness, Subaru not having any siblings was quite the mystery.

Since he was aware he'd had his mom and dad's love all to himself, he couldn't help but wonder what having siblings would have been like, but that didn't change the reality of it.

Subaru: "Besides, it's not certain that I don't have younger siblings now that I'm not there…"

Rem: "…"

Louis: "Aauuaah"

While Subaru was imagining terrible things, Rem looked down, towards Louis, who was being playful on her lap.

While on the move, the wooden rack would be secured to Subaru's back, but when placed on the ground, it could also serve as a chair. It was an item with exceptional potential.

Thanks to that, going through the trouble of picking Rem up or setting her down could be done without much hassle.

Although Rem probably thought the circumstances requiring her to keep asking Subaru for help were shameful, for the time being, she had to get through and accept that disgrace.

Rem: “Siblings…”

Subaru: “Uh huh?”

Rem: “Family born before me, or born after… Did I have any?”

Subaru: “Oh…”

Rem inquired abruptly, and Subaru reflexively held his breath.

With a start he raised his head, while Rem was minding Louis’s hair threading her fingers, those blue pupils of hers turned toward Subaru.

In them a faint light flickered, with emotions he did not understand. He thought that perhaps Rem herself did not quite know those either.

Nevertheless—

Subaru: “It’s the first time. That you’ve tried asking me about your memories.”

Rem: “Where are we, who are you, who am I, what will you do, how dare you… I think I have asked a number of questions up until now.”

Subaru: “I’m not talking about that kind of negative stuff. Also, I thought you hadn’t yet said how dare you…”

He gave a strained grin to Rem’s prickly objection, however, it provided meager relief.

As he had told Rem, this was the first time she had asked him anything in a positive sense. Subaru perceived that as progress in their relationship.

Frankly, since their departure from the Shudraq village, all through their journey up till now, Subaru had been continuously uneasy.

After all, Rem had laid bare her hostility and suspicions towards Subaru, but despite that, she had not rejected his proposal to head toward the town for a few days because of those.

To put it bluntly, he had thought the greatest obstacle to leaving the Shudraq village would be Rem's stubborn unwillingness to listen to Subaru's words.

Without opposing Subaru's plan, Rem had been cooperative. — Rather than believing it to be a miracle, he had wondered what the heck kind of a calamity it heralded.

But not only was Rem being cooperative at present, she had not even troubled Subaru with various, excessive questions while being carried in the wooden carrier. Instead, she had chided Louis for shifting restlessly and hindering the march, and tried to lessen Subaru's burden.

Subaru: "…"

Rem: "What is it? You don't feel like talking, is that it?"

Subaru: "No, no, not at all. You're jumping to the wrong conclusion. Just, look, our relationship has been pretty strained right?"

Rem: "It still is now, though it is not strained, it is unfriendly."

Subaru: "I thought the unfriendliness had softened a bit!"

Rem's eyes looked at him with disgust, and Subaru's heart was wounded once again. But, being careful to protect the injury he had just gotten from Rem, he scratched his cheek with his fingers.

Subaru: "I don't know everything about you either. But, I know more about you than you do now. If there's anything you want to ask, I'll answer as much as I can. But…"

Rem: "Whether or not to believe you is up to me…"

Subaru: "Mhm."

Subaru gave a short nod, and with a glance examined Rem's appearance.

She was carding her fingers through Louis's hair, and frowning as if in deep thought. After a short moment, Rem once again met Subaru's eyes and said,

Rem: "I do not know."

Subaru: "You don't know… about yourself?"

Rem: "About you. …What in the world kind of person are you, I do not understand it at all. Because what I sense and what I see do not match."

Her lips pursed tightly, Rem's icy look was tinged with heat.

It was not that the distance between their hearts had increased, it was that the level of seriousness had risen. As Rem evaluated Subaru, the earnestness in those eyes increased.

It was evidence that at least she thought Subaru's humanity was worthy of investigation.

Subaru: "Compared to when you treated me like an incarnation of evil without giving me a chance to explain, this feels like a Great Leap Forward."

Rem: "I still think there is a paper-thin difference between you and evil incarnate… However, it is just that we have reached a point where it seems fine to insert one thin sheet of paper."

Subaru: "…"

The few words she added felt like a conciliatory handshake from Rem.

With relief, Subaru reached out to grasp that invisible handshake. Rem made a distrustful face at Subaru, who shook an invisible hand in midair.

In any case—

Subaru: “Well, our thin ice relationship has reached a place of having a thin sheet of paper inserted… How about it? Anything you want to ask?”

Rem: “…Please let me think a bit more.”

Unprepared to have a heart-to-heart with Subaru, Rem shook her head and requested that.

Rem’s way of preparation—More accurately, Rem had yet to prepare herself to believe Subaru.

Right now, it was possible she was worried about listening to his story, in a situation where she was unable to completely trust Subaru, and the information being too much to handle.

Honestly, he would be lying if he said that he did not feel impatient about Rem worrying like that but,

Subaru: “—Gotcha. I’ll wait for you to be ready.”

Rem: “…Please do not say it like that, like it is someone else’s problem. Since you could say that it also depends on your daily behavior, I think.”

Subaru: “I see… In other words, the only way to gain early access to that route is if I earn Rem likeability and credibility points like crazy?”

Rem: “I do not understand the meaning, but I understand what you said is unpleasant.”

Putting his hand on his chin, Subaru could see that Rem’s displeasure was accumulating once again.

As that conversation unfolded, from below the two of them—

Holly: “Sorry to keep you waiting~. We had fun taking apart the black deer and we’re done~.”

Like that, Holly returned with a face-splitting grin.

She took great delight in the dismembered black deer, hung from a branch she carried on her shoulder. Behind the chipper Holly was the tired face of Kuna, who seemed to have worked hard at the job of dismemberment.

Kuna: “Why did I have to do everything myself…”

Holly: “Because, Kuna can do it better~. If the meat got ruined, even if I eat and eat my tummy’d still end up especially empty~”

Kuna: “Why?! If you eat something, seriously keep it in your stomach, you weirdo!”

Kuna yelled at the easy-going Holly, but the latter laughed it off.

Holly then set her eyes on the bundle of dried branches Subaru had collected.

Holly: “Oh, you properly gathered them~. I’m impressed, I’m impressed~.”

Subaru: “I can’t do any hunting. I’ll at least do this much… Can you instruct me on how to start a fire?”

Holly: “Instruct? Never heard of that word before~.”

Kuna: “Obviously it means to teach…”

Holly tilted her head in contemplation, replying to Kuna with a giggle and a “Does it~?”.

Next, Holly brought out a small, black stone from her luggage. Allowing Subaru to witness it, she struck the stone quickly and used the sparks produced to easily light the branches on fire.

Subaru: “Woa, woahhhhhh, awesome. That’s some artisanship.”

Holly: “It’s a fire starter stone~. It’s easy-peasy once you get the hang of it~. Subaru, you try too~.”

Subaru: “You’re letting me try? Okay, I’ll just borrow this…”

Holly casually threw the fire starter stone to Subaru. He attempted to imitate Holly's actions from earlier, and as a result, he failed three times, but on his fourth try, he finally was able to produce sparks.

All he had to do now was to do the same thing over the dried branches—

Subaru: "It lit up!"

Holly: "Well done~! Now if any meat pops out, it can be cooked and eaten anytime~!"

Kuna: "The meat she's talking about are the animals before becoming meat, so don't take her for her word."

Towards Subaru, who had gained a small sense of accomplishment, Holly and Kuna appraised him from opposite extremes.

Accepting both of those in his heart, Subaru gazed at the black deer's meat roasting over the campfire. He brought up a new topic, saying "By the way,"

Subaru: "Back when we found the herd of deer, Holly's speed was amazing. By the time I realized, you had already shot an arrow."

Holly: "It's because Kuna found the herd~. Because of her we could get fresh meat~."

Kuna: "The only thing I did was say that the herd was there… Leaving aside firing quickly, anyone in Shudraq can shoot a bow and arrow."

Holly: "Except Kuna, you know~."

Kuna: "Uguh."

Having been prodded on a sensitive topic, Kuna's expression turned into a scowl.

Rem widened her eyes in surprise to Kuna's reaction.

Rem: “Really? That is unexpected. Kuna’s eyes are good, is what I heard from Mizelda so…”

Kuna: “…Even if my eyes are good, if my arms are bad then there’s no point.”

Holly: “Kuna, who loses even to Utakata in archery. It’s cute~.”

Kuna: “Shudduuup!”

Having been rated as below Utakata, Kuna used her hand to strike Holly in the stomach as if using a dagger. However, Holly’s plump body simply bounced the strike back.

Rem watched the seemingly practiced interaction between the two with a smile, but hearing about Utakata’s archery put Subaru in a conflicted state of mind.

Because, Subaru was someone who had once lost his life to Utakata’s poisoned arrow.

In terms of strength, Utakata was not strong enough to kill Subaru. Even so, if poison were to be used, for example, on an arrowhead, there would not be a great handicap in killing power.

When it came to hunting and prey though, the use of poison was probably not highly regarded.

Subaru: “And also…”

Putting his fingers on his lips, Subaru pondered about the wielder of a heavily drawn bow.

This was about the Hunter who had attacked Subaru and Rem in the jungle, before being caught by the Imperial Soldier’s camp. The bow master who had protected Subaru and Rem from the Witchbeast once, and murdered Subaru the other.

The true identity of the Hunter had yet to be discovered.

That was why, when Holly had shot the black deer, Subaru went pale.

Except, after hearing the talk about the People of Shudraq's archery skills—

Subaru: "—It's someone from Shudraq? Is doubting anyone else wasted thinking?"

At that time, Subaru's group was a suspicious disturbance that had entered the jungle.

Subaru was shouting while searching for Rem. So it was not impossible to think that someone had concluded that Subaru was a suspicious enemy seeking to bring harm, and as a result, decided to eliminate him as a threat. It was most likely the same for the confrontation with the Witchbeast afterwards.

Actually, the Hunter had in fact protected Subaru's group from the Witchbeast. —The reasoning to declare that the Hunter was definitely an enemy was weak.

Rem: "Holly-san and Kuna-san are good friends, aren't they."

While Subaru was sunken in thought, Rem had struck up a conversation with Holly and Kuna.

Rem was talking about Holly and Kuna—the ones who were accompanying Subaru's group, the young duo from the People of Shudraq.

However, the only one who laughed upon being told they were good friends was Holly. Kuna, on the other hand, scrunched up her face in disgust and stuck her tongue out with an unflattering sound.

Subaru: "What's with that reaction and face? Pretty girls aren't supposed to do both of those, you know?"

Kuna: "I just remembered that as much as I hate it, we can't be separated. I've been left to suffer over and over…"

Holly: "Ahahaha, Kuna's a worrier."

Kuna: "Who's. Fault. Is. That!"

A furious Kuna grabbed Holly’s shoulder and harshly shook her. However, the difference in physique between the two was too great, and Holly, who had about double the mass of Kuna and her slender physique, did not budge an inch.

In the end, Kuna realized she would only tire herself out and drooped her shoulders. She ground her teeth, frustratedly saying “Dammit”.

Holly: “Me and Kuna were born on the same day∼. We’re neighbors and kinda like sisters∼.”

Kuna: “Someone like you, I’d refuse as a sister. Older or younger.”

Holly: “Ah, the roast’s starting to become a nice color∼.”

Kuna: “Listen to me!”

Towards Holly, who entirely directed her own pace, Kuna’s one-way resistance reverberated emptily and in vain.

Witnessing this scene, Subaru thought that the sight of Kuna being at the mercy of Holly somewhat resembled a certain fussy, violent internal affairs officer.

Subaru: “Kuna’s dyed her hair green, so the color theme overlaps… Even in situations he’s missing in, that guy asserts himself quite strongly.”

If that person were listening, he would say something like “That false accusation is a positive trait, you know?!” However, since he wasn’t present, Subaru disposed of that thought as an auditory hallucination.

Rem looked at Holly and Kuna, who were arguing about the roasted meat’s color with a small smile. Subaru heard her mutter “I’m jealous.”

Rem: “Someone you can honestly talk with just like that…”

Subaru: “…Ahhhh, Rem, can I just say one thing?”

There was a certain and earnest envy packed into Rem's mutterance.

For the amnesiac Rem, the environment around her, including Subaru, must feel like an invader from the darkness. She could not feel truly at ease at any moment.

He did not know whether he had the skill to soothe her strained heart but—

Rem: "What is it?"

Subaru: "I said I was going to keep my mouth shut until you wanted to ask about it but, I'll spill about one thing."

Rem: "…"

Subaru: "You have an older sister. Your older twin, who holds you dear from the bottom of her heart… So, no matter where you are, you'll never be alone."

Hearing Subaru's words, Rem's already wide eyes, opened further in surprise.

After saying that, Subaru wondered if he should have been more patient, but he immediately told himself that this was the correct decision.

Rem had just said that she would wait until she could trust Subaru. It could not be helped if she disparaged him next.

Subaru understood Rem's anxiety, but, nevertheless, he was at his limit too.

At the very least, he could let her know about Ram's existence.

Ram, who was probably, even now, worried about her younger sister, all the way from the far lands of Lugunica. —The Ram who was feeling Rem through Synesthesia.

Subaru: "I don't understand it but, if you close your eyes and try to imagine it, you might be able to feel it. That's what's called a twin's Synesthesia.”

Rem: “Synesthesia…”

Somewhat hesitating, Rem timidly placed her hand on her chest and closed her eyes.

Staying still, seeking her other half, born on the same day and from the same mother—seeking the existence of her older twin, Rem’s consciousness started to extend its hand through a sea of black night.

However—

Rem: “…I cannot feel anything.”

Subaru: “Is that, so… I guess it’s pretty difficult if you can’t visualize it.”

Shaking her head slowly, Rem reported on the failure of her Synesthesia.

For a moment, he worried something had happened to Ram that made it unable to connect with her. However, he judged that the distance— both physical and mental, was the bigger problem.

Frankly, in a situation where the Synesthesia had indeed connected, a lot of things would turn for the better at once. It was pretty disappointing, but he could not let that show on the outside.

The most frustrated one here was Rem.

For now, he had to console Rem’s feelings of frustration and—

Rem: “—a”

Louis: “Uu—?”

However, while Subaru was choosing his words of comfort, a slight sigh escaped from Rem’s lips.

The reason for that was Louis’s hand, which was placed on top of Rem’s resting hand. Louis, while resting her head on Rem’s lap, was concerned about Rem, overlapping her hands with her own from underneath.

Rem softly curled her lips up at Louis’s actions.

Rem: “Thank you. I’m okay.”

Louis: “Aa—”

Rem put on a brave smile, and Louis cheerfully laughed upon seeing it.

Looking at their heartwarming scene, Subaru grit his teeth. He realized he was too late and his role had been snatched from him.

Subaru: “Dammit… I knew it! You’re still my enemy aren’t you...?!”

Rem: “Again, why does it end up that way? Do you not think it is childish?”

Looking at Subaru, who was glaring at Louis, Rem again lost faith in Subaru.

Ignorant to the situation, Louis, the recipient of Subaru’s glare, gleefully flailed her arms and legs up and down.

And then, the ones who took no notice of the stiff atmosphere between Subaru’s group—

Holly: “It’s done~!”

Kuna: “It’s still raw!!”

The duo who had an already established relationship raised their voices.

3

—Subaru’s group had arrived safely at Guaral, having taken four days in total,

Subaru: “So that’s Guaral… It’s protected by fine-looking walls.”

A fortified city, surrounded by towering walls, that could be seen from a distance.

He was astonished that his prediction had missed its mark, and felt like he had been hit by a stroke of luck. Subaru was experiencing two sensations, as there was a disparity between the sight of the city and what he had imagined after hearing that it was the "nearest town".

Subaru: "The city feels pretty rugged… Is a giant gonna come over or what?"

Kuna: "Giants? I heard they were nearly wiped out, quite a while ago."

Subaru: "Really? I wonder if the old fart I know is the last giant, then…"

Subaru muttered out a purposeless comment in response to Kuna's serious-minded reply.

It was surprising to know that Rom-ji, the only giant that Subaru knew, was in such a rare position. Although, he had heard of the oni race being extremely scarce in numbers from Rem, so perhaps the struggle for survival between races was unforgiving, even in this world.

Subaru: "Thinking about it calmly, I've never met anyone related to elves aside from Emilia-tan, so maybe there aren't many elves out there, either."

As a cliché of the fantasy genre, it was common for long-lived species to have low fertility in exchange for a long lifespan, therefore being unable to increase their numbers easily.

In addition to that, because of the fear directed towards the Witch of Envy, half-elves were a target of hatred, in this world. That was the real state of things. Naturally, Subaru could think of the possibility that pure-blooded elves were also pressured by those conventions, as they were the foundation of the births of half-elves.

Subaru: "I think about Emilia-tan in a place where she's absent.

Dammit, I haven't been able to meet Beako for a while as well. I feel like my Emiliase and Beatromin deficiency is becoming severe."

The prescribed medicine for both cases of malnutrition would be coming into contact with Emilia and Beatrice.

In all seriousness, the mental fatigue that resulted from being continuously worried or tense was substantial, so just hearing the voices of Emilia and Beatrice, who both contributed to Subaru's peace of mind, would make him feel more relaxed.

Subaru: "I miss Ram, Petra, Frederica, and the others' voices… Hell, in a situation like this, I'm fine with even Roswaal's voice."

Rem: "Excuse me, can you give me a break with your meaningless emotional conflict?"

Subaru: "Ah, my bad."

Rem chided him for his overflowing soliloquy while remaining on his back.

Subaru had splendidly managed to carry Rem on the wooden rack for the duration of the journey, without entrusting her to anyone else. He had not learned the ropes on how to carry things during the first and second day, and his waste of stamina had been quite prominent. However, he had gotten the hang of his pacing and sense of balance from the third day onwards, so he had been able to make a lot of progress while walking.

Subaru: "When it comes to carrying Rem on one's back, I'm second to none by now."

Rem: "Don't try to compete over such an undignified thing. Also, those two are…"

Subaru and Rem were positioned back-to-back, so Rem would be pointing towards somewhere behind him. As he turned around, obeying her words, there were Holly and Kuna.

And then, next to Kuna, who was lazily scratching her head, Holly took one step towards Subaru and Rem, Holly: “Well, I guess this is goodbye since you arrived safely ~ .”

Subaru: “Ah… You two won’t enter the city…?”

Kuna: “It’s meaningless for us to enter. Our role is to escort you two.”

Subaru: “I see… You two really helped us out a lot.”

With the abrupt farewell, Subaru admonished himself, thinking this would obviously happen.

Kuna and Holly had only followed them out of the kindness of the People of Shudraq. He felt that he was dependent on them, because they had saved him multiple times during his travels.

Holly, who had cleared the atmosphere with her hunting skills and cheery personality.

Kuna, who possessed unexpectedly extensive knowledge and an earnest will to provide answers to Subaru’s questions, had been reliable.

Parting ways with the two of them, Subaru would be traveling with Rem, this time for sure—no, it would be a three-person-journey with Rem and Louis.

There had been someone else at the Empire’s encampment, as well as the Shudraqian village, but this time, it was different.

Kuna: “…Jeez, stop making such a miserable face.”

Subaru: “My bad. By “miserable face”, do you mean… woah?!”

Gazing at Subaru’s black eyes that had previously wavered with uneasiness, Kuna shoved something towards him.

Subaru instinctively caught the item in his hand, and teetered forward from its unexpected weight. A long and thin white wrapping was given to him. It was the object which Holly had been carrying on her back, for the whole duration of the journey.

During the trip, he had assumed that it was an item essential to Holly and Kuna.

Subaru: “Now that I think about it, I feel like you never opened this… What’s this?”

Holly: “It’s yours~. The chieftain told us to give it to you, once you arrived properly at the town~.”

Subaru: “It’s mine, and once I arrived at the town…?”

Unable to grasp the true meaning behind Holly’s words, Subaru knitted his brows out of uncertainty. However, Kuna had prompted him roughly with a, “Just open it.”

Receiving her words, Subaru lowered the wooden rack on his back to the ground, and opened the white wrapping.

Inside, there was—

Subaru: “Ah…”

Rem: “Is this… a horn?”

A white lump laid in Subaru’s arms, as large as his arms could hold. What Rem had murmured after looking at it had told him it was a horn—a Witchbeast’s horn at that.

Subaru recognized it. He had seen it twice, and he had taken a good look at it during the Lifeblood Ritual.

Subaru: “Is this the Elgina’s horn, by any chance?”

Holly: “Yep~. You were the one who broke it off, so it’s yours~.”

Kuna: “It’s a valuable item. With that size, it’ll fetch a high price.”

Subaru: “—Hic!”

Having been told that the horn would fetch a high price, Subaru held his breath at Holly and Kuna’s thoughtful arrangements.

In other words, they were telling him to exchange the Witchbeast’s horn for traveling expenses, so that Subaru's group could go back to the Kingdom of Lugunica.

The two had carried the baggage for that purpose, without specifying said purpose.

Subaru: "It must've been pretty heavy…"

Kuna: "You were carrying Rem on your back for the whole time."

Holly: "Besides, besides! I'm very strong~. So, it was no problem at all~."

Both Kuna and Holly had faces looking like they had only done something trivial, while Subaru's voice was trembling because of the two's ulterior motives.

Their thoughtfulness had rendered him completely speechless, word for word.

Subaru: "…"

They had helped him on the way to Guaral, and even secured traveling expenses for Subaru's group.

Despite all that, Subaru would part ways with him, and go back to his country. —Holly and Kuna would reunite with their Shudraqian allies, and join the battle to retake the Imperial Capital alongside Abel.

Whilst yielding the life or death of many along the way—

Subaru: "I…"

Kuna: "—Don't think about anything stupid."

Subaru: "…"

Kuna: "You gotta fight to protect the ones you wanna protect. It's the same for us."

Although impulsive words nearly found their way out of Subaru's mouth, Kuna had sharply put a stop to those.

Kuna directed an annoyed glare at Subaru, all while emanating her usual feeling of listlessness.

She had a lot of complaints, and always seemed irritated towards Holly. However, she had never separated herself from the Shudraqians, nor had she ever given any indication that she disliked Holly.

As a member of the Shudraqians, she thought it was only natural for her to fight together with Abel.

—That must be proof that she had already chosen the "ones she wanted to protect" in her words.

Kuna: "Don't keep idling around. I have good eyesight. If you do something stupid, then I can see it straight away."

Holly: "And if Kuna tells me about it, then I can go kaboom with my bow and arrow~!"

Subaru: "…Yeah, that's scary."

From their words, Subaru understood that he had been gently pushed away.

If he acted out of impulse here, then he would disregard their—no, the People of Shudraq's kindness. He could not do such a thing for the women who had referred to him as their comrade.

Subaru: "I'll gratefully make good use of it for our journey. Thanks for taking care of us, you two!"

Comprehending Kuna and Holly's intentions, Subaru swallowed the thoughts that surged forward.

Receiving it, albeit their respective attitudes, they nodded.

Rem: "Thank you for accompanying us, Holly-san and Kuna-san. I won't forget my gratitude towards you two, as well as to every person of the People of Shudraq."

Kuna: “Please do that. You’ve apparently forgotten a lot of things, so…”

Holly: “I think you’re going too far with that~.”

Wanting to at least bid them farewell, Rem had climbed down the wooden frame and seemed to be reluctant to part ways with them.

Louis also showing her unwillingness to leave Holly and Kuna was something unexpected. She had gotten close to Holly in particular, who was outspoken and unreserved with her interactions. Louis clung on to Holly’s stomach for a while, refusing to separate herself from her.

Kuna: “Bye, Subaru. Don’t forget, I’ll be watching.”

Holly: “Yep~!”

Subaru: “Yeah! Thank you so much! Thank you!”

Turning their backs towards the two waving their hands in an exaggerated manner, Subaru’s group resumed their three-person-journey.

Subaru had placed back the horn he was given into its wrapping, and left it in Louis’s care by making her carry it on her back. Subaru had made that agonizing decision because his hands were occupied, but perhaps Holly and Kuna’s words had been effective, as Louis was trying to ensure the wrapping would not drop, following Subaru and Rem quietly.

Rem: “It means she also pays attention to a lot of things.”

Subaru: “…I know she’s a ball of curiosity.”

Rem pointed it out while on his back, with Subaru replying to her with a bitter feeling.

The Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, Louis Arneb, had devoured myriad lives, in an attempt to find the life most suited for herself. She would be an inquirer if framed in a positive light, or an omnivore if framed negatively.

That was why, even if Louis had shown a slightly admirable side of herself, Subaru's impression of her would not change.

It would not change.

Subaru: “Let's go.”

Hearing Rem's sigh behind him, Subaru began walking.

He also heard Louis's footsteps as if she were following him.

There were only three of them, just as how it had been back then, when they had been first plunged into the Vollachian Empire.

Finally seeming as if they were all facing the same direction, they moved on.

And then, they passed through the gates of the fortified city—Guaral.

Chapter 16:
The Situation in the Empire

1

—The fortress city of Guaral.

That was the name of the first civilized town in the Empire that Subaru's party had reached.

Because they had constantly been sleeping under the stars at the Imperial Soldiers' encampment and the Shudraqian village until now, catching sight of civilization was especially exciting.

That said, it was not as though they could just let go and enjoy the wonders of civilization.

The reason being—

???: "—Inspection."

Before their eyes, at the entrance to the city, they saw an inspection taking place, and Subaru wet his lips with his tongue.

Guaral was surrounded on all four sides by a protective wall, and entering or exiting to the east and west was limited to one at a time by means of large gates. There were permanent inspection posts at the gates, and even from a distance the gate guards' grim faces as they kept a stern, watchful eye, could be confirmed.

Kuna: "They'll be able to tell we're Shudraqian with one look. So we can't come with you friends, but as long as you're not carrying anything shady you'll be fine."

Holly: "It'll work out if you're not timid and walk in boldly~. Take care of Rem and Louis-chan okay~?"

Before they arrived at the city, those were the parting words of Kuna and Holly.

Both had advised him not to get more worked up than necessary, but to forget his nervousness and anxiety so easily was a suggestion impossible to follow.

Since, at any rate, in the Empire they were foreigners with unknown affiliations and no identification either.

Subaru: “Anyways, even a foreigner with no common sense like me can tell Lugunican people aren’t welcome to wander around in Vollachia these days.”

It seemed that if he foolishly revealed his true identity, he would without a doubt incur the displeasure of the gate guards.

It was not just that they could literally be turned away at the gate, to be inadvertently arrested or something of the sort would be a terrible event if it came to pass. He had already gone through that back at the Imperial encampment.

—Subaru absolutely could not permit an end such as that, where many would burn as a result of his own mishaps, to occur again.

Subaru: “…”

??? “…People around you are going to get suspicious if you look too grim.”

Subaru had furrowed his brows, in reflection of how torn he was within; upon hearing her voice, his eyes widened in surprise.

The voice had come from his back—And had belonged to Rem, who was riding along in the wooden backpack.

Because of the way the pack was structured, Rem should not be able to see Subaru’s face since their backs were up against each other.

Subaru: “And yet, how did you know I was wrinkling my brows?”

Rem: “Even if I can’t see it, I can hear your breathing. Your heartbeat too, since our backs are touching, although it is through the backpack… I can feel the tension from here.”

Subaru: “Oof… Sorry ‘bout that. For my wrinkled brow, and for my loud heartbeat too.”

Rem: “Yes. Allow me some quiet, please.”

Subaru: “By that, you mean “calm down”, not “stop breathing” right?”

In response to Subaru seeking confirmation just in case, Rem remained silent, sighing.

Rem’s long sigh felt like it was somewhere between being fed up with Subaru and being apathetic towards him. Since it was not born out of clear disgust or hostility, Subaru was a tiny bit relieved.

If one were to tell him his aspirations were low, there would be nothing he could reply back with.

Louis: “Ooh, ooh?”

Subaru: “…I get it, so hurry up. You’re also one cause of my worries y’know!”

Pulling vigorously on Subaru’s sleeve and pointing at the line was the long-haired Louis.

The Witchbeast’s horn which Kuna had bequeathed to them—Louis was shouldering it in a white bundle, currently wondering why Subaru was not lining up.

However, he could not act thoughtlessly like Louis and recklessly line up in the queue.

Subaru: “Right now, we don’t have any way to give identification or bribes to the gate guards. So, it’s impossible to approach from the front.”

Rem: “Isn’t it possible to line up and talk it out with the gate guards?”

Subaru: “Being honest and talking it out is an option, but a situation in which it fails and we can’t recover from is scary… Cause, we don’t have anyone that we can rely on right now.”

Listening to Subaru’s concerns, Rem made a small noise and went silent.

It may have been difficult to imagine for the amnesiac Rem, but for every place to place, and culture to culture, there was no overdoing cautiousness.

—Surprisingly, ten days were about to pass, since the time the trio had been blown off into the Empire from the Pleiades Watchtower.

The initial chaos had subsided quite a bit, and the heated relationship between Subaru, Rem and Louis had been shelved away for the time being. Nevertheless, it was still difficult to say that everything was looking up.

In any case, the only time when Subaru and Rem – and also Louis – were acting together and by themselves, had occurred when they were running from the Hunter and Elgina. It lasted merely a moment after they had been blown off here.

Any other time, whether at the Imperial Soldiers’ camp, the Shudraqian settlement or during the journey to Guaral, there was always someone familiar with the Empire alongside them.

They were not on friendly terms with everyone there, but at least they were not lonely.

Subaru: “But, it’s different now.”

Antagonizing Todd and his crew, splitting off from Abel’s path and even separating from the People of Shudraq.

From here on out, the trio would need to traverse the untrodden lands of the Empire without any crutches. Like it or not, taking care in their decisions would be the name of the game.

Rem: “So, what shall we do? No matter how troubled or hesitant, our goal is still the same, right? There’s no way we can just pass by through this city, I reckon…”

Subaru: “Even if we call it quits here because of this inspection, they might be doing the same thing in other cities. If only this were Lugunica, they wouldn’t be on such high alert… No.”

Subaru shook his head, taking into account the situation in the Empire.

Though they had since parted from him, Abel had conveyed to them his own situation, and how he had been ousted from his seat as Emperor. If that were true, then, currently, the Empire was in the midst of internal strife, one could say.

Though Abel had said that the matter of the Emperor’s absence was being kept from the populace, putting a lid on people’s mouths was pretty difficult, and the mood would be surreptitiously contagious.

On that, even Todd had looked like he had been holding misgivings at their dispatchment back at the encampment.

Subaru: “If that’s the case, then I guess it’s because of Abel that the inspections are so strict…? Shit, screw that guy.”

Though Abel had been of some help to them, he would rather place him as more of a negative, given the problems when you evened it all out, and mood-related ones.

Given his personality and attitude, it was easy to imagine a Nobunaga-esque reason as to why the people beneath him had rebelled.”

Subaru: “He seemed like a guy who would carry out the phrase, “The King does not understand human feelings,” for real.”

Rem: “…Are you perhaps wasting time by thinking about worthless things, instead of being worried in earnest?”

Rem’s voice hardened into ice as Subaru muttered that out while rubbing his chin.

Her tone harbored genuine anger, stretching beyond exasperation or indifference, causing Subaru to try and explain his previous remark in a hurry.

Subaru: “Nonono, wait a moment, relax. My Round Table-like comment was definitely worse than some idle chatter, but it’s not like I’m just absent-mindedly staring at the line without a plan. I do have an idea.”

Rem: “Don’t you feel embarrassed as a person, lying with such nonchalance?”

Subaru: “At least please show that you’re willing to trust me, even if it’s just a little bit! You’re being too hasty by deciding that I lied in a snap!”

Rem’s impression of him continued to decrease without ever reaching rock-bottom, and Subaru was desperate to restore her trust.

Truthfully, he did not make up lie after lie, since he did have an alternative plan to pass through the inspection process. If it were just Subaru and Rem, it would be impossible to bypass the gate guards’ check-up the proper way.

If so, it did not just have to be Subaru and Rem.

Rem: “That means…”

Subaru: “It’s time to demonstrate Natsuki Subaru’s hundred and eighth special skill — “Relying On Other People”.”

Subaru answered with a smile that showed his gleaming teeth, while holding a thumbs up.

For some reason, behind himself, he felt as if Rem had frowned at his response, even if he should not have been able to see her face.

2

Passing through the inspection, which had been packed with a unique sort of tension, they went through the towering main gate.

Like that, Subaru’s field of vision opened up. As he faced the stone-crafted cityscape that overflowed with exoticness, he thrusted both of his hands into the air out of a sense of accomplishment.

Subaru: “We passed through!”

Louis: “Aauu!”

Listening to Subaru’s zesty voice, Louis raised her hands up as well right beside him.

Subaru had some personal opinions regarding her, acting as if they were companions; but for now, the joy he felt at overcoming the first hurdle to enter the city washed those away.

Although he was immensely vexed about it, there was the truth that Louis’s existence had been useful in passing the inspection.

Subaru: “Speaking of which, this place really is completely different from Lugunica. Although there were tiny differences between the Capital and Priestella as well……”

While taking in the ambiance of the streets, in his mind Subaru compared it to the townscapes in the Kingdom of Lugunica.

To Subaru the most striking were the streets of Costuul near the new Roswaal mansion, but as expected, the variance was great when compared to a different country.

Each had their own idiosyncrasies, the Royal Capital, Costuul, and Pristella too, but they had something of a commonality in atmosphere, something characteristic of the Kingdom. That he could not sense in Guaral.

So to speak, compared to the parallel fantasy world noble-like feel of the Kingdom, the stores and houses in the streets of the Empire seemed more rustic and devoid of color. It gave an impression of valuing utility over showiness.

The entire street was unified in a sense, as they evoked a sense of power and refinement rather than splendor, and it felt like the leveled ground encouraged that impression.

Subaru: “If it were Lugunica this would be stone pavement, but here it’s kinda basic, huh?”

Considering the size of the streets and population, Guaral could be thought of as an above average city in the Empire.

On the whole, it was a pretty good measuring stick, to compare various places in the Empire.

Subaru: “Well, we don’t wanna stay too long, so I better not waste time using measuring sticks either.”

Rem: “—Um, could you let me down before long?”

Subaru: “Ah, my bad.”

Behind Subaru, strong feelings being evoked in him, Rem requested to be let down from her ride on the wooden rack, and Subaru apologized as he slowly got down on his knees on the spot.

She undid the fasten across her shoulders and got out of the carrier, and clutching her cane Rem stood on the ground.

While on the long journey, she had been carried in the wooden rack, but if they were going to walk through a street, she wanted to walk on her own two legs. There was no reason to hurry either, so there was no reason not to grant Rem’s request.

Rem: “This is…”

Using her cane, Rem turned around and finally gazed upon the same view as Subaru and Louis.

Eyebrows raised slightly, Rem’s pale blue eyes held an indistinct sense of wonder and excitement, and seeing Rem’s positive reaction Subaru’s face relaxed a little.

Subaru: “How ‘bout it, you surprised?”

Rem: “That is… Yes, I am. The queue was similar but… It’s because this is my first time seeing people like this, and a proper street too.”

Subaru: “Ah, it is, isn’t it? This is your first time in a normal human town, huh.”

As mentioned above, up until now, Rem's experiences had been limited to exceptional places and treatment.

And as long as she remained without Memories, Rem would possess no recollection of living with anyone either. Life with Subaru, Louis, and the Shudraqians amounted to the entirety of the experience Rem had.

Subaru: "…"

Rem looked deeply moved, smiling with her whole face, and Subaru closed one eye.

For now, he folded up the wooden rack Rem had gotten out of and waited for her excitement to subside.

—It was hard to say Guaral was brimming with life for a city.

The queued checkpoints, and the boorish dark colors of the streets stood out. Altogether, the place's impression was a far cry from gorgeous. The size of the city too, appeared to be in the thousands.

And yet, that did not detract value from the excitement in Rem's eyes it seemed.

Subaru: "So then, shall we look around a bit?"

Rem: "—. No, it's fine. I don't want to take up too much time."

Subaru: "If it's for you, I wouldn't say it's too much…"

Rem shook her head, and Subaru scratched his cheek as he answered.

Really, if it served as a promising sign regarding Rem's inner feelings, sightseeing around town wouldn't be a problem. If a pressing matter arose, he would want her to hold back, but for now the outlook was positive.

After all, it was because of Rem's quick-wittedness that they were so fortunate.

Subaru: “If it weren’t for Rem, I wouldn’t have managed successfully with Flop-san and his sister. It’s okay for you to be a little selfish, y’know.”

Rem: “… What I am saying is that it’s not good to keep them waiting. Even though you’re already relying on their kindness, are you going to incur more debt beyond that?”

Subaru: “Oh… When you put it like that, yeah, sorry…”

Turning away from the buildings, Rem’s sharp gaze pressed down on Subaru’s heart.

Behind Subaru’s group, slowly with the sound of heavy wheels, came an oxcart —a Falo-cart, pulled by a Brave Oxen Falo, came along.

Falos, like ground dragons and the large canine Ligers, were a type of animal used for labor.

Like ground dragons and Ligers, many pulled carts, and many were used for things like transporting cargo. Their pace was slow, and they did not have the Divine Protection of Wind Evasion like ground dragons either, and he’d heard they were generally utilized in cities.

And then—

???: “Hey hey hey, kept you waiting, huh? They took their sweet time checking the cargo. Honestly, those officials’ task is such a pain.”

Speaking with a shrug from the coachman’s seat of the falo-cart was a young man with long bangs.

A character with dazzling golden hair and a fair-skinned complexion, his slender form wrapped in wide sleeved clothing, it was the person who had assisted Subaru’s group with entering the city.

At the appearance of the young man on the falo-cart, Subaru gave a “Glad you made it”, and bowed his head.

Subaru: “I’m sorry, Flop-san. Next time I’ll get them to let you through ahead of us.”

Flop: “Nah, I don’t mind really. Things like cargo inspection are tedious work. So it’s not especially worth coming along to see, I must say.”

In response to Subaru’s words of apology, the youth in the coachman’s seat—Flop gently shook his head.

With his flowy gesture his long bangs swayed like the mane of a lion, and Subaru felt like he could envision a sparkling effect there. He was a quirky guy, but since his responses were relatively forthright, the gap was large.

That sort of mental image before Subaru, he once again smoothed down his own bangs,

Flop: “Yeah, it’s a boring task. In the future, travelers like you should leave that sort of thing to me… Actually, I’m sure my sister can handle it.”

???: “Big bro, big bro, I can hear you though!”

Flop: “Hahaha, it’s not as if you weren’t supposed to hear what I said, dear sister. Don’t underestimate an older brother’s volume.”

Walking alongside the slowly advancing cart, was the woman whom Flop had let overhear his slightly out-of-focus response.

She was a woman of high stature with hair the same color as Flop’s, her features very much resembling his. Her shoulders and legs were exposed by a daring attire, and her voluminous hair was parted into many segments in an avant-garde style.

Even with that kind of peculiar outward appearance, the two barbarian swords attached to opposite sides of her waist were probably what stood out the most.

It was clear these were not weapons for mere show or vain threats, since their condition was that of having been well-used.

This woman was called Medium, and along with her older brother Flop, the two traveled together as the friendly O'Connell siblings.

They had made their acquaintance in the inspection line, and they had helped Subaru's group, for whom providing identification or bribes would have been difficult, pass through inspection. So they were partners that ought to be called benefactors.

Of course, it wasn't just out of kindness that they had cooperated with Subaru's party. To begin with, it had been Subaru who had laid his eyes on the O'Connells with the objective of passing the inspection.

As they were without money or connections, cooperating with another party was a requirement to get through the checkpoint.

So when Subaru saw them, he thought there might be room for negotiations.

The reason he thought so was—

Medium: "Wowie, Big bro! So, you saw through everything I was thinking!"

Flop: "Of course, naturally. You can't win in business if you can't predict someone's thoughts. Our O'Connell company is viable because of my brains and your brawn, y'know!"

Medium: "That's my bro! Though I don't really get what you're saying!"

Flop: "Hahahaha, it's great that you seem to be enjoying life dear sister!"

Both their chests puffed up with pride, the O'Connell siblings laughed together uproariously. Their trade was peddling.

To be precise, Flop was responsible for the business of peddling, and Medium was the one in charge of guarding her brother and their goods while on the road and inside towns.

—Merchants.

Well, actually, for Subaru to pass the inspection, that was the selection criteria for companions to depend on.

Subaru: “The experience of talking about this and that with Otto and Anastasia-san came in handy…”

His close friend Otto, and Anastasia, with whom he had embarked on a long journey. —The latter was not really the person herself, but Echidna who had been acting as her, although the knowledge she showed ought to be the same as the person in question.

He had mainly received instruction from those two, and that was the seed of Subaru’s faith in merchants.

Even across national borders, if someone were a merchant, they would be willing to listen to a partner who presented benefits.

Literally ready to take a chance on a strong offensive gambit, after they’d struck out on four groups of merchants, Subaru’s party encountered the O’Connell siblings.

And then, they won over that somewhat quirky pair, and successfully earned their cooperation in crossing the checkpoint.

As the leverage for negotiation, the item that captured their interest was—

Subaru: “By the way, is this wooden rack really enough as compensation? Though I did put effort into making it, the crudeness of its craftsmanship still makes it very obvious that it’s handmade?”

Flop: “I can’t deny that it’s very minimalistic. However, the fact it can be assembled from parts, as well as the way it’s designed and made for carrying were what piqued my interest. It’d be useful even for transporting heavy baggage, no?”

Subaru: “…Well, as long as Flop-san’s fine with that.”

Feeling somewhat unassured, Subaru handed the folded wooden rack over to Medium.

After receiving it, Medium let out a “Woah~” as she checked it out, then turned around and shoved it inside the cargo bed of the falo-cart. It seemed like she had not seen much value in the rack.

In truth, even Subaru himself didn't know what exactly Flop had seen in it.

The handover of the wooden rack made by Subaru had been the condition for the O'Connell siblings' assistance.

After seeing Rem being carried by use of the wooden rack, Flop had felt it was a unique and fascinating creation, and promised to help break through the inspection with the object in exchange.

Honestly, as far as Subaru was concerned, who had been prepared for something like a witchbeast's horn to be brought up to the negotiation table, he could say this had been a rather unexpected proposal.

Subaru: "I was thinking about remaking it with better materials after arriving in town anyways, worst case scenario, it was possible that Rem wouldn't want to ride on it anymore."

Rem: "It's true that I want to walk with my own feet whenever possible. Because if I ride on the wooden rack, your stench will come drifting along with the wind."

Subaru: "Sorry…"

While leaning on the cane, Rem dished out a jab on the matter of the witch's scent in a low voice.

Nonetheless, enduring this whole time during their travels and only saying so after reaching their destination was considerate of her, or so Subaru told himself.

Watching this back-and-forth between Subaru and Rem, Flop shrugged his shoulders as if saying "This won't do". Although he displayed a completely rueful reaction, there was a reason behind that attitude.

Flop: "Try to get along better, you guys. To be husband and wife means to be each other's support. The way you relied on each other earlier was absolutely beautiful."

Medium: "Well, the one who took away their wooden rack was big bro though."

Flop: "Exactly! What right do I have for saying that, silly me!"

One held his palm against his forehead, and the other holding her stomach, Flop and Medium burst out in laughter.

Affected by the sibling's guffaws, Subaru's tensed face eased while taking a quick peek at Rem. Without a hint of laughter on her face, was Rem, to whom Louis was holding on to with one arm.

Directed at the girl's profile, Subaru voiced a "Umm~" timidly.

Subaru: "You know, erm, Rem-san? Are you perhaps upset right now?"

Rem: "Huh? Why would I be upset? Do you have a clue as to why or something?"

Subaru: "Oh no, I was just wondering if it was against your wishes to play husband and wife with me, even if it's just made up for the sake of our disguise…"

While poking his index fingers against each other, Subaru tries to tend to Rem's mood in trepidation.

From Flop and Medium's perspectives, the relationship between Subaru and Rem was that of husband and wife.

That had been the result of Subaru's sudden speechlessness at the abrupt demand for an answer regarding their relationship the siblings had put out, while having a discussion for passing the inspection. —No, it was not because of speechlessness.

They did have an answer prepared beforehand, however the credibility of that answer was doubted, so there was nothing that could be done about it.

Subaru: "To think that the story of traveling siblings was not believable enough…”

Rem: “Flop-san and Medium-san are not only under the same situation, but the two of them are also very similar in terms of appearance, that’s why. It’s an impossible feat to pull off for me, you, and this child.”

On the matter of deceiving them, as merchants living in a world filled with deception and honesty, there was no other choice but to say that Subaru was simply too inexperienced to succeed.

In the first place, the one who had seen through their lie had been Medium, who had blurted out “they look nothing alike, right big bro?” in a loud voice.

Anyhow, after being defeated by those keen eyes, the spectacular story (derived from the brother-sister setting Subaru had prepared beforehand) of how they had traveled far from their hometown with the goal of throwing away a cursed ring in a far-off mountain had been rendered useless.”

The shock received from that was another reason as to why Subaru had entered a state of stupefaction when the time came to supposedly answer their question. The one that had saved him from that predicament had been Rem, who made use of her quick-wittedness and explained, “I’m his wife”.

Subaru: “So the story is that Rem and I are husband and wife, and this kid is the child of Rem’s elder sister, who left her in our care…”

Rem: “Wasn’t it you who told me I had an older sister? Although, since we’re supposed to be twins, I don’t think she’ll have such a grown kid… but I’ll turn a blind eye to that.”

Louis: “Hmm~?”

Having been stroked on the head by Rem, Louis let out a tiny groan with a content look.

Louis’s harmless presence and mannerism had been one of the reasons why Flop and Medium had not become cautious around Subaru’s group, apparently.

Leaving aside Subaru and his nasty-looking eyes, there was the debilitated Rem and the vulnerable Louis. This trio did not seem like bad people who would commit crimes in the city to Flop and Medium.

Rem: “Why…”

Subaru: “Hm?”

Rem: “Why did you fumble your words in that situation? It’s not like you’re incapable considering how you normally chatter on and on.”

Subaru: “That feels like a complaint disguised as praise…”

Nevertheless, it was true that Subaru’s incompetence had almost caused trouble for Rem.

If it weren’t for Rem’s quick response, the three of them would most likely still be stuck outside the gate, gawking at the line helplessly.

Subaru: “…”

There was a limit to how far he could get by just fooling around.

Subaru, wanting to avoid damaging his trust with Rem any further, let out a faint “Ah,” when Rem casted her eyes towards him.

Subaru: “I was surprised myself but, the moment they saw through the lie, my body tensed up like crazy. Maybe it was because I was traumatized by the campground from before.”

Rem: “Ah…”

Subaru: “I thought that if we gave a sloppy answer, Flop and Medium might’ve changed their attitude or something. I’m ashamed to say but, that was why my train of thought suddenly stopped. My bad.”

After conveying the self-analysis of his incompetent self, Subaru lowered his head towards Rem sincerely.

A brain full of smart little tricks coupled with an articulate tongue, that was one of the few weapons Natsuki Subaru possessed. That was why, once both of those stopped working, Subaru would be reduced to nothing but a mere nuisance.

He was responsible for Rem's well-being. —Careless failures cannot be afforded.

Rem: "—. I understand now. I guess it is what it is."

Subaru: "…Really? Even though I messed up like that?"

Rem: "Anyone would freeze up after having experienced something unpleasant. That's what I think, at least."

Subaru, who had thought he was totally going to be yelled at mercilessly, was surprised by Rem's response.

Of course, it was because Rem's very core was kind, so he was already aware that she would spare her consideration for other people. The fact that Subaru was among those who she directed her consideration towards, however, was a surprise.

Subaru: "…So you're not mad?"

Rem: "I'm not angry. But, just discuss with me beforehand next time. Because I don't think I'll be able to spin up believable excuses every time."

Subaru: "Ohh, okay, understood. You sure you aren't mad though, right?"

Rem: "I'm not mad."

Subaru: "For sure for sure?"

Rem: "Haven't I been saying I wasn't mad…!"

Out of excess worry, Subaru had fueled Rem's anger instead.

Hugging his head from Rem's sharp gaze, Subaru cowered and begged for forgiveness in the end.

With that interlude, Subaru's group finally entered the stage called Guaral.

3

Subaru: "—I can finally relax!"

Said Subaru who threw himself onto the bed at the inn, stretching his arms and legs, enjoying the freedom.

The bed and sheets which possessed decent quality, and the ambiance of the room let off a decent sense of cleanliness; both these aspects indicated the quality of the inn was above average.

Given their situation, although it was not like they should indulge in too much luxury, this was a necessary expense to ensure safety.

Otto: "If we are to stay somewhere, I believe it is best that we eliminate the options of cheap inns and camping. Leaving people who have the power to protect themselves aside such as Emilia-sama and Garfiel, people like me or Natsuki-san would be easy pickings for those harboring ill intents."

Such was one of the topics brought up in conversations over alcohol, which used to take place in Otto's room.

Thinking hard about it, being that cautious was necessary, but in the case that the traveling budget wasn't very high, safety would be something that would slip out of mind easily.

However, considering the situation that Subaru and the rest were in at the moment, it was a needed expense.

Although, speaking of which—

Subaru: "We sure spent a considerable time fighting over who gets which room…"

While saying so, Subaru rolled over on his bed, and began staring at the wall.

Beyond that wall, in the adjacent room were Rem and Louis. —

They had decided to rent an inn in Guaral and divided the rooms based on gender, but Subaru felt disappointed with the results.

Albeit a while had passed, Subaru had yet to fully shed his suspicions of her. He was still opposed to them being together outside of his personal supervision.

That said, Rem had refused his proposal for all of them to share one room. Thus at present, he had no choice but to settle in with the current state of affairs but—

???: “My oh my, mister, feeling quite sullen today aren’t we. Wonderful, simply wonderful!”

So spoke Flop as he entered the room quite belayed.

Inside, he tossed his luggage onto the bed Subaru was not mulling on, then winked at him as he caressed his own long bangs.

While Flop was indeed being Flop, he did have an actual reason to be present.

This room had been rented with the intention that Subaru and Flop occupy it, and Flop’s sister, Medium, would occupy the other room with Rem.

Subaru: “Ahhh, I’m sorry. For leaving everything to you…”

Flop: “It’s all fine and dandy. You protected yourself with wit. The saying that “Citizens of the Sacred Empire must be the strongest” does not refer exclusively to the art of war.”

Subaru: “…That makes me feel a bit better, thank you.”

Sitting cross-legged on the bed, Subaru smiled at him bitterly.

Even after overcoming the checkpoint at the gates, the siblings Flop and Medium had continued to help Subaru and his friends in various other ways.

They had helped in finding an inn where they could procure safety as well, but the biggest help Subaru had received regarded the Witchbeast's horn.

Subaru: "Who knows how we'd have been taken advantage of if we were on our own."

The horn of the Witchbeast that Louis had carried was already no longer in their possession.

This was because, following Kuna's, along with many others' advice, they had liquidated the horn into currency. For some reason, Flop had come along and helped in the selling price negotiations for it.

All they could do was witness the unfolding of a fierce battle between Flop and the shop owner, like people watching a court trial in progress while being ignorant of the law.

Regardless, they had managed to convert the Witchbeast's horn into Imperial Gold Coins.

That adequately heavy bag of coins would provide funds for Subaru's 'campaign' in the Empire. It would have to cover their future traveling expenses, so they had to be careful about it.

Subaru: "I can't afford to get swallowed whole again like before after all."

Flop: "Hahaha! The first move should always be an attempt to be imposing. Straighten your back and stand tall, and you'll see your opposition won't come to make their move so easily. Your baseless confidence may just become the only truth in the meantime. Doesn't profit only exist beyond that!"

Subaru: "Yeah, when you put it like that, it definitely sounds really convincing…"

For better or worse, Flop was full of confidence.

Subaru could imagine circumstances where his unreserved way of speaking would bring about unnecessary arguments, but seeing as he had made his way in the world to date, his way of life was evidently correct.

In fact, Subaru had been saved by those very mannerisms of his, so he was quite honestly impressed.

Flop: “That said, it was quite the long trip with the missus, correct? Would you prefer to continue that conversation of ours tomorrow?”

Subaru: “It… It’s a pretty tempting suggestion, but I’m good. We need to get to our destination as soon as possible. We can’t afford to waste even a single day.”

Tempted as he were by the softness of the bed, Subaru managed to tear himself away from it.

As Subaru got off the bed, Flop exclaimed “Truly fantastic”, with his hands thrown out,

Flop: “There are times when dragging along one’s feet for the sake of one’s loved ones, even if they are heavy as iron, is truly a necessity. For me, that’s my sister. For you, mister, it’s the missus.”

Subaru: “Don’t put it like that, it makes me feel awkward…! So, may I ask you to show us the way?”

Flop: “By all means. I was the one who proposed the idea in the first place!”

He smacked his fist on his chest as he willingly accepted.

Having received his answer, Subaru pulled his will to lie down back into him with renewed vigor, and headed off to the next room with Flop in tow.

He knocked on the door and called out to Rem.

Subaru: “Is everything good on your end, Rem?”

Rem: “Yes, everything’s fine. Medium-san and I were just having a discussion on whose bed Louis-san should sleep…”

Subaru: “…I see.”

Rem: “You thought that we should put her to sleep on the floor just now, didn't you?"

Subaru: "I didn't say anything because you'd get mad at me…"

Considering how dangerous Louis was, he could not suggest letting her sleep on the same bed as Medium.

If he were allowed to speak his mind, Subaru would've opted to stay up all night to keep an eye on her, but given his current physical condition, he'd end up falling asleep within the first few hours after starting.

He had no choice but to put faith in her, seeing as she had done nothing worth being on guard for in the last ten days.

—Trusting an Archbishop would be just a stupid idea all around, though.

Subaru: "Remember that talk we had earlier? Yeah, I'm heading out for a bit with Flop-san. I'll buy dinner on the way back, so let's eat together."

Rem: "I understand… Well, now that I think about it, there are lots of people around here now, so I don't really have to rely on just you anymore."

Subaru: "Why, of all times, did you have to say something like that now?! That just makes it harder for me to go out!"

Rem: "…Why indeed. I just said whatever came to mind."

Even though Rem had just filled him with incredible reluctance, Subaru strived to prioritize his original goal.

He waved his hand to Medium, who was playing around with Louis, letting her pull on her hair,

Subaru: "Medium-san, please look after these two for me. If she bothers you too much, just hit her with everything you got."

Medium: "Reallyyy~? My punches hurt lots and lots, y'know?"

Subaru: “Exactly. Sometimes pain’s a great teacher.”

That said, Rem would definitely step in should something go wrong.

Vexing as it were, Louis was helping Rem gain mental stability. He was thankful for that. Were she present with no purpose, he would surely be unable to find even a shred of justification to carry her around with them.

Flop: “What a tumultuous journey it must have been, mister.”

Once he had left Rem and Louis behind at the inn and stepped out onto the streets, Flop tapped his shoulder.

Being offered consolation like that had given rise to an urge to begin spewing complaints inside Subaru, but even if he had given in to it, it would only put Flop in a difficult position.

Especially with how he was indebted to him and Medium.

He wished to not pile anything else on top of them.

Subaru: “Relying on others might be one of my hundred and eight special moves, but even that has a limit.”

Flop: “Certainly, so long as you do not put your full weight on them, relying on others is not at all a bad thing. My sister and I are traveling together, so we make up for each other’s shortcomings. Otherwise, both of us would surely have perished long before. That too is the Imperial Way.”

Subaru: “The Imperial Way…”

As Flop waved around his hands, patting his own bangs once more, Subaru thought about the words he spoke of. The Imperial Way. They lay heavy on his chest.

Perhaps, that was the source of Subaru’s intangible fear—The difference in values of life.

In that sense, Flop’s trains of thought were easy to digest as they hit closer to home. His manner of being was definitely different from what Subaru had experienced so far in the Empire of Vollachia, however.

Flop: “Not everyone can adopt a martial way of life. What is important is to come to terms with oneself within our own outlines of life.”

Subaru: “Come to terms with oneself, huh.”

Flop: “As I said a moment ago, if we were to look at Medium and myself as individuals on their own, our numerous weaknesses would be quite apparent. However, should we come together, we can cover up each other’s flaws, and they become quite trifling. In fact, one could say my sister and I have made it alive to the present day because of this, and that’d indeed be the whole truth.”

Subaru: “…”

Flop: “Always keep this in mind, mister. We, my sister and I, you and your missus, we have all won all of life’s challenges so far only because we went at them head on. —Do I seem like a man of the Empire more now?”

His cheeks loosened, Flop waited for praise.

Subaru stared hard at him, when he was hit with an epiphany. To make up for one’s lackings with the help of others; that was no different from his own values.

He had thought there would be none in the Empire with whom his ideals would be shared.

Subaru: “Not everything’s that hopeless, huh.”

Flop: “That said, when most of the Empire’s residents speak of the Imperial Way, they do indeed refer to brute strength! My ideals are laughed at. The flapping of a chicken’s wings, they call it! My way of thinking is by no means common.”

As Subaru came to his own conclusions, Flop once more reminded him to not be too trusting.

However,

Flop: “That’s precisely why, putting a price on that skill also holds true. Like how I’m referring you to someone.”

Subaru: “Yup, thanks a bunch.”

Nodding, Subaru reaffirmed his gratitude for Flop’s referral.

On top of Flop’s help on getting past the security check and finding them an inn, he was thankful to Flop for the reason of this outing—A meeting with a referral that could help smooth out Subaru’s group’s journey by securing them a mode of transport and an escort.

Just like how Kuna and Holly had escorted them on their way to Guaral, they required a skilled bodyguard to protect them from the dangers of the road. Otherwise, the journey would be difficult.

There was a limit to how much Subaru could travel by foot while carrying Rem on his back. Ideally, he’d opt to acquire an Earth Dragon, but if that proved to be a difficult task, a Brave Ox or Large Canine would do. In any case, a riding beast was necessary for transport.

And for both of those, they had to get by with their limited funds.

Subaru: “That’s why, we’ve been seriously saved because Flop has someone in mind.”

Flop: “You say someone in mind, but I just know about the bar where someone with that occupation regularly visits. Now, if you’re talking about riding beasts, then we’ve got something to talk about. —That’s right, like a Falo Cart!”

Subaru: “You’re really pushing Falos, aren’t you?”

Flop: “I’m not kidding when I say I grew up on Falo milk, ‘cause I’m a Falo fan.”

Laughing loudly, Flop strongly recommended Falos in a passionate tone.

Subaru did not know about the circumstances of travel for those who had large amounts of cargo, but at least for Subaru's group, who wanted to travel long distances, Falos were not a good match for them. Their speed was rather slow, and so, Falos would be their last resort.

Flop: "Anyhow, you should take any little precaution you can when on the road… Just between us, things at the Imperial Capital seem to be pretty rowdy at the moment. It's not guaranteed that those sparks won't spread."

Subaru: "—The Imperial Capital is rowdy."

Subaru's eyebrows twitched. However, Flop did not seem to notice his reaction and crossed his arms, replying with "That's right".

Flop: "The Empire's known to constantly have spots of smoldering embers somewhere all year round, but the possibility of an ember sparking and spreading is being feared right now. I didn't want to worry your wife, so I'm telling this only to you."

Subaru: "Thank you for the consideration… By the way, is that related to the Emperor or something in any way?"

Flop: "To the Emperor, Vincent Vollachia?"

Flop widened his eyes in surprise, as if he had heard something that one would never dream of. He then immediately shook his head saying "Nonono,"

Flop: "Something happening to his Excellency is unheard of. Besides, the Emperor has superbly managed to settle the country's affairs so far."

Subaru: "But you said those embers are still smoldering, didn't you?"

Flop: "The reason they stay as embers is due to the Emperor's prowess. The current Emperor rose to the throne about seven or eight years ago. Before then, the Empire was in a much more chaotic state."

Subaru: "…"

Flop: "The Emperor himself is taking control of the situation regarding these current quarrels. I'm sure our homeland will return to its smoldering state very soon."

Subaru: "Eh?"

Their homeland smoldering with embers, boasted Flop.

However, something Flop had asserted caught Subaru's ears. —How he said, that the Emperor himself was taking direct control of the situation.

Subaru: "The Emperor is trying to do something about the Imperial Capital's troubles?"

Flop: "His own turf… Well, I guess if something happens very close to home, even the Emperor'd start taking action. Anyone who takes advantage of the situation will be spared no quarter, that kind of statement was issued."

Subaru: "A statement from the Emperor…"

There did not seem to be any indication of a lie from Flop's matter-of-fact explanation.

In any case, Flop would have absolutely no reason to try and deceive Subaru on the troubles going on inside the Imperial Capital. So at the very least, he spoke what was the truth for him.

Nevertheless, that was why Subaru's ears had gotten hung up on it.

Subaru: "If Abel really is the Emperor, then he was the one that gave out that statement…?"

—No, it was strange considering the timing.

Of course, giving out an official statement did not necessitate the Emperor themself to be present. A minister could have easily ghost written it, and deflect blame by saying "The secretary did it." First and foremost, if he were to believe Abel's words, the people remaining at the Emperor's Palace were none other than the people who chased him out.

They would stomp on their respect towards the Emperor and would use his name and anything else for their under-handed tactics.

Except—

Subaru: "Abel could just be a crazy dude. I'll keep that in mind, just in case."

To see and believe something as presented was a sure-fire way to a quick death on the stormy oceans.

Even if this place were the ocean, that did not mean it would always be stormy. Subaru just wanted to assert his conviction that he needed at least this kind of mindset to face the Empire.

Most of all, as a person who had confronted and talked to Abel himself, there was a part of him that thought that his intensity was not something a self-proclaimed Emperor could give out but —

Flop: "—Mister, it's no good to have a scowl on your face."

Flop spoke as he circled in front of Subaru, mulling over his expression.

Pointing to his own forehead, Flop directed words at Subaru, who unconsciously stopped moving,

Flop: "Good fortune won't come to anyone who doesn't have the time to smile. You're going to try and find companions for your journey now, aren't you? Then, you need to find someone good."

Subaru: "That's…"

Flop: "If that's the case, then erase those wrinkles on your brow and warm those cheeks up. That's what we call the merits of a successful man."

Flop rubbed his fingers in between his eyebrows and then proceeded to warm his face up with his hands.

Seeing Flop's act, Subaru caught his breath. Next, he slowly loosened his brow and cheeks with his fingers as he was told.

Subaru: "Yeah, I forgot. The look on my face is already nasty so I should at least carry with me a light and gentle atmosphere, shouldn't I?"

Flop: "Sorry! My ability can't do anything about your looks!"

Subaru: "You don't have to take it that seriously! It's something I got from my parents so I actually don't mind it as much as I say it!"

Flop's lament was overdramatic, and so he responded in an overdramatic fashion as well. Maybe that was part of Flop's concern for him and he was just trying to relax Subaru's stiff nervousness.

Exchanging quips like that, Subaru and Flop approached the street to their destination.

What Flop pointed toward, was a hideout-like bar at the end of the alleyway.

Flop: "Were it a lot of people, you'd normally hire a bunch of guards, but since mister, the missus and the niece-y only amount to three people, it's not like you can say you're a large family. After all, me and my sister can't follow you out of Guaral!"

Subaru: "But, I got the feeling Medium-san'd stick with us if we played our cards right…"

Flop: "If my sister's taken away, I can't cover for my weaknesses, so I guess I'll die!"

If one were to weigh trustworthiness and security on a scale, Flop and Medium were genuinely not a bad option. However, Subaru could not burden them more than he already had.

Subaru: "Hang on, worst-case scenario, we escape the country to Lugunica with the two of them in tow. And then, we could grant them the successful merchant life that Otto couldn't achieve. That's also a possibility…"

Flop: “Heyyy, mister? Are you alright?”

Flop waved his hand in front of the deep-in-thought Subaru, checking on his well-being.

Subaru scratched his head, replying to Flop with a “My bad”. It was just a thought, but he felt that it was not a bad proposal.

He felt bad that Flop had gone out of his way to show him the way here but—

Subaru: “Hey, Flop-san? Medium-san and you, there’s a favor I—”

It was at the moment he tried to say want to ask of you two.

???: “…”

—Somewhere, something faintly hard-sounding reverberated.

4

Flop: “—Mister, it’s no good to have a scowl on your face.”

Subaru: “…Huh?”

Abruptly, his field of view shifted in a blink and Subaru’s mind went blank.

In front of Subaru, Flop was pointing at his own forehead. He was loosening the space in between his eyebrows by rubbing it with his fingers, and as if he were lecturing the frozen Subaru.

@floating here

Flop: “Good fortune won’t come to anyone who doesn’t have the time to smile. You’re going to try and find companions for your journey now, aren’t you? Then, you need to find someone good.”

Subaru: “…”

Flop: “If that’s the case, then erase those wrinkles on your brow and warm those cheeks up. That’s what we call the merits of a successful man.”

Continuing on, Flop started warming his cheeks up with his hands.

That action was something Subaru recognized as one he had seen before. Of course he recognized it. Because, it had occurred a sparse few minutes ago.

It was an exchange that had happened a mere few minutes ago, and the same conversation was repeating.

Subaru: “Oi, hang on, wait a second…”

Subaru was suddenly assaulted by cold sweat and covered his face with his hands.

Seeing that, Flop loudly exclaimed “Don’t hide it, relax it!”. However, Subaru’s ability to reply to his words had vanished.

Looking around, he recognized the surrounding street too.

This was his first foray into this town’s streets, and he was not well-acquainted with Guaral. Yet, his memory was not as faulty as to forget the scenery he had just witnessed.

Meaning—

Subaru: “—Did I Return by Death?”

In an inconspicuous situation, in which he did not know what exactly had happened to him, Subaru hardened his cheeks for a completely different reason from before, with that mutter escaping his lips.

Chapter 17:
Looming Evil

1

Subaru: "…"

Reflecting upon the unbelievable truth, Subaru could feel his entire body awash with cold sweat.

As far as Subaru knew, this was one of the most terrifying situations he could be in.

A scenery he remembered, a conversation he had already heard before. This was not something like déjà vu.

This was not an event that he thought had happened before, it was an event he was actually reliving. The reason for that was only one—he had Returned by Death.

Subaru: "But, why…?"

There was absolutely zero warning.

Particularly for Subaru, it felt like the world had switched out in a blink of an eye.

It felt so unreal to the point that it was enough to question whether the Authority he carried had misactivated. And that for some reason, the "Death" part of Return by Death had been dropped and only the "Return" part had activated.

Subaru: "Am I an idiot? No, I am an idiot."

Subaru disciplined himself as he attempted to look at this situation optimistically.

It was a stupid statement, but he had to trust Return by Death. The power to reverse time that Subaru held had never once been activated without death as a trigger.

By losing his life, Subaru would go back in time. That was a certainty.

Subaru: "—OK, I'll accept it. I've accepted it. Now, me, what do I do."

Pushing his fist into his forehead, Subaru told his panicked self to be calm.

Now that he accepted that he had Returned by Death, the next point to focus on was his cause of death. He thought back to the events that had occurred only a few dozen seconds ago.

Subaru: "…I can't think of anything."

However, even when reflecting back on the time he had met his demise, he could not recall anything.

He searched for the tiniest of clues in his memory, but turned up empty-handed.

The bar which was their destination; a talking Flop; the hustle and bustle of the main road getting quieter; the slight, unique smell of the shade in the alleyway; a faint, hard sound—that was all he could scrounge up.

None of them were linked to the reason as to why Subaru's life was in danger.

Subaru: "Fuck, why am I always like this…!"

If Subaru had been watchful regarding changes in his surroundings, he would not be exposed to this misery. He detested and cursed his own carelessness.

However, the logical part of him understood that that was an impossible demand and it turned an unamused eye towards himself.

He was not a security camera. It was impossible to stay alert of his surroundings twenty-four-seven. He was not a genius that could take in the small changes in his environment and be able to form a plan to deal with them immediately.

Natsuki Subaru was undoubtedly an ordinary person.

That was the unchanging assessment he had given himself, even after experiencing his memories vicariously from the eyes of an outsider and seeing himself in a new light.

That was why he could not stop thinking and moving forward.

Subaru: "—The situation is similar to when Shaula first killed me."

Along the path to Pleiades Watchtower, Subaru's group, who was challenging the sand wind at the Augria Sand Dunes, had been annihilated by Shaula, who was guarding the area from the Watchtower to the sand sea.

The sand sea's rite of passage had begun with a white light that could not be reacted to. It was that first strike which blew Subaru away and started the infernal fight afterwards.

What had occurred, what was the cause of death. The situation where it was uncertain if he had died or not could be said to be a mercy bestowed by his first death at the sand sea.

However, unlike then, he was currently in the middle of a town.

The environment was fundamentally different from the sand sea where he had the conviction to face the various dangers to his life.

Subaru: "What's going to take my life in this situation…?"

A death with no forewarning. The only thing he could think of that fit the bill was still Shaula's snipe, as it left a strong impression.

That was why he may have been shot this time too. Subaru had died inside the alleyway—although they were not tall, the surrounding buildings sandwiched them and created a space with poor visibility.

If one were to shoot here, they could only do it from the front or back, but this was not the most ideal place for shooting, was what he thought. Of course, since Subaru did not know how accurate his memory was, the possibility that this position actually allowed an ideal line of sight was—

Flop: "—Mister? Why is your brow more wrinkled than before?"

Subaru: "Ah…"

Flop: "Weren't you listening to my advice? Your fortune will run away if you don't erase those wrinkles! To chase something that's run away is an arduous task! Cause I'm usually on an ox cart!"

Hitting his hand on his chest, Flop exaggeratedly gestured in front of Subaru.

Sensing that this overaction of his had the purpose of cheering up Subaru's grimacing face, Subaru could not help but freeze up at his actions.

To find his cause of death, he would have to investigate the suspect that was travelling with him at the time too.

In the case that Subaru's cause of death was not by shooting, the most likely culprit was Flop—the person who was travelling with him, and the person that was nearest to him.

However, at Subaru's time of death, Flop had been within his field of vision and there was no sign that Flop had taken action to attack him.

Needless to say, Subaru knew that in this world, there was a plethora of attacks that could reap his life in a single strike without him noticing at all. Nevertheless, Flop did not seem like someone who could do that.

First of all—

Subaru: "Does Flop-san have a reason to kill me?"

The most likely possibility was that he had faked goodwill and was trying to mug Subaru. However, Subaru thought that doing so, purposefully, in the middle of a town, was a poor decision.

They had met the O'Connell siblings for the first time at the queue outside the gate.

If they wanted to do their deed without detection, all they had to do was to deceive and invite them somewhere outside the gate. All could be done before entering Guaral, a place with guards. Even if their objective was the money they could get by selling the Witchbeast's horn, in the end, the reason Subaru had not been cheated out when selling it was none other than Flop's help. —There was no reason to trap Subaru.

All they needed was to trick Subaru outside and steal the horn, and sell it once they got inside the city.

There was no logical explanation for their motive.

Quite a lot of people had killed Subaru until now, but they all possessed a rational explanation for doing so. Excluding Witchbeasts where communication was non-existent, that was a solid rule.

That was why—

Subaru: "Flop-san? Why are you so nice to us?"

Flop: "Hm? That's a sudden question."

Subaru: "Yeah, sorry about that. Just, I got a bit worried."

Flop raised his nicely-shaped eyebrows in surprise at Subaru's abrupt question.

Faking a chuckle at this reaction, Subaru held his breath, waiting for Flop's response. —Logically, he did not doubt Flop. All that was left was whether he could believe him or not.

Flop, who acted cordially and had performed various deeds to help them out.

Subaru sought peace of mind, to believe that Flop and his sister Medium were not two-faced and that they could be trusted.

Flop: "—Hmm"

Subaru did not know if his eyes betrayed his true feelings, but Flop narrowed his handsome eyes as if he could see those emotions.

The expression he told Subaru to adopt before, a look overflowing with confidence and carefreeness yet devoid of any grounds for that, disappeared from his face, and was instead replaced with the face of an intellectual gentleman.

And then he shook his head at the frozen Subaru,

Flop: “It’s not a complex thing. It’s simple. What my sister and I are doing by being good to Mister and Missus and Niece-y is…”

Subaru: “Is?”

Flop: “—Is revenge!”

Subaru: “…Eh?”

Raising his hands, Flop proclaimed that out loud.

The strong and merry tone used, and the disturbing contents of the proclamation clashed with each other so much that, for one moment, Subaru could not take it in. Shocked, his eyes went wide.

In front of the stiff Subaru, Flop brushed his fringe, and said “Listen, okay?”,

Flop: “Long ago, my sister and I were living on the edge of life and death! Thrown away by our parents, we grew up in a home that adopts orphans… That place was pretty terrible!”

Subaru: “A home for orphans…”

At the back of Subaru’s mind, an image of a home vaguely resembling an orphanage came up.

However, it was not difficult to imagine that the facilities and equipment of this world’s orphanages were much different than the modern buildings Subaru was thinking of.

That terrible environment was probably something far worse than he could imagine.

While revealing to Subaru the kind of environment he had grown up in, Flop gestured.

Flop: “Every night, huddling with the other kids in the same boat as us, I decided in my heart to escape from that situation. And then, my sister and I got the chance, and were able to escape from there. For the first time ever, living through a night without being beat up, I vowed. —revenge, that is.”

Subaru: “Revenge as in… against the people at the home for orphans?”

Flop: “No, not them. —At the world.”

Having the same expression as before when proclaiming revenge, Flop hardened his fists.

Towards the intimidated Subaru, Flop put his passionate face upfront and,

Flop: “My sister and I grew up being beaten by the adults at that place. But, were the adults that punched us happy while they were punching me? No, they weren’t. They were unhappy too. Unhappy adults were beating unhappy children. Is this kind of hopeless situation even real?”

Subaru: “…”

Flop: “Even adults who choose violence are unhappy. So I became a merchant to lift me and my sister out of misfortune. And as much as I could, we would bring others out of unhappiness as well. Just like how on that night, those people brought us out of it.”

Subaru: “That’s your revenge against the world?”

Flop: “That’s right. Me and my sister are resisting against the world which pushes misfortune onto us for revenge. Helping you and your Missus is also a part of that.”

After declaring that, Flop scratched his nose in slight embarrassment.

Receiving the fire in his words and actions, Subaru lost the ability to speak. The heat from that fire slowly seeped into his brain, and there, he came to a snap decision.

Subaru: “Thank you, Flop-san. I’m glad I met you siblings, Flop-san and Medium-san, at the queue.”

Whether he could believe them or not, he wished for a response that would point to the answer to that question.

And, the response he had received was far more than he expected. And so it was decided.

Subaru would not doubt Flop O’Connell’s goodwill.

He decided he would trust it to the end, his noble, vengeful heart which had decided to resist against the unfairness of the world.

Meaning, all that was left was to—

Subaru: “Flop-san, this street isn’t really giving off a good Keh in the Feng Shui way. So is it alright if we could use a different path?”

Flop: “Keh? What is Keh? Actually, is that the reason for the wrinkles in your brow and your eyes?”

Subaru: “It’s more like a fortune-telling item for good omens. It’s got nothing to do with my eyes! I think! But yeah, this street’s no good. I don’t mind if we go the long way, so please?”

Depending on Flop’s goodwill, Subaru forcefully advanced the conversation.

Deciding that Flop was not the culprit, the next thing to do was to avoid the incoming death. Whether it was a ranged snipe or not, it was no mistake that this was an attack.

If he were able to avoid the attack’s condition for occurrence, that would result in him being able to avoid this death.

To do that, first, it was crucial that he did not follow the same actions as he did before.

Changing paths, delaying the timings, he would avoid the disaster that would occur to him before it happened.

If he could do that, he should be able to dodge the unwanted death.

Subaru: “Well to begin with, I’ve never wanted to die in the firs… Well, only once or twice.”

And in addition to that, it was an unavoidable option due to the imminent state of affairs.

When cornered in a situation where the only way to save someone was to die, in those times Subaru had chosen death. Yes, Subaru also desired revenge on the world.

Flop: “I don’t know about that Keh thing but I like your earnest expression. It’ll be a bit of a detour, but why don’t we take a different path?”

Subaru: “That’d be a great help! Let’s go to a main street with as many people as possible.”

Flop: “Gotcha.”

Fortunately, Flop listened to Subaru’s unnatural suggestion without opposition.

Following his lead, the plan for which way to go to the bar was changed. They turned back from the path they would have continued on and took a route to the tavern that would go through the main street, with minimal alleys.

Ultimately, if they passed through the line of fire before the tavern, it was possible that it still would not change the fact someone was after Subaru. However, if he knew the attack were to happen in the alleys in front of the tavern, there would be many ways to deal with it.

In the worst case, there was also the possibility his opponent might withdraw upon witnessing Subaru's vigilant look—.

Flop: "Well then Mister, this way—"

Passing by Subaru's side, Flop began leading him down a different road.

It was in that instant. —By accident Flop looked over Subaru's shoulder, and his eyes widened as if he had just noticed something.

Subaru: "—Oh"

What, he attempted to ascertain from Flop's response, but that was not realized.

The reason being that, instead of a question coming from Subaru's mouth, his mouth had opened fully to spit out the blood it was teeming with.

Subaru: "Ah, uh?!"

It was a feat of a single moment.

Subaru felt something seize the back of his head, forcing him to look up. Then, a hot sensation passed over his bare throat, and blood burst forth.

Drowning in the overflowing blood and pain, Subaru understood his throat had been cut open.

Subaru: "Guh…Uh"

Both hands pressed to the wound on his neck, amidst the intense pain and blood loss, Subaru sought for a breakthrough solution.

The wound was deep and wide, cutting through major blood vessels, blood gushing out. He would take off his outer garment and wrap it around his neck to halt the bleeding—No, the first priority here had to be to get away from the enemy behind him.

Moreover, Flop was right there. He was wrong to have doubted him. Afterwards he would have faith in him, he might not be forgiven, but right here, was Flop.

Subaru: “Ah, nghh…”

Rem was at the inn. One way or another, even with blood flowing from his neck, he had to make it back to her.

Go back, take her away, it’s not safe, withdraw. Even if she hated him, drag her away. For Rem to live. She had to live. For that, the neck’s bleeding, stop it.

The blood, the blood, bloodbloodbloodbloodbloodblood, the blood, stop, stop it, stopstopstopstooooo—

Subaru: “—uu”

Flop: “—Mister, it’s no good to have a scowl on your face.”

Subaru: “…”

Flop: “Good fortune won’t come to anyone who doesn’t have the time to smile. You’re going to try and find companions for your journey now, aren’t you? Then, you need to find someone good.”

In front, Flop emphasized his point while grinding his finger against his own brow.

While watching that man’s gesture, Subaru promptly put both his hands to his own neck. He did not feel that hot sensation or the heat of life flowing out. The feeling of blood gushing forth with every heartbeat.

Of his own life pouring out, the pulsation of despair approaching Death.

Flop: “If that’s the case, then erase those wrinkles on your brow… What’s the matter, Mister, your face has gone pale.”

Seeing Subaru keep silent, Flop looked surprised and became concerned.

Despite that earnest gaze of his, just before Subaru, he was reminded of the moment his throat had been slashed open.

Right, his throat had been cut.

His throat was cut, blood spurted out, his instincts sounded the alarm that he had to get away, however, even if he could not hear those alarm bells, he came back to that moment.

In other words, he had died. He had once again Returned by Death.

In addition to that, this time was different with instant death from the outset. More explicit, in the form of hostility.

Subaru: "…Bwaah"

With his hands on his throat, Subaru had forgotten to breathe, which he remembered in a hurry. Subaru raised his shoulders up and down with deep breaths, Flop touched his shoulder and asked if he was alright, but Subaru had no room to respond.

However, he could not stay here either.

Subaru: "Haah, Flop-san, today, it's, a terrible day for Feng Shui. Let's return at once…!"

Flop: "Fuusooey? Although, considering that pallor to rest a bit would be…"

Subaru: "No, resting would be a waste of time! This is a fit that won't stop until Rem holds my hand!"

Flop: "I-Is that right… What an affliction that is!"

With a sense of uneasiness and urgency burning in his heart, he had blurted out nonsense, but the good-natured Flop gave more importance to the atmosphere than the content of words.

The hand that had grasped his shoulder was grabbed in turn, and Flop nodded in surprise. Pulling on that hand of Flop's, Subaru hesitated as to whether to head forward or back.

If they went forward, they would be on route, but if they went back they would go by where he had had his throat slit.

He felt he was at an impasse where whichever way they went his life would be in danger, so rather than forward or backward, he would return to the main street via some other alleyway.

He had failed before, but his opponent would try not to kill them—No, kill Subaru, somewhere in the public eye. If he was going to alert his opponent, getting to the main road was imperative.

Flop: "Mister! Your hand is super cold! We should get your wife to warm them up soon!"

Subaru: "Ahh, as soon as possible, I want to see Rem's face."

As a result, he did not care about the abuse he would face for returning without accomplishing his goal.

At any rate, to that place with Rem—

Subaru: "—No."

Can I go back? The question swirled in Subaru's mind.

In a situation where he had not yet grasped his enemy's true nature, he thought about the danger of going back to Rem. He was unaware of when his opponent had begun targeting him, but if they returned to the inn, he may be kindly revealing the location to his foe.

Subaru: "…"

Cursing his lack of thought, Subaru bit his lip and at the same time, his field of vision opened.

Exiting the alleyway, Subaru and Flop had made it to the main streets of the city. On the right and the left, the number of people coming and going could not be compared to a metropolis, but it was a hell of a lot better than the alleyways with their hideout-like taverns.

Nonetheless, it would take some nerve to dive into the crowd of people. To avoid that, he would have to decide on a guideline for their next course of action.

Flop: “If we’re on this street here, that means the inn should be over there. So then, this way…”

Subaru: “That’s no good, Flop-san! We can’t go back to the inn. To see Rem, such a thing would be inexcusable!”

Flop: “Isn’t that different from what you just said?!”

His conduct ended up being that of an emotionally unstable person, but his anxiety from before made it so he was incapable of returning to Rem’s side. That being said, it was also ungrateful to keep manipulating Flop without giving him any information.

But, what could he say to make him understand?

He was not an associate of the Emilia Camp, nor a long-time traveling companion like Anastasia or Julius. He had no powers of persuasion or grounds to make him take Subaru’s opinion seriously.

Even for this, it would be asking too much to pin his hopes on Flop’s innate goodness.

Subaru: “Damnit…!”

To break the deadlock of the situation, currently Subaru’s hand was sorely lacking.

He was separated from his precious Rem, and was being hunted down in a strange town. He was with the virtuous Flop, but he lacked fighting strength. Subaru himself had no strong point to show.

Without knowing who was attacking him, he did not know who to be wary of.

Subaru: “No way, the hunter…?!”

When he defined his opponent as an invisible assassin, the first possibility that came to Subaru's mind was the Hunter.

They were a dangerous person who had killed Subaru once in the Buddheim Jungle, and after that as well, they had aimed at him while he was with Rem on one occasion. Ultimately, he had not run into them even once since then, but what if they were still meticulously continuing to hunt Subaru?

In the Buddheim Jungle, the military encampment, and the Shudraqian village, there had always been someone acting with Subaru. To avoid a set up with combat-ready opponents, they may have changed their timing until Subaru was with the powerless Flop.

Subaru: "If that's how it is, it's like you have the tenacity of a bear robbed of its prey. Why go this far to aim at me? What about me is the reason for…"

Flop: "Mister? You alright? What are you so worried about? If there's something I can help you with, you can try talking to me first. You're acting strange."

Subaru: "Flop-san…"

While Subaru was looking left and right down the street and losing his nerve, Flop called out to him in that voice.

Directly across from him Flop seized both his shoulders, his earnest gaze and offer made Subaru want to depend on him, and Subaru seriously considered if he should try gambling on his innate goodness.

If it was Flop, he might have the faith to believe in Subaru and lend him a hand.

Subaru: "Flop-san, sorry to keep relying on you, but can I ask you something?"

Flop: "Ah, of course, certainly! Whatever it is, even if I can't help, my sister might be able to. After all, my sister and I have the kind of bond where we can cover for each other's weak points, you know."

Subaru: "In truth, between the two of you this might be a matter for Medium-san though…"

If his opponent violently struck without mercy, there may be no choice but to respond with greater force. Medium's strength was much greater than Subaru's or Flop's.

With that in mind, Subaru would try to explain the situation to Flop. Firstly, he would have to hide the matter of Return by Death, and explain that someone was relentlessly targeting him.

Subaru: "Actually, someone is presently…"

Flop: "—What the?"

Subaru: "Huh?"

His mind made up, while being careful not to trigger the penalty of mentioning Return by Death, Subaru was going to try to explain the circumstances to Flop.

However, just as he was about to speak, Flop's gaze turned toward the wrong direction. He raised his well-shaped brows and squinted in the direction of the street.

By his reaction he seemed to have noticed something, and Subaru belatedly became aware of the same thing.

Subaru: "—Hk"

A long way off, someone was screaming.

And it was not just one person, several people shouted in shrieks and angry roars. Then the voices gradually increased in urgency, and sounds that differed from screams multiplied—

Flop: "Wha—?!"

Eyes wide, Flop's throat closed, and Subaru also turned in the same direction.

Immediately, witnessing what Flop had, the same scene before his eyes also left Subaru at a loss for words.

—A giant wheel was headed right for Flop and Subaru.

Flop: "Mister, watch ou—"

Flop's voice was cut off too early, the impact engulfed Subaru's entire body with its intensity. His body was totally blown away, it hit the hard ground and tumbled many times.

The momentum did not stop, and he crashed into a wall. But that was not the end. —Back-to-back, another successive impact hit the collapsed Subaru, and once more his body was blown away.

Subaru: "—a, guh"

Having been sent somersaulting and tumbling, Subaru's field of vision was dyed black as his body hit the ground.

It was not as if the sky had suddenly been covered in clouds. It was something else, his field of view had been destroyed for a different reason. The cause he did not know, and even if he found out what it was, nothing good would come out of it.

However, if there was something he could say—

Subaru: "D-Dea…"

Death, that was something every cell in his whole body had been proclaiming towards Subaru's instinct.

Up until this point, as someone who had experienced Death over thirty times, Subaru was somewhat conscious of just how much damage his body was able to withstand before he lost his life.

This time, it was clearly over the limit it could endure.

Subaru: "…"

A festering pain.

Yet, that was something on a whole other level compared to merely localized pain. This aching assaulted his entire body. The existence named Subaru was synchronized with the phenomenon called pain.

This was not mere localized pain. Natsuki Subaru was precisely Pain itself. Pain was what he was, and therefore it was only natural to be in pain. Anywhere and everywhere hurt. The pain did not disappear.

From a distance rang a sound like that of tinnitus or similar to the whistle of a train, reverberating inside his head.

Amidst that, the sounds which can be heard were, the joys and sorrows of the people hurled into a maelstrom—nay, there wasn't any joy. It was more fitting to call it a pandemonium. Pandemonium, hah. What a word.

Contrary to the echo of sounds, the events that unfolded were overwhelmingly grave.

Subaru: "Ahii, ouh, ah…"

He could not produce any syllables.

The mouth that attempted to enunciate words was in tatters. Without any teeth remaining, it had decent ventilation. Somewhere had been ripped apart and air was leaking through it. There was blood, sound, and pain.

Something, something, something—

Subaru: "Oh, ah"

Something had killed Natsuki Subaru again.

3

Flop: "—Mister, it's no good to have a scowl on your face."

Subaru: "…"

Flop: "Good fortune won't come to anyone who doesn't have the time to smile. You're going to try and find companions for your journey now, aren't you? Then, you need to find someone good."

Putting his finger in between his eyebrows, Flop rubbed the skin and flesh to relax them.

Watching the man's performance unfold in front of his eyes, Subaru hugged his own two shoulders. Then, he recalled his mouth which air no longer escaped from, as well as the pain that had vanished.

—It can't be, I died again.

Subaru: "Moreover… this time, it was… a dragon carriage, was it…?"

Pulverized by the impact, sent flying and rendered immobile, the candle of life thinned and vanished.

While dominated by the pain proclaimed by every inch of his body, Subaru had been killed. He had lost his life.

Subaru: "…"

Clattering, the shoulders in his own grip trembled, and his knees began to shudder.

Even if his body did not recall the disaster that had befallen it, his soul remembered. The impact and pain inflicted upon his whole body as if tearing it to pieces, even if it no longer remained, still gnawed at his soul.

At last, Subaru could not conceal his fear towards the looming evil that befell upon him.

First time was instant-death, the second was being beheaded, the third was being run over by a dragon carriage—it could no longer be just a mere coincidence. No doubt, the aim was to kill Natsuki Subaru.

It had killed Subaru mercilessly. The most frightening thing of it all was that, despite Return by Death having been triggered thrice, Subaru had obtained no further information other than the fact an enemy existed.

The opponent would not leave behind any information for the lifeless Subaru.

Flop: “If that’s the case, then erase those wrinkles on your brow… What’s wrong, Mister? You don’t look so well.”

Subaru: “Flop, -san…”

Once again, Flop had shown concern towards Subaru, the latter’s facial expression having changed.

Earlier, the chaos on the main street was most likely the result of the dragon carriage going berserk. Then, in the instant before the collision, Flop had extended his hand in an attempt to save Subaru.

Not making it on time, Subaru had received the deadly impact head on, and it was unthinkable that Flop, nearby as he was, would have gotten off scratch free. —he would have been dragged into the collateral damages as well.

Subaru: “In the first place, up until now…”

The enemy would not necessarily retreat in content after killing Subaru.

Flop had been there at the scene, and had witnessed the occurrences on both the first and second time. If the opponent was someone of caution, it would be natural for them to seal Flop’s mouth, as he was a witness.

Would it not mean that, up until now, Subaru’s death would be accompanied by Flop’s murder?

Would it not mean that Flop had already been dragged into the situation Subaru was put in?

“I won’t allow that”, thought Subaru as he gritted the back of his teeth.

Subaru: “—Kh! Flop-san!”

Flop: “Wh-What?!”

Killing any cowardice by gritting the back of his teeth, Subaru faced forward courageously.

Next, with that enthusiasm Subaru grabbed Flop by the hand, catching him by surprise. However, he did not have the leisure to take Flop’s bewilderment into account.

Considering what had happened so far, the countdown to death had already begun.

A situation of dead-end times three, where moving forward meant hell, heading back meant hell, going around still meant hell.

Even then, he must search for the path towards survival. —not just Subaru and Rem, but also the kind older brother who had helped them and return him to his sister’s side.

That was why—

Subaru: “Flop-san, let’s run!”

Flop: “That’s sudden?! What happened?!”

Subaru: “There’s no hows or whats, life is finite! We can’t waste even a second, right?!”

It would be a bad move to stop here and earnestly try to persuade the other.

Subaru made such a judgement, same as previous times, he would use forceful reasoning to destroy Flop’s resistance. Sure enough, swallowed up by the momentum, Flop just nodded in agreement and voiced, “That’s true!”.

Flop: “Life is short. For the sake of achieving my sister and I’s goal, although time should indeed be treasured…”

Subaru: “Let’s run! Run towards the bar immediately! The trivial matters can be discussed later!”

Flop: “U-Understood! I understand already, so stop dragging me! My bangs will get messed up!”

Forcefully dragged away by his arm, Flop cried out as he stumbled over his feet.

Listening to Flop’s shriek-like voice, Subaru advanced toward the road he once took—with the same goal of getting a bodyguard, he hurried toward the bar.

However, the goal was not to get a bodyguard for the sake of their travels.

For the salvation from this series of unavoidable Deaths, for the sake of obtaining the necessary help as soon as possible, they ran.

4

???: “—You want to hire the strongest one here?”

The barkeep they finally found raised his eyebrows in response to Subaru’s ragged breath inquiry.

The middle-aged barkeep, whose hair had started to gray, stared at the panting Subaru from top to bottom with somewhat skeptical eyes.

With his demeanor and his age, Subaru too realized that he was lacking in persuasiveness. Moreover he had barged into the bar, and suddenly brought up a question like that.

You could even say he had been generous enough to not immediately jump to the conclusion that Subaru was messing with him.

Currently, Subaru and Flop are inside the bar which was their original destination.

At first Subaru had been killed instantly by some unknown method in the alleyway within the immediate vicinity of the bar. That in of itself had been unsettling, but perhaps because rushing things turned out to be effective, the clutches of the devil that would have stopped Subaru and Flop who instead hurriedly hastened toward the bar had not made their appearance.

However, it would be premature to assume that they had escaped from danger on the basis of that argument.

Subaru: “That’s why, I have to borrow the strength of the strongest one here.”

Barkeeper: “…If we’re talking about the strongest one here, that’d probably be Rowan.”

The barkeep shrugged his shoulders at Subaru, who had asked again while gathering his breath. Then, he proceeded to look at the other person besides Subaru, Flop, who was also out of breath.

Barkeeper: “Flop, here I thought you haven’t shown your face around in a while, and here you are helping someone again huh. Even though you won’t get a single penny out of it anyways”

Flop: “Hey now, I’m just doing whatever kind of deals I want to partake in. Those whom I partake in deals with aren’t limited to just people. At times, I take on unfavorable deals against the world itself.”

Barkeeper: “I’m saying there’s no profit in doing that, you softy.”

Perhaps because the barkeeper had been on quite familiar terms with him, he commented on Flop’s actions with a speechless tone.

Despite hearing directly from Flop why he had helped Subaru’s group, it seemed his kind nature was a well-known fact to someone who knew him beforehand.

While the barkeeper polished a glass cup, he shot a sharp glance towards Subaru,

Barkeeper: “He’s a real softy like you’ve heard. But, don’t you get the wrong idea here. This dumbass and his sister are softies that will help anyone regardless of who they might be, in turn, there are a lot of people that are indebted to them.”

Subaru: "…I don't have any intention of being an ungrateful bastard either, I'll pamper him back just as much as I have been pampered."

Flop: "Hahaha, I shall look forward to that! The day I'm going to be pampered that is!"

While fixing his bangs with a comb he took out of his pocket, Flop returned a candid response.

Feeling saved by Flop's kindness and magnanimity, Subaru turned towards the inside of the bar, and asked "Which one is Rowan?".

Barkeeper: "Ahh, Rowan's passed out over there at the uh, corner over there."

Subaru: "Passed out at a corner…? That doesn't sound like good news."

While saying so, Subaru looked nervously at the direction the barkeeper pointed at. Upon which, within the dim bar, and amongst several men that chattered drunkenly, he found a man who was slumped over at a table in the corner.

It was a man in his fifties, his long and disheveled hair tied up sloppily, along with his weapon of choice—a katana sheathed by the waist.

The table he had slumped over on was lined with several empty glasses; one can tell he really knocked himself out in every sense of the word before the sun had even set.

Subaru: "…That's the strongest, you say?"

Barkeeper: "There's no doubt he's got a terrible drinking habit but, he's a master of his trade. Though he's got a terrible drinking habit."

Subaru: "You mentioning that about him twice only makes me even more worried."

Subaru received the barkeeper's warning about him having a bad drinking habit, two times consecutively.

Though he had been considered as quite the drunkard, beggars couldn't be choosers. Right now, what was most important was not his personal conduct or the toughness of his liver, but his prowess in combat.

That of the person who possessed the ability to save the desperate Subaru from his impending doom.

Subaru: "Hey, Rowan-san, could you hear me out for a bit?"

Rowen: "Ngah?"

Subaru steeled his resolve and headed towards the table Rowan passed out on along with Flop. As he spoke to the collapsed man while shaking him by his shoulders, Rowan responded in a stupefied voice and raised his head.

Face flushed completely red paired with a sleepy gaze, as well as facial features that would have been rather discernable if it weren't ruined by a reddened nose.

Rowan: "What's up, bro. Whaddya want from me…?"

Subaru: "This dude's wasted… Anyways, listen to me. I have a job for…You reek!!"

Rowan: "Oioi, ain't ya a rude one…"

After getting up wobbly, Rowan exhaled a drawn-out breath which Subaru had to turn his face away from.

As the dreadful stench of alcohol wafted, it even created an illusion that his vision had somehow been warped. It was not something as simple as drinking during the day. There should be a limit to how heavy of an alcoholic a person was.

Subaru: "Come to think of it, because there isn't anyone I already know to be a heavy drinker, this is my first time dealing with this type… Roswaal and Otto too would only drink in moderation…"

The people in the Emilia camp who habitually drank alcohol were Roswaal and Otto. Ram and Frederica would drink too, but only if invited. Besides them, nobody else drank.

Subaru was also apparently of drinking age in this other world, but he had more or less gone until now without feeling the need to drink.

Subaru: “So honestly, I don’t really have a good impression of drunks but… Hey, this guy’s really the best one here right?! I’m not playing around here.”

Barkeeper: “What a coincidence. I don’t have this place open to play around either. There’s no mistake, it’s him.”

Subaru: “Shit, you’re serious…”

Receiving the barkeeper’s reassurance, Subaru turned back to Rowan with a bitter look.

Rowan was sitting sloppily in his chair and shaking an empty glass upside-down above his head, desperately trying to taste any droplets of alcohol left with his tongue.

Rowan: “Tsk, ain’t enough booze. Oi, ya bros, treat me to a drink why don’tcha.”

Flop: “Hm, you want a drink? Okay. Barkeep, A drink for him…”

Subaru: “Wait a sec, wait a sec, Flop-san! I really shouldn’t be saying this since I’ve been saved by your kindness but just for a little bit, keep your good will in your wallet!”

Shutting down Flop, who was about to treat someone just because they requested it, Subaru positioned himself in front of a displeased-looking Rowan. Then, he placed his hands on the table with force,

Subaru: “Rowan-san, let’s get straight to the point. We won’t be treating you to a drink. But, I can pay you the money you need to buy drinks. I want you to take a job.”

Rowan: “Aahn, a job…?”

Subaru: “That’s right. I’d like you to be an escort. And also, starting right this very second.”

Getting close to the stink of alcohol, Subaru boldly laid out those conditions.

Hearing his talk, Rowan stared back at Subaru with sleepy eyes.

Rowan: “…Yer tone’s pretty panicked. Ya bros are in quite a dangerous situation, aren’tcha?”

Subaru: “Yeah, it’s no laughing matter. What do you think? The amount I can pay, this is my limit.”

Flop: “Mister, that’s…”

Widening his eyes in surprise, Flop attempted to stop Subaru’s action. However, Subaru halted Flop, who was trying to restrain him, instead and assertively put on the table a bag—the bag which contained all of the money he got after selling the Witchbeast’s horn.

As a precaution, he had not split and pass some amount to Rem.

This was genuinely everything Subaru's group had on hand. There was no more money that he could pay beyond this.

Rowan: "Woah woah, this is…"

Subaru: "This is everything I can pay with. What do you think? Will you take it?"

Rowan: "…"

Opening the mouth of the bag, Rowan went silent as he confirmed the contents with a quick glance. His face was still red but the drunken look in his eyes from before was now gone, a look of serious scrutiny replacing it.

Of course, an escort that could be hired at a bar—to show someone like Rowan, who worked as a knock-off mercenary, all of the funds that Subaru walked around with was a fairly large gamble.

Having crossed national borders, Subaru was not well-informed on the value of goods in the Empire. However, he felt that the value of currency was not so different from the Kingdom of Lugunica.

With the money Subaru had offered up, one could easily live a year just monkeying around.

Rowan: "My skills are first rate… I thought of saying that but, this amount upfront…"

Subaru: "I'll say this now, but I can't negotiate any increase in payment."

Rowan: "I ain't doubting ya. Ya've said y'ain't playing around, it seems you're serious about it."

Scratching his scarlet-turned nose with his finger, Rowan slowly stood up on the spot. He picked up the money bag Subaru had handed out and carefully kept it in his pocket.

Rowan: "I ain't giving this back even if ya tell me to give it back."

Subaru: "It's a shame, but I won't tell you to return it. If you do your job right.”

Rowan: “Puhah”

A breath reeking of alcohol being let out by his laugh, Rowan accepted Subaru’s job.

Hearing his answer, the tension in Subaru’s shoulders, present for all this time, faded away. His nervousness would not go away and uncertainty endlessly circled his insides but—

Flop: “Mister, was that alright? That money was…”

Subaru: “It’s fine. It’s nothing if it means we’re safe now. I’m sorry for scaring Flop like that, and also thank you for introducing me to this place.”

Flop: “—. If you say it’s okay then I’m okay too. Thankfully, we paid for the inn in advance!”

In terms of the accommodation bill, Subaru had already paid for it, including Flop and Medium’s part, who they shared rooms with, under Subaru’s group’s name.

It seemed like he avoided the dishonour of passing the bill off to them by not thinking ahead when hiring Rowan.

Rowan: “So, employer. How shall I address ya?.”

Subaru: “Oh, right. My bad. I was in a rush. My name is—”

Rowan: “—Wait.”

Asked about his name, Subaru panicked as he thought he disrespected Rowan. And as he was about to name himself, Rowan stopped him.

He thrusted his hand in front of Subaru’s face and directed his sharp gaze behind Subaru—towards the bar’s windows.

Subaru: “Ro…wan?”

Rowan: “…It’s a weird feeling. Say bro, you were tailed weren’t ya?”

Subaru: “—Uh”

Rowan’s low and quiet voice made Subaru swallow his breath.

Beside him, Flop, confused, said “What does that mean?”, but Subaru had a general idea on the presence Rowan had detected.

It was not a what-if scenario, it was definite. The weird feeling Rowan had gotten was the being that tailed Subaru; the enemy that had attacked Subaru in the alleyway.

The enemy who had killed Subaru three times had not given up on Subaru this time as well.

Flop: “Just who are you being chased by?”

Subaru: “…I’m not kidding when I say this, I don’t know. I just thought that if we stayed outside, they would come after us. That’s why I hired you.”

Rowan: “I see. They shoulda picked a better fight.”

It was a situation where they had nothing to work with, yet Rowan said that in a joking manner.

However, even if Rowan’s tone had a hint of nervousness and seriousness, there was no worry in his voice. That probably meant he had reasonable confidence in his skill.

In reality, the drunkenness had disappeared from Rowan’s eyes and the atmosphere he gave off was now that of a strong individual.

Rowan: “…”

Rowan’s specialised weapon was a singular katana sheathed on the left side of his waist.

It was late saying this now, but to see a katana as a sword-of-choice was rare in this other world. Rowan’s weapon was a distinct irregularity against the western-style swords that were the norm.

Looking closely, together with the atmosphere emanating from his disheveled hair, Rowan's appearance somewhat resembled that of a samurai. However, he lacked a certain intensity, so maybe a ronin was a better description for him.

Subaru: "Rowan-san, they are…"

Rowan: "There's no need to be a scaredy-cat. No matter who they are, if they're gonna stand in front of me, all that is needed is to cut them in two. There's alcohol in my belly and my sword's in top shape."

Subaru: "So this isn't drunken fist but drunken sword? Can't say I've heard of that."

Nevertheless, it did not sound like a lie and Subaru put his faith in Rowan's self-confidence.

Moving around to the opposite side of where Rowan was glaring at the window, Subaru pulled on the sleeve of the Flop, who had still not fully taken in the situation.

Subaru: "Flop-san, let's have Rowan-san handle this."

Flop: "Handling things and whatnot, I still don't quite understand the situation! What are Mister and Bodyguard-kun fighting with exactly?"

Subaru: "That's something I still—"

"don't know yet." Faster than Subaru could reply with a statement which would only arouse Flop's worry, the situation changed.

However, the situation did not develop in a manner in which the enemy had charged in from the front and Rowan had burst out for a counter attack.

???: "Bweh…"

Spilling those cries of pain, a man with a large build fell at the entrance of the bar.

With that sudden occurrence, Subaru literally jumped up in surprise. However, the other customers in the bar who saw the man had a shallow reaction, as if they were used to the sight.

The drunken customers besides Rowan—They probably worked doing mercenary-like activities as well. Those people simply stared at the fallen man with little reaction.

The only people who rushed to the fallen man's side were Flop and the barkeeper.

Only, the one who was actually worried about the man was Flop, and it was obvious on the face of the barkeeper that he just did not want his floor to be dirtied.

Flop: "Hey, you! Are you alright? Get a hold of yourself!"

Large Man: "Fu, fuga, fuga…"

Flop: "Fugafuga?! Is that your name? Get a hold of yourself Fugafuga-kun!"

Subaru: "Er, no, Flop-san, that person's…"

Flop tried to get the fallen man up but the man responded with a groan. It was not like the man was courteously introducing himself to a person he met for the first time.

Adding on to that, a man entering this bar in this situation meant that—

Large Man: "Fuga…"

Subaru: "—m! Flop-san! Get away!"

Flop was leaning down, endeavoring to get the face-down man up by pulling on his arm.

Having gotten a terrible feeling, Subaru immediately pulled Flop back down onto the ground and got him away from the man.

—On the very next moment.

Large Man: "—!!!"

The body of the man who was groaning and saying "Fugafuga" expanded, and for a brief flash, shone bright scarlet.

Then, the expanded body of the man ruptured and a great explosion threw the inside of the bar into chaos.

Customers: "Guaaaaah?!"

Screams echoed inside the bar and red flecks of light scattered around the area. Right after, they became flames that burned and spread. Subaru came to the realisation that the man who had blown up had been used as a human bomb.

Subaru: "Flop-san!"

Flop: "I-I'm fine Mister! But, this is…"

Subaru and Flop, who had been juggled around by the blast wave, stared in shock at the state of pandemonium inside the bar.

The reason the man's body had exploded was most likely because he had been forced to hold onto Fire Magic Stones. —Looking at his anguished face, the Fire Magic Stones may have been inside his body.

Those detonated, and fire scattered about. Additionally, that was not all—

Customer: "Cough! Wha, What the hell?! My eyes, my eyeeeeessss!"

Inside the overflowing inferno, one of the drunken customers who had gotten caught up in the mess covered his face and screamed out. Looking around, that man was not the only one who was screaming, the other men were doing the same too.

Having been blown away, the men who were engulfed in the lingering smoke from the explosion at the centre of the bar covered their eyes and nose, shouting in great pain.

And then—

???: “It’s no good if we stay in the bar! Everyone, hurry up and get out!”

Subaru: “Wai—”

A man shouted while tears poured down his face, and several men, with their faces covered, rushed for the entrance all at once. Looking at the men jostling against each other, Subaru tried to raise his voice in an effort to tell them to stop.

The man who had exploded, and the smoke accompanied with pain after that. Subaru felt like both of those had contributed to the disorder within the bar, and were attempting to guide people into escaping outside.

However, even if Subaru were to raise his voice out of desperation, it would not halt the footsteps of those men driven by pain.

As a result—

Subaru: “—hk?!”

A second explosion occurred, blowing away the men flooding the entrance altogether.

The second one was larger than the first, and the men caught in its radius were unable to even protect each other as they were charred black, scorched from the front by the bursting flames.

The explosive heat and the blast wave surged towards them, and Subaru was petrified by the gruesome scene.

Nightmarish sights taking place one after another — it all seemed unreal.

Subaru: “Th…is…”

Rowan: “Get a hold of yourself, client! It’s gonna be troublesome for me if ya collapse right here!”

Subaru: "—ah,"

Whilst Subaru remained petrified and dumbfounded, he was seized by the back of his collar and was forcefully dragged to his feet. The person responsible for it was Rowan, who had his face covered with the sleeve of his clothes.

He gestured for Subaru to keep a low posture, ensuring he would not inhale the same smoke that had tormented the other men, and,

Rowan: "Barkeep! We'll head out from the back! The front side's under watch!"

Barkeeper: "G-Got it! It's this way…!"

Listening to Rowan's instructions, the manager nodded obediently as blood flowed down his forehead.

Like that, Rowan made a sign with his hand behind the bartender, who was moving as if he were crawling across the floor, and slapped Subaru's back, shouting, "Go!"

Rowan: "Client, and the young man over there! Get moving right now if ya don't wanna die!"

Flop: "O-Of course, I can't afford to die! Both my little sister and I are still in the middle of our journey…!"

Subaru: "Fuck…!"

Receiving Rowan's encouragement, Subaru and Flop pursued the manager ahead of them. While chasing after him, Subaru's mind was filled with confusion and rage directed at both himself and the enemy.

Of course, there was anger towards the enemy who had committed such atrocious deeds. However, he was also angry with himself, as he had failed to recognize the threat level of the enemy, even though he had known the enemy was present.

To begin with, the enemy had done something to cause a dragon carriage to go out of control in the main street.

A considerable number of people must have been caught up in that. If that was so, Subaru should have been more earnest with his thoughts. He should have acknowledged the fellow as someone who did not pay any heed to the damage to their surroundings.

Because of that, the men, who had only been at the bar, had gotten entangled in—

Barkeeper: "—! The backdoor won't open!"

Having arrived first at the backdoor, the manager cried out in front of the self-reproaching Subaru.

He was desperately trying to open the door, but it would not answer his panicked calls. Perhaps the damage from the explosion had bent the door out of shape, or—

Flop: "This is bad! The front entrance is already demolished! If this goes on…"

Rowan: "Argh, outta the way! A door like this is—"

In the bar, the vermillion flames were growing intense, and in a situation in which the black smoke was about to swallow them, Rowan had leapt out, almost as if he were thrashing out Flop's shout. And then, upon placing a hand on the katana by his waist, he drew and slashed it at the unopening door with great force, with nary a single flash of his blade—

Subaru: "—oh,"

The silver gleam shot forward, cutting away the closed door with a slash.

It was a sword skill similar to Iai, one which Subaru knew. Despite performing a slash that caused Subaru to be mesmerized involuntarily, Rowan did not show his pride for it, and kicked down the remainder of the door.

Rowan: "Aight! It opened! Everyone, keep low!"

Freeing the backdoor that had previously been sealed, Rowan called out to Subaru and the others behind himself.

An enormous amount of confusion was spreading far and wide, but it looked like they would be able to get away from the inescapable situation that was the bar in flames, at least.

Subaru had also understood that Rowan's judgement in battle, as well as his skills, were trustworthy. All they needed to do was to distance themselves from this place, and for their evil opponent—

Subaru: "…"

Suddenly, Subaru held his breath.

Something was nagging at the back of his mind. —He attempted to predict the thoughts of his scrupulous, ruthless enemy.

They had thrown a man-turned-human-bomb into the bar, lured out the people inside using smoke containing stimulants, and blew them away at once with the Mana Stones they had set up at the entrance.

And then, they had obstructed the entrance, and utilized some method to seal off the backdoor as well. Subaru and his group had broken through that blockade, and were able to escape through the backdoor, but—

Subaru: "Rowan-sa—"

Something is wrong, Subaru attempted to put his minuscule feeling of discomfort into words.

If his opponent were a thorough one, then it would be impossible to think they would let up their offensive. In order to convey that eeriness, Subaru called for Rowan. There was no reply.

Rowan: "…"

Leaning forward from the backdoor, Rowan's body teetered backwards, then fell.

Subaru, Flop, and the barkeeper stared at the fallen Rowan, shocked. His head, specifically the area starting from his forehead and above, had been destroyed, and his eyes were hanging out, having been extruded.

No matter who looked at it, Rowan had died, his head pulverized.

Barkeeper: “Ah,”

Gazing at Rowan’s appalling state of death, the bartender widened his eyes, attempting to scream.

However, he could not even do that. A single blow was swung with the other side of the flames, piercing through the chest of the manager who had taken a deep breath, viciously tearing apart the upper half of his body. Scattering the bones and organs from inside his body, the barkeeper rolled straight into the fire.

The scent of burning flesh immediately reached Subaru’s nose, but the barkeeper did not scream. He had been killed instantly.

???: “…”

Beyond the flames and the smoke that filled the area, something gradually made its appearance.

Stepping over the slashed, torn down door, the silhouette of a man with damp cloth wrapped around his face had appeared.

He had a firm grip on the long-handled axe in his hands, and Subaru understood that it was the weapon that had crushed Rowan’s head and given the bartender an instant death. However, his understanding ended there.

Flop: “Wh-Who in the world, are you? Why are you doing this?”

Having watched the deaths of Rowan and the barkeeper just like Subaru, who was unable to move out of dismay, Flop spoke with a trembling voice beside him. Although he was swamped by fear, he was glaring at the silhouette among the flames with a solemn gaze.

As if he were directing his animosity towards the villainous man, who had massacred the people in the bar one after another with such viciousness.

However—

Flop: “Don’t think you can get away with thi—”

???: “…”

Flop, while attempting to condemn the man’s wrongdoings with a firm attitude, received a direct strike to his head from the man’s axe.

The man would not do anything meaningless, such as bashing him with the back of his axe without aligning the edge of the blade. He adjusted the angle of the blade, slamming it into Flop’s forehead where his long bangs were draped over, and spilled the contents outside.

Brain matter flew about, and Flop died as the crimson hue of his blood blended together with the red flames.

His body crumpled into a heap while making a loud splash. Blood slowly flowed out, staining Subaru’s bottom as he sank down onto the floor. —No, Subaru’s pants were already soiled by something vastly different. Out of fear, he had been unable to control his bladder.

Subaru was frightened by the terrifying appearance of the man that held a bloodstained axe amidst the inferno.

His soul quivered at his vindictiveness, his persistence, his dreadfulness.

Subaru: “W…why…”

It was an awfully foolish question.

Flop had been killed unsparingly after asking a similar question. Of course, there was no reason for the man to be merciful only towards Subaru. He would likewise perish. He would be killed.

Subaru did not possess the strength to draw back, nor the courage to crawl away. Right now, he was unable to take his eyes off the man.

Even if gazing at the man filled his being with terror, he could not look away because that was equally as horrifying.

Subaru: “Why… Why!”

Just like an idiot who only ever repeated what he knew, Subaru yelled out with desperation.

The man did not respond despite hearing him shout. He slowly lifted up his axe, his face remaining hidden, and positioned it straight above the sitting Subaru’s head.

And then—

Subaru: “WHY?!”

???: “—I won’t tell you anything. Won’t it be troublesome if you run away again?”

As Subaru shouted out with a bleeding heart, the man at last gave a reply.

Listening to the man’s tone and voice, which sounded as if he was only stating the obvious, Subaru’s breath caught in his throat.

He attempted to match the voice with a voice he had heard somewhere, and,

Subaru: “Bh,”

The axe swung down faster than he could do so, splitting his skull in a single blow.

There was a small, hard sound.

There was.

Chapter 18:
Battle in the Fortress City of Guaral

1

—If he closed his eyes, Subaru could recall the scene in his mind.

The middle of the dense jungle where an abundance of trees grew thickly, the muddy soil, and the atmosphere of the imposing men.

The Witchbeast's roar that reverberated across as if to split that atmosphere apart. The fighting spirit that would rise and excite alongside the start of battle. And, the intense malice that would be directed towards Natsuki Subaru due to his involvement in inviting the Witchbeast—.

That was an action Subaru himself had acknowledged and consciously decided to carry out, and had put it into practice.

He had acted after placing a scale within himself, comparing what was important to him and what was not.

It was an action done with the full determination and intention to cause harm.

What would happen to people inexperienced with fighting Witchbeasts if they actually fought one? He did not know.

They could have subdued it instantly. There was also the possibility that they could have become seriously wounded.

He did not want to think about it much, but instead of ending there, there could have been those who lost their lives.

—No, he should assume there were.

After justifying his own deed, he should at least acknowledge that fact. After all, he was the one who had decided and acted on such an action.

Natsuki Subaru chose the side of the scale he desired, and put a plan into practice, where others may die.

These other people were not Witch Cultists or Sin Archbishops, nor were they wicked people who would cause harm to others for bad intentions.

He had attacked individuals who chose to take up arms just to make ends meet. They were merely following orders from their superiors. These were people who, under the right circumstances, he could have formed positive relations with.

Therefore, this occurrence was justified, inevitable and natural.

The consequences of Natsuki Subaru's actions must be paid for by Natsuki Subaru.

2

Flop: "—Mister, it's no good to have a scowl on your face."

Subaru: "…"

Flop: "Good fortune won't come to anyone who doesn't have the time to smi—M-Mister?!"

The instant after the bladed edge of the axe sunk into his skull, Subaru's field of vision became clear with a ring of a hard sound.

What jumped out in his unclouded vision was the figure of Flop, prodding his brow with his finger.

The pretty boy with his long bangs and slender face. Recalling the event that had come to pass a few dozen seconds ago, his head being split open; Subaru quickly covered his mouth and fell to his knees.

The rising need to vomit. The link between all the malicious acts that had occurred to him—His heart beat like it was about to explode, his organs felt like they were being strangled. That, and the deafening ringing in his ears, tormented Subaru.

The voice of Flop worrying for Subaru sounded far off. No sound properly registered in his brain.

Subaru: “—Todd.”

Listening to the intense ringing in his ears and the screaming of his organs, Subaru’s lips produced a short sound.

That sound was the name of someone he became acquainted with in the Vollachian Empire. He was someone towards whom Natsuki Subaru had for the first time acted with purely antagonistic intent and—

And he was the malicious assailant that had caused the great tragedy that occured moments ago.

Subaru: “…”

The flaming bar and the stifling black smoke.

The reason the drunken customers had fallen victim to the axe one after another was because of an irritant in the smoke. It was probably a simplified tear gas of sorts with strong irritative spices mixed in. However, despite it being pseudo-tear gas, its effects were immediate.

Using magic stones to cause a fire and sealing the entrance to lead the survivors to the back exit. Barring the back door and using the moment of relief after they broke through, an ambush was performed on the strongest survivor, and they were executed.

Then, using a soaked cloth to protect himself from the smoke, he directly, with certainty, killed Subaru.

His last words and voice, and above all else, the eyes he saw of the masked man indicated his true identity.

That was Todd. —The man that was supposed to have died in the Buddheim Jungle.

Subaru: “No…”

That was simply unconfirmed information.

The Imperial Army's camp fell into a state of ruin after the People of Shudraq's attack, under Abel's command. After hearing that there had been many casualties, over a hundred casualties, fearing that more pain would be compounded upon him upon further words, he shut out any other information beyond that.

After that, he had quickly taken Rem along, and decided to leave Abel and the rest.

That was why he had not even tried to think about any survivors from the attack on the encampment.

That included the attack Subaru chose to do himself against Todd's group, which was unrelated to the attack by the People of Shudraq —.

Subaru: "If this is the nearest city to the Jungle, of course any survivors would run away here."

Having had their camp attacked, any Imperial Soldiers who had escaped by the skin of their teeth would inevitably head to Guaral.

Yet, that thought did not cross Subaru's mind; and so, he had nonchalantly stepped his foot into the city where enemies would be waiting. Plus, with Rem in tow.

Subaru: "…Enemy."

That word that popped in his mind, he once again tasted the bitterness of that word on his tongue.

Back when he was living in his original world, the term "enemy" was something that would only appear in manga or games. Even after being transported to another world, the target for that term only extended itself to adversaries like the Witch Cult and Witchbeasts.

Meaning, this was his first time to call someone who was not one of those, an "enemy".

This “enemy”, was one created by none other than Natsuki Subaru’s own actions.

Subaru: “—grk.”

Making a harsh sound, Subaru strongly grit his teeth.

Biting on his cheek meat, utilizing the searing pain and taste of blood to grab his consciousness by the collar, he forcibly pulled himself back to reality. If that were not enough, he did not mind biting off all the meat inside his mouth.

He had no use for constricted organs, loud-ringing ears, trembling hands and feet, nor for a paralyzed brain.

He could not be beaten down by malice and fear right now.

Even if he was just putting on a bold front, until the situation changed, he could not take it off.

Flop: “Mister, get a hold of yourself! Mister! Want to drink some water?”

Subaru: “—Hm, I’m fine. My bad, I worried Flop-san…!”

The color of his face and the tone of his voice probably did not signal that he was fine at all, but Subaru told himself he was fine while slowly standing up.

The shaking in his knees and the discomfort from his paralyzed organs still remained. However, he could not stay crouching forever. While Subaru was being spoiled by weakness, time was still marching forward.

Waiting for the right moment to strike, Todd’s plan of attack should still be in motion right now.

Subaru: “Hey Flop-san, can I ask you to do me a favor? Can you go back to the inn and get the medicine for my chronic illness from Rem?”

Flop: “Medicine? Are you under some bad sickness Mister?”

Subaru: “Yeah, my glossy ankle disease is getting pretty bad.” “1”

Flop: “Oh my! Haven’t heard of that before!”

Being told a random disease name, Flop widened his eyes in surprise.

Taking advantage of Flop’s goodwill left a bad taste in Subaru’s mouth but he turned a blind eye to it, convincing himself that he had no choice. For now, Subaru had to prioritize getting Flop as far as he could from himself, as soon as possible.

If Todd’s aim was revenge and if Flop and Subaru were to split up, he would have no choice but to go after Subaru.

Once Flop’s safety was guaranteed, Subaru could focus on protecting himself.

He had still not decided on what was the correct option to take though—

Subaru: “I can meet up with Rowan at the bar, leave it to escape the surprise attack. Then…”

He had no other choice but to perform a rather haphazard plan.

Given that he did not have the time to stop his legs and think things through slowly, he could only put into actuality the best action he could think of at this very moment, and hope to pick up a miracle as he went.

Subaru: “Rem should…”

When Flop returned to the inn to retrieve the medicine for the unheard-of disease, Rem should figure out that something abnormal had happened to Subaru. She should, he hoped.

Once she figured that out, she would stop Flop from returning to this area, he believed.

It was all a lot of wishful thinking but that was the limit of Subaru’s thought process at the moment.

Subaru: “Flop-san, please!”

Flop: “O-Okay! Wait here! Keep your chin up Mister!”

Hit with Subaru’s genuine seriousness, Flop treaded the path back to the inn. Sending Flop off, Subaru decided instead to hurry to the inn.

Getting the drunk Rowan sober as fast as he could, he would smack him with money and hire him once more. Rowan had fallen prey to the ambush, but in a straight fight, he would have enough strength to win. Subaru hoped for that too.

He was depending on luck a lot but he put his hopes on Rowan. Pleading for him to be the strongest in Vollachia—

???: “—ah?”

About to start running with a praying heart, Subaru abruptly heard a hoarse voice from behind him.

Seeing as this was an unpopular alleyway, the voice he heard could only belong to one person. The problem was, what emotions did the owner of that voice experience to produce such sounds and what that consequently meant.

He quickly realized that those sounds would by no means be leading to a good conclusion.

Flop: “Uu, uuuaaaahhhhh—!!”

What followed the hoarse voice was the scream of Flop, who had gone the other way.

Turning his head around immediately, Subaru found Flop flipped upside down at the street ahead. Fallen face-up, Flop was clutching his right leg. A small knife had pierced through his thigh.

The knife which was buried deeply to the heel, took away the ability to run from Flop.

Subaru: “Flop-san!”

Hurriedly turning back from his running position, Subaru bit his lips as his feet skid on the ground. Then, without pause, he kicked off the ground and ran over to Flop, his leg injured.

Again, his expectations had been suddenly subverted.

He thought that if they were to split up, Todd would definitely prioritize Subaru and go after him. Yet, contrary to his calculations, Flop had suddenly been attacked.

Furthermore, getting attacked at this place and at this very moment, was beyond his expectations as well.

Subaru: “Flop-san! I’ll bring you somewhere to treat that straight away!”

Holding various regrets and remorse, Subaru rushed to Flop’s side. Flop was writhing in agony from the pain in his leg but Subaru did not have the time to treat him right now.

He had to lend his shoulder and take him to someplace with people—No, he could not let the situation develop like it had before, at the time he had perished after being run over at the main road. Even if he had to be forceful, he had to drag him to the bar. That was the best option.

The fact that the knife had struck his leg was a silver lining. Because, as long as a major artery was not pierced, there would be no real danger to his life—

Subaru: “…”

His thought process leading him here, a question abruptly appeared in Subaru’s mind.

It was good news that Flop’s life was not in danger. Yet, how was that so? Seeing the method in which the massacre at the bar was conducted, the enemy’s skill in killing was first-rate.

In spite of that, the attack against Flop ended at his legs. Why was that?

This was knowledge from manga but, this information was about a technique used by snipers in battle.

Snipers, who would hide themselves to perform one-sided attacks against faraway opponents, when faced with a group of enemies, would purposely not kill their opponent and instead stay their hand after majorly injuring them. Then, they would lure out the ones who would try to rescue their injured comrades and strive to extend their hands of death towards them.

It was a nightmarish method that took advantage of those who had a sense of fellowship, of those who could leave no man behind.

Why did he remember something like this at this moment? That was because—

Subaru: “Shi—”

The instant that he felt something was wrong, a dark light flashed in the alley next to the fallen Flop.

Immediately after, a sharp, frontal strike smacked and blew Subaru away, who preemptively threw his hands up in an effort to protect his head.

Subaru: “Gaahh?!”

Eating the hard strike completely, the blown-away Subaru hit the back of his head hard on the ground. His vision went white and the ringing in his ears became loud again. While that was happening, he was pushed further back with momentum, rolling over once.

Subaru tried to discern the true form of the strike, and the distance from which it was launched. Unable to completely block the strike, he stretched his hand to his forehead, where he felt a warm sensation. It was likely that his forehead was cut from the hard strike and—

Subaru: “—ah?”

His right hand, which he attempted to use to touch his forehead had been blown off at the forearm onwards, between wrist and elbow.

Subaru: “G-Gyaaaaaaahhhh!”

His right arm, which showed its jagged cross-cut with white bone and pink muscle fibres, pumped blood out energetically in sync with his heartbeat. Panicked, he tried to stop the flowing blood by putting pressure on the wound, but the palm of his left hand was also cut down the middle, his crushed fingers each all facing a different direction.

It was proof that he had unfashionably suffered an attack from the opponent.

First of all, if he were to say that, running to Flop’s side without any precaution had been a mistake.

Mistake, mistake, mistakemistakemistakemistakemissmissmissmissmiss—

???: “—Ahem”

Holding the overflowing blood, Subaru fell into panic, triggered by pain and a sense of loss.

A man holding an axe in one hand cleared his throat in front of that Subaru—He was a figure that appeared from the alley. A young adult who tied up his orange hair with a bandana. It was Todd.

He was not hiding his face this time.

The malicious eyes Subaru had personally seen at the bar. Subaru had not mistook the true identity behind them for someone else or other.

As expected, Todd had set an attack with the full intention to kill Subaru.

Subaru: “Ugi-giiiiiiiiiiiiiii…!”

The molars he was biting down on cracked and Subaru glared at Todd with bloodshot eyes.

He did not know himself if the meaning behind that glare was anger, hate, or more shamefully, just a plea for his life. Nevertheless, Todd’s response was cold.

He, showing a face that did not present much emotion, traced the bladed edge of the axe which destroyed Subaru’s arms.

Todd: “I need to make sure to properly sharpen this or it’s no good, my bad my bad.”

He said that lightly while reflecting on his actions.

Subaru: “Kah…”

Todd: “Alright.”

Opening his eyes wide, Subaru attempted to form words with his trembling tongue. However, Todd was indifferent to Subaru’s words, and nonchalantly swung his axe upwards.

It was as if he had no interest in Subaru’s words or identity—

Subaru: “Uwaaaahhhhhhh—!!”

Todd: “Woah”

However, before Todd could swing the axe he raised up, someone jumped on his body.

It was not Subaru, groaning in pain due to his destroyed arms. With this situation of Subaru having been rendered useless in a single strike, in order to protect him, a person jumped Todd. Flop.

Taking a knife to his right leg, the good-willed merchant who should have been fighting against intense pain was grabbing onto Todd’s back as if he were going to sink his teeth into him. He looked at Subaru over Todd’s shoulder.

Flop: “Mister! Run away! Run away right no—”

Putting urgency on his slender face, Flop’s strong-willed expression jerked up as he was struck on the chin.

The grappled Todd used his elbow to forcefully hit Flop. The young adult, being far divorced from violence, was easily peeled off.

Then, facing the fallen Flop, Todd raised his axe.

Subaru: “Sto…”

Todd: “One, two aaand three!”

Subaru was not given the chance to stop him. Todd lightly exclaimed and next, an intense, sharp sound of water splashing reverberated.

Hit by Todd’s elbow, Flop, facing upwards, received the blade of an axe to the face. The young man, having his entire face and head split in two, swiftly became a corpse. Blood flowing, brain matter spilling, his arms and legs twitching.

Witnessing the alleyway steadily becoming soaked with blood, Subaru’s mouth fell open in disbelief.

Pain, confusion and rejuvenated fear. Subaru’s normal thought process was stolen by nothing but those emotions.

Just, what was the man in front of him?

Subaru: “I get …”

Todd: “Hm?”

Subaru: “I get, I get that you resent me. I get it…”

Avoiding the blood from the dead Flop, Todd turned to face Subaru as he spoke to him.

Subaru’s tears and mucus actively gushed out in thick drops. Blood flowed from his broken molars and additionally, he was covered in the blood spurting from his right arm. Subaru was in quite a horrible state.

He had not wet himself this time, but that was no comfort of any sort.

He had yet again let Flop die.

He had devised a method in which he thought he could save him, but because of Subaru’s inadequacy, Flop had died. He had let him die with a face unpresentable to his sister, Medium.

Subaru: “But everyone else…everyone else! Don’t…bring them into…it!”

There was a reason to resent him.

It was hard to admit that it was justified, but it was a natural from what had transpired between Subaru and Todd.

That was why it was inevitable that he would come after Subaru. But, to involve other people for that was against the rules. It was a cowardly act. It was far from just and fair. That was evil. Was that not evil?

Subaru was at long last even starting to lose the mental faculties to verbally assault his opponent.

Listening to his statement, Todd hummed “Aaah” in a small voice,

Todd: “You, what do you mean by resent?”

He spoke, standing in the bloody alleyway, as he craned his head in question, wiping the blood that had reached his cheeks.

Taking in that naive-sounding attitude and answer, Subaru held his breath for a moment, but quickly a violent emotion he could not control burst out. With spit flying, he said “Don’t you dare play dumb!”,

Subaru: “Ambushing us, setting traps… relentlessly pursuing me…!”

Relentlessly, he had relentlessly been pursued and cornered.

No matter what action Subaru would take, he would anticipate and stay one step ahead to kill him with certainty. Meticulously preparing and laying out traps.

Going through that much effort to target Subaru. There was no point in feigning ignorance now. That was just being unreasonably stubborn.

It was a desecration of Flop's death. Embarrassing Subaru, was this his way to vent his anger?

Subaru: "Are you…"

Todd: "I don't know what you're misunderstanding, but killing you isn't because of resentment or anything, obviously. I found a dangerous-looking guy in town. Of course I'd kill no questions asked."

Subaru: "…"

Todd: "You kill a poisonous snake not because you resent it, but because you fear it. For that, you'd use anything at your disposal to kill it."

Saying that it was nothing more and nothing less than that, Todd neatly picked off the bits of hair and skin that was stuck to his axe. Were those the fragments of Flop's destroyed head? Subaru could only stay still in shock.

There was no lie in Todd's composed response and attitude. He even responded with a smile.

Since the beginning till now, Todd's attacks against Subaru proved that he was serious about his words.

Todd regarded Subaru as dangerous and could not help but kill him.

That was why he would not listen to him, not let him do anything, and nor would he try to interrogate Subaru for any information.

Also, he did not hate him for the deed done in the jungle. The only impression that Todd had gotten out of that, was that Subaru was a dangerous being.

As a consequence, Todd would unemotionally and dispassionately try to kill Subaru.

Todd: "You are the same as me. —I will not give you time."

Saying that, Todd put his foot on Subaru's chest and kicked him.

Unable to resist, Subaru fell down backwards, facing upwards. Todd straddled the fallen Subaru and raised his axe.

Subaru widened his eyes. He looked for the correct words.

Returning by Death, he would find the throughline behind various events. That was how Subaru seized victory. However, this strategy that worked even on Sin Archbishops had moments where it did not work.

That was when—

Subaru: "—Wai"

Todd: "I won't wait."

—That was when the opponent was a coldhearted cutthroat.

3

Flop: "—Mister, it's no good to have a scowl on your face."

Subaru: "—Hic"

Flop: "Good fortune won't come to anyone who doesn't have the time to… Wh-What's the matter? Your face has suddenly gone pale?"

Upon seeing an axe coming down right on their head, surely most people's faces would be drained of blood.

Without thinking, Subaru put his hands to his own face, cold from the lack of blood. Relief and fear churned within him, as the hands that felt that coldness confirmed the truth that he was alive and well.

Subaru: "Damn it, again…"

What should he do? Subaru did not possess even the slightest idea.

In regard to time, all the events that had happened to Subaru had transpired in only twenty minutes. Within those twenty minutes, Subaru had already lost his life five times.

Even during the last round at the Pleiades Watchtower, he had piled up over fifteen experiences of Deaths in search of victory, but then, there was confidence that progress was being made step-by-step.

But this time, he had nothing.

The corpses of Natsuki Subaru had accumulated, but he did not really feel they were contributing to his victory.

If there was one thing that could be said, it was—

Subaru: "—Even now, I'm being watched."

Already, Todd was observing Subaru with Flop.

Consequently, the moment he separated from Flop, Todd would mercilessly use Flop as bait.

It would be a different story if Subaru had the ruthlessness to be able to use Flop as a decoy, but since he could not do that, if Flop were assaulted, Subaru would put forth every effort to save him.

This was different from the time he had weighed the safety of Rem against the welfare of Todd and company.

Flop had been kind to utter strangers, or rather, to Subaru's group . Subaru did not have it in him to choose an option that would leave him for dead.

So, carrying out a strategy on his own apart from Flop was impossible.

Simultaneously, the option for Subaru to return to the inn had also been snatched away.

It was not clear at what point in time Todd had noticed Subaru's presence, but if he had been discovered on the way to the tavern, the location of the inn, Rem's whereabouts, had not been exposed.

Yes, Rem's location had not been found out. That was quite believable.

Supposing Rem's whereabouts had been found out, Todd would be sure to make use of Rem, and utilize her in order to kill Subaru more systematically. It was ironic that his faith in Todd's cunning conversely became proof that Rem had not fallen into his hands.

Subaru: "Anyway…"

While biting his lip and covering his face with his hand, Subaru desperately turned his head.

Time, somehow there was not enough time.

If he parted ways with Flop, Todd would begin his offensive immediately.

On the contrary, waiting for his offensive and counter attacking—Well, he was not the sort of opponent that could be beaten even if his first attack were avoided. Since Subaru had no weapons, he would have to eliminate his opponent's fighting strength in a single strike. No way.

If they escaped to the main street, Todd would recklessly drive a dragon carriage and kill by running them over.

Even if they avoided the rampaging dragon carriage, the chances that he would then take advantage of the chaos in the street were high. On top of that, the rampaging dragon carriage would drag in uninvolved bystanders. No way.

If they chose some other route, each and every alley would be his hunting ground.

North, east, south, and west, keeping an eye out in all directions was impossible. Even if they dealt with his first attack, in the end the plan to counterattack would be the same, and their lack of fighting power lay ahead. No way.

Would the best thing to do after all be rush to the Tavern with Flop, and before Todd could get ready to attack the tavern, prepare fighting forces to intercept him?

The obstacle would be how seriously he could take the drunk Rowan, but right now this should be the plan with the highest chance of victory that he could think of. No other move came to mind.

Subaru: “Fuck, fuck…”

What a troublesome opponent to have made an enemy of.

In the case of Sin Archbishops, they had the nice point of their reliance on their Authority turning their strengths into weakness. Since by working out the mechanism of their Authority, conversely the weak points of those guys would become evident.

However, Todd did not have that. He would use anything he can. He had stated so himself.

He did not rely on anything, and he did not take damage to the surroundings into consideration either.

After killing Subaru, how on earth he planned to explain that to the people around him, even that was a complete unknown. No consideration had been given to what would come afterward whatsoever.

In order to kill what must be killed, there was a fear of superfluous thoughts interrupting.

Flop: “Mister? You alright? If something’s wrong, going back to the inn would be…”

Subaru: “N-No! Hell no! That’s a bad idea.”

He responded with great force, and Flop stared in wonder at that voice of Subaru’s.

Having done that, Subaru seriously cursed his own mental fragility. If he displayed such odd behavior, Todd would end up becoming suspicious.

If that happened, the valuable advantage of Return by Death would disappear.

Beyond what he had already grasped, the only way Subaru could take advantage of Todd was his preconception that his presence was not known to Subaru.

Ambush and trap, escape and counterattack, whichever means he utilized Todd could not be made aware of what Subaru was aware of.

Well, actually—

Subaru: “—Wait.”

Suddenly, as Subaru was desperately thinking of countermeasures against Todd, a thought crossed his mind.

Todd did not stick to any one way of doing things, or even take damage to the surrounding into consideration. —Still, he paid no mind to damage to the surroundings. That was not damage to himself.

Rather, this surprise attack was because he wished to drastically diminish the damage to himself.

Todd had stated it himself, with his own mouth.

You kill a poisonous snake not because you resent it, but because you fear it, he had said.

So he had said, then—

Subaru: “—TODD! I know you’re here!”

Flop: “Wha wha wha?!”

Abiding by a thought that flashed through his mind, Subaru shouted at the top of his lungs.

Startled, Flop jumped at the sudden occurrence. However, it was more than likely that Flop had not been the only one.

Todd, who had been tailing and keeping a close eye on Subaru and Flop, should have been startled as well.

Counting on Todd's moment of bewilderment, Subaru sharpened his glare, contorted his expression menacingly. While holding up the nastiest, most evil-looking demeanor possible, he swept his gaze around,

Subaru: "What a persistent bastard! Here I thought you had perished for good after all that went down, but it seems you managed to survive by some devil's luck! However, don't think I'll let you get away this time! I'll fucking kill you!"

Using the most threatening voice he could muster, Subaru spewed curses imbued with malice and hostility.

In a way his voice would definitely reach Todd no matter where in the alleyway he was hiding, and so that the message "Natsuki Subaru has caught on to your presence" would be conveyed.

Subaru: "Do you seriously think you can win in a fight against me? That's beyond hilarious! You make me laugh, hahahahaha! Can't wait to see it again, the pathetic way you look running away, that is!"

Revealing his two trumpcards of provocation and mockery, Subaru bursted out in laughter at the middle of the alleyway.

"Thank god I don't have stage fright", thought Subaru as this was the only time he was sincerely thankful for his shameless personality. If it were not for that, the tremble in his voice, the fear on his face, and the terror in his eyes would have been exposed.

It was thanks to Natsuki Subaru's lousy personality that he was able to conceal those emotions.

Flop: "M-Mister?"

Subaru: "Shush. Flop-san, be quiet."

Shutting up Flop who had been completely dumbfounded by Subaru's sudden change, Subaru pulled him by the arm and began walking brazenly.

Returning via the way they came was not possible. For starters, it had been confirmed Todd's hiding laid somewhere over there, probably.

Hence, he stopped in the middle of his tracks, and while turning his head toward the depth of the alleyway,

Subaru: "Oh yea, you're welcome to come at me any time. I shall rip you to shreds, as you wish."

He was not sure whether Todd would get it, but he added his middle finger as his last provocation.

Doing so, Subaru was able to hide the pounding of his heartbeat while heading towards the end of the alleyway wearing an audacious smile.

Subaru: "…"

Honestly, that was a complete gamble.

There was a chance that Todd would become enraged from Subaru's provocations, and jump into the alleyway whilst swinging his axe, which would not have been a completely unlikely scenario at all. — However, Subaru trusted that it would not come to pass.

Todd would not go into a fit of rage. That man was the type that would gradually search for the best move in a composed manner and carry it out.

That was why, the bluffs Subaru had been dishing out should be able to work on Todd.

Having spotted Subaru in the street and developed an intent to kill, if Todd's train of thought were followed, he would have most likely come to the conclusion that Subaru must be eliminated because, to him, Subaru seemed like a ticking time bomb. Choosing a surprise attack as the method to rope in and grasp victory in his hands was just a means to the end, as long as it worked, then all would be well. If that was no longer suitable for execution, he would just move onto the next best option.

Todd had not been particular with his methods.

That was the difference between him and the Sin Archbishops. Subaru would use that adaptability of Todd to his advantage.

Subaru: “Next up is…”

He carried out the strategy that had popped in his head in the heat of the moment, but the next steps had yet to be decided.

If Todd’s caution toward Subaru grew stronger, that would mean spare time until the next wave of attack existed. While the chance was in his hands, Subaru must make a decision between “Fight” or “Flight”.

Choose “Fight”, then it would be necessary to get Rowan from the bar involved. As long as no better alternative showed up, borrowing his strength would be the best bet.

Choose “Flight”, Subaru would have to go to the inn and grab Rem, then escape from the city. He felt bad, but he would have to ask Flop and Medium to come along as their safety were most likely in jeopardy.

Then, in the case that they decide to escape from the city, the place Subaru can go to was—

Subaru: “—So that was why”

Flop: “Mister?”

Though he stayed on guard of the alleyway behind, but, in that instant, Subaru’s eyes had become bloodshot.

The fear toward Todd, remorse toward Flop, concern toward Rem, affection toward Emilia, longing toward Beatrice, all of those had, more or less, been forgotten in that instant.

Forgotten, having grasped the feeling that had surfaced, Subaru firmly closed his eyes.

Then—

Subaru: “—We need to get out of Guaral as fast as possible, before my bluffs are seen through.”

4

After deciding the next course of action, Subaru wasted no time.

Even after he got out of the alleyway with his plan in motion, Todd did not make any moves. It must have been because he had become extra cautious due to Subaru’s provocations, which proved to be effective.

However, the effects of those bluffs could only last so long.

Subaru: “He’ll definitely catch on soon. We have to get out of here as fast as we can…”

Their only option was to run away.

Making up his mind, Subaru gave Flop a brief explanation and took him along, towards the place they had just left—returning to the inn which they departed from before he had met his demise five times, they dashed up the stairs.

Then, after pounding on the door to the room occupied by Rem and the others, they rushed inside hurriedly.

Subaru: “Rem! Are you oka… whoa?!”

Medium: “Uwah! What, so it was you guys! Had almost killed you there!”

The door left wide open, Subaru’s neck was against the icy blade of a halted machete. Its welder Medium gave a “Sowwy sowwy” apologetically as she sheathed her weapon.

Behind Medium, further inside the room, was Rem who watched that whole exchange as she widened her eyes,

Rem: “Wh-What was this about, all of a sudden. I thought you had left yet you came back so soon…”

Subaru: “Rem!”

Rem: "—Hic."

Surprised by his sudden return, Rem began berating Subaru as the color of his face changed. But instead of stopping to hear everything she had to say, he rushed to her side and threw his arms around her.

Her breath caught in her throat, and her shoulders shrunk in, with her slender body being embraced so suddenly.

And then,

Rem: "…Please let go of me."

Subaru: "…Ah, yeah, that was my bad. Got a little bit too carried away there…"

Rem: "I-I understand that. From the looks of it, something serious must have happened."

She calmly pulled him off herself once he had made sure she was truly safe.

Subaru steeled himself for the rebuking that never came. Rem instead sighed for a good moment, let slide his behavior and then continued,

Rem: "Well then. What happened?"

Subaru: "…I got spotted by a really bad guy. I managed to give him the slip, but that won't really help us for long. We can't stay here anymore. I know we just got here, so I'm really sorry but"

Rem: "So we need to leave the city, right? I understand. Louis-chan, could you please get our luggage."

She had caught onto the fact that there was no time for an in-depth explanation. So she quietly accepted the current state of affairs.

Of all things that could've happened, Louis really did as Rem told and heaved the luggage onto her back. —Wait, something's off here.

Subaru: “Why… Why haven’t you unpacked? Even though we settled down at the inn…”

Rem: “…”

Subaru: “Wait, Rem, by some chance, did you…”

She remained silent under his inquisitive gaze.

However, her silence was as good as affirming his exact suspicions out loud.

Subaru: “So that’s why… No wonder you accepted my proposal to come here so easily…”

Flop: “—I’m sure you have a lot to mull over, Mister, but now isn’t the time, is it?”

Subaru: “Flop-san.”

Digesting the incomprehensible feeling of Rem’s attitude, Subaru covered his forehead and Flop tapped him on the shoulder. The earnest countenance of Flop urged Subaru to action.

He must not waste the time created by the precious once-in-a-lifetime great charade.

Flop: “My sister, we’re leaving town with these three. I’m told there’s a dangerous paramour after the Mister! We gotta let Missus and Niece-y get away!”

Medium: “Wooah, okay Big Bro! But, like, I already took off my boots?!”

Flop: “So put them back on, my sister! Shoes can be worn any number of times! That’s their strength!”

Medium: “Ohhh! Amazing, Big Bro! You’re a shoe genius!”

After hearing Flop’s determined persuasion, Medium assented and rushed to put on her boots.

Since it was an exchange between siblings, the outsiders did not interfere, but Subaru found that back-and-forth to be highly dubious, as he lifted Rem's body and held her.

Rem: "Wait! At least put me on your back…"

Subaru: "It's an emergency evacuation! And the wooden rack is in their oxcart… Flop-san! Where's the cart?!"

Flop: "At the inn's stable! And let me tell you, it's no exaggeration to say Botecliffe is our third sibling! A cute little brother that we can't leave behind!"

Medium: "Big Bro! Bote-chan is a girl!"

Flop: "A cute little sister!"

Louis: "Ooh! Ooh!"

In spite of the pressing situation, every person coming along was incredibly boisterous, and Subaru hurriedly ran down stairs with Rem in his arms.

Subaru: "Sorry about the noise! Please accept the fee for the room!"

Passing by the inn's reception desk, Subaru and company flew out the door without requesting a refund for not staying.

They went straight to the stables, and found the oxcart tethered with their things inside it.

Subaru: "How's the speed of a Falo if running at full power?!"

Flop: "Hahaha, I haven't let her run at full speed even once. Well my sister, how fast do you think?"

Medium: "I dunno, but probably faster than Big Bro!"

Hearing that unreliable answer, Subaru gave Rem a boost up to the back of the oxcart. Immediately Louis rushed in, and he tossed her up next to Rem, and opened the entrance to the stable.

Flop and Medium got into the coachman's seat, and the preparation to escape was complete.

And then—

Rem: "Um, what is a paramour? What sort of explanation did you give Flop-san?"

Subaru: "Now's not the time! Flop-san, get Botecliffe running at full speed!"

Flop: "Aahh! I know what I'm doing! Run, Botecliffe!!"

Subaru climbed into the back of the cart and Rem pulled on his sleeve with reproachful eyes, but without answering her question Subaru called out to Flop's back.

Hearing that, Flop wielded the reins and struck the tough Brave Ox —Botecliffe, on the back.

And so, the oxcart broke into a run. Slowly.

Subaru: "This is super slow! She's walking!"

Flop: "Botecliffe! Run for me! Listen to your older brother, Botecliffe!"

Rem: "It would appear she does not consider you her brother…"

Rem's words felt like the truth, but Botecliffe's running speed—No, walking speed did not change. At this rate, it would honestly be much better if Subaru carried Rem on his back and everyone ran for it.

And, just as Subaru's sense of urgency was growing in intensity—

Medium: "BOTE-CHAN! RUUUN! Or else, I'm gonna make you dinner!"

Botecliffe: "—Moo!!"

She pulled out her barbarian swords and hoisted them overhead, and Medium shouted while rubbing them together to make sound.

Her smile encompassed her whole face, and perhaps sensing the truth in her words from Medium's behaviour, the next second, Botecliffe let out a loud, deep sound and began ferociously running down the street.

Subaru: "UWOOAAAHH!!"

The intense acceleration and shaking caused swaying, and from the back of the cart Subaru let out a scream.

Flying out of the stable, Botecliffe rushed onto the main street, and the feeling of drifting from the sudden change of direction caused Subaru to nearly be thrown from the back of the cart, but Rem had promptly grabbed his hand.

Subaru: "Ah, that was close! You saved me, Rem! Your hand is so smooth—"

Rem: "Haa?"

Subaru: "Don't let go so quickly!"

Naturally a superfluous thought leaked out, and with his hand released Subaru's head hit the cart. But fortunately, he settled without getting thrown off, and everyone remained on board the running Falo cart.

Continuing on, the Falo cart speedily raced down the road as it headed for the city gate. It drew eyes as it moved left and right, dodging other dragon carriages, ox carts and canine carts.

Subaru: "Once we pass the main road, we should reach the main gate where the inspection was…"

Rem: "It does not seem like things will go that smoothly."

Subaru: "What? Wait, oi oi oi oi!"

Subaru widened his eyes on gazing at what Rem was pointing towards, up ahead of the speeding Falo cart.

In their path stood men clad in armour, engraved with the national seal of the Sword Wolf. They were deployed in a way to block the main road. Imperial Soldiers were attempting to obstruct their path.

Subaru: “It’s Todd, isn’t it?! He changed plans and called for his friends!”

There was no sign of Todd among the Imperial Soldiers that awaited them, but the reason they were obstructing Subaru’s group right now was no doubt because of Todd’s influence.

Receiving Subaru’s taunt at the alleyway, Todd figured he would be at a disadvantage by himself, and so he gathered his comrades. It was definitely a very logical and necessary decision on his part. Subaru hated how correct and appropriate his deci—

???: “—You shits! Don’t think y’all can get away!!”

In place of the absent Todd, at the head of the deployed troops, stood a familiar face.

A man who’s right eye was covered by an eyepatch. His features looking as if someone had painted roughness and wildness directly onto it—It was Jamal. He accompanied Todd and, without a doubt, the man on whom Subaru set a trap on in the Jungle.

Seeing that Todd was alive, it was no surprise that he was alive as well but—

Jamal: “You’ve got some balls sending a Witchbeast at us! You’re fucking dead!”

Subaru: “…He simplyhates me. It’s kind of a relief that way.”

Watching Jamal shout in anger with bloodshot eyes, Subaru felt peace of mind, knowing that his attitude was more human.

However, having said that, that did not mean that Jamal’s existence as a threat was gone. Including Jamal, the lineup of Imperial Soldiers were a plain threat.

Just how were they going to break through?

Medium: “Big Bro, hold them reins tight. I’m counting on ya.”

Flop: “No worries, give it to them sis!”

In the limited time Subaru had to make a decision, before he could choose his next action, the duo at the driver’s seat, the O’Connell siblings Flop and Medium, gave their answer first.

Subaru did not have the chance to stop her. Medium positioned her legs at the tip of the driver’s seat and leaned forward, falling—

Medium: “—Hup!”

Kicking the seat using her feet, her body shot forward with the speed of an arrow.

Machetes-drawn, she flew in a straight line and plunged into the enemy’s formation head-on.

Medium: “Hiyaaaahh!!”

Clawing the earth with her heel, Medium forcibly stopped herself using the enemy line. She then swung her arms.

Her machetes swept forward as it ravaged the air, generating an intense shockwave. The armoured Imperial soldiers were blown back far and wide, spewing blood.

Subaru: “Sh-She’s strooooong!!”

Rem: “Is that how you compliment a girl?”

Subaru: “What else am I meant to say?! It is a compliment! Medium-san’s strong as hell!”

Despite Rem’s coldhearted comment on his honest opinion, Subaru exclaimed loudly at Medium’s unexpected fighting prowess.

Hearing Subaru’s voice, Flop, sitting at the driver’s seat, proudly scratched his nose.

Flop: “How’s that? That’s my sister’s true strength! I’m utterly hopeless at fighting, so my sister and I cover for each other and…"

Subaru: "Crush your weaknesses right? I understand now!"

Flop: "You get it!"

As if Subaru's answer was to his liking, Flop's eyes shone brightly and he flashed his white teeth.

This was second-hand information from Flop himself, but Subaru could confirm it to be true with his own eyes now.

Medium rampaged on, overpowering the Imperial Soldiers that were blocking their way one after another, forcefully clearing a path for the Falo cart to get through.

Subaru: "At this rate…"

???: "—Don't get so cocky, you shitty bitch."

Medium: "Ukyan?!"

Seeing the light at the end of the tunnel, Subaru pumped his fists. It was at this moment.

At that moment, a flash of a drawn sword assaulted Medium. She blocked the attack with her machetes but was sent flying as if she were paper.

Medium was shocked by the attack. The man who sent her flying also wielded blades in both hands—It was Jamal.

Jamal: "We've already had our numbers reduced, I ain't gonna lose any more just from this scuffle! Y'all hurry up and prostrate yourselves under my foot!!"

Medium: "Kyaah! Waah! Big Bro, this guy's strong!"

Subaru: "For real?!"

Angrily showering them with words of abuse, Jamal swung his dual blades and attacked Medium. She blocked the strikes, but Subaru could tell, even from an outsider perspective, that she was inferior in fighting strength.

It was his first time seeing Jamal fight properly, but his skill was far higher than the impression Subaru had got of him before. —It made Subaru think that perhaps, the Elgina he had set on Todd's group to beat them in the jungle had been beaten back by none other than Jamal himself.

Subaru: "This is bad, there's not enough distance!"

Thanks to Medium's hard fighting, the number of Imperial Soldiers blocking their path had decreased.

It seemed possible to break through by relying on the Falo cart's momentum and charging in, but that was only if Jamal, who was standing imposingly in the middle of the street, was not there.

As long as Jamal was there, they could not hope to get away.

Flop: "—Sis!"

At that moment, Flop called out.

The cornered Medium glanced in the direction of her brother's loud voice. Perhaps, he was about to yell out words of advice that would help turn around this impossible situation. Subaru hoped, but alas—

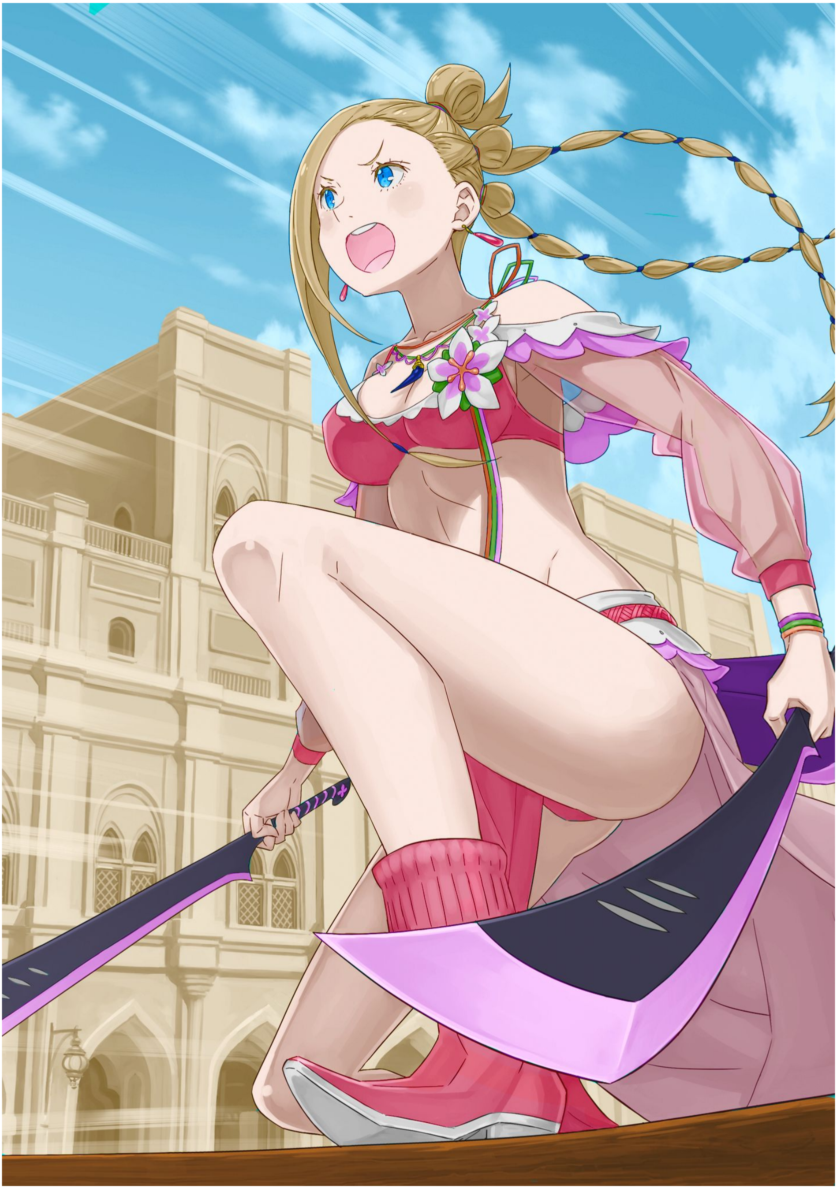
Flop: "—You can do it!!"

The advice Flop shouted out, was unmistakably just telling her to believe in herself more.

Hearing those words, Subaru's mind went blank. Even Jamal was dumbfounded.

However, for Medium O'Connell, for a person with who was bonded through blood, the reaction was different.

Medium: "I can do it—!!"



Receiving her brother's encouragement, Medium roared. Her machetes screeching loudly alongside.

From her stance focusing solely on defense, she switched to a ferocious offense. A flurry of blades assaulted Jamal's entire body.

Jamal: "You think a desperate attack like that will work on an Imperial Soldier?!"

Medium: "Ugii!"

However, Jamal parried her ferocious blows with his dual swords, striking her with his own counterattacks.

Medium grimaced from the pain, blood trickling out of the lacerations she had sustained on her arms and legs. Despite that, she continued to stay on the offensive by putting in the effort she could have used to defend herself instead, pressing ahead with preventing Jamal from moving away.

Thinking of the possibility that Medium would stay there to pin Jamal to his spot, Subaru attempted to let out a desperate shout, "No, don't!", and then—

Rem: "Take this."

Subaru: "Woah?! Rem, what are you… Rope?"

Right as he was about to shout, Rem had shoved the rope on the platform into his chest.

It appeared to be quite long, also thick and sturdy, something worthy of being used to secure cargo to the cart. However, in front of the puzzled Subaru, who was unsure of what to do with the rope,

Rem: "—Person with the eyepatch!"

Rem called out as she stood up, carrying a crate that had been stacked on the platform, and then flung it towards Jamal with a gallant throw.

Jamal whirled around, responding to the call with an, “Ah?”. Once he saw the crate heading his way before his very eyes, he easily sliced the wooden box in half with an annoyed swing of his arm.

And then, his whole body was showered with the spices that had been packed inside the crate.

Jamal: “Gh, whoa?! Wha… this is…”

Jamal waved his arm around from the discomfort, his vision obstructed by the scattering powder. At that moment, Medium tried to take advantage of the opening that had been created, aiming for his back with her machete, but—

Rem: “Medium-san!”

The Falo cart had arrived at Medium and Jamal’s battlefield, quicker she could do so. And then, Subaru held the rope Rem had given him high above his head, throwing it towards Medium.

Looking at it, Medium prioritized grabbing the rope over attacking Jamal.

Medium: “I got it!”

Subaru: “I gotcha!”

The moment he heard Medium’s voice, Subaru endured the added weight to the rope with his entire being. He thrust his feet into the loading platform, supported Medium’s weight, and helped her return.

Seeking to jump back onto the Falo cart, Medium took a step forward, about to make a jump with the aid of the rope.

Subaru and Rem would retrieve her, and then they would break through the front gates, heading out—

Jamal: “I said, don’t think you can just escape!”

The next moment, a furious Jamal cut through the cloud of spices, bursting forth from it.

Like that, he set his sights on Medium's back as she positioned herself to jump away, ruthlessly attempting to bring down his dual swords on her.

In a nick of time, Medium would be felled into a sea of blood from Jamal's strike—.

Jamal: "Buh,"

Rem: "This is payback for what happened by the river!"

Jamal's face was smacked by the wooden rack that Rem had tossed from the platform.

The rack that had been handed out to the O'Connell siblings fell apart upon colliding with Jamal's face, having completely finished its role.

Jamal was flipped over, and Medium returned to the Falo cart. She threw out her machetes onto the platform, and then proceeded to lie down with her arms outstretched.

Medium: "Oh no, no, oh no! That was close! Big bro, that was close!"

Flop: "Oh, indeed, dear sister! You two also did very well, Mister and Missus! You saved us!"

Medium: "Really, really! Thanks! You saved us!"

Subaru: "No… not at all. We're the ones who were saved."

Medium, who had made her way back onto the loading platform, and Flop, who had cheered for that fact.

However, the siblings' gratitude was misplaced. In this city, the two had continued to save Subaru and his group, right from the beginning and to the end.

On top of that, he had gotten the siblings involved in his group's circumstances. How could he make it up to them?

Gate guard: “Halt—! Halt! Hal… Whoa?!”

Although a gate guard tried to stand in the way in an effort to stop the speeding Falo cart, he ended up leaping to the side in order to avoid it.

The Falo cart did not let up its momentum as it passed the guard, heading for the front gate with Subaru and his companions on board. The cart would zip out of the city at once, whilst throwing the queue for the inspection process into disarray.

What an outrageous situation. Subaru and company had only stayed at Guaral for less than three hours.

However, they managed to drive past the inspection area, and passed through the front gate. Subaru wanted Botecliffe to do her best, since she would need to keep running in order to shake off the group’s pursuer.

And then, he would have to tell Flop and Medium about—

???: “…”

Amidst the uncontrollable shaking of the platform, the cart blew past the front gate and exited the city.

Subaru’s field of vision opened up, and he was able to discern the wide plains and the horizon. It was just as the cart was about to finally make its escape.

—When a silhouette plummeted towards Subaru from right above the gates, an axe raised high into the air.

???: “Orghhhh!”

A single strike was swung downwards, descending upon the crown of Subaru’s head as if it were slicing a piece of bamboo in half.

The blow was one that Rem nor Medium, as well as neither Flop nor Louis, were able to react to. It was nightmarish, something that could not be guarded against if it had not been predicted.

However—

Subaru: "—I knew it."

Subaru received the axe strike that rained down on him with the machete Medium had dropped on the platform.

Subaru had guessed that the instant he and his companions had succeeded in their escape, the moment where they would let down their guard the most, would be capitalized, and a single blow would be driven into the target—Subaru's head.

—If it were Todd, that would be what he would do. The horrors Subaru had experienced five times over had assured him of it.

Todd: "I should've killed you, after all!"

Subaru: "Ghk…!"

Todd forcefully pressed his axe further with malice gleaming behind his eyes, attempting to split Subaru open.

It was a good thing for Subaru to receive the axe with the machete, but his hands had grown numb from the impact, and it was only a matter of time until he would drop the weapon.

Neither Rem nor Medium would make it in time to the lock of weapons that was placing Subaru's life on the line.

Even though he had managed to dodge a fatal strike, if things went on like this, he would be killed by To—

???: "Aa, uu!!"

Subaru: "Woah!"

All of a sudden, the force behind Todd's axe had grown weak.

When Subaru glanced over to see what was happening with a frown, he saw Louis clinging onto Todd, her arms secured around his body. She shook her blond hair loose, struggling desperately to put an end to Todd's act of violence.

Todd: “Don’t get in the way, kid!”

Louis: “Auh!”

Shaking off Louis’s interference, Todd mercilessly slammed his elbow into her face. Elbowed by him, Louis let out a shriek and fell over.

Subaru: “—Hic, son of a bitch!”

Witnessing that event unfold, Subaru gritted his back teeth as he exerted his strength to push back against Todd.

Todd stumbled back from the sudden action, creating distance between himself and Subaru after the brief moment where their weapons had locked together. However, this was within Todd’s range. He raised the long handle of his axe. The next blow was about to come.

Before that—

Subaru: “—You’re watching, right?! Do it, Kuna! Holly!”

Subaru shouted out with all of his might before Todd could unleash his axe strike.

He was unsure of how far his voice had echoed across the plains.

He was unsure, but—

Kuna: “Bye, Subaru. Don’t forget, I’ll be watching.”

Holly: “Yep~!”

The voices reverberated inside his skull, almost like a reply—in an instant, the sound of something hurtling through the wind pierced the air.

And then, it flew straight across, absorbing itself into Todd’s side—

Todd: “Kah,”

With a small cry of pain, Todd was sent flying at breakneck speed as his body jerked to the side.

Unable to keep himself boarded on the platform, he was thrown off the Falo cart as he spun sideways, tumbling to the solid ground without managing to break his fall.

He rolled twice, and then thrice, his figure growing increasingly distant.

Subaru: “Hah… hah…”

Rem: “Wh-what just…?”

Todd was now absent from the Falo cart’s platform, having been tossed off. Subaru dropped to his knees as the machete fell on the spot, and Rem was propping up Louis, who had received an elbow strike, in her arms.

Rem also had a confused expression on her face from what had just occurred, but Subaru had a sense of confidence, one which told him that they would receive assistance if they could make it past the gates.

The origin of his certainty came from—

Subaru: “That nasty fucking Emperor… I’ll make sure to punch you when I get back…”

Subaru spat out that venom as he sprawled across the Falo cart’s platform, whilst picturing the face of the villainous man who must have known everything.

Chapter 19:
A Vexing Reunion

1

—The man remained motionless, sprawled out on top of the stiff soil.

???: "…"

He was neither dead, nor asleep.

He simply closed his eyes, organizing his thoughts in silence as he adjusted his unsteady breaths.

Assembling them, putting them together, building them back—

????: "Hey, you alive?"

???: "—Yeah, I'm alive."

As someone called out to him overhead, he opened his eyes to see the face of a familiar man.

He felt like the man was in possession of exceptional talent, since the boorish impression he gave off persisted even when looking at him upside-down. Anyway, that was completely unrelated to resolving the current situation.

???: "What happened to those guys?"

????: "They managed to pass through me, and ran away as fast as they could after they threw you out. You're… you better do something about that. I can't help but feel pain whenever I look at it."

???: "That? …Ah, you mean this."

He sat up while scratching his head, glancing towards the side of his body, where the other man had pointed at with a finger. Just then, he spotted the thick arrow embedded into his body.

If the arrow piercing his left side had been positioned slightly higher than where it was, then it might have pierced his heart.

Although the injury had nearly taken his life, he had few strong emotions about it. Not just about how it looked, but also about the fact that his own flesh had been pierced.

Todd: “It’s not really as painful as it looks, alright? Though it’ll be difficult to move for the time being…”

Jamal: “Dumbass. Who said they were worried about you? I said it’s painful to look at. Hurry up and pull it out.”

Todd: “You’re kinda rough with wounded companions, aren’t you. —And”

Hearing that from his frowning partner, he reluctantly grabbed the lodged arrow. The trouble with arrow wounds was that the arrow needed to be pulled out before the flesh closed around it.

Fortunately, it had only been stuck there a short time, so he was able to pull it out in one go with some exertion.

For the flow of blood, he pressed a torn piece of clothing on the opening of the wound and forcefully compressed it to stop the bleeding.

Todd: “So, here’s the arrow just as you ordered. Now what do we do, huh.”

Jamal: “If it’s a deep wound, you should withdraw and rest. As for those guys that got away, I’ll take some people along and crush them. We’ll show those bastards ourselves that they’re prey… “

Todd: “—That’d be a bad move, Jamal.”

Jamal: “What?”

The man dictating the course of action from here—Jamal, was reined in by his hand.

Todd understood why Jamal would want to pursue the fleeing enemies who had made fools of them to get payback. But, if they proceeded with a hasty offensive move, the ones who would be met with a painful experience would be those here.

Todd: “Think about it. Why exactly, did those guys brazenly enter Guaral? Considering what they themselves did, it’s obvious we’d be in this city.”

Jamal: “…Unless they’re brainless idiots.”

Todd: “—They deliberately marched in. They went as far as to conceal an ambush outside the city.”

With a glance, Jamal looked at the arrow that had just been extracted and cleared his throat.

Jamal, as an experienced military man, had the ability to perceive the direction from which an arrow had been fired and its accuracy, and was able to determine from how high it had been shot.

Naturally, he would reach the same conclusion as Todd himself.

Jamal: “If that’s right, their aim is…!”

Todd: “To lure out and hunt us Imperial Soldiers who’d entered Guaral. If we abruptly chased after them with our entire military strength, or rather, if we pursued them with our small force, we’d be playing in the palm of their hand. —Which of us would be the prey, I wonder.”

Jamal: “…”

Gritting his teeth in frustration, Jamal scowled in the direction their opponents had fled.

On the inside, Jamal looked like he was being swayed by gut-boiling fury, but Todd knew that painful feeling all too well—that was something he wouldn’t say. Rather than fury, it was admiration that had taken hold in his heart.

Brazenly using oneself as a decoy, successfully taking advantage of unpreparedness to lure out a foolish opponent.

He was certainly a formidable enemy, a child of war.

Todd: “I seriously fucked up, failing to kill you…”

While looking the same direction as Jamal, he softly muttered that.

And then, he took a breath, “Ahh” as if he had pulled himself together,

Todd: “Seems we’ll have an opportunity for revenge. —They’ll come back, no matter what.”

Jamal: “When that time comes, I’ll show absolutely no mercy.”

Todd silently nodded in approval of Jamal stifling his anger.

Then, for the time being he would confirm this battle as a loss. Moreover—

Todd: “Jamal.”

Jamal: “Oh. …What’s with those hands?”

Todd’s legs were stretched out on the ground, both hands extended in his direction, and Jamal frowned.

Todd tilted his head at the incomprehension, “Just what it looks like”, he continued,

Todd: “Piggyback ride.”

Jamal: “Die alone!”

He shrugged his shoulders, really, that was not a response of true friendship.

2

Stepping strongly on the hard ground, Subaru marched forward with long strides.

As he neared his destination, his restlessness increased and his ability to suppress the need to jump out from the ox cart decreased. And so, with the moment of arrival finally at hand, his body leapt forward with vigor.

He felt like he heard voices trying to stop him, but they all went in one ear and out the other.

Shaking them off, he headed straight for the target building. A wooden building, noticeably larger than the rest, located at the center of the settlement. Entering it, he drew the gazes of several people inside.

And—

???: "—So you have returned. Quicker than my expectations even."

An arrogant man brazenly declared, sporting an oni mask.

Saying nothing towards his haughty attitude, Subaru charged straight forward. Letting the momentum carry him, he, without hesitation, peeled off the mask of the man who looked down on him.

Letting his mask be removed with little resistance, the man's graceful features became exposed.

Grabbing the collar of that unbearable person with his demonic face, Subaru pulled him up into a standing position. Next, he brandished his fist, ready to send his fist flying into that face and—

???: "Subaru, wait."

Just as Subaru was about to punch him into oblivion, his drawn right arm was forcibly stopped from behind.

A tall figure, who dyed the ends of their hair red. It was this settlement's clan leader, Mizelda, who had stopped him. Wanting to complain about her action, he opened his mouth, about to say "Now? Of all times?".

However, faster than he could object, Mizelda prefaced, saying

“Listen,”

Mizelda: “Not the face. Anything else, I’ll forgive.”

Subaru: “ORAA—!”

Abel: “—Hic.”

Receiving her unwavering answer, Subaru, after a brief moment, delivered his fist directly into Abel’s stretched torso.

Subaru did not know if Abel had expected to be punched in the face but, having been hit in a location he was not ready to be hit in, the man let out a cry of pain and took a few steps back. Not all of Subaru’s pent-up anger was released by just that but—

Subaru: “Don’t think we’re even now, shithead…!”

Abel: “—Hmph, what a greedy man you are.”

The man picked up the oni mask that had fallen to the side and put it back on. The man who always had something to say back—Abel.

Having struck the man who was the source of his dam-level pent-up anger, Subaru harshly exhaled.

For he had travelled for three-plus days, taking the path back, just for this one strike.

3

Flop: “Look sis! Apparently, this is the village of the famous People of Shudraq! It’s in the backwoods of the unexplored regions, just like the rumors say! What a find!”

Medium: “Woah! Amazing, big bro! Look look! Everyone’s abs are ripped just like me! Ripped! Big bro, ripped!”

Flop: “Mega ripped!”

The siblings’ voiced thoughts echoed throughout the settlement. They were seemingly easy-going, no matter where they were.

The duo exchanging their candid opinions were the O'Connell siblings, Flop and Medium. Caught up in the flow of things, they had been invited into the People of Shudraq's settlement.

They were in the middle of the plaza, sitting atop their ox cart, surrounded by the Shudraqians who had gathered in curiosity. Their fearless attitude appeared to be a constant even in different lands and environments. Acting like big shots, they showed not a single emotion remotely resembling trepidation, alertness or anxiety, even while drawing the eyes and attention of many.

However, they should become more aware of the dangers and harms to one's life and body when interacting with others. It would be more normal and appropriate to be scared, because currently, they were being surrounded by a pretty much unknown, wild tribe.

Abel: "You have brought back rather noisy company. Were those people required for your journey? If so, the way you and I see value is different."

Subaru: "I won't deny we value things differently. There's a big difference in how you and I see things. —Saying that, that attitude of yours is really something isn't it?"

Abel: "Hoh?"

Sitting on the floor of the meeting area, Subaru and Abel faced off against each other, much like how they had done a few days prior.

Abel had received Subaru's punch of retribution earlier, but there was no inkling of repentance in the tone of his words. Never mind wanting an apology, he did not plan on giving one anyway.

However, Subaru could not ignore his comment on the siblings.

That was because—

Rem: "Abel-san, we inadvertently got those people involved. They were kind to us when we were stuck standing outside the city… Just because of that."

Abel: "…"

The reason for Subaru's anger was explained instead by Rem.

Unlike last time, the meeting room had not been cleared out, and so members other than Subaru and Abel were also participating in the discourse.

Next to Subaru was Rem, seated seiza-style, and their fellow travelers, Kuna and Holly. Seated next to Abel were the sisters Mizelda and Taritta.

As a side note, on the topic of Louis, she was being looked after by the person closest to her in age, Utakata. She was currently, most likely at the ox cart in the plaza, with the Shuraqian-surrounded O'Connell siblings.

In any case—

Rem: "With their assistance, we were able to return safely. In doing so, they are now being targeted by the city's soldiers…"

Abel: "Incorrect, I shall amend that. The ones targeting us and the two outside are not the city's soldiers. They are the Imperial Soldiers. The ones who serve this country have become your enemy."

Rem & Subaru: "…"

From behind his oni mask, Abel's cold words pierced through Subaru and Rem.

Hearing his dry statement, Rem could only avert her light-blue eyes tiredly. To be honest, that was the undeniable truth of the situation. Subaru understood that.

However, understanding and agreeing with the truth were two different things.

Subaru: "Drawing the ire of the camp's Imperial Soldiers was my mistake. Their hostility is also the result of my choices and actions."

Abel: "That is correct. It is the fate you tied yourself to, even before you encountered the People of Shudraq."

Subaru: “I can’t make excuses for that fate, because the one who made them an enemy is unmistakably me. —But, the one who had to pay for those consequences should have just been me.”

It was true that the majority of the fault fell on Subaru, but the problem here was Abel’s attitude.

From the start, he should have known the danger Subaru’s group would be in if they entered Guaral. He should have noticed the possibility where they were attacked after coming into contact with the surviving Imperial Soldiers.

That was why—

Subaru: “You ordered Kuna and Holly – in advance – to wait for us outside the city. To help us if we were trying to escape the city from pursuers.”

Holly: “For real for real, you guys were in quite a pickle you know~. If me and Kuna weren’t there, Subaru, your head would’ve been split in two by an axe by now~.”

Plunking down into a cross-legged position, Holly stated casually while stuffing her mouth full of dangos. Unlike the person sitting next to her, Kuna, who held an uneasy expression, she did not comprehend the mood of the conversation.

Of course, Subaru was thankful for Holly and Kuna’s help. If not for their assistance, the possibility of his head having been split open back then was quite high.

Subaru: “Using Kuna’s eyes to keep watch and Holly’s bow to support us… A long-range bow and arrow snipe. It’s what you’d call a combo skill with both your talents.”

Kuna: “… No one told me that the situation was that crap though.”

Kuna’s spiritless comment evidently showed that she harbored a sense of guilt towards Subaru’s group.

Saying that however, the guilt that Kuna carried was invalid. That was because the words she had given Subaru before they entered Guaral that had been what had given him the hint he needed.

Had she not advised him, the help that Holly mentioned would have been unattainable.

However—

Subaru: “That kind of thinking only applies to Kuna and Holly. —Someone like you, who foresaw the whole thing, I’m not going to be nice to.”

This was why he had made the first thing he did after coming back to be his strike of retribution on Abel.

If Abel had shown any traces of self-reflection after receiving that, his feelings may have been different. But, mostly as expected, Abel showed no remorse or even any sign that he thought he did something bad.

With his unchanging, arrogant attitude, he toyed around with Subaru’s anger.

Even now, the sharp stare behind his oni mask showed no clouds of doubt.

It was as if he was about to say, “So what of it?”.

Subaru: “Hey, why don’t you say something instead of shutting up.”

Abel: “—So what of it?”

Subaru: “…You actually said it.”

With the aggravating response he had predicted becoming reality, Subaru grit his teeth at Abel’s words and sharpened his glare.

However, Abel coolly let Subaru’s accusatory stare slide and…

Abel: “After returning with vigor and striking me, all you can lay out are dull words of detestment? First off, I warned you from the start, did I not? —That it would not be an easy path.”

Subaru: “Ghh…”

Abel: “Latching onto the closest peace and safety you could find, understand that this was the penalty for not using your head. Out of all the actions any of those defeated soldiers could take, going to the city nearest their burnt camp had the highest probability of occurring. It is common sense.”

Subaru: “Then… Then, you should have said that to begin with!”

Sitting with one knee raised, Abel’s words poked unsparingly at Subaru’s overhastiness.

Still, in the first place, Subaru understood his mistake and acknowledged it. He understood that it had been his lack of thinking and actions beforehand that had caused the unfortunate sequence of events to explode and unfold.

However, Abel had been aware that danger lurked, and let it slide. His actions had directly benefited the enemy—If being allies or enemies was an irrelevant detail, then what he had done was equivalent to setting Subaru up in a trap.

Subaru: “You knew everything from the start. The chances of us encountering the Imperial Army’s survivors, the chances of us having to frantically escape. How, in all that mayhem Rem would…”

Abel: “…”

Subaru: “Anyway! You knew everything. But you kept your mouth shut.”

Letting his mouth run off without thinking, words which should not be spoken almost came tumbling out. Quickly preventing himself from saying any further, Subaru concentrated his anger at Abel, avoiding to look at the face of the person sitting next to him, Rem.

Subaru was getting worked up in his flames of anger. Towards that, Abel cooly—no, coldly, gazed towards him.

Just how much of this world did this man see through with his penetrating gaze.

And, for a person able to see through so much, for what purpose did he toy with Subaru and the others.

Subaru: “Answer me, shithead. Why did you let us…”

Abel: “To save myself from extra work. Nothing more, nothing less.”

Subaru: “Extra work…?”

In response to Subaru’s angry biting look, Abel let out a sound indistinguishable from a sigh.

When Subaru blinked at his response, Abel gently rubbed the ground of the meeting room, and picked up the parched earth in the palm of his hand.

Abel: “Fellows like you value what is seen with your own foolish eyes more than the words of the wise. The intensity of falling raindrops is more eloquent than anything that could come from my mouth.”

Subaru: “…”

Abel: “Thanks to that, you must feel it keenly. —That for you, there is nowhere to run to.”

As he spoke, he sprinkled the dirt from his palm and scattered it.

With just that action, Subaru felt an optical illusion of being terribly and clearly blocked in every direction was very much being thrust toward him.

As the Emperor of the Sacred Vollachian Empire, it was simple to manipulate others with skillful words.

In front of the tough sly fox of an Emperor, Subaru’s complaint was no different from the cries of a caged monkey.

So in reality, Subaru was just left at his wit’s end.

Subaru: “…Ultimately, what is it you want to do?”

Abel: “I have already told you my intentions. To regain what was stolen. To that end, the current Empire is my adversary. It is your enemy as well.”

Subaru: “—. You’re telling me to cooperate with you?”

Abel: “For the time being, I have explained I possess no reason to harm you.”

For the troubled Subaru, Abel’s words seeped in like poison.

Abel’s art of conversation refused to allow for a clear answer to be grasped, and was endowed with cunning as if to mystify Subaru, but, on the other hand, it also felt as though he was attempting to test Subaru.

Again and again, Abel did not make any assertions to Subaru, yet he continued to speak.

Telling him to think for himself, and choose what to take from it.

This time as well, Abel was provoking him to rise to his level if he wanted to argue. Currently, Subaru could not rise to his same level of discussion.

And his Excellency, the Emperor, was not so kind as to wait for Subaru to obediently rise to the occasion.

Subaru: “…So, everything rests in the palm of your hand? I don’t like it.”

Abel: “—. Unfortunately, I hold only some people in the palm of my hand. It is because of the portion I could not control that currently, I am here, sitting upon the dirt.”

Subaru: “…”

In the reply to what Subaru had spit out, Abel’s self-deprecation was audible.

His facial expression was not visible, and the tone of his voice also did not change. Still, it seemed like self-deprecation. It was unusual —No, it was the first time Subaru had heard Abel mock himself.

And it was proof that he had accepted the undeniable reality.

He had allowed his own subordinates to rebel, an uncrowned Emperor, ousted from his throne.

Deep in the jungle, sitting upon the dirt of the Shudraqian meeting place, that situation in particular was evidence that he had made a foolish blunder for which there was no excuse.

Subaru: "…"

While fixing his gaze directly at Abel, Subaru deliberated quietly.

Subaru still was unaware of Abel's true intentions, as well as his own or their own plans of action hereafter. He wished not to be taken for a ride by Abel's calculations yet again, and suffer similar misfortune.

Actually, what the hell was Abel thinking?

Subaru certainly didn't think that Abel would go so far as scheming to bring Subaru over to his side. That he would detect such value in Subaru did not appear plausible.

In spite of that, if there was a reason for Abel to keep Subaru on hand, rather than Subaru's own self, it was an interest in other accessory—

???: "—Mister! The people here are truly delightful and big-hearted! I'm impressed!"

Subaru: "Uwah?!"

Subaru gasped, right in the middle of his serious deliberation.

Losing his footing at the entry to the meeting place, the figure of Flop appeared, his beautiful voice resounding through. In the middle of the meeting place, while he looked out over each face lined up,

Flop: “Oh dear, I apologize for the late greeting! Apparently, it seems the people here are representatives of this village. Oh! Miss Kuna and Miss Holly look-alikes too!”

Kuna: “It is us.”

Holly: “It is~”

Flop: “Oh right! I’m being rude!”

Smoothing down his hair with his hands, Flop briskly moved to the center of the assembly, and bowed wearing a friendly smile.

Flop: “Allow me to correct myself, I’m Flop O’Connell! I do peddling with my sister Medium and Botecliffe. It seems for various reasons we ended up accompanying Mister, Missus, and Niece-y on an incident-filled journey to this position. From now on, everyone, I am in your care!”

Taritta: “Is he being polite or not…”

At Flop’s vigorous greeting, Taritta wore a vexed expression. Then with a glance she peeped at the adjacent Mizelda’s face,

Taritta: “Sister, what shall be done? Outsiders are ordered to stay back…”

Mizelda: “That’s true… Well, he’s a sexy man. I’ll keep him in my room.”

Taritta: “Sister…”

Folding her arms, Mizelda decided on Flop’s treatment by his face.

Mizelda’s judgement by exceedingly simple logic was easy to understand, but seemed troubling to Taritta, who supported her older sister as the chief. Of course, if that alone was the basis for Mizelda’s judgements, Subaru would not have been able to remain in the village, so he thought there must be more to it.

Subaru: “Right, Mizelda-san, there’s one thing I want to check. Flop-san is my guest, or perhaps I should say I decided on my own to bring him along. But, about making him undergo the Lifeblood Ritual…”

Flop: “Lifeblood Ritual? By chance, could that be some kind of traditional welcoming ceremony passed down in this village?! Certainly, I would love to have that experience too!”

Subaru: “It’s a traditional ceremony, but it’s a bit rough to be called welcoming.”

Flop was looking forward to trying the ritual, but even he would likely become reluctant if he were presented with the possibility of being pitted against a Witchbeast. Subaru was afraid that there was a possibility that Flop’s attitude would not change upon hearing that, but either way, he did not want to let it happen.

Abel: “—I knew from the moment we were partitioned by this thin wall, but they are a noisy bunch.”

And now, the one who did not welcome that attitude of Flop’s was the ruthless Emperor donning an oni mask.

It was a stark contrast between the sunny warmth of Flop and the cold blood flowing through Abel. At least, the fact that Abel seemed to have no reason to like Flop made Subaru’s blood freeze.

Flop: “Oh my! What an unusual mask… Is he perhaps the head of the village by chance? I read somewhere that people who have special appearances have special positions!”

At the first chance meeting of the pair, Flop started by referencing Abel’s striking appearance.

Flop’s conclusion from the conspicuous oni mask was understandable, but it was difficult to deem Abel as one of the People of Shudraq. At any rate, the part about the oni mask aside, he was culturally quite far removed from the other Shudraqians. Especially from visuals, his appearance was far too irregular.

Abel: “It is not a poor way of thinking, but lacks attentiveness and prudence. A moment ago, you spoke of your occupation as being that of peddling…”

Flop: “Oh, yeah! My sister’s Botecliffe pulls the ox cart that carries our goods, and we do trade all over the Empire… We are nomadic siblings wandering with the wind!”

With his hand pressed to his chest, Flop responded as if singing.

Outside the building, a voice could be heard saying “That’s my big bro!” from the public square. Even though separated by a thin wall, there was a deep bond between the siblings.

However, even proof of such a wholesome relationship, seemed not to be grounds to Abel to warm his utterly frozen heart.

Upon hearing Flop’s reply, Abel sniffed a small “Hmph.”

Abel: “—Natsuki Subaru, you say you picked these up in the city.”

Subaru: “Don’t go treating people like objects. To start, if I accurately express the state of affairs, a more correct representation is that we were picked up by Flop-san.”

Abel: “The essence is what matters. I am not at leisure to concern myself with trifles. Nevertheless, I will first commend you for returning in this way. It was a great feat.”

Subaru: “Sure doesn’t feel like praise… What the hell are you scheming.”

Frankly, Flop and Abel were a bad match in Subaru’s view.

For that reason, he had planned to ask Flop to wait in the square and introduce him when an opportunity arose, but Abel’s reaction was unforeseen by Subaru.

But then, Abel’s interest was not in Flop’s humanity. Naturally, it would not be the presence of Medium, who was known by the loudness of her voice alone, either. As such, the answer was clear.

Abel: “Merchant, to what degree are you acquainted with Guaral?”

Flop: “That’s a good question, Mr. Chief! I’m proud to say I’m pretty well-known in Guaral. At any rate, it’s certain our lives would be over if we traveled too far. Since even peddlers have to get accustomed to travel coming and going from fixed places!”

Kuna: “Seems like a fine line between caution and cowardice, huh…”

Kuna let out an exasperated sigh at Flop’s overflowing ever-positive self-confidence.

But, listening to Flop’s answer, Abel kept silent under his oni mask. —No, Subaru’s ears picked up a faint sound out of the silence.

It was a small noise from Abel’s throat.

Abel: “How fortuitous. Quite the find, Natsuki Subaru. —A peddler intimate with the city would likely happen to know a byway or two.”

Subaru: “Hey, hold up, Abel. A byway? What are you suggesting?”

Abel: “Again you look towards another for answers? It would appear you fail to comprehend the purpose of my repeated interrogation. I lack the words to label such ignorance with.”

Subaru: “…”

Every single bit of his manner of speaking was aggravating, but he had no retort for Abel’s words.

Natsuki Subaru was too isolated and helpless to actually break off the discussion here, and turn his back and leave. Therefore, he thought carefully, even if it was annoying.

—No, even without thinking about it, he had a pretty good grasp on Abel’s intention.

Just now, it was evident from listening to the interrogation of Flop.

Subaru: “Abel, you, are you seriously…”

Abel: “Even slow minds can happen upon the answer if utilized. Ahh, as expected of your thinking.”

With trembling lips and stiff cheeks, Subaru looked back, and Abel’s penetrating gaze from behind the oni mask told of his cold-hearted plan.

Then, Abel spoke, informing everyone besides Subaru.

“—The walled city of Guaral shall fall. That city is necessary as our next base.”

Chapter 20:
Emperor / Merchant / Natsuki Subaru

1

—The fall of the walled city of Guaral, that was the next move in Abel's scheme.

As his brain digested the contents of that bold proclamation, Subaru instantly reached a conclusion.

That it was an absurd plan.

Subaru: "Though imperfect, a fortified city… It's surrounded by walls on all sides, plus entries and exits through the gates are being monitored constantly. It's not a place where you can just say something like "surrender" so casually."

Abel: "Ho, you speak as though you have seen it… Oh right, you have. As nothing particularly useful has been heard coming from your mouth, I had nearly forgotten."

Subaru: "That sharp wit is very nice. But, that sharpness is only usable against opponents sitting down for discussions like this. It won't work against armed opponents."

In the middle of the meeting place, encircling the fire, Subaru and Abel glared at each other.

Abel let no emotion behind the oni mask peek through, but that just made it all the more impossible for Subaru to guess what was going through his head, leaving Subaru both annoyed and confused.

Right now, the legitimate concern Subaru harbored, there was no way Abel would not have likewise realized it.

And in spite of that, he had proposed something like the fall of the fortified city—

Rem: "…You intend to use a byway to invade the city, is that what you are saying?”

While Subaru was holding his breath, a quiet voice murmured those words beside him; it was Rem’s.

Rem was sitting with her legs folded to one side, her light-blue eyes fixed intently on Abel. It was less of a glare, and more like her gaze was peering into him.

Receiving that look, “That goes without saying”, Abel shrugged.

Abel: “As Natsuki Subaru said, the inspections imposed at the main gates of the city are the first obstacle. It is imperative we find a way to evade them to get into the city.”

Rem: “Even supposing we got in, it looked like there were a large number of Imperial Soldiers within the city. Even ignoring the inspection, I think there would be too many enemies.”

Abel: “Hm.”

To Abel who was sorting the obstacles for the fall of Guaral, Rem gave a well-reasoned objection. Abel snorted at that attitude, but on the other hand Subaru’s bewilderment intensified.

The source of which was, of course, the figure of Rem directly arguing with Abel.

Concerning the content of her argument, Rem’s position could be said to be on the same side as Subaru, opposing an assault on Guaral.

However, her holding that viewpoint was really too fitting. —As though during her short time sojourning in Guaral, she had completely made sure of that point.

Abel: “—Natsuki Subaru, what do you know of the difference between offensive and defensive military force in regards to battle?”

Subaru: “Ah? The difference between offensive and defensive military force, you say… Like, the Law of Threefold Attack?”

Abel: “The Law of Threefold Attack… Indeed, that is a perfectly fitting phrase.”

When asked, Subaru reflexively answered, and Abel nodded as if impressed.

The Law of Threefold Attack, was a theory of combat regarding military force, which stated that the attacking side should have three times the strength of the defending side.

This was due to the difference in the sense of objectives between offense and defense. The offensive side must defeat their opponents, whereas the defensive side could either defeat their opponents, repel them, or just avoid the attack, which was a significant advantage.

For example, in this instance, to procure Guaral Abel would have to command the Shudraqians to occupy the city, but the Imperial Soldiers and guards could withdraw from the attack and barricade themselves in the city to achieve their aim.

To cover for the difference for it to be possible to achieve the objectives, the idea was that such a number of troops were needed, but—

Subaru: “Three times the force of the city, there’s no way we could get something like that together. Mizelda-san, how many people are in this village, give-or-take?”

Mizelda: “Altogether, eighty-two people. Including Abel and that man… Flop, it’s at least a hundred.”

Subaru: “I’m not sure how you’re counting men with nice faces, but it’s merely a hundred. Though I’d roughly estimate there were more than three times that force in the city.”

Setting aside Mizelda’s method of calculation, Subaru estimated Guaral’s military strength to be in that ballpark.

The scale of the city probably did not reach 10,000 people in size, but there should be a suitable number of soldiers protecting the city’s law and order to match. And on top of that, the Imperial Soldiers whose camp had been torched would join them.

—Those Imperial soldiers, including Todd.

Subaru: "…"

Abel: "At the very least, it seems you possess some fundamental knowledge in that head of yours. Yet, the reason you held your tongue appears to be some other fear besides concern about the power differential."

Subaru: "…It's true that there's something I fear, but it's also true that the power differential is dangerous."

Subaru clicked his tongue, and tasted the discomfort of having his inner feelings correctly guessed.

In truth, when Subaru had heard of the plan to capture Guaral, the first obstacle that came to mind was Todd. Even just the thought of facing him again was enough to make his guts squirm.

Anyway, if they thought in accordance with The Law of Threefold Attack, it was not worth discussing.

Subaru: "As for a means to overcome the difference in strength, I can't think of anything outside of a mighty warrior joining us or the enemy commander being fatally incompetent."

Abel: "Unfortunately, I do not believe we can anticipate either of those. With the Shudraq's abilities, we could scatter the masses of troops, but even if they used their numbers to surround us we would be defeated. Furthermore, I hear the enemy commanding officer is Zikr Osman. He is a solid and boring strategist, but he has no weak point."

Subaru: "Zikr… I've heard that name."

He must have heard that name from Todd, before their relationship had deteriorated.

The Imperial encampment had already been reduced to ashes, but he recalled the person in command of that military operation to be called Zikr.

However, since the camp had been burned, he had thought that person had been defeated as well.

Abel: “Those at the encampment were common soldiers. From the beginning, in order to conceal the primary objective, they were bestowed with minimal intelligence… Against a small tribe, a Second General would not proceed to the front lines.”

Subaru: “So you’re saying the commanding officer remained in the city from the outset?”

Abel: “In truth, by doing nothing he ought to have achieved an adequate result. That plan went awry on my command… Ahh, and due to your presence, Natsuki Subaru.”

Subaru: “Guh…”

Maliciously, Abel tried to force Subaru to face the responsibility he was averting his eyes from.

At that, Subaru ground his teeth and pressed his hand to his mouth.

At any rate, there was a high probability that Second General Zikr was stationed at Guaral.

The Empire’s upper ranks were said to be First General, Second General, Third General and so on, so he could understand that a rank second from the top meant a pretty powerful person.

Subaru: “So what are you trying to say? On top of our inferior military strength, the enemy commander is a big shot counted among the elite. Furthermore, since we poked the beehive, they’ll also be on guard, right?”

Abel: “Precisely. Can you appreciate the weight of your responsibility?”

Subaru: “That’s not what I’m saying!”

Abel condemned Subaru for his thoughtlessness, but the problem lay elsewhere.

It was Abel's stance of still refusing to give up the fight, even with an abysmal chance of success. Subaru resolutely maintained that it was pointless to even try.

In the first place—

Subaru: "I am vehemently against fighting itself. That should've been very clear when I left here. I…I just want to go home with Rem."

Abel: "Yet, that has already proved unfeasible. You think the Imperial Soldiers in Guaral are your only enemy? Are you convinced another village or town would be safe?"

Subaru: "…"

Abel: "No matter where you go, your peace can no longer be secured. I intended to grant you the time to fully realize it, and let it seep into your blood. Or, is the poison still insufficient?"

Abel's mocking gaze was starting to peck at Subaru's feeble spirit.

Besides, as he felt pain like he was enduring great hardship, Subaru let out a long sigh; though annoying, he could not deny the truth of Abel's words.

The suffering he had gone through in the walled city had created a mental barrier inside Subaru.

From now on, even if he attempted to take Rem and flee abroad, even if he went somewhere other than Guaral, the same vigilance and fear would not fade.

Subaru's pride had been lost in exchange for five deaths.

Subaru: "—If that's the case, what if I sell you out to the enemy?"

His way out blocked, and having been abused for thoughtlessness, Subaru asked the question, his face looking twisted.

In an instant, the words Subaru had uttered turned the air of the meeting room tense. At the edge of his vision, he could clearly see Rem next to him, her eyes wide.

However, the one he had threatened to sell out, Abel, gave a small laugh.

Abel: “Hmm. At last, your head appears to be beginning to function normally. And yet…”

Mizelda: “That’s not up for discussion, Subaru.”

In the blink of an eye, Mizelda drew her dagger and pressed the edge to Subaru’s neck.

Subaru gasped at her quick feat, and looked up at the face of the tall tribal chief who had moved instantaneously. Mizelda’s eyes conveyed a stubborn conviction on her beautiful face, they were the eyes of a ruthless huntress.

Mizelda: “We’ve already decided to fight together with Abel. That’s the result of the Lifeblood Ritual, if it’s the desire of the one we’ve recognized as a compatriot, there’s nothing for it.”

Subaru: “…I get that for me, who borrowed your strength to bring back Rem, this is audacious to say. Honestly, are you all okay with that?”

Mizelda seemed resolute, but Subaru’s query jumped over her.

As chieftain, Mizelda must personify the way Shudraqians ought to be, and could not be persuaded. Even so, the other Shudraqians could have separate opinions.

The different opinions of those present, Taritta, Kuna, and Holly.

Subaru: “Just a moment ago, this guy also said as much. The gap in military strength is clear, and the opponent’s a greatly experienced courageous general. From the start, you can see you don’t stand a chance fighting him…”

Holly: “Maybe, Subaru’s got the wrong idea~”

Subaru: “The wrong idea…?”

The first one to answer the question as Subaru searched for other opinions was surprisingly Holly.

At the edge of the meeting place, Holly, who had been listening to the conversation as she gnawed on some dried meat, fixed her eyes on Subaru, his movement prevented.

Holly: “If you’re talking about winning or losing, drawing back from here is also our loss~. If we can’t fight for our compatriot, our spirit will be stained~”

Subaru: “A stain on your spirit, you say… Something like pride, or facing your ancestors, that kind of thing?”

Holly: “Yeah yeah, you got it, Subaru~”

With a smile, Holly affirmed Subaru’s words.

But rather than that being evidence of mutual understanding, it was proof that they could not understand each other.

Subaru also understood that there were such points of view.

Things like pride and family honor, so to speak, were invisible vindications that did not directly contribute to one’s physical body —Thinking those were a matter of grave concern, certainly there existed attitudes that valued such things above all else.

Yet, as far as that went, it was a way of thinking that could not coexist with Subaru’s belief that there was nothing more important than life.

Subaru: “Kuna! Taritta-san! You two share the same opinion?!”

Kuna: “…I don’t really think about it as deeply as Holly or the chief.”

Taritta: “—. I will abide by my older sister’s decision. Since that is my wish.”

Subaru: “I, see…”

He had fished for information from the other two as well, but Subaru was not able to get his desired response.

He had thought perhaps Kuna would, herself being a bit out of step with the other Shudraqians, but it seemed Subaru’s hope was misplaced. Taritta’s complete obedience to Mizelda went without saying.

As it was, Subaru was without allies, with a dagger against his neck, and it appeared the deadlock would drag on, but—

Rem: “…Mizelda-san, please withdraw your weapon. That person has no intention to hand Abel over to the enemy.”

The one requesting Mizelda pull back her dagger was none other than Rem herself.

Meeting her gaze, Mizelda narrowed those eyes of hers.

Mizelda: “Are you giving me an order, Rem? You haven’t taken the Lifeblood Ritual. I permitted you into the village on Subaru’s request, but don’t think that means you can backtalk me.”

Rem: “So, that’s all the more reason you should pull back your weapon. That person undertook the ritual… the Lifeblood Ritual as you call it, and was welcomed as a compatriot. To wound him would not be a good thing.”

Mizelda: “Unh…”

Mizelda had tried to overpower Rem with her strengthened insight, but her undaunted retort left her at a loss for words. In the end, she swiftly returned her dagger to its sheath on her waist.

And like that Subaru was released, and he stared intently at Rem.

Mizelda: “What you said just now is correct. But, if Abel and Subaru’s opinions are divided again, I will side with Abel. Don’t forget it.”

Rem: “Is it because that person’s eyes are that of a heinous villain with fitting body odor?”

Mizelda: “A bit of sharpness in the eyes has charm too. But I have a fondness for beautiful faces.”

The touch-and-go situation had calmed down, but the ending exchange was a weak conversation.

In any case, Subaru was freed from the situation of nearly having his throat cut, and he gently rubbed the place where the knife’s edge had been pressed to. And then he looked intently at Rem.

Rem: “—. What is it?”

Subaru: “…Nothing, I’m just lost as to whether I should respond to the fact you stood up for me or to that face you disparaged my face.”

Rem: “I said nothing of your face. I spoke of your eyes. Then your body odor. My nose is wrinkling. Please sit further away.”

Subaru: “This again…?!”

Met with Rem’s glacial attitude, Subaru was hurt by the distance she made him sit away.

Yet inside his heart more complicated confusion plagued Subaru. In reality, why had she spoken up in defense of Subaru? He did not understand her true motive.

Nevertheless, maybe she disliked turning a blind eye to something illogical, or maybe it was something else. Maybe thinking that was Subaru’s bias?

After all, she had not unpacked at the inn in Guaral, so—.

Abel: “Our conversation was interrupted. However, even supposing you were able to evade the Shudraqians’ eyes, the idea of selling me over to the enemy is futile.”

Subaru: “…Good job getting us back on track. While we’re at it, I’ll ask. Why's that?"

Abel: "You also spent time in the city, albeit briefly. That being the case, did news of how the current Imperial Capital is being governed not reach your ears?"

Subaru: "The Imperial Capital you say… Ah! Right, that's right! You're…"

In sudden understanding, Subaru stood up on the spot without thinking. Then, as he focused on his visible surroundings he called out "Flop-san!"

Not having kept up with the change of affairs, the astonished Flop turned around with a "Yeah?"

Flop: "Wha-wha-wha-what is it Mister? Honestly, I'm feeling extremely confused and bewildered right now, I'm becoming a mess! I'm not following this conversation in the slightest, all I know is it feels like we're getting to the climax of the issue!"

Subaru: "Sorry for leaving you out of the loop, but confirm something for me. In Guaral you talked about the official notice from the Imperial Capital… or rather, about the Emperor's proclamation."

Flop: "The Emperor's proclamation… You mean the trouble in the Imperial Capital?"

Flop snapped his fingers, and Subaru nodded at his understanding.

Immediately after, the intense fight with Todd, having been repeated six-fold, had been severely burned into his brain, but he had also exchanged such talk with Flop in Guaral.

Reflecting on the matter in question, Flop smoothed down his own long hair,

Flop: "Our Empire has smoldering embers, and in the Capital there's some kind of disturbance happening. The current Emperor has been reigning for a long time, and with no signs of civil war, imperial citizens have been enjoying peaceful days. But then this happened."

Subaru: “Talk of trouble in the Capital has spread outside, and you said the Emperor himself had set out to resolve it, right? It was a kind of unusual announcement but…”

Flop: “Right. Actually, this is the first time since the current Emperor took the Throne. Nonetheless, he has an excellent track record managing the Empire so far. So I’m not worried! Viva Vollachia!”

Raising both hands, Flop unconsciously gouged Subaru’s old wound.

Those were the words extolling the Empire that he had heard so often in the Imperial encampment, but now Subaru did not have the presence of mind to innocently go along with it.

In any case, the problem was not the praise, but the movement of the Emperor that was spoken of just before.

That the Emperor was directly starting to move in order to suppress trouble in the Capital was an unprecedented situation. Not to mention, in the event that the Emperor were to do something like issuing a command before the public—

Subaru: “The you that’s here now, who are you and what kind of position are you in? Can you prove you aren’t some crazy nutcase with a screw loose?”

Abel: “Proof you say? Where is the need for that?”

Subaru: “What?”

Sitting with his knee raised, Abel snorted at Subaru’s skepticism. At the same time, he put his hand on his chest and, like he was trying to flaunt his own existence, spoke,

Abel: “Never mind the thoughtless ones who have turned on me. Seeing as you have reached a point of no return, if you were to still treat me as an insolent person who speaks nonsense, how do you explain the situation you have found yourself in?”

Subaru: “That’s…”

Abel: “Cease latching onto facile ideas that cannot fool even yourself, merely to obtain a peace of heart. If you exclude the possibilities that do not align together at the precise time, what is left is nothing but the truth.”

Abel’s statement was harsh, but Subaru bitterly understood the logic behind it.

The oni-masked man in front of him was a fake being disguised as an Emperor and Subaru and also the People of Shudraq were being deceived by his falsehoods. That kind of development would lead to doom beyond saving and above that, was hard to believe.

In reality, Abel had utilized the Shudraqians’ strength and the information obtained from Subaru to fight and win against the Imperial army. That real occurrence was something that could not be explained away by a habitual liar.

Subaru: “Then, what about the Imperial Capital stuff? If it’s said that the Emperor directly took command, there’s no way the Emperor wouldn’t come out in front of people.”

Abel: “I suppose they would then. A fake remarkably similar to myself… To halt mentions of the Emperor’s absence, an exceptionally well-made double is used. —Chisha Gold.”

Subaru: “Chisha…?”

It was a name he had not heard before, but they were Abel’s—No, they were the Emperor’s body double.

In a land where the imperialistic “might makes right” ideology inhabited, it was easy to imagine that in preparation for assassinations, the Emperor would arrange for a body double.

However, having said body double be used by the enemy to usurp the seat of the Emperor was quite the misplacement of priorities.

Abel: “Silence, I am aware.”

Subaru: “Right, thanks to you, we’re in quite a mess. If only the Empire was at peace…”

The only problem Subaru needed to have was the salty interactions from the amnesiac Rem.

To reunite with Emilia and the others, a journey to struggle and escape the Vollachian Empire was to unfold. That was all it had to be. But now, due to some fate, they were in this mess.

Flop: “Um, um, ah, y’know, Mister.”

The one who called out to the sour-faced Subaru was Flop.

Wrinkling the space between his eyebrows of his graceful face, he tilted his head at a rather steep angle and,

Flop: “I’ve been thinking about it ever since I heard it before, but what you’re talking about with Mr. Chief is a bit mysterious, isn’t it? To be honest, I’m still shocked because of your joke about causing the fall of Guaral but…”

Subaru: “A joke… No, don’t mind that. Umm, Flop-san, I’ve been meaning to explain but.”

Flop: “Yes, please explain, if you could! If not, I have no choice but to agree to somewhat accept what I hear without question.”

Saying that, Flop whipped his finger to Abel and poked it out towards him.

Then—

Flop: “I have to agree to the absurd idea that Mr Chief over there is the Emperor himself!”

Subaru: “…”

Flop: “Hohoho? I’m conflicted if you stay silent there, Mister. Thankfully, I have a reputation for jumping to conclusions. That’s why I have the flexibility to change and withdraw my opinion, you know…”

Abel: “—You, you have done something akin to drawing improperness into art.”

If they were trying to hide it, it was a conversation lacking the consideration to do so.

That was why, sitting next to Subaru, Flop was able to naturally reach the correct conclusion. And, being able to do so by himself, Abel was showing displeasure at that.

Putting disdain into his gaze, the one he insulted with “improper” was Subaru. He was pointing out how Subaru had not made any of the situation clear to Flop, having brought him into the Shudraqian settlement.

However, accepting Abel’s disdain was difficult for Subaru.

Subaru: “I’m improper? Like you could say that! First off, even I know that that’s not something you can say out loud all willy-nilly.”

Abel: “Then, finish your ascertainment before bringing them here. It seems you still lack an understanding of the current situation. While being chased by enemies in Guaral, the thinking time provided should have been more than enough.”

Subaru: “…”

Abel: “Putting something more important than yourself by your side, why did you give in to your thoughts. If you had no intention to line them beside yourself, bringing them back was a mistake from the start.”

Something more important than yourself. Being told that, Subaru thought about Rem beside him.

The words that followed that also hurt Subaru like his flesh being cut open. —What Abel was trying to say was clear as day. He was speaking on how Subaru had left himself exposed at a time he should have been protecting Rem.

Of course, Subaru had no recollection of putting his guard down or giving in at all.

However, in the eyes of Abel, whose thought process spun far deeper and farther than Subaru could, Subaru’s own was severely lacking. It was never enough, and never worth considering.

Do not bring back someone who could not be trusted with the details. That was how he was being criticized.

Subaru thought to not involve Flop and Medium in things. Abel exposed Subaru's naive thought and coldly discarded it, saying that it was a idiotic and stupid.

Subaru: "I…"

Flop: "—Mr. Chief! Could I interrupt this discussion for a moment?"

Subaru was at a loss for words; but in his place, Flop energetically raised his hand.

Noisily advancing forward, he dropped into a cross-legged position with a thud and faced Abel's oni mask head on.

Flop: "Or, perhaps you are not the chief? How should I address you?"

Abel: "As of now I bear no title. I have taken the name of Abel, but you may call me what you like."

Flop: "Is that so! Then, I will keep calling you Mr. Chief, because it feels right. The lady soldiers over there don't mind right?"

Mizelda: "Ahh, you're a sexy man. I'll allow anything."

Taritta: "Sister…"

Putting aside the almost customary interaction between the sisters, Flop laughed with a "My thanks!". As he did so, he strongly slapped his knees with his hands and,

Flop: "I'm scared because you didn't deny it for the longest time, but I want to talk about what you said before what you said before. Mr. Chief, you wanted to ask about hidden routes into the city…?"

Abel: "Yes, I did. Any ideas, merchant?"

Flop: “I do! Is how it seemed I was going to answer, but apologies. If that’s going to be used to attack Guaral then I cannot answer.”

Putting a palm forward, Flop stated so with a cheerful expression.

Listening by his side, Subaru widened his eyes at Flop’s plain and resolute words. Even Abel had narrowed his eyes an inch from behind his oni mask.

That was how much seriousness Flop had put into his words, even if it did not show in his tone.

Abel: “…”

Flop’s statement was rather wild and made him stand out, but that was not because he was stupid.

He had also come to the conclusion that the true identity of the man in front of him, of Abel, was that of someone of high class and esteem. He had not been told he was right or wrong, so he figured his conjecture was close to the truth.

Meaning, he had, against the presumed Emperor, answered with a big “NO”.

Abel: “… Do you comprehend the meaning of what you have said?”

Flop: “You are nothing but a Chief, right Mr. Chief? Of course I do. If swords were to cross, I will reject that. I want to avoid causing harm to someone with the knowledge I hold.”

Abel: “That is a fairytale. In reality, something like malice will attack you without considering your personal history. You would raise your fist against all of that and request for them to withdraw?”

Flop: “If need be!”

Abel: “Even if you do, your efforts will bear no fruit. —This is the land of wolves.”

A ghastly, freezing aura emanating from Abel’s body pierced through the air as he stated that.

The dreadful feeling of oppression from that was not because of their difference in strength. It manifested from the difference of their presences. Even Rem and the People of Shudraq, who would overwhelm Abel if they were to fight, held their breath and froze up.

Of course, Subaru was intimidated too, to the point his breathing had become irregular. Flop was not excluded from this feeling too.

However, while Flop was hit by the Emperor's dreadful aura—

Flop: "Even in a land of wolves, sheep also live. If wolves were to come bite my buttocks, I would ride my ox cart and run away with my sister. I've repeated that over and over til this day, Mr. Chief."

Abel: "…"

Even if his cheeks were frozen, Flop's smile would not disappear. That was his protest.

Hearing that, the demonic aura emanating from Abel suddenly defused. The oppressive air that had swept over the meeting area suddenly disappearing, Subaru got back the ability to breathe freely.

Nevertheless, even if he had obtained some leeway to take a breath, Subaru's heart was in no shape to return to normal.

Subaru: "Ahh, Flop-san…"

Subaru called over to Flop with a raspy voice. The smile Flop showed to Subaru as the latter glanced over to him was bright.

It was close to a wry smile, but the side profile of Flop showed no sign of regret. However, even if he were to hold no regrets, for Subaru, who had brought him here in the first place, his regret would only grow exponentially.

For Flop had directly opposed the Vollachian Emperor.

Using that reason to incur Abel's displeasure, Abel could do anything to Flop as he held command of the people of Shudraq.

However, contrary to Subaru's worries—

Abel: "—. Opposing my lazy argument, I can see your belief does not waver. A troublesome one you are, are you not, merchant?"

Flop: "Is that right? Even so, I acknowledge that my appearance is favorable to people you know!"

Mizelda: "I agree."

Pocketing his aura, Abel did not point his spear of anger towards Flop.

Flop reacted to that in a way that made it unclear if he realized how dangerous of a tightrope he was walking on. No comment on Mizelda's remark.

Abel: "I shall withdraw my gratitude from before, Natsuki Subaru."

Subaru: "Huh?"

Subaru, unable to restore a sense of peace in his heart from before, was spoken to by Abel.

From behind his oni mask, the man with a sharp gaze nodded towards the stubborn Flop and,

Abel: "Your self-awareness is lacking but, if you were planning to bring someone, you should have brought someone more aligned to my interests. That way, things would be done without future complications."

Subaru: "…If it were someone like that, I doubt they'd have been kind to us in the first place."

Abel: "Hm, I suppose that judgement is correct. How aggravating."

If the earlier gratitude had been given for bringing Flop along, then the obstinance Flop had shown certainly made Abel want to retract the commendation.

No way, Flop was snapping at the Emperor's authority directly—No, he should say he was eluding it like a willow. Subaru had not thought there were people who would take such a stance.

Not to mention, it had also been unexpected that Abel would tolerate such an attitude from Flop.

Rem: “I expected Abel-san to be more obstinate.”

Subaru: “Hold on, Rem?!”

Rem’s brief comment seemed to reflect Subaru’s heart, and his eyes widened involuntarily.

In truth he also found that surprising, but he had not spoken because he thought there was nothing to be gained by saying it. It had come from Rem, and Abel’s oni mask turned toward her.

The oni and the oni mask faced one another, and for a moment the space between both of them yielded silence.

Abel: “—People with convictions are worrisome. Strong roots spread, and build up strength in the trunk.”

Rem: “…What, does that mean?”

Abel: “You cannot tell? No matter, it is a trifle.”

Rem knit her brow, hearing Abel’s quiet and somewhat uncharacteristic response. Displaying some disappointment towards Rem’s reply, Abel loosely shook his head.

No one knew the reason for his disappointment. Subaru however, could roughly guess as to what it was.

Subaru: “… Were you alluding to something?”

Abel: “Hoh, that was unexpected. You do not look like the type of person to have received an education.”

Subaru: “I figured it was something of the sort. You sounded like you were quoting someone else.”

Hearing Abel unexpectedly talk like a normal person was surprising.

However, the person in question, Abel, heeded no mind in having his true thoughts revealed and answered shortly with an “I see.”

Abel: “As for your question before, to say it was unexpected of me, you have quite the impression of me, do you not? First off, what did you expect me to do?”

Rem: “…I thought for sure you would at least torture them for information.”

Questioned by Abel, the impression that Rem left with her answer was that of being too honest.

Saying that however, it was not an option that Subaru had not considered as well. If Abel wanted to make Flop obey to his will, it would be unsurprising if he ordered the Shudraqians to torture or perform other similar things to him.

Except, Abel shrugged his shoulders at those words and replied saying “It is useless.”

Abel: “Certainly, there are times when pain is the best negotiation tactic. However, the veracity of the information extracted from that method is extremely low. Humans will lie without hesitation to free themselves from the pain before them.”

Rem: “…”

Abel: “And were you in such a scenario, your eyes tell me you would shield them with your life.”

That was how Abel assessed Rem, who was motionlessly directing her stare at him.

Looking at Rem’s side profile, her jaw was clenched shut and her pretty features were on the verge of being wiped away by a look of grim resolve. Her side profile made clear that Abel’s brief assessment was true.

Abel: “I will not risk a foolish action that may reduce my troops in exchange for information low in accuracy. —Therefore, I will negotiate.”

Flop: “Negotiate?”

Abel: “Merchant, I will buy any knowledge you possess. Let us negotiate for that.”

Abel said, while lowering his raised knee and plunking down into a cross-legged position. Hearing that, Flop widened his eyes and faced Abel with a smile on his face.

Then—

Flop: “When I hear the word negotiation, as a merchant, I can’t help but get excited. However! Before we start negotiating, let me get one thing straight. I’m very stubborn. Even if my head were to be split and smashed open, I won’t comply with anything I can’t agree on.”

Such was his declaration.

2

Subaru: “Even if your head were to be split open, that’s not funny at all… It’s not funny at all, Flop-san.”

Recalling Flop’s caustic words that kicked off the negotiation battle just before, Subaru made a bitter face.

Flop did not do it purposely, but having seen his head be split and smashed open multiple times in reality, his words had the impact of a surprise attack on Subaru.

Subaru: “…”

Narrowing his eyes, Subaru looked over at the meeting area from a hill slightly away.

Even now, in the meeting area, Abel and Flop’s negotiations, or “business talks”, were underway.

Abel wanted a foothold, required for the conquest of Guaral. Flop had the knowledge needed for that task, yet was not revealing it. That was the situation inside at the moment.

The reason Subaru had left the meeting area was because it was ordered that anyone unneeded for the negotiations was to be excluded. Basically, he was ordered out by Abel.

And, Subaru himself could not come up with a reason for him to stay at that place.

Subaru: “Using secret paths to enter the city, a blitzkrieg attack to go straight for the enemy general’s throat.”

Kicked out of the meeting, Subaru savored the jungle-smelling wind as he recollected his memories.

From what he had heard, the plan Abel had outlined was something like that.

Although simple, it was difficult to come up with any other plan that would overcome the difference in manpower. If there was anything to change or add, it would be to attract attention in the city with a diversion, or perform little tricks to reduce the enemy general’s guards.

As for any problems with the plan—

Subaru: “Simple plans are easily anticipated. At least I think so… Especially if Todd is against us.”

If there were no other methods of attack, then of course, the opponent would also take precautions against it.

Therefore, a plan that the enemy was already taking precautions against was, in baseball terms, something like throwing a straight ball right down the middle. From the perspective of the awaiting enemy, it would be a mouth-watering, easy ball to bat.

For Todd to miss this swing, Subaru could not fathom the idea of that happening.

Subaru: "Or am I being too paranoid? In the extreme case Todd was… If the average soldier is like Todd, then there's no chance of winning."

He did not know. There were far too many unknowns. But, he did not want that to be true.

He did not want to think of a scenario in which enemies like Todd existed, other than Todd. His affinity with Return by Death being the worst had been proven by pain, having piled up the most deaths in the shortest amount of time.

To think that that was the norm for the Vollachian Empire was—

???: "—The negotiations seem to be dragging on."

Subaru: "…"

Subaru had at some point covered his face with his hands and shut his vision off from the world.

While Subaru was staring into the black void, the voice of a girl he had gotten used to hearing reached his eardrums. He had gotten used to hearing it, but it was a voice he wanted to always continue listening to.

However, that was only when Subaru's heart and feelings were at peace.

Subaru: "Rem…"

Lowering the hands covering his face, Subaru nervously opened his eyelids. Resting on her cane, Rem stood quietly on the gentle slope of the hill. Her gaze pierced through Subaru, causing him to go rigid.

Right now, being able to stand face-to-face with Rem like this made his heart throb.

During the days spent coming back to the People of Shudraq's settlement, Subaru had focused his anger on Abel, because his actions were equivalent to setting them up in a trap.

In doing so, it could be said he was avoiding talking with Rem. In reality, that was not wrong. He was scared of conversing with her and finding out about her true intentions.

That was why, he averted his eyes from the things he did not like and attempted a makeshift solution.

Nevertheless, there was a limit on how much he could run from the things he did not like.

There was a limit, and henceforth—

Subaru: "…"

Right now, he had no choice but to face himself against her eyes filled with seriousness.

Rem: "Abel-san seems to be adding various conditions and such, but Flop-san doesn't seem to be budging at all."

Subaru: "…Yeah, he's a good person. He doesn't want to help by providing knowledge that could get someone hurt. Being surrounded by the Shudraqians, he has some serious courage to be able to say that."

Subaru had overseen the progress of the negotiations for a while but Flop's stubbornness was exactly as he proclaimed.

The focal point of the discussion was as expected, the casualties in the City of Guaral. People and material things—Flop had made clear that he would not compromise on both those things.

Abel promised to minimize the human casualties as much as possible, but that was not enough to be the deciding factor.

Like parallel lines, they could not meet and reach an agreement.

Towards Flop's stubborn attitude, Subaru also felt relief.

Shunning war, he rebutted Abel head on.

He was relieved that another person of such ilk was here, other than him.

However—

Rem: “I don’t think this is the type of situation where you can simply say he is a good person.”

Subaru: “…What?”

In opposition to Subaru who affirmed himself to Flop’s attitude, Rem quietly revealed her strong criticisms.

Surprised at the bite of her words, Subaru unconsciously stared at Rem. Though difficult to meet face-to-face with, and despite his wish to avoid it, in his field of vision, Rem stared straight at Subaru.

Without dropping her gaze, she continued on.

Rem: “He doesn’t want to hurt others with his knowledge. I understand those feelings. But… if you think about the overall situation, him included, how will he account for the casualties that will arise because he didn’t share his knowledge. Couldn’t you say that would be hurting others with knowledge as well?”

Subaru: “That’s just an argument for argument’s sake. Trying to blame Flop for all the casualties brought about because he doesn’t talk, that’s just a false accusation.”

Rem: “That may be right. But, I do not think it’s realistic to be constantly running away.”

Abel had declared that this was the Land of Wolves. And against that, Flop had proclaimed that sheep would run.

That was a fairytale, was what Rem pessimistically—No, realistically thought, and said. She was yet another person who had stepped foot into Guaral. The tenacity and relentlessness of the Imperial Soldiers seeped deep into her bones.

Could they shake off that oppressive pursuit again?

Under determined opposition and not vague malicious intent, could

Flop, with Medium, keep running to the ends of the world?

And, could Subaru's group, who shared the same fate as them, be able to—.

Subaru: "Hang, hang on Rem. What you're saying is crazy. You also said before that you didn't want there to be a battle. But, the way you're saying it now…"

Rem: "…"

Subaru: "It's like you've accepted that we have to fight."

His throat trembled. Subaru was unable to get his words out properly.

But, just like how it was said that the eyes could say more than the mouth, in Subaru and Rem's precarious conversation, it was not just their words that spelled out their feelings. Their gazes did too.

The grim resolve that colored her eyes was the same as the one when she had defended Flop against Abel. That was what Subaru thought.

Subaru: "… It hurts that I can't understand you."

Seeing that attitude of hers on display, Subaru spit out the honest feelings floating in his heart.

She had criticized Flop for following Subaru's beliefs, but she regarded Subaru with the same eyes she used when defending Flop, when the latter was laying out his beliefs.

She had defended Subaru from Abel but she had not unpacked at the inn in Guaral. The interactions between the awakened Rem and Subaru were always inconsistent and one-way.

From the bottom of his heart, he was happy that she had woken up.

The sadness that assaulted him due to her memories not returning, he believed that they could find a way to solve that problem.

Nevertheless, in the Empire, where there was nobody he could trust from the bottom of his heart, from where he had to bring Rem back to Emilia and the others, her uncooperative attitude was like a knife piercing through his leg.

Every time that would happen, he would be on the verge of hunching over in pain.

Subaru: "… You didn't unpack at the inn in Guaral, right? Thanks to that, we reduced the time needed to escape, but I always thought it was weird."

Rem: "That was…"

Subaru: "The average person, after reaching an inn, will relax and settle down or start unpacking their luggage. At least, that's what I think. Of course, it's always possible that you aren't that sort of person. But…"

He did not want to finish the rest of that sentence.

If he could continue averting his eyes he would, but now that he felt he could not avoid questioning Rem on her inexplicable attitude, he could not continue averting his eyes.

That was why—

Subaru: "But, you tried to run away from me again, didn't you?"

Rem: "…"

Rem's silence was piercing. Subaru felt the blood coursing through his body.

However, a scab already peeled had no use. Letting the blood flow, heeding no mind to the exposed wound, he could only peel it off. Enduring the pain.

Subaru: "If… If you can't believe me, that's fine. It's painful, but I get it. You don't have any memories and for you, my smell reeks like that of someone unforgivable. Also I don't have anything to prove that you can trust me. I understand why you can't believe me and want to distance yourself from me.”

Rem: “…”

Subaru: “But, the people waiting for you… The people who hold you dear in their hearts, are real. If you don’t like me, you don’t have to talk to me. I’ll endure it if you bat my hands away. But, please don’t try to leave.”

Rem: “…”

Subaru: “I’m begging you, so, please… Please don’t shut me out from your life.”

His begging voice was shaking, his eyes were on the verge of tears.

Whether those droplets of tears that gradually appeared were the result of his self-pity, or of his petition to Rem, was unknown even to himself.

Truly, he was just being exceedingly pathetic. It was so absurd it made him laugh.

Even if he was not given up on, it would not be surprising were he to be abandoned because of his begging right now.

—He continued to expose his hopeless and pitiful self in front of Rem.

It was a sight he would definitely not show to Emilia, Beatrice or his other friends.

At least, Subaru intentionally strived to not show it to his friends. Nevermind if he was able to actually achieve that, that was what he had done to now.

Because he had decided to show his weakness only in front of Rem.

However, that did not mean that he wanted Rem, amnesiac, with no one to rely on, alone in another country, to shoulder the heavy weight that was Natsuki Subaru. That was not at all what he desired.

Rem: “…”

Hearing Subaru’s shameful begging, Rem would not say a word in return.

Nonetheless, Subaru did not avert his blurry, tear-filled gaze from her. Neither did she avert her gaze from Subaru.

A brief silence enveloped the space between them.

Rem: “—I.”

Subaru: “…”

Rem: “I was not trying to abandon you.”

Rem said awkwardly, choosing her words carefully.

That was an emotion Rem had yet to show Subaru. Not even once.

She spoke to the person she should be wary of, with consideration and care. She spoke devoid of a wish to hurt his feelings.

Her words did not sound like she was speaking desperately and without thinking. Her tone made him believe that. Or it could be that that was also Subaru’s hope speaking for him.

Subaru: “Are you…”

Relying on that thin ray of hope, the thread of hope he should not be relying on, Subaru searched for the right words.

What was Rem thinking? What did she wish for? What did she believe in to put those words to her mouth?

Not even knowing if he should be informed of the answers to those questions, Subaru just wanted to hear her voice more, and tried to continue his sentence.

However—

???: “Aaaa, uuuu!!”

Subaru: “Guoh?!”

Faster than he could continue, a force jumped at him around his waist, and Subaru’s body blurred as it was launched to the side.

Unable to support his body at all, Subaru was blown away, sent sprawling on top of the hill. The atmosphere from before being ripped to shreds, Subaru’s head spun as he opened his eyes wide to try and make sense of the situation.

???: “Lou! Don’t sit on top of Suu! That’s bad! Uu tried to stop her. Lou was the one who did it.”

Subaru: “U-Utakata…? Meaning, this is…”

The one who ran over with an almost comical pitter-patter footstep, was a slightly flush olive-skinned Utakata. And, the one who was getting her sleeve pulled by Utakata, sitting atop Subaru’s chest, was the young girl who bundled her long, golden hair behind her head—

Rem: “Louis-chan, please come down. That person’s going to get squished.”

Louis: “Uuu?”

Overwriting her joyful and smiley face with a question mark, the one who craned her neck towards Rem’s words was Louis.

Resting her bottom on Subaru’s chest, Louis patted Subaru’s cheeks without a care in the world. It was, however, her carefreeness that got on Subaru’s nerves in the first place.

Subaru: “We’re in the middle of an important conversation. Get off now.”

Louis: “Aaa?”

Subaru: “Don’t aaa me. Utakata, please?”

Utakata: “I’ll listen cause Suu asked for it. Uu is a good wife and a good mother.”

Did she understand what that meant? In any case, Utakata pulled Louis' arm to get her off Subaru's chest. The pressure on him disappearing, Subaru raised his body up on the spot.

Even then, an unsatisfied-looking Louis entered his immediate field of view, and Subaru became annoyed.

Subaru: "In the end, there hasn't been an answer as to what you are."

Sin Archbishop, the evil being, "Gluttony", Louis Arneb.

If he were to pick some choice words to decorate the blonde girl in front of him, he could think of many foul and uncomplimentary remarks. However, even if all of those words were what correctly described her before, her current self did not match up with that.

That evil girl did not save Subaru, listen to him, or carelessly laugh towards him.

However—

Louis: "Uuu?"

Louis craned her neck. Her actions until now flashed in his mind.

Saving him when Rem had been choking him. She had cried out and faced the many predicaments Subaru had been through with him. Even the most recent one, being Todd and his axe.

The memory of her receiving Todd's elbow hit and bleeding from the nose was still fresh in his mind.

Her face had no sign of the previous injury, and she acted as if that event had no negative bearing on her at all. That was infuriating in a way, but—

Rem: "Louis-chan."

Louis: "Uuu!"

Beckoned, Louis quickly changed her expression into a happy one and ran over to Rem's side.

As if she had learned how to jump on the cane-ridden Rem, Louis jumped on Rem with not too much force. Rem caught Louis and gave her head some soft pats.

She had caught the Sin Archbishop who was one of the reasons for her current state. She had caught one part of them, Louis Arneb.

Rem: "Those eyes of yours…"

Subaru: "Huh?"

Rem: "The eyes with which you look at this child. It puzzles me too. This child, she's so attached to you, and yet you…"

Subaru: "…"

Rem uttered while hugging Louis' small body. Subaru fell silent.

Was that the continuation of her interrupted words from before? The Rem who did not unpack at Guaral, the continuation of that would shine a light on the rest of the truth.

However, despite waiting, Rem did not say another word beyond that. She only wrapped the beaming Louis into her chest.

Subaru: "… What do you want me to do?"

Looking over at Rem, Subaru finally chose to use conclusive words.

It might have been an unfair method to make Rem give him an answer. However, if Rem were to brush aside all of Subaru's chosen words and actions, this was the only option left.

What did Rem wish for, and what did she want him to do? He had to ask her directly.

On top of that, if the answer she brought out was something Subaru could not achieve for her, then it would be that time for sure that their relationship might become unsalvageable. Knowing that, Subaru asked her fearfully.

She held her breath for a moment against Subaru's question, and,

Rem: "… I do not want it to turn into a battle."

Said that.

Subaru could accept that too. In reality, when the Imperial Army's camp had been reduced to ashes, she thought that Subaru had spearheaded that attack and so flared up at him with a strong, threatening attitude.

Rem did not wish for a war. She did not favor it. That was no mistake.

That was why he understood that her opinion had not changed.

However, just when Subaru was convinced of this fact, she added on that.

That was—

Rem: "But I don't think we can keep running forever. Flop-san's words are not realistic. And…"

Subaru: "You can't agree with Abel's opinion."

Rem: "…Yes."

Quietly nodding, Rem agreed with Subaru's question.

Her timid agreement, it was the sign that she held the awareness that the words she spoke were outrageous. And, of course they were.

She agreed with Flop's stance on not wanting to fight, she also agreed with Abel on his stance that they had no choice but to fight. That was an ideology that could be said to be an incarnation of opportunism.

In all honesty, even Subaru thought how good it would be if a fence-sitter opinion like that worked out.

Fighting was not desired. But fighting was an inevitable outcome.

They did not want to take lives. Yet, they were at the forefront of a fight where taking lives was inevitable.

They must confront a dichotomy that involves lives.

Rem: “Could you…”

Subaru: “Ah?”

Making a bitter face, Subaru agreed with Rem’s contradictory thinking. However, to that anguishing Subaru, Rem flicked her gaze towards him.

Holding Louis’ head to her chest, she directed her helpless-looking light blue eyes towards Subaru.

Subaru held his breath. As if she quietly hardened her resolve she—

Rem: “—Could you do something about this?”

She asked as if she were clinging onto him for an answer.

Subaru: “…”

The moment he received that question, Subaru froze as if struck by lightning.

It was… That was a completely… A completely unreasonable question.

Compared to Subaru, who thought himself to be unfair and cowardly, this question was far, far worse.

The want to not fight, the knowledge that there was no choice but to fight. A third answer that was neither of those choices. —That was what Rem wished from Subaru.

Why?

Forgetting everything and anything, her trust and affection for Subaru had been lost. She also held caution and disgust because of the foul smell that surrounded Subaru. And yet, why had she asked that of Subaru.

Why did Rem look at Subaru with eyes that looked like she was holding onto him.

Subaru: “…”

SETOWI

That extremely one-sided, even selfish question started a fire in Natsuki Subaru.

Even if he were to get angry, curse her out loudly and denounce her naiveness now, he would no doubt be forgiven.

That was how selfish the option Rem chose was.

However, what grew in Subaru at that moment was a sense of duty that rose up from the very bottom of his soul.

Subaru: “I…”

He must fight.

He must resist.

He knew that he must break open the present as it was now.

Evading combat, the person stopping himself from revealing his information. Flop O’Connell.

Preparing himself from the unavoidable battle, the person who would win his survival. Vincent Abellux.

In the situation they were in now, the inevitable pathways that these two held.

The person that must find an answer; a pathway that was different from these two answers. Natsuki Subaru.

Why was that? That was because—

Subaru: “—I’m the hero that Rem believed in.”

And also because he was the man that kept on fighting in this other world using only his unwillingness to give up as a weapon.

It was not just his philosophy, the philosophy that did not function just because he crossed borders, that let Natsuki Subaru keep walking until today. That was what he believed.

Meeting Emilia, saved by her, the days spent running to save her.

Clutching Beatrice's hand, bringing her out of the Forbidden Library, his promise to be together with her.

Saving Rem, being saved by her, loved by her and deciding that he would answer her faith and love.

—Natsuki Subaru's blood boiled as he strived to change this current, constrained situation.

Something, anything, was there nothing at all?

The days spent in the Kingdom of Lugunica, the days spent since being blasted into the Vollachian Empire, the people he had met, the enemies he had faced, the people who stood next to him, the people who stood opposite him. All of them became fuel.

Think, concentrate, imagine, grasp all of the possible possibilities.

In this world, where anyone and everyone was more successful than him, the option that was left for Natsuki Subaru was only one. —His scrappy lifestyle and shrewdness.

Then, then, then, then—.

Subaru: "—Ah."

Hit by his uselessness, ruled over by a sense of loss, and with nothing else to do, Subaru had left the meeting area.

In that Subaru, in that Subaru's mind, a thought appeared with a flash.

Reeling in that clownish possibility, Subaru seriously considered if he could convert this thought into an actual plan.

Rem: "…"

Towards the silent Subaru, Rem's eyes quietly stared.

Putting a hand on Louis, who looked like she was about to cause a commotion and holding Utakata back, her head tilted, so that she would not leak any words out, she stared at Subaru.

Despite the fact she was not supposed to possess any memories, she stared at him with the eyes she had when she did.

As if she believed that Natsuki Subaru could reach the answer that others could not reach.

And then—

Subaru: "—Rem"

Holding a hand on his chin, Rem straightened herself at Subaru's call.

There was no answer. She somehow understood that he did not want one.

However, not noticing her reaction, Subaru quietly held his breath and continued.

Subaru: "What would I do if it were up to me? I found the answer."

3

Lumbering, advancing with strong steps on the hard ground, the doors to the meeting area were pushed open.

Looking at the newly-appeared Subaru, the man donning a oni mask flared his nose in displeasement. His attitude conveyed that he had been uncalled for.

Abel: "What is it, Natsuki Subaru? A person like you, one who cannot provide a constructive opinion, has no role for an appearance."

He was actually told in reality that he was not called for, and yet, Subaru's legs did not stop.

Even if he had forgiven Flop's disrespect, Abel would most likely not forgive Subaru for his, as Subaru held no reverence for him.

Feeling the gazes of the faces still remaining in the meeting area, Subaru pressed his legs straight forward.

Standing right next to Abel, looking down at his oni mask up close,

Subaru: “Any developments? You arrogant shit.”

Abel: “…”

Extending his hand, Subaru forcefully peeled the oni mask off Abel’s face.

Mizelda and the other Shudraqians widened their eyes in surprise at his unhesitant action. It went without saying, but Flop too was shocked, laying his eyes upon Abel’s true face for the first time.

However, the others’ actions did not enter his eyes.

Towards Subaru’s question, Abel shifted his demonic face into a cruel expression that would run a chill up anyone’s spine. He shook his head curtly, saying “No,”

Abel: “Negotiations are progressing roughly. Contrary to expectations, this merchant is hard to crack.”

Subaru: “Is that so. Then, since you’re so terrible at being persuasive, I’ll persuade him for you.”

Abel: “What?”

Abel furrowed his nicely-shaped eyebrows together. Seeing his face, Subaru looked down at Abel with satisfaction.

Next, Subaru turned to face Flop.

Because a conclusion had not been made, Flop was in the middle of arguing with the presumed Emperor head on. Taken aback by the difference in Subaru’s expression and attitude, Flop called over to Subaru, saying “Mister?”.

Then, towards the two that held differently shaped doubts, Subaru declared.

The contents of that declaration was—

Subaru: “—I have a plan for the bloodless fall of Guaral. If we can fight without any bloodshed, then the two of you can agree on a plan together, don’t you think?”

Chapter 21:
Zikr Osman

1

—Zikr Osman, General Second-Class of the Vollachian Empire, was known as The Womanizer.

There were many words to describe him, like sex-obsessed, lecherous, and lustful.

For an Imperial Soldier who had to set an example of true strength and gain the respect of his fellow officers, it was a rather disgraceful set of terms.

However, Zikr Osman himself liked being known as The Womanizer.

—No, it would not be an exaggeration to say he took pride in it.

The reason why?

It was because Zikr hated the nickname he had been given before being dubbed The Womanizer.

For a soldier, to be called by such a nickname, was an unbearable humiliation. Thus, he proudly paraded the title of Womanizer, which made his fellow soldiers forget that other nickname.

Anyway, although called such, the meaning of Zikr being labelled The Womanizer differed from that of so-called Casanovas or from the vices of the sort of men who looked down on women.

The Osman household had produced a lineage of soldiers for generations, but in Zikr's generation the blood had been unbalanced, and, for some reason, the family had only sired females. Born and raised in an environment with four elder sisters and six younger ones, Zikr spent his childhood without even one brother.

Growing up surrounded by sisters on all sides, like most people, Zikr was instilled with various preconceived notions relating to women.

But what made him different from most people whose illusions about women were lost due to the existence of female family members, he instead sought fantasies and idealized outside women.

And then, he parted from his sisters, saddened to let go of their adorable and kind brother, and he started his career as an Imperial Soldier at a young age, making contact with outside women for the first time, and he cracked.

Ever since then, women had been like an ephemeral dream for Zikr Osman, an existence between ideal and reality, a forbidden fruit mixed with love and hate.

Having been raised being knocked about by a great number of women in his family, Zikr held a strong desire to treat women kindly, while also being treated kindly by them. Therefore, he considered it a supreme pleasure to serve women and to be served by them, which he put into practice.

This attitude differed from most of the dominant men of the Empire, which combined with jealousy and contempt for his precise tactics and safe victories, led to the name “Womanizer”.

But, as said at the beginning, Zikr Osman enjoyed that sobriquet.

“The Womanizer”, was it not rather splendid? After all, there were more men who liked women than disliked them, which brought opportunities to speak with many officers.

Zikr’s stance was clear and left no doubt, and his subordinates, knowing their superior officer’s taste, naturally looked up to him as the Womanizer, and respected him.

—“The Womanizer”, was it not rather splendid?

Zikr Osman was the man who had risen to the rank of an Imperial General Second-Class, despite being called such.

With the Emperor ousted from his throne, to squeeze the life out of him, his political opponents had chosen the very best within the limits of their dominion, which was none other than he.

It was surely the threatening General called The Womanizer, Zikr Osman.

2

From the beginning, Zikr had a hunch that something about the expedition smelled fishy.

Military exercises were held in the area around the Buddheim Jungle in the eastern part of the Empire every year, but this year they had been held earlier, and, including Zikr, only a portion of the commissioned officers had been notified of the expedition's purpose—Negotiations with the People of Shudraq.

Zikr: "The People of Shudraq hiding in Buddheim…"

An indigenous people that lived in the Buddheim Jungle, the tribe was known for having a long history.

They were also famous for not emerging out of the considerably-dense jungle, and Zikr had never encountered them first-hand. But, he had heard that they were a matriarchal tribe, and he wished to meet them just once.

Living deep in the jungle, their approach of capturing outside men for use as tools to produce children was also fascinating. Likely, they were all strong, indomitable women, he thought.

Women were good. Strong or weak, gentle or harsh, all flavors.

After all, they could not all be lumped together. Older sisters, and younger sisters too, had times when they were gentle and times when they were harsh, times when they were sweet and times when they were bitter.

If a single woman displayed such kaleidoscopic splendor, how could one think of lumping multiple women together?

Therefore—

Zikr: “To make them swear fealty, or be destroyed… What is the Imperial Capital thinking?”

That was the secret order given behind closed doors to Zikr, before he departed for the expedition.

Word from the Imperial Capital Rupgana affirmed that this expedition’s true purpose was to either win over the People of Shudraq, or annihilate them. He attempted to ascertain that there was no mistake, but the reply from the Imperial Capital remained immutable, and Zikr had no choice but to comply.

However, he had heard about some kind of trouble brewing within the Imperial Capital, so he could imagine that had something to do with the purpose of the expedition on this occasion.

That much was clear from the fact that the common soldiers had been ordered to execute this plan while the purpose of the expedition was hidden from them. —What His Excellency, the Emperor was thinking, Zikr had no idea.

Zikr: “But then, no one can read that gentleman’s deeper intentions, can they?”

—The Seventy-Seventh Emperor of the Sacred Vollachian Empire, Vincent Vollachia.

That was the name of the one who ruled over this Empire, the wisest man of this age, who never allowed others to read the depths of his thoughts.

In the Crystal Palace of the Imperial Capital of Rupgana, His Excellency the Emperor was considered to have a clear view of the entire vast Empire. Even though Zikr was a General Second-Class, his post was far removed from the Imperial Capital, and he had little opportunity to see his countenance. Yet, his ingenuity and renown crossed the distance to reach Zikr’s ears.

Within an imperial society in which the strong consumed the weak, greedily climbing was seen as an inevitability.

In a world in which various clans and locales revolted, and the live coals of insurrection would flare up every day, Vincent crushed every problem before it could become a raging inferno.

In the eight years since the inception of his reign, the Vollachian Empire had become astonishingly peaceful.

Blood was spilled, flames were fanned, and lives were lost.

And still, these were the most tranquil days since the founding of the Vollachian Empire.

Therefore, this completely thorough approach towards the People of Shudraq caused Zikr to furrow his brow.

Though he was a perfect son of battle, His Excellency the Emperor avoided battle in some respects. It was not that he loathed war, but that he had deemed it foolishness, and that was the reason for his decisions. That was the supposition Zikr embraced of his own accord.

Perhaps this feeling was because of a sense that he had been betrayed?

???: “No, it’s not like that, General Second-Class Zikr. I understand your thinking, sir. I’m just a common soldier myself, but I also have to consider all sorts of things.”

Said one of the common soldiers, listening to him with a charming smile.

They were having a moment in a tavern while they were stationed in the fortified city of Guaral, where the expedition was based. On the nights that Zikr did not spend with women, he enjoyed drinking with his subordinates in such a manner. And in addition, rather than a retinue of high-ranked officers or Generals of the Third-Class, he would drink with lower-ranked ordinary soldiers.

Of course, most soldiers did not particularly want to drink alcohol with their superiors.

Even so, Zikr liked such rituals whenever he went on expeditions, as it helped him understand the thoughts and preferences of the subordinates he traveled with. —But on this night, he may have said a bit too much.

The soldier he was drinking with that day was an awfully talkative, chatty sort.

As they drank, he was always looking around, brimming with curiosity. When asked what he was thinking about, he joked that he was hypothesizing what would happen if the tavern turned into a battlefield.

An attitude of constant combat readiness, and a lack of timidness towards his superior officer's company. Such an Imperial mindset combined with his personal affection towards humanity led to him speaking of things he ought not to.

It was not like he had declared the contents of the secret order regarding the People of Shudraq, and though he did not state it explicitly, he got the feeling it was clear from how he had been listened to.

Had he been a spy from another country, Zikr would be executed for such a blunder.

Soldier: "You don't have to worry, I'll even be on the frontlines tomorrow by your order, sir… Really, I'm sure the higher-ups have all sorts of motives, but it's nothing to do with me."

As his drunkenness faded and Zikr came to his senses, the soldier spoke as if to reassure him.

And then just as he had stated, he had departed for the encampment of the expedition at the frontlines, the camp site adjacent to the Buddheim Jungle.

This was confirmed, and as he remained in the city Zikr was once again faced with a lump of unease in his chest.

In spite of the Imperial Capital's order for a completely thorough approach to the Shudraqians, urging either subjugation or death, if at all possible, Zikr intended to stick to a persuasive approach.

That was what Zikr put his faith in, and what he thought was closest to His Excellency the Emperor's conviction.

However—

Zikr: "—The camp was burned down in a Shudraqian attack?"

Receiving the unexpected report at the requisitioned city hall, Zikr was aghast.

Until last night, up till that very moment, he had intended to do as much as possible to accommodate the Shudraqians, and win over their tribe without a fight.

The camp had been set up in order to wall in the western side of the Buddheim Jungle, and when several of those from the People of Shudraq had charged, the Imperial Soldiers were routed without so much as a counterattack.

Those who fled were struck in the back, furthering the extent of the damage, leading to over a hundred casualties.

Zikr: "Ridiculous…"

Whether he was grumbling about his own decisions, the actions of the Shudraqians, or just the reality of it, even Zikr himself did not know.

Nevertheless, the amicable plan he had constructed in his head had collapsed, and the only thing that was certain was that the People of Shudraq had become enemies of his own Imperial Soldiers—No, of His Excellency the Emperor.

Zikr: "It is a shameful circumstance, but we will wait for reinforcements from the Imperial Capital, and defeat the Buddheim Jungle insurgents."

Once they had received the soldiers who had narrowly escaped the Shudraqians' raid into the city, and the appearance of an expeditionary force was arranged, Zikr came to that decision.

There was also the alternative of invading the jungle and fighting the Shudraqians with their present military strength. But the dense forest was those women's domain, and they were quite capable of neutralizing a superficial advantage in numbers.

To secure a certain victory, rather than a superficial advantage, an overwhelming advantage was required.

And in addition to that, they would abandon lenient approaches like seeking negotiations, with elite soldiers for the purpose of annihilation.

Zikr: "Foolishly, they have swatted away the hand extended to them in peace. That being the case, we must act out of loyalty to His Excellency the Emperor, and bring down deadly retribution upon the insurgents without exception."

And like that, once he had disciplined himself, the warmth of even The Womanizer, of Zikr's Osman's heart, was extinguished.

Even if his opponent was the matriarchal tribe of the People of Shudraq, every fragment of that bloodline must be destroyed, so they would not become a concern in the future.

For that reason—

Zikr: "Do not be caught off-guard preparing to close the main gate. I hear the People of Shudraq's specialty is their bows, but they cannot pass through the walls of this fortified city. Avoid leaving room for them to break through."

He got information from the returned soldiers on the particulars of how the front lines of the camp had been razed by fire, and bearing in mind that the fires had been set by a select few, he shifted to a total defense plan.

Based on what was known of the Shudraqians' lifestyle, it was difficult to imagine that the tribe's entirety was numerous, and it did not seem likely that all members of the tribe could fight, children and elderly included.

If he supposed that their fighting strength was approximately a hundred people at most, in order to compete with the Imperial Soldiers, they could only take advantage of the dark of night for things like surprise attacks.

But even so, a method of preemptive strike would only bear on an opponent whose guard was lowered from a lack of attacks.

Zikr: “See to it that every hole is filled! Even the walls of the fortified city are not solid. With its long history, I can imagine there being plenty of ways to pass through to the outside without using the gates. Do not overlook any sort of secret passage!”

???: “On that point, a report for you, sir. Some of the soldiers who returned from the burned camp are already preparing for an outside attack by going around and blocking off secret passages.”

Zikr: “Is that right? It is heartening that there are soldiers besides Generals who have the guile to anticipate. Once this matter is put to rest, we must start giving promotions again. But for now…”

???: “—Sigh. Until reinforcements arrive, our stance will be total defense, right.”

Hearing Zikr’s instructions, his subordinate, a General Third-Class, bowed deeply at the waist.

Were these the words of an ordinary General, they would be ridiculed for such a passive approach. In fact, Zikr had formerly been the target of that kind of scornful laughter.

But, Zikr had already borne a severe blow from the opposing People of Shudraq, and if he were to return to the Capital he would not be in a position to escape some form of punishment.

With his back already to the wall, there was no reason not to take the very best measures in this situation.

His subordinates knew this as well, so they did not sneer at Zikr’s stance.

And then—

3

Zikr: "…Excuse me?"

Confined within the fortified city of Guaral. Zikr, resuming said operation, raised his eyebrow in irritation at his subordinate's report.

In the days spent waiting for reinforcements from the Imperial Capital to arrive and maintaining the gradually rising tension, the report brought out deep emotions that were exceedingly out-of-place in Zikr.

For as to why that was—

Subordinate: "Yes. It seems, in these past few days in the city, a troupe of travelling entertainers have become the topic of conversation."

Zikr: "Travelling entertainers…"

The report received from the subordinate was quite the carefree and leisurely kind.

It was an ill-suited report, considering the tense time of war they were in. However, there was no reason to reprimand the subordinate who had relayed it.

In the first place, it was Zikr himself who disliked intentionally forcing onto citizens a lifestyle in which they must acknowledge they were under wartime.

Even under normal conditions, discontent would easily build up in cities where troops were stationed. And, depending on the situation, being unable to manage public sentiments would lead to annihilation. That was how far the situation could progress.

Under that line of thinking, Zikr purposely did not carry out any action that would strongly restrict the opinions people held.

Staying vigilant against the threats outside of the city; preventing any infiltration from the People of Shudraq by authorizing his troops to perform thorough searches without exception. By doing this, he allowed the citizens to continue with their everyday lives.

He understood it to be contradictory, but that was the compromise between Zikr's commonsense and his military instincts.

In any case, because he had taken a position to do things this way, the day-to-day entering and exiting of the city—the security check placed at the front gate and the handling of merchants and peddlers, would remain unchanged.

For that reason, it was probably fine to let something like a band of travelling entertainers into the city, but—

Zikr: "…What do you propose with that information? If you are asking to keep them under strict control, I would very much prefer not doing so. Look around us. I can understand why the townsfolk would celebrate that troupe."

It was a situation where a non-negligible amount of Imperial Soldiers, together with the guards there stationed, were maintaining patrol around the city.

Having escaped the raid, many of the soldiers who entered the city had heightened their hostility and alertness towards the People of Shudraq, and, despite orders to be mindful, disputes with the citizens were constant.

It was not hard to imagine that a party of travelling entertainers appearing in the city during all this would bring a modest amount of peace for the citizenry. Therefore, if they were to take that away —

Zikr: "The citizens' antagonism will erupt. You understand, do you not?"

Subordinate: "Of course, your words exactly, sir. That is why, I am not suggesting that we place them under strict control. Just…"

Zikr: "Just what? You are making this seem more important than what it truly is."

Raising an eyebrow, Zikr impatiently urged the hesitant subordinate to continue his sentence.

Then, after a minute of silence, the subordinate lowered his head as if in resignation. Displaying his respect and non-hostility towards his superior officer by putting a fist on his palm, the subordinate controlled his breathing with a “Hah”, and,

Subordinate: “Actually that troupe… Those dancers are quite impressive but, your thoughts, sir? What do you make of seeing them once too?”

Zikr: “Me? It is not that dancers are not tempting for me too, but…”

Hearing his subordinate’s unexpected proposal, Zikr widened his eyes in surprise.

His history with this subordinate was long, and they had walked on many worthy battlefields together. It was unthinkable that he would bring up this proposal without any thought to it.

However, Zikr could not infer the real reason as to why his subordinate wanted to show the dancers to Zikr.

Subordinate: “Sir, I cannot be saying this out too loud but discontent within the troops is also increasing.”

Zikr: “Mm…”

The subordinate straightened himself and disclosed that to the puzzled Zikr.

The grave observation told to Zikr naturally made his eyes narrow. When he wordlessly encouraged his subordinate to keep talking, the subordinate slightly lowered his voice and,

Subordinate: “They have certain thoughts about the reinforcements from the ungenerous Imperial Capital, but they seem to have doubts about you too, sir, who decided to coop up in the city and take a defensive stance. There is also the case with the burnt encampment.”

Zikr: “—. I see. No, that is a natural reaction.”

Receiving his subordinate’s unreserved explanation, Zikr felt something heavy settling at the back of his chest.

It was inevitable that the Soldiers' discontent and distrust towards Zikr would accumulate and fester. Allowing the People of Shudraq to execute their preemptive strike, and in turn causing the death of numerous soldiers, had been Zikr's fault.

After that event, the troops they reunited with were not given a chance to recover. So it was no surprise that they aimed their displeasure towards Zikr.

Subordinate: "Among the more critical gossipers, they call you sir a —"

Zikr: "—Not another word."

Subordinate: "—Hk, excuse my impudence."

Interrupting his subordinate's ongoing sentence, Zikr placed a hand on his forehead.

If a superior officer were to be passive towards their subordinates' attitudes and discontent towards their superior, Zikr could imagine the curses those subordinates would spit out. He could think of those unbearable and straightforward slurs.

Even after receiving the position of General Second-Class, he could not come to accept those kinds of insults.

And, only when his thinking led him to this point, did he figure out what the intention behind his subordinate's proposal had been.

Zikr: "I see now. Essentially, prepare a space where the troops' grievances can be erased, is what you are saying."

Subordinate: "Correct. Can we not utilize the dancers for this task? Once they see that splendid song and dance, many of the men will…"

Zikr: "Hohoh, I see. You speak as if you have seen them before."

Zikr narrowed his eyes and pursued his suspicions, but the subordinate cleared his throat and avoided a straight answer. However, his reaction was more than enough evidence that Zikr's hunch was correct.

In any case, he was stuck in a position between that of a General and that of a Soldier, and so, his place was a difficult one.

As he was trying to obtain the method to heal the relationship between the two, to press him further was to quite literally embody the word "petty".

Additionally, this subordinate had seen these dancers of sorts with his own eyes, and had strongly proposed to use them to great extent.

Zikr: "I believe those dancers are extremely beautiful?"

Subordinate: "Of course! Ah, ahem, no doubt they will suit your eyes, Sir. Their dancing, the musician's song and performance are splendid too…"

Zikr: "Hmhm, that does raise my expectations quite a bit."

Even when responding in kind, Zikr thought their descriptions to be slightly exaggerated.

Thinking that however, it was indeed joyful that his subordinate had taken into consideration his own standing and the times ahead to provide this proposal. So there was no reason to be stubborn and decline it.

Zikr himself, having been hard-pressed and anxiety-ridden, had not invited and played with any ladies over at his bedchamber recently.

He could not put the same inconvenience on his troops as well.

Zikr: "Alright, understood. I will allow myself to be smooth-talked by you here. Invite that troupe of travelling entertainers and prepare a space to show appreciation for the soldiers."

Except—

Zikr: “—Make sure they do not bring in any weapons. Do not forget to search them.”

4

Once approval from Zikr was received, the troops mobilized quickly.

Almost as if they had been suffering from severe dehydration and starvation, they immediately prepared a space for a banquet on the first floor of the City Hall, readied alcohol and food, and gathered women to serve as waitresses.

Then, contacting the band of travelling entertainers in question, the troupe was invited to the top-floor of the City Hall.

???: “—Who you are about to lay your eyes on, is the beautiful danseuse from beyond the Great Waterfall. Her silky black hair that drinks up the sun’s light, along with her heavenly fair skin that has received the blessing of the spirits, her utmost beauty is comparable to the divine beings, and tonight, she will lavishly perform for you all.”

After the musician’s dramatic introductory speech was delivered, the veil was pulled back slowly with showmanship.

A female-only band of travelling entertainers, what the musicians revealed hidden under the drop veil was the dancer that was the hot topic of the city—The appearance of said dancer being revealed, Zikr widened his eyes in surprise.

Zikr: “…”

Exposing her milky skin, the beauty who loosely let her hair flow down her back, her appearance betrayed what had been conveyed by the musician’s introductory speech. —Indeed, such comments were far from sufficient for describing the belle here.

Her bewitching black hair, her cream skin wrapped in a light garment. Certainly, there was a magical power to them, one that would mesmerize many of those who would come to gaze at her. However, those factors were merely one portion of the real reason for her beauty.

Including people other than dancers or musicians, if charisma was what charmed most humans, and if one were to equate charisma with talent, this dancer's aura and appearance was frighteningly overflowing with it.

Most of all, what led Zikr to feel such powerful sentiments, was none other than the dancer's eyes.

To say that those almond shaped eyes with long lashes were the core of her favorable features, was unsuited. It was no exaggeration to think that, on the golden ratio, they were positioned in the most perfect place.

The reason his throat unconsciously parched up was because Zikr instinctively felt a craving.

Whether that was because he was attracted to the dancer's physicality's, or because he was pulled to the charisma the dancer was entwined with, was a phenomenon that was completely unknown to even Zikr himself.

This dancer had already incited such deep emotion with nary a single movement. The size of the impact that would be brought about once she started to actually dance with song and music, would be of unimaginable proportions.

And, Zikr craved to be overwhelmed by an impact of proportions he could not dream of.

Black-haired Musician: "—Please, allow us the chance to display our danseuse's act."

In place of the silent dancer—No, danseuse, a musician with matching black hair bowed her head down.

The two musicians and the black-haired and blond-haired ladies were likewise beautiful; however, to Zikr, who was enraptured by the danseuse's appearance, they could only be considered an accompaniment. Normally, any thoughts of dismissing women were to be met with self-examination and reflection, but he was burning with fervor, to the point where such thoughts did not even cross his mind.

Never, until now, had he so strongly become self-aware of his nickname, Womanizer.

In reality, Zikr probably was a Womanizer. —Because, in front of beauty of this scale, staying at a peace of mind was, without a doubt, impossible.

And so, with his heart still burning with ardor, the banquet commenced.

Of course, seeing as Zikr was the commander, his seat in the banquet was at the very back. The gathered Generals—as the rank-and-file Soldiers had been excluded, the people of higher rank gathered and started to enjoy their alcohol and food.

The number one sight was however, as expected, the showcase from the band of travelling entertainers.

Originally, the objective was to show appreciation for the troops and let them release their dissatisfactions, but Zikr had forgotten the original aim and held his breath for the danseuse's turn on stage.

Bringing booze to his mouth to quench his thirst, he moistened his tongue, lips and throat. He brought his breathing back to normal that way.

Zikr's heart was spell-bound to that extent.

Black-haired Musician: "—Tonight, what you will witness is a dance from the hometown of our danseuse, a dance from beyond the Great Waterfall. Please, satisfy to your heart's content, the dance from the ends of the end."

The voice of a singing musician started and the plucking of strings led to the sounds of gentle music.

As an unfamiliar tune started to play, the Generals who were conversing noisily bated their breaths with faces of vermilion. They too, were unwilling to take their eyes off the performance that was about to start.

Then—

???: “…”

Then, the danseuse who slowly came into sight, started her breathtaking “dance”.

Everyone: “…”

Making full use of her long limbs, everybody lost their words at the figure with swaying black hair as she danced.

Forgetting to breathe, they stared. —This was the very definition of “enchanted”. Anyone who witnessed a dance like this and maintained a clear-headed mind had something wrong with them.

Someone like that did not understand the value of dance, and possessed the sensibilities of an animal.

The Imperial Soldiers were a pack of wolves, but they were not beasts who did not possess the power of intelligence and speech.

Subsequently, the Generals also held their breath, forgetting how to breathe, and were bewitched by the stunning danseuse’s act.

Each person lost their voice and were captivated by the danseuse’s performance.

Pitch-black hair, smooth, white skin with naught a blemish. An alluring face that would make artists want to cut off their dominant hand for its deep knowledge. They were charmed by that.

However, what continued to attract, boundlessly so, Zikr’s eyes, mind and heart, were none of those features.

—It was the eyes.

Just as he thought, he could not shift his gaze from the danseuse’s eyes.

Her long-slitted eyes lorded over the stage in which she was dancing on, and were boring right into the very back of the room, at Zikr.

Her eyes, which did not leave their target for a single second, directly took hold of Zikr's brain and did not release their grasp.

Eventually, the danseuse crossed the hall, advancing right in front of Zikr.

Then, softly kneeling in place, raised her two hands and requested Zikr's sword.

Naturally, Zikr understood her action, that it signified the wish for a sword.

With the world in her grasp, the danseuse's dance raised the tension and made it obvious that she would rise to the next level. On top of transitioning to a dance utilizing a sword; to a blade ballet, the danseuse wished for a blade.

Zikr did not have the option to refuse and not pass the blade over.

No one could stop it. The subordinates and Generals; no one could deliberately obstruct this act.

This was something that was to happen no matter what. That was how natural this course of action was.

That was why—

Danseuse: "—It is your loss, Zikr Osman."

Having his unsheathed sword pointed at his throat, hearing that ruthless declaration, Zikr Osman did not process that he had been defeated by virtue of being the Womanizer.

Zikr: "…"

Even at this very moment, he could not avert his gaze from the eyes of the danseuse who had declared such words.

That cold charisma which attracted many—It was as if he had seen it before. That feeling of déjà vu was endlessly branded by flame into the mind of the defeated General Zikr.

Chapter 22:
The Bloodless Siege Plan

1

—Let us rewind the clock, to before the danseuse's whirling dance at Guaral City Hall.

???: "—A bloodless siege, you say?"

Having entered the meeting place, in front of all those gathered there, Natsuki Subaru had made a powerful declaration.

The concealing oni mask forcibly ripped away, Abel looked up toward Subaru and, in a chilling voice, repeated the "pipe dream" that had vibrated his eardrums.

He sneered—No, there was no sense of mockery in it. It contained pure doubt, a kind of breath that conveyed that the person before him did not understand what they were proposing.

The intention was understood.

Subaru: "You may have devised a plan to get through with minimal sacrifices, but you wouldn't think of a plan with zero sacrifices in the first place."

Abel: "Naturally. Whether you accept it or not, what we are engaging in now is war. Come what may, casualties cannot be avoided. All that can be done, is planning to avoid the waste of human resources."

Subaru: "Well, I don't like your way of thinking about human resources to begin with."

Looking down on Abel sitting cross-legged right in front of him, Subaru clicked his tongue.

The term "human resources", was the combination of two words, "humans" and "resources", one that Subaru thought should not be combined into such an abhorrent term whatsoever.

That way of looking at "humans" by keeping them at a distance, was one step detached from viewing people as only numbers.

Or perhaps that was the sense of balance a ruler like Abel had to have but—

Subaru: "Well, I don't accept it. Flop-san's the same, right?]

Abel: "—. And in place of that, you interject with this bloodless siege? That is a remarkably grand declaration. Coming from you, who was so haggard until just a moment ago."

Subaru: "I won't argue that I've been a worn-out, pitiful, disgraceful sight. To begin with, ever since I got blasted away to this country, I've been through a series of non-stop disasters."

In response to Abel's point, Subaru derided himself, then stared at his own palm.

His unduly clean right hand, that arm which had been replaced by a new one, could also be called part of those "non-stop disasters". Albeit tough, the replacement of his right hand had been one of his few pieces of luck, had it not?

The replacement of his hand, and that Rem had awakened. That, and encountering the siblings Flop and Medium, could be considered good fortune without exaggeration.

Outside of that anyway, fortune and disaster were two sides of the same coin.

So was Abel before him, so were the People of Shudraq, and so were the Imperial Soldiers including Todd—

Subaru: "This series of hardships has been soul-draining. But."

Abel: "…"

Subaru: "—The more friction, the more fire ignites."

Staring hard at his clenched fist, Subaru announced that clearly.

Right then, Rem, who had been lagging behind Subaru, arrived at the entrance to the meeting place. Using her cane, she came in alongside Utakata and Louis.

She had likely come to see with her very own eyes.

Since it had been her selfish plea that had ignited Natsuki Subaru's soul.

Subaru: "A strategy to enter the city, after asking Flop-san for a secret byway… Are you planning a surprise attack? There's no way that'll work."

Abel: "Oh, why is that? It is a fortified city, protected by a bulwark. Do you possess some other method to pass through?"

Subaru: "If there's a wall, anyone'd think to look for a way to bypass it. That is, though the byway itself may be cleverly concealed…"

If there were a secret byway for going in and out of the Fortress City, naturally, it could be assumed that it was for allowing those of uncertain backgrounds and goods of dubious origin to get through.

Of course, it would probably be concealed so as not to be discovered by guards. But even that would only get past ordinary levels of vigilance.

Beyond that, it did not seem possible to evade the net of wartime vigilance especially.

And above all—

Subaru: "That bastard who chased us down in the city isn't the type to overlook something like that."

He was quick-witted, cunning, and made decisions without hesitation.

Seeing that Todd knew of their survival, any sort of byway would be the most guarded “opening”. The enemy would not be so kind to leave it as it was.

Blocking it would be obvious, and there was also the fear that any left unblocked could have been converted into “traps”.

Subaru: “That’s why a surprise attack would be absurd. It’s likely the opponent waiting over there will smash your head in with an axe the moment you slip out from a byway.”

Flop: “Wh-Wh-Why are you looking at my face as you say that, Husband-kun! What a scary thought!”

He had intended to make the danger known to everyone, but his eyes subconsciously fixed on Flop’s face.

Subaru remembered how many times right in front of him the assassin’s dagger—No, the assassin’s axe, had felled the man before him. Subaru did not want to witness that again; even if it killed him, he could not let that happen again.

Abel: “…Were it to simply be a surprise attack, I am of the same opinion regarding the enemy being wary.”

Subaru: “What?”

At his unexpected assent, Subaru stared in wide-eyed wonder. The reason being that the one endorsing Subaru’s opinion was none other than Abel himself.

Abel: “What? Is my affirmation unexpected?”

Subaru: “That’s right… Despite you acting as if you’re right about everything in this world, you do things like readily admit your own mistakes…”

Abel: “Nonsense, when did I admit to having been mistaken? I merely endorsed the idea that a strategy of using a byway to commence a surprise attack would not be successful.”

Subaru: "—? Then, how were you planning to use the byway?"

Abel's denial had a different feeling than that of a sore loser who had had his thoughts correctly guessed.

As Subaru grilled him for the basis, Abel shut one of his eyes,

Abel: "There is no reason humans must be the ones going in and out. If it is only to paralyze the functioning of the soldiers confined in the city, merely smuggling something in would be sufficient."

Subaru: "Something…"

Abel: "—Poison."

Subaru: "They're even less likely to overlook that!"

Abel's dispassionate delivery all the more gave a sense of his unwavering resolve to get things done, and Subaru instinctively and loudly criticized his plan.

The use of poison or the like would be inexcusable. —In truth, since Subaru had experienced the power of poison employed by the People of Shudraq, he vehemently opposed its use.

That hellish suffering, it was more wretched than dying in battle.

Subaru: "Anyway, weren't we talking about trying to minimize suffering, or at least reduce harm to persuade Flop-san? How does a plan that uses poison…"

Abel: "What are you speaking of? A surprise tactic using a secret byway also has the possibility of our own troops being sacrificed in the event of an attack. With poison, that possibility is eliminated."

Subaru: "…"

Abel: "Reducing the losses of the forces on hand. That is what it means to minimize damage."

Abel spoke definitively, and in front of him Subaru held his breath.

Again, Subaru recognized anew, between his own position and Abel's, the grand scale of difference between a ruler's and others' fields of view. The gap was beyond Subaru's comprehension.

In short, Abel did not take damage to the residents of Guaral into account. —No, even if he did not bring harm to the residents, he thought nothing whatsoever of harm to the Imperial Soldiers.

That much had been clear ever since the Imperial Soldiers' encampment that he himself had aimed for had been burnt to the ground.

Subaru: "Still, my thinking was naive. You…"

Abel: "That is correct, your thinking is naive. Consequently, you have no place here…"

As they confronted each other, sparks flew between Subaru and Abel's glares.

Just as their views clashed with one another, and the discussion began to break down—

Flop: "—Now now now, wait a minute, you two! There's no need to glare at each other and argue like this!"

Flop stepped between the two of them and created some distance.

A sodden smile appeared on his face as he looked back and forth between the glaring faces of Subaru and Abel; "Let's calm down and discuss this!", he said as he clapped his hands in front of his chest.

Flop: "To be frank, my discussion with Village Chief-kun was getting nowhere! And then, Husband-kun triumphantly returned. I definitely want to hear about this "bloodless siege" Husband-kun's talking about! If it's real, it'd be like a dream come true!"

Subaru: "Flop-san…"

In response to the grinning Flop's expectation, Subaru quelled his prior anger. Somehow or another, taken aback by Flop's behavior, Abel seemed to do the same.

Abel let out a “Hmph” with a small snort,

Abel: “—. Very well, we shall hear him out. Should your idea manage to successfully fool this merchant, as long as you get the whereabouts of the secret byway, that will be that.”

Flop: “Huh?! Husband-kun?! Don’t tell me you…”

Subaru: “Nonono! We weren’t planning this! Just because it doesn’t seem like your own idea’s going to work, doesn’t mean you get to try to force me to be part of it, asshole!”

His remark needlessly invited Flop’s distrust, yet, moreover Abel showed no shame. He held on to his composed arrogance. “You hardly need that oni mask…”, Subaru spat at him.

???: “So…”

Like that, a faint voice slid into the gap created in the conversation.

Standing stock-still at the entrance of the meeting place, eyes fixed on Subaru’s back, came Rem’s voice.

Not fooled by the atmosphere of the place, Rem continued to stare only at Subaru.

Rem: “So, what would you do? Could you find some other way that isn’t a fleeting dream or a blood-soaked reality?”

Subaru: “…Every bit of the way you say things makes my heart sing.”

Rem: “…”

Rem stared with her lips pursed, and Subaru responded with a bitter smile, and strengthened his resolve once more.

Then, he surveyed the faces in the meeting place once more. Abel and Flop, along with the Shudraqians starting with Mizelda, and as he became the focus of everyone’s gaze, Subaru: “My plan’s got no need for either byways or bloodshed.

But, it does require Flop-san's assistance."

Flop: "Even though it doesn't need a byway, it requires my help…? But Husband-kun, surely you know I'm just a helpless peddler with a bit of a mouth, don't you?"

Subaru: "Yeah, of course. But Flop-san isn't just a merchant, there's a blessing you were born with. —A nice face."

Flop: "—Huh? My face?"

Wide-eyed, Flop put both his hands to his face.

Similarly, everyone in the meeting area tilted their heads as if to say "His face?".

Mizelda: "I see, that's true."

Taritta: "—! Sister, did you realize something?"

Mizelda: "No, I just approve of what Subaru said about him having a nice face."

Taritta: "Sister…"

Mizelda nodded and crossed her arms, while Taritta sullenly hung her head.

But, since more or less no one had caught on to Subaru's intentions, an air of doubt was spreading among them. Same went for Flop and Abel, even.

However, Mizelda's stubborn interest in the appearance of others was not off-base. It was precisely her weakness and sense for beauty that had given Subaru a great hint regarding this situation.

Because Mizelda putting too much stock in good looks had been that which had inspired this Bloodless Siege Plan.

Subaru: "Evidence's better than debate. —Flop-san, we can't tell until we try it, so follow me."

Flop: “Follow you? That’s not a problem, but what in the world…”

To the still dubious Flop, Subaru pushily told him “Don’t worry about it”.

And then, his gaze turned to face Mizelda,

Subaru: “You dye your hair and draw designs on your body, so you use cosmetics right? Could you try lending me those items for a bit?”

2

Everyone: “…”

Having returned to the meeting place after a while, everyone was lost for words upon witnessing the “results”.

However, Subaru knew that it was not speechlessness born from negative sentiments such as being perplexed or fed up, but rather genuine awe and astonishment, perhaps even some moving emotion.

He could say with confidence that it was well within expectations for his handiwork to have that much of an impact.

Subaru: “Turns out, if given diamonds in the rough to work with, even I could deliver some decent results.”

Everyone: “…”

Rubbing his nose, Subaru who had declared so was met with the same unresponsive crowd as before. While the silence continued without anyone returning from their state of stupefaction, an uneasy “H-Husband-kun” was voiced.

That came from the only person who, other than Subaru, was immune to the shock induced on those present.

Flop: “Something feels off, I haven’t seen the end-product yet, but how did it turn out? The sensation isn’t very pleasant…”

Subaru: “Oh come on, there’s no need to worry Flop-sa… Nah, don’t you worry about it, Flora.”

Flop: “Flora?!”

Eyes widened in surprise was Flop—nay, Flora. Yet even when his expression was washed over with surprise, it was adorable nevertheless, thought Subaru nodding with confidence whilst caressing his face.

Then once again, Subaru grabbed Flora’s slender shoulders, and turned him to face forward.

Veiled behind the silky curtain of long, golden hair, were eyes that were more accentuated than usual from having had eyeshadow applied to them. The eyelashes had been adjusted in a way that showed off their length, and a hint of red adorned the cheeks to create a striking contrast with his naturally fair skin. Lastly, the lips were colored red and he had been changed into clothes that completed the look.

With his dainty physique, only the slightest bit of effort was required to disguise him as a “her”.

Which meant—

Subaru: “—This is the key to a bloodless siege, the best strategy I can devise!”

Throwing his fist up in the air, Subaru debuted Flop-Flora to everybody in the meeting place.

Despite the limited time given, Subaru had been capable of bringing the most out of a gem from its unpolished state, something he took pride in. Surprise should be reserved for now however, for this was only a work born from inadequate preparation, the least adorable version of what Flora could be.

Having gathered all the necessary tools, as long as the person in question kept in mind the appropriate mannerism they should uphold, it would not simply add to their charms, but increase it exponentially.

Subaru: “Beauty can be made.”

Rem: “Are you fooling around here?”

Subaru: “Eh?!”

A cold piercing voice jabbed at Subaru, who had presented a feat without rival.

Taking a peek, the owner of that voice was none other than Rem with a frigid gaze. Those eyes that had regarded Subaru with expectation just before were nowhere to be found, and were instead replaced by those that Rem had since she first woke up.

Having swallowed his breath due to the harsh gaze, Subaru said “Hold on!” with an outstretched hand.

Subaru: “I-I’m not fooling around! I’m really not fooling around here whatsoever, so don’t look at me like that!”

Rem: “You aren’t fooling around? Stop with the absurdity. I was a fool… to even have tried putting the slightest amount of faith in you.”

Subaru: “You’re jumping to conclusions! This is somewhat late but you really are just like Ram in that sense!”

Rem: “Hah?”

Despite it being something that the current Rem did not recall, Ram too was quick to jump to conclusions.

Though his heart was warmed by the thought that they were, after all, sisters, his number one priority right now was regaining the lost trust from Rem.

In actuality, Subaru was not messing around. He was taking everything head-on with all seriousness, and giving it considerable thought.

The purpose of going through all that trouble to turn Flop into a woman named Flora was—

Abel: “—The target’s Zikr Osman, huh.”

Said the first person to arrive at the answer, Abel, who had his chin resting on his hand.

Unlike the rest who had been unable to conceal their surprises at the transformation from Flop to Flora, Abel was able to suppress it and stayed silent, presumably to probe for Subaru’s true intent.

And thus, he had been able to see through what Subaru was getting at completely.

—The target would be Zikr Osman.

General Second-Class of the Empire, and commander of the Imperial Soldiers stationed in the Fortress City of Guaral. A capable man who preferred solid and safe war tactics, and on top of that—

Subaru: “I heard he’s called the Womanizer. Sounded like it was well-known among the Imperial Soldiers.”

Abel: “The fact he is renowned for being one, and that he received a nickname because of it, is common knowledge.”

Rem: “Womanizer… doesn’t give off a very likable impression to me.”

Having heard the conversation between Subaru and Abel, Rem made a grimacing face.

Subaru could not help but agree with Rem’s impression of him. Upon hearing that a military officer was a womanizer, one would probably imagine a filthy pervert with a vulgar personality. However, that’ was an opening they could use to their advantage.

Subaru: “At the Imperial Soldiers’ encampment, there was even talk of doing things like presenting a captured woman to General Zikr. Basically, as long as a woman’s harmless there’s a good chance she can get near him.”

It was something he would rather not recall, but at the encampment, Jamal had directly told Subaru that he would do something such as offering Rem to Zikr.

Rem was a beautiful girl, so it could be said that Zikr's sense of beauty was a normal one.

Subaru: "That being the case, with the power of Flora, it should be doable."

Flop: "H-Husband-kun? You've been calling me Flora with intense anticipation for a while now, but what do I look like right now? I don't know what's going on and I'm scared!"

Subaru: "Don't worry, Flora. I won't make you do this alone, of course. I'm going to fight the same way too."

Mizelda: "No matter how you look at it, that's absurd, Subaru!"

Subaru soothed the bewildered Flora, and Mizelda stood up at his remark. Her eyes were overcast with a strong, hard expression, and she gripped her hands on Subaru's shoulders, shaking her head.

Then, she lowered her tone of voice as if imparting a truth that was difficult to convey,

Mizelda: "Your eyes have a charm to them as well. But as for what you were born with…"

Subaru: "Hey hey, come on now, Mizelda-san. Didn't you hear what I said?"

Mizelda: "What was that?"

Subaru: "—Beauty can be made."

Subaru affirmed reassuringly, placing his hand atop the one Mizelda had placed on his shoulder.

Hearing this, Mizelda opened her eyes wide and gasped. Then, directing her gaze at Flora, she squinted as if the makeup on that face were something radiant.

Mizelda: "You've got me beat… Let's see it, your potential."

Subaru: “Yeah, just watch.]

Kuna: “What are you talking about, I don’t geeet it.”

Mizelda entrusted the matter to Subaru, and he accepted. Kuna watched the exchange between the pair with exasperation, but had no comment to give.

Anyway, the problem now was—

Abel: “As for utilizing Zikr Osman’s preferences, what is your intention? Even he, is still a wolf. Merely dangling a pretty thing in front of him, he is not a dog who shall bite at such bait.”

Subaru: “Well, dangling something purposelessly is hardly worth discussing. So, we need to devise a way to get him to bite. For instance, enticing him to a party.”

Abel: “A banquet? Alas, it shan’t be easy to draw him in. Naturally, there is no reason for him to emerge from inside the walls until reinforcements from the Imperial Capital are present. He shall not be tempted by a suspicious invitation.]

Subaru: “Sure. I’m still narrowing down the choices, but…”

Rem: “W-wait, please!”

Like that, while Subaru and Abel were in the midst of arguing back and forth, Rem raised her voice.

She looked back and forth between the two, a surprised expression affixed to her face,

Rem: “Are you being serious? I can’t believe you’re going through with this, centered on pranking Flop-san.”

Flop: “Wha, they’re pranking me? Seriously, what do I look like right now? Wife-san says I look like I’ve been pranked… Niece-chan, what’s going on?”

Louis: “Auu? Uu! Uu!”

Beside the tense Rem, Flora, who had not yet been able to see his reflection even once, sought solace in Louis. But having never met Flora before, Louis panicked and hid behind Rem.

In other words, in Louis's view, it appeared as if Flora and Flop were different people.

Abel: "Setting aside whether that girl's reaction is appropriate as a litmus test, I do not consider this a prank. At last, you have proposed an idea meriting discussion."

Subaru: "Then you also recognize it. The beauty of Flora."

Abel: "—. I recognized that your idea was one I had not thought of. Do not get it twisted now."

Subaru's lips curled in an expression of dissatisfaction with Abel's obstinate reply.

However, Abel paid him no mind, and for a short period held his hand to his mouth in careful deliberation. Then, he shot a jagged look in Subaru's direction,

Abel: "Natsuki Subaru, I have one question… Your cosmetics, can only the merchant make use of it?"

The question came.

Subaru: "…"

For a moment, Abel's inquiry left him dumbfounded.

But Subaru turned over the intent of the question in his mind, and shook his head.

Subaru: "I already told you. I said I'm in the same boat as you if we go through with this operation!]

Abel: "Nonsense. Who would place their trust in you? Take a look at yourself in the mirror and only then speak."

Subaru: "Watch your mouth!"

Brow furrowed, Abel spat out his contempt from the depths of his heart. Ignoring Subaru's hurt from this comment, he pressed his hand to his chest,

Abel: "To handle this alone is beyond the capabilities of a mere merchant. —Thus, I shall follow suit."

Mizelda: "A-Abel too?!"

Hearing that brazen self-recommendation, the air of the meeting place around Mizelda began to buzz.

Of course, Subaru had also been surprised by Abel's proposal. Truly, he had never dreamed he would suggest that on his own.

Subaru: "…Honestly, I thought the main issue was going to be how to talk you into it."

Abel: "In ordinary times, it would be a fool's errand, something not even worth considering. But as it stands, we possess few cards to play, and our potential plans are also limited. If it is indeed effective, it is a necessary situation we must stoop to."

Subaru: "Tch, you have a freaking terrible way of putting it. This is why charismatic bastards are…"

Never mind that he had been chased off the throne, there was no wavering of the fact that he was the Emperor.

That was Abel's creed, and a belief that he would not yield on. Having been shown a glimpse of it so blatantly, Subaru had no choice but to genuinely commend him.

Were he an example of an inept person with authority, he would make a blunder by being too preoccupied with his own safety.

However, ever since Abel had first encountered Subaru in the jungle, he had continued to win big gambles using himself as a chip, Lifeblood Ritual included.

This time would be no exception as well, and he probably had zero intention of backing down from it.

Abel: “An ingenious scheme is something that starts producing results only when performed from outside the enemy’s expectations. Taking advantage of the General’s biases, it conceals itself in their unavoidable negligence. There is value in discussing this plan.”

Subaru: “Yeah, it’s also written in a book called the “Kojiki”. It says that crossdressing’s the best option when aiming for the enemy General’s neck.”

Rem: “You can’t seriously just accept the contents of such a suspicious book…”

It was a reference to an old book of ancient and honorable origin, but even if he were to explain the trustworthiness of the “Kojiki” to Rem now, he would not get a reply from the current her. As of now, he could not think of a way to quickly regain the trust Rem had in him.

He feared rejection without the chance to explain himself, so he was grateful yet surprised that Abel had accepted his proposal.

Subaru: “When you said poison, I really thought you were the type to execute anyone who opposed you, but…”

Abel: “If required, I am willing to do so. Nevertheless, emotions are far from being a necessity for future decisions. After all, what I must obtain is not limited to the city of Guaral.”

Subaru: “…”

Abel: “If General Zikr Osman were to be secured, we can devise means to procure what I desire without bloodshed. If the concerns of an internal insurrection can be reduced, that would be celebratory.”

Subaru: “…Right. There’s definitely value in the words from the guy who’s lost his place because of an internal insurrection.”

A restrained taunt he said in the spur of the moment, but Abel’s expression did not give the slightest twitch.

Was this level of sarcasm and disrespect not worth getting aggravated over? —Or perhaps, like Abel himself had stated, he was not as pigheaded as to not recognise his own shortcomings.

In any case—

Subaru: “If you’re cooperative then there’s nothing more that I could ask for. Your name… Abel, Vollachia… Is Bianca fine?”

Abel: “I am not particular about my fake name, call me as you prefer. More importantly, there is hardly enough manpower with just you, me and the merchant. Let me see…”

Crossing his arms, Abel surveyed the faces in the meeting area.

Then, closing one eye with a “Hm”,

Abel: “The ones we can use are Kuna and Taritta, that would be about it.”

Subaru: “Wha?”

Abel: “It is the preparation needed. Even if we successfully draw out Zikr Osman, the requisite manpower to suppress him is needed. Saying that, anyone who is instantly recognizable as one of the People of Shudraq should be avoided.”

Abel said while pointing with his chin. Hearing that, Subaru also understood Abel’s thinking.

Suddenly being put under the spotlight, Taritta and Kuna were perplexed. While they were members of the People of Shudraq, compared to the others, these two were the types that did not give off a wild atmosphere.

Mizelda, at first glance, looked like a fiery and aggressive fighter. Similarly, Holly on first look, gave a unique impression on people. They were not suited for this situation, which called for the concealment of their Shudraqian identities.

In the end, what was needed to not raise alarms in the enemy’s mind was a feminine charm—

Subaru: "I think that's the limit of what my dress-up and makeup can do. I can't give them a womanly charm with these cosmetics after all."

Rem: "—Me too."

Subaru: "Rem?"

Then, the one who swiftly raised her hand there was Rem.

This was the Rem who did not hide her disbelief towards Subaru after the case with Flora. Yet, as if she'd had some reconsideration after seeing them continue a serious discussion of this plan, her expression was likewise weighty.

And, with resolve and determination shining in her light-blue eyes,

Rem: "Please, let me take part in this. I'll definitely be of use."

Subaru: "Rem… Sorry, but that's not possible."

Rem: "—Hk! Again, you're unnecessarily trying to distance me from danger…"

Her resolution on the verge of being crushed, Rem's eyes shot daggers at Subaru.

Without a doubt, Subaru held a sense of overprotectiveness that would most likely infuriate Rem. His sentiment to distance her from danger and let her peacefully spend her time inside a cradle was no lie.

However, that was not the sole reason for stopping her participation in this battle.

Subaru: "It's true I'm worried for your safety. But, the reason I'm rejecting your involvement is simply because the plan's success rate will decrease… Rem, your face has already been seen by the Imperial Soldiers."

Rem: "—Ah."

Subaru: “There was that time you got caught at the camp, and also when we were running away from the city. We can’t use Medium’s help for the same reason. We made too much of a scene.”

After causing such a commotion, the guards at the security checkpoint would definitely not forget Rem and Medium’s faces. Louis too, for that matter.

The operation this time, was a battle on whether or not they could get the better of the enemy’s thinking and slip under their radar. Unless they wanted to endanger that core idea, there was no way they could bring Rem along.

Rem: “But… But, if the condition is whether our face has been seen or not, then it should be the same for you too!”

Subaru: “Yes, but no. Because, it won’t be me who’ll be passing through the main gate of Guaral. It’ll be Natsumi Schwartz.”

Rem: “Hah?”

As if she thought she was being deceived again, anger blazed in the determined Rem’s eyes. However, in regards to this case, nothing could be explained through words.

Just like how Flop had been transformed into Flora, Natsuki Subaru had to simply disguise himself into Natsumi Schwartz. —He had to walk the walk, not just talk the talk.

Subaru: “Anyways, the reason I can’t bring you along’s just as I explained. But, Taritta and Kuna, you guys too, this’ll be a dangerous operation so I’ll have to convince you two first before…”

Mizelda: “Nah, this is interesting. I’ll allow it. Take them both.”

Just as Subaru was trying to confirm the thoughts and intentions of the two Shudraqians, Mizelda interrupted with those words.

Turning his head in surprise, Subaru saw the shining eyes of Mizelda focused back on him with blazing curiosity. She stared with the intensity of a hunter; it felt like she was peeling his skin off and trying to take a peek underneath.

For a brief moment, Subaru could even feel an intense fear sweep through him.

Subaru: “Mizelda, san?”

Mizelda: “Subaru, you and Abel have already proven your valor. Shudraq respects those blessed with valor. But, that doesn’t mean we cut and throw away ingenuity as an unblessed value. Might and wisdom, those excelling in both become supreme warriors… Go and prove yourselves.”

Her cheeks warmed in joy, as if the operation that targeted the enemy’s weakness was favorable for her as well.

Based on assumptions, Subaru had believed without question that Mizelda and the rest of the People of Shudraq would dislike this sort of scheme. That was why he planned on inquiring Taritta and Kuna whether they would like to participate in this operation or not.

However, after Mizelda gave her answer, Taritta and Kuna nodded along as if it were the most natural thing in the world.

Kuna: “If the Chieftain says so, I have nothing else to reaaally say.”

Taritta: “I will follow Sister’s direction… I am also interested in this, makeup.”

Linking her hands behind her head, Kuna accepted with an attitude that said she did not care either way. Taritta held the same opinion but she would flick her gaze towards Flora on and off.

It seemed like she had gained an interest in Subaru’s makeup handiwork. He thought the scene was somewhat lacking in the tension expected from the preparation of a life or death operation, but—

Abel: “If there are no objections, then let us swiftly prepare. We must settle this battle before the cowards in the Fortress City receive encouragement from the Imperial Capital.”

Subaru: “… Okay, got it. If everyone’s good with that too. Rem, is this alright with you?”

Rem: “—. You’re not going to listen no matter what I say, are you?”

Laden with embarrassment from what she had spoken before, Rem glared at Subaru intently. He was sorry about dismissing her resolve but, after considering her safety and the success of the operation, there was no path in which she could join them.

That was why Subaru cast his eyes downwards, and resigned himself to bear Rem’s fury.

However—

Rem: “But, the one who asked you to do something about this, the one who requested that, was me.”

Subaru: “Rem?”

Rem: “And for me to make a fuss about it, there’s no way I can do that… Please be successful.”

Her frustration had not vanished, and it was not as if she had forgiven Subaru as well. She would respect the decision made, was what was communicated to him through her averting gaze.

Just by that, the dark clouds within Subaru cleared up.

Subaru: “Only Rem can do this, but man is it calming… Wait, that’s not right is it?”

Just by showing her very slight approval, Subaru was giddy to the point that he felt like he could fly up high in the sky.

But also, when Emilia smiled, he felt like he could rise up to the heavens by that smile alone, and when Beatrice would explain something with her smug face, his chest would become super warm and comfy.

With a “Huh”, Subaru only now noticed that he was easier to deal with than he’d thought.

Abel: “What is the matter? Are you only now getting cold feet?”

Subaru: “Not now, that’s not quite right … It’s just that, I’m getting pumped up.”

Abel: “Hoh? Show that with your utmost efforts, then.”

Receiving courage from Rem’s comment, Subaru answered while Abel flared his nose.

Needless to say, that was what he intended to do. —Once this “bloodless siege” succeeded, the path to return to the Kingdom of Lugunica might open up.

Even if that were not the case, Subaru would not let any tragedy occur within his sight’s reach. He would not let it happen.

???: “—Heeey, big brooo! It’s not nice to Bote-chin if we don’t let her rest so I wanna put her somewhereee.”

Then, in the meeting area where zeal was rising, Medium peeked her face in without hesitation.

Even when compared to the muscular Shudraqians, Medium stood one head taller, and so was very noticeable with her height. The said-noticeable person then looked over the meeting area with her round eyes and,

Medium: “Eh, where’s big bro?”

Flop: “Ohhh, dear sister! To lose sight of your brother is quite cruel of you. I’m present, right here!”

Medium: “—?”

Towards the head-tilted Medium, Flora stood up and made her existence aware. And towards Flora’s words, Medium scrunched her eyebrows and fell into deep thought.

Staying silent for a while, she then yelled, as if she had come to a realization.

Medium: “Big bro, all this time you were actually my big sis!”

Flop: “Husband-kun?! What’s going on here?! This is actually scary!”

If even the eyes of a blood-related sister could be deceived, this would certainly be a firm foothold for this operation.

Chapter 23:
Musician Natsumi Schwartz

1

Subaru: “…”

Looking at his reflection in the crude mirror, Natsuki Subaru—or rather, the being who used to call himself that, squinted their eyes and carefully inspected themselves over and over again.

Dark eyeshadow and carefully curled eyelashes reflected back. The texture of their skin, the greatest point of difference between men and women, was coated with white powder; his lips were painted with a vermillion color that made them look fresh.

The costume had been quite the challenge, but he had been able to disguise his physique by wearing a lot of loose clothing, despite struggling to achieve a style that matched the southern climate.

At any rate, this time he would have to act not as the daughter of a nobleman, but in a looser and casual manner—that of a traveling entertainer. Therefore, aside from gestures, the appearance needed to be more “female” in order to fit the design.

Subaru: “I’m going to gather as much of my body to my chest and stuff it to the limit…”

He had utilized every technique he could think of, pictured the encounters he had so far in his mind.

Starting with Emilia, then Felt and the loathsome Elsa, followed by Ram and Rem, plus Beatrice and Petra, setting Meili aside. After that, Priscilla, Crusch, Anastasia, and Ferris, who he should look up to as a mentor, and then Frederica. Then there were the Witches, well-dressed only in appearance, annoyingly—he had gathered his imagination of “beauty” from all the beautiful girls, beautiful women, and beautiful girl-like beings he had met in this other world so far.

—He must constantly imagine himself as the most beautiful version of herself.

He did not need to think about anything else beyond the vision he held.

He had made the best move he could with what he currently had on hand, and arrived at the place where he needed to be.

Therefore—

Subaru: “—This is me.”

His sight left the mirror, then he slowly took a deep breath and turned around.

Alone, after hours of trying to fight in solitude, he finally pushed open the door. Beyond it, he could see his friends with bated breath, waiting for the success or failure of this mission to take hold.

The women turned their attention to Subaru as he opened the door and stepped out.

Subaru: “…”

There was silence, and he could feel the tense atmosphere.

His immediate anxiety refused to allow him to understand which emotion was causing the silence. Certainly, he was lacking a number of cards to play with. If he’d had that, if he’d had this, there would be no end to his regrets.

However, thinking about it, was it not about taking initiative?

One could not always go into battle in perfect condition. In any case, life was all about playing the cards one had been dealt, wasn’t it?

And it was when he found himself making excuses as if he had already lost the battle.

???: “…Brilliant.”

He heard the faint sound of air bursting and looked up.

There he saw that the true nature of this burst had been nothing of the sort. It was the sound of hands coming together. It was the sound of applause. The sound was a mixture of congratulations, admiration, and respect.

Subaru: “Mi…”

He looked at the person clapping and was about to call out in a manner unbefitting a lady, but stopped himself in time.

It was still incomplete. He gently put his hand to his throat and let the air bounce there in small puffs. Then, just as the gears clicked in his mind, he smiled,

Subaru: “Mizelda-san.”

Mizelda: “—Hk, no way, your voice? What in the world, what in the world, how in the…?!”

Subaru: “Once I’ve decided to do something, it’s my duty to do my best. There are lives that can be saved if I don’t cut corners. If that’s the case, then there’s only one thing I have to do.”

Mizelda: “Ooh…!”

The smile disappeared and he pointed one finger up towards the heavens.

The close thicket of trees prevented him from seeing the sun, but it was not the heavenly beings he had to show this to, only the many friends gathered here.

Look at them, from head to toe.

It didn’t matter if it was from the front, the back, the right, the left, or anywhere in between.

—He must constantly imagine himself as the most beautiful.

If he succeeded in tracing that image, succeeded in recreating the ideal, then he would have nothing to fear.

Here, with authority—

Subaru: "—Natsumi Schwartz's advent."

That's what Natsumi Schwartz heroically—or rather, declared like a lady.

Mizelda, the woman who had stopped clapping in front of him, nodded deeply. She then lined up next to Natsumi, supporting his back with her hand,

Mizelda: "My world was too small. You were right, Subaru… No, Natsumi."

Subaru: "You understand now, don't you, Mizelda-san?"

Mizelda: "Ahh, it is frustrating, but I do understand now… Beauty can be made."

Mizelda lowered the corners of her eyes and smiled gently, while Natsumi smiled back.

The People of Shudraq that were gathered there also looked at each other as they witnessed the beautiful scene. Then, applause rained down, coming as a belated blessing.

The applause continued to pour down, congratulating Natsumi on her unveiling.

And then—

???: "What is this?"

???: "Uh~"

The ones who couldn't quite get over it watched the scene with their cheeks contorted into a frown.

Subaru: “And so, Natsumi Schwartz was born. I was a bit confused, since the different makeup tools and all, but I managed to get this much done.”

Rem: “Are you kidding me?”

Subaru: “Eh?!”

After returning to the meeting place and setting up another assembly, Natsumi—or rather, Subaru’s words were answered by Rem, her gaze gelid, her tone glaciated .

Rem’s chilly attitude did not change even after showing her the results. Subaru pointed to his face and said,

Subaru: “I need fake eyelashes after all… For the wig. I managed to borrow some black hair from the Shudraq…”

Rem: “I’m not talking about that. I think the makeup and wigs are well done. But you don’t have to talk like a woman forever.”

Subaru: “Yes, but… the state of mind is also important, isn’t it? If I’m not careful on a regular basis, I never know where I might fall apart. Besides…”

Rem: “Besides?”

Subaru: “If I indulge in the fact that I’m a man, the goddess of beauty will turn her back on me and… Ouch ouch ouch!”

Just as Subaru was about to speak seriously, Rem pulled his ear quite hard.

He couldn’t help but get teary-eyed as he quickly moved away. Subaru decided to slip close to Mizelda, who was watching the proceedings.

Subaru: “Mizelda-anesama, I’m afraid of Rem-san…”

Mizelda: “Umm, don’t cry, Natsumi… Strangely enough, you look so cute, even though I know you’re Subaru. Taritta should learn from you.”

Taritta: “Sister!”

While her sister patted Subaru’s head, Taritta rolled her eyes at Mizelda’s ruthless comment.

However, Taritta’s face was much softer than it would normally be. That was because Subaru had rearranged the heavy makeup she usually wore, which could be called the war paint of the People of Shudraq, to make her look cuter.

The Shudraq were best known for their bravery and strength, but this time they were required to be both glamorous and dangerous, with a magical and sensuous quality that could drive men crazy.

Taritta and Kuna’s makeup was fun to apply once they decided to focus their beauty regimen in that direction.

Subaru: “You have a much younger face than I expected, Taritta-anesama. Your makeup looks great, it’s nice to show off your cuteness once in a while.”

Taritta: “Please don’t tease me! First of all, I can’t be as pretty as you…”

Subaru: “Well, your lack of confidence is also cute! Right, Mizelda-anesama?”

Mizelda: “Yes, dear.”

Mizelda’s cheeks relaxed as Subaru leaned up to her and spoke softly. Taritta flinched at the sight of the two of them, and turned over with a slight blush on her cheeks.

Her brown skin made it hard to see her cheeks redden, but the makeup on her eyes and lips gave the impression of a slight blush, so it was easy to see the adorable change in her appearance.

Rem: “When are you going to stop fooling around?!”

Rem shattered such a flowery scene with a single shout.

Subaru and Taritta shrank as if hit by a gust of wind. Rem glared at them with her pale blue eyes, then looked at Kuna at the edge of the room.

Kuna, who, like Taritta, also had her makeup done along with her hair, jerked away.

Kuna: “Wh-What is it, for the record, I have nothing to do with this…”

Rem: “Kuna-san, I’m counting on you. Looking at those two, I see you’re the only one who’s sane… Are you seriously going along with this plan?”

Kuna: “I know I’m the only sane one, but…”

Kuna, who had her hair in twin tails, looked at Subaru and Taritta with an unmotivated look in her eyes.

It was an unpleasant assessment, but Subaru could only wait to see what would happen. Her look told him that he was insane, and thus was different from Taritta, who was shaking in shock.

Kuna let out a small exhale at the reaction of Subaru and the others.

Kuna: “The reason why he couldn’t do the mission has disappeared, you understand that too, right, Rem? Natsumi… Subaru doesn’t have a problem. Yeah, he’s more of a woman than the Chieftain.”

Rem: “I think that’s too rude to say about Mizelda-san…”

Kuna: “I don’t think it’s a problem. What’ll be a problem are our results over there…”

And just as Kuna was nearly done answering Rem’s questions,

???: “—It appears everyone is here.”

Kuna: “Oh, speaking of the devil…”

A pompous, undeceiving tone of voice enveloped the meeting hall, and a new figure appeared.

When Kuna's gaze turned in that direction, Rem had no choice but to turn in the same direction. Naturally, Subaru, Mizelda, and the others' gazes were drawn there as well.

Everyone: "…"

At that moment, time stopped for everyone.

—No, to be precise, time stopped for everyone aside from the figure that appeared and Subaru, who had applied makeup to them.

Subaru: "I left the fine-tuning to you, but… you're so good at it, it's almost disgusting."

Abel: "It does not elate me to be praised for my makeup skills. Nevertheless, your skills are impressive. So, even a finished product may become a whole new thing, huh. It looks even better than I imagined."

Subaru: "Kuh, my margin for victory…!"

As he said this, Subaru gently bit his pinky finger in frustration.

Of course, there was no doubting his belief that beauty could be created. Subaru was also proud to say that he had proved this with his own body, using the few cards he had in hand.

However, there was still a difference in materials.

That was why—

Rem: "Ah, Abel-san, right?"

Abel: "Who else would it be? Do not inquire such a silly question. No, if I have changed that much, then your surprise is appropriate for reference."

In response to Rem's trembling words, Abel—or rather, Bianca, the being born from makeup, a wig, and a change of costume, clutched his five thin white fingers.

His raven black hair was long and lustrous, creating a perfect harmony with his beautiful face and slit eyes. The dancer's costume bound his waist, splitting down his legs, showing just enough skin to attract attention.

Standing there was a beautiful dancer who had recreated extreme beauty, the best joker card in hand, that was essential to this plan.

Everyone else: "…"

Bianca's perfection was such that even Mizelda and the others had lost their voices.

That was different from Subaru's Natsumi, where the shock was over the magnitude of the change. This was the pure shock that was brought about by the perfection of beauty that Abel's Bianca had in spades.

The Shudraqian jewelry, which adorned the dancer's costume and long hair, served only as a garnish to accentuate his real beauty.

Subaru remembered the smile on Mizelda's face when she had lent them to him.

For some reason, Subaru's heart ached when he remembered that smile. However, out of concern for Mizelda and the others, Subaru did not have the option of cutting corners.

How could he ruin this perfection himself?

Subaru's ego as Natsumi Schwartz would not allow for such a thing.

Subaru: "It was surprising to me that you weren't afraid of wearing makeup…"

Abel: "What, you think it a disgrace to dress up as a woman? For the record, this is not the first time I have done this. I have undergone such things many times in my childhood."

Subaru: "As a child?"

Abel: "Yes. Considering my position, I would state it is a good idea to possess a wide range of ways to protect oneself."

Subaru's lips curved at Abel's words, not Bianca's, a beautiful woman who crossed her arms adorably.

Perhaps his past experiences were referring to the secret feuds he'd endured as a candidate to become the next Emperor, before actually taking up the seat.

In Vollachia, where the succession to the throne was apparently much more tumultuous than in Lugunica, it was easy to imagine the possibility of assassination being employed in the battle over who became the next Emperor.

In order to survive such a harsh life, he would have sometimes had to disguise his appearance and even gender.

Abel's willingness to make sacrifices, including his own, seemed to have been shaped by his childhood, before he won the throne of the Emperor.

That was how it had come about, and now appeared in Abel's Bianca, now dressed as a woman.

Subaru: "Still, it's kind of annoying that you're aware that you're beautiful…!"

Abel: "That is exactly what is ridiculous. How can someone be in a position where they must be capable of looking at their country from a broad perspective, and not be able to see themselves objectively? Though you seem to have subverted that objective assessment of yourself through your own skills, I have no need for those kinds of petty tricks."

Subaru: "Guh… Hk."

Abel: "Do you know why tigers are strong? Tigers are strong because they are strong."

Subaru was struck by a concept that he had heard from Garfiel as well.

The theory that tigers were strong because they were tigers, became attributed to the fact that Abel was beautiful because he was Abel.

It was no longer the logic of violence.

It was the same as saying that Reinhardt was strong because he was Reinhardt.

In other words, it was a blunt view of the world.

Subaru: “Well, anyway… Flora’s thinking the same thing, isn’t she?!”

Flop: “Aren’t you jumping to conclusions there, Husband-kun?!”

Behind Abel followed an astonished Flop, now disguised as Flora.

He was also dressed up, and had the type of beauty that Subaru knew would make a finished product more complete just by fully utilizing the potential of his resources. In fact, unlike Subaru and Abel, he’d had his originally long hair only slightly tweaked, so it could be said that he was the one who brought out the most charm from the materials.

In fact, Subaru was confident that if they stood side-by-side, he wouldn’t be greatly inferior. But—

Subaru: “There is a difference in the amount of time and effort that is put in… Must be divine favoritism…!”

Flop: “I’m sorry to hear you lamenting this, but you look great Husband-kun. You’re no longer Husband-kun, you’re Husband-san!”

Subaru: “…I’m not satisfied with a compliment like that anymore.”

Flop: “Was that a compliment? I didn’t know it was.”

Flop’s frankness hadn’t changed even though he was now Flora. Anyway, that was fine in his case. Although he would need some acting guidance to follow the plan’s directions.

In this situation however, it was Abel who would be the most important.

Subaru: “Flora and I can play instruments. Therefore, your role is…”

Abel: “Dancing, huh. I do not require being told, I have the plan in my mind. The importance of my role alike. Besides…”

Subaru: “Besides?”

Abel: “I am not as excellent at dancing as my dead sister, but I am pretty close.”

His cheeks twisted, and even his triumphant, arrogant smile was beautiful.

Abel’s confident attitude was reassuring, and at the same time, it made Subaru’s heart burn with anticipation. In fact, Abel had demonstrated his devilishness without regret as a complete Bianca.

If Abel’s self-awareness was correct, Subaru could have high hopes for the dancing as well.

Subaru: “—. Alright then. If you have that much confidence, show me how good you are. After all, you can’t take back whatever you’ve spat out.”

Abel: “Whatever I spat out, huh…? Hmmm, as in, when one is being spat down upon by the clouds, you mean? That is quite a roundabout way of saying it, but that is fine. I shall display it to you.”

Subaru: “…”

Abel: “It is the least I can do, to reward you for offering this plan.”

Abel’s arrogance did not diminish, even when dressed as a woman, as if he never doubted himself.

Feeling both reassured and threatened by this, Subaru softly looked at Rem. Unfortunately, he couldn’t let her accompany him for his plan.

But still—

Subaru: “Please pray for my safety. I’ll do my best for you.”

Rem: “—. ——. ————. —————. Yes.”

Subaru: “It took you long enough to pray, didn’t it!”

Subaru shouted at Rem’s late reply, who looked sincerely mystified.

Louis, beside Rem, pulled her head back in tightly as she heard this. It seemed that even she could not recognize Natsumi as Subaru.

For the moment, it was a good thing that the reaction convinced him that he had gained some momentum for the mission.

3

—Operation “Kumaso Takeru”.

That was the name of the operation aimed at Zikr Osman, the Womanizer, and General Second-Class of the Empire.

Inspired by a tale out of the Kojiki, the name for the operation had been Subaru’s suggestion, fortunately, no one had not raised any objections.

It was uncertain if they had respected Subaru, the one who had come up with the plan, or if no one cared about the name of the operation in the first place, but it was a good thing that there had been no trouble over it.

At any rate, there was no point in a plan in which the element of luck inevitably came into play.

Of course, they would spare no effort to improve their chances of success, but it was difficult to accrete luck. However, it was not a bad thing to gain a favorable condition, even if it was a small one.

—Leaving the Buddheim Jungle, the group set course for Guaral.

The five members of the party were Subaru’s Natsumi, Abel’s Bianca, Flop’s Flora, Taritta, and Kuna. The rest of the People of Shudraq were led by Mizelda in a separate party, with Rem, Louis, and Medium among them.

Hiding away from the city, they would need to attack the walls of the Fortress City and act as a diversion if the need arose. However, that was only an insurance policy.

A less-than-ideal insurance policy in case the plan fails. If the plan were to fail, Subaru and the others would be in a very dangerous situation by then.

Anyway—

Subaru: “Personally, I think the first checkpoint’s the most important one.”

Subaru muttered this, looking up at the main gate, in which the front was glaring down at them from high above.

They were going to challenge the main gate again, which they had once forced their way through, albeit that had passed a few days ago. Naturally, after what had happened the other day, the security level at the checkpoint was higher than before.

In preparation for another invasion by rebels, special emphasis had been placed on dragon carriages, ox carts, and other vehicles that could hide people in their cargo. He could hear the shouts of merchants and travelers as their tools of the trade were mangled, their carts turned over, and their straw carefully poked with swords.

To be honest, he felt quite bad for them. However, considering the chaos that would occur in the city ahead, he thought it might be wise of them to turn back here.

Of course, there was no way he could give them that kind of advice, but—

???: “—Next, what about you guys?”

A stern man’s rough voice struck Subaru’s eardrums as he pondered.

Upon looking up, he saw a bald-headed guard with a strong physique beckoning toward him. The man called the group forward, and Subaru hung his head reverently at the head of the group.

Subaru: “We are a troupe of traveling entertainers. We come to this city from the north.”

Guard: “Oh, traveling entertainers…”

Raising an eyebrow in curiosity, the guard also looked at the group behind Subaru.

Flora, carrying a musical instrument on her back, waved; Taritta, carrying her luggage on her back, bowed; Kuna draped a parasol over the person next to her, whose face was covered by a veil, not allowing anyone to see her expression.

The guard’s admiration for this rather atmospheric group could be sensed.

Subaru: “…”

On the other hand, while maintaining an amiable smile, Subaru’s insides were tense.

He was familiar with the guard. He was the one who had been in charge of the main gate when Subaru had first met Flop and Medium when entering Guaral.

In other words, he could not have been a better choice for the first obstacle.

Guard: “But coming from the north, that must’ve been tough. It’s rumored that the Scorching Lady’s territory’s bustling with activity over there. Flocks of flying dragons are flying around.”

Subaru: “Yes, yes, that’s true. That’s why we couldn’t stay there for too long… On the other hand, this is a city protected by such a magnificent wall, so I’m sure it’s safe, right?”

Guard: “Uhhh, that’s…”

When Subaru flirted, with a faint smile on his face, the guard’s expression grew uncomfortable.

The reason for his reaction was probably that he too was aware that the Imperial Soldiers, whose camp had been burned to the ground, had fled into the city. On top of that, the commotion caused by Subaru and his companions the other day had probably made the Imperial Soldiers in the city more alert and the atmosphere tense.

That must have been the reason for the guard's slurred speech.

That being the case, there was no reason not to take advantage of it.

Subaru: "…Are you worried about something in this city, by any chance?"

Guard: "…Yeah, kinda. It's something that's easy to find out even if you try to hide it. As a matter of fact, the Imperial Army's stationed in this city right now, and they're having trouble with the tribes to the east. So…"

Subaru: "Oh dear! That must be suffocating for the people of the city."

Guard: "That's right."

Apparently exasperated, the guard leaned forward at Subaru's words.

Although it was hard to distinguish between the two when not in contact with each other, guards and soldiers basically had different positions. Guards in a city belonged to that city only. Soldiers, on the other hand, belonged to the country, in this case the Empire. Their chain of command was also fundamentally different.

The guard in front of him was also a member of this city and had a duty to protect it.

However, the current situation was that the Imperial Army had taken over the City Hall, and the guards were being ordered to do this and that. The guards had no reason to be used as a toy by the Imperial Soldiers.

Guard: “In addition, they took over the city taverns by themselves, calling it “night patrol”. And since they don’t pay well, it’s not good for business. I can’t handle it anymore.”

Subaru: “Oh dear, oh dear, how terrible! My heart goes out to you. Between you and me, I’ve had my share of rough experiences with the arrogance of the Imperial Soldiers.”

Guard: “Oh, really? A beautiful woman like you…?”

After he threw in some agreeable reactions, the guard’s response softened at once at Subaru’s deep and loud approval. Actually, the man seemed to be quite friendly, so Subaru lowered his voice slightly, then said, “Yes,” and turned his head to look away.

Seeing that meaningful gesture, the guard said, “Oh, miss?” before he became flustered.

Guard: “Are you okay? If you don’t wanna talk, don’t bother…”

Subaru: “No, I’m fine. It’s an old, old story. It’s just that before, I was forcibly captured by the Imperial Soldiers and put in a cage and treated like a slave.”

Guard: “That’s…”

Subaru: “They sometimes did things like intentionally extend their feet to make me trip and fall, and at other times they would even threaten me with blades…”

Guard: “Tha-that’s unforgivable…!”

The guard clenched his fists in righteous indignation as Subaru tearfully recounted his past.

Seeing the man’s ears reddening in fury, Subaru muttered softly, “You’re so kind.”

Guard: “No, no, I’m not trying to be nice. Anyone’d feel the same way you do.”

Subaru: “Then, hey, Guard-sama. If you feel sorry for me, please let me in. If you do…”

Guard: “Then what?”

Subaru: “Then I’ll give a makeover to the atmosphere of this city, which the Imperial Army has made so bleak.”

His voice was quiet, but the enthusiasm in his voice was passionate.

Hearing this, the stern face of the guard flushed with surprise. His gaze turned to the troupe of traveling entertainers lined up behind Subaru.

Guard: “…Ladies, what arts exactly are you gonna show us?”

Subaru: “Of course, we have traveled around the world and learned many different arts. I also like to sing, play a bit of music, and do a little magic. But…”

Guard: “…Gulp.”

Subaru: “The best part of the show is the dance of the troupe’s flower, the danseuse.”

With those words, Subaru pointed to a figure standing in the center of the group, protected by a parasol. Her face was hidden by a veil, and she was the main attraction of the troupe.

The guard’s eyes widened and stiffened as he took in the gaze from behind the veil.

His throat was frozen, even though not everything was exposed.

Guard: “…”

It was natural to be blinded and unable to move.

It was a masterpiece that would have frustrated even Subaru. “Beauty can be made”, he had boldly stated, but true beauty was a creation of God.

After all, Subaru‘s beauty was nothing more than touch-up work in comparison to that.

However, even that one step was enough to sharpen his devilish beauty even more.

Subaru: “In addition to the danseuse, we’ll also sing and play music for you. We hope you will allow us to stay in Guaral.”

Guard: “…”

Subaru: “Guard-sama?”

Guard: “…Ah, aah, that’s right. I don’t see anything suspicious among your possessions…”

The guard muttered to himself as he came back to his senses after being nipped in the shoulder with a little pinch. He then put his hand on his chest and looked around at the group, breathing softly to check the beating of his heart.

And as much as possible, while consciously averting his gaze in order to not become mesmerized by that fiendish visage.

Guard: “You can come in. If you’re gonna perform somewhere, it’s better to stay away from the main gate. The main street in the middle of town’s a good place to start. The City Hall’s too crowded with soldiers to be a viable candidate.”

Subaru: “Well, that’s very kind of you… When will Guard-sama be available?”

Guard: “Oh, me? My shift ends just before dinner at dusk, and then I’ll go eat…”

Subaru: “Then please let me know where that restaurant is. I’m sure that if you bring some of your colleagues with you, we’ll be able to thank them for their hospitality towards us.”

He gently leaned in and whispered so into the guard’s ear.

When the guard raised his eyes in surprise, Subaru smiled at him and moved away. Then turning to his troupe mates, impatiently waiting at the checkpoint,

Subaru: “Okay, here we go, folks. Let’s clear the atmosphere in this city as a gift.”

With that, Subaru led the people who had stopped in their tracks and passed by the guard.

With the guard holding his ears and looking on in amazement, Subaru and the others walked proudly and unhindered through the main gate into the city.

Watching them go, the guard exhaled quietly—

Guard: “…Let’s try to finish work as soon as possible for today.”

He blurted this out.

Flop: “Well, that was a thing of beauty, Husband-san! I’m beginning to think that maybe you have more talent as a merchant than I do!”

A few moments after passing through the main gate with his luggage, Flop a.k.a. Flora praised Subaru’s behavior at the checkpoint with a twinkle in his eye.

There was no lie in his open-hearted words, and Subaru nodded cheerfully.

Subaru: “Yes! I’m honored by your praise. But I’m not a merchant by any means. I got my own business that I need to attend to.”

Flop: “Things you need to do? Like what?”

Subaru: “Of course, it’s not about being a lady…it’s about helping the people important to me.”

Flop: “…”

Flop’s eyes widened slightly upon hearing Subaru’s words. However, he quickly relaxed his gaze and nodded, “Well, yes”.

Flop: “Then we need to make this plan work, and reassure Wife-san as soon as possible.”

Subaru: “And Flora, we don’t want to make Medium-san feel uneasy, do we?”

Flop: “Hahahaha! My sister would never be worried. My sister is a very tough girl, both physically and mentally. I can’t imagine her feeling down!”

Subaru agreed with Flop, who smiled cheerfully, albeit unlady-like.

Like Flop, he could not imagine Medium feeling down either. The two siblings must have helped each other through many a rough times.

That was why Subaru had a responsibility to help the two people he had gotten involved.

Subaru: “It’s getting harder and harder to mess up, isn’t it?”

???: “Wait, please wait, Subaru… No, Natsumi.”

Subaru braced himself, as he heard a weak voice from behind.

He looked over to see that it was Taritta, who was carrying the group’s luggage. She was unlike her usual self, as, after leaving the jungle, Taritta had changed her makeup.

Instead of the amazon-esque Shudraqian attire, she wore more fluttery clothing, and her image now was that of an exotic ethnic dancer.

Rather, it was less revealing than her usual attire, but as Taritta glanced around, her cheeks dyed red with embarrassment,

Taritta: “Hey, isn’t this kind of attention grabbing? There’s something weird about Kuna and I…”

Kuna: “Don’t drag me into this, please. If you’re talking about something strange, there’s no one stranger than Natsumi. What the hell was that with that checkpoint just now? You’re too good with men.”

By the side of the flustered Taritta, Kuna touched Subaru with her usual low intensity.

After those words from her, Subaru put his hand on his cheek with an “Oh my”,

Subaru: “It’s not the first time I’ve dealt with a gentleman. And don’t worry, Taritta-san. It’s not that you or Kuna stand out. It’s all of us who stand out… Because we’re beautiful.”

Flop: “Because we’re beautiful!”

Nodding profoundly, Flop and Subaru both agreed.

In response, Taritta looked incredulous as she voiced out a “Beau…tiful…”

Taritta: “I-If you’re going to use words like that, then give them to my sister…”

Flop: “What are you saying, Miss Taritta? Your charm and your sister’s are two very different things. First of all, by no means am I disregarding my admiration for Miss Mizelda when I pay my compliments to you. She’s a different case, and you two are in entirely different categories!”

Taritta: “—Hk!”

In an instant, Flop took Taritta’s hand and said this with a radiant smile.

Taritta’s eyes widened at the vigor of it, and her mouth slowly opened and then closed rapidly. As the blush on her cheeks grew, Subaru put his hand over his mouth and let out a “My oh my”.

Kuna: “Give me a break. Taritta’s particularly attached to the Chieftain, and has hardly ever left the forest. That’s why she’s not very tolerant.”

Subaru: “Well, she’s smiling. But you’re calm, right?”

Kuna: “I’ve been sneaking out of the woods more often than not, and I’ve never had a great and fearsome sister… I have a younger sister who’s quite a handful.”

In the back of Kuna’s closed mind, the person was probably Holly.

They were like sisters, like best friends, like parent and child. However, Taritta’s words could not be ignored.

???: “…”

Around them, attention was certainly focused on the crossdressing Subaru walking down the streets past the checkpoint.

In addition to their unusual attire, the entire city was on edge as the Imperial Soldiers were on high alert. Naturally, the citizens of the city would be very suspicious of strangers.

If that was the case, then—

Abel: “—It is an opportunity.”

Subaru: “Only for curious eyes, isn’t it?”

Under the parasol, a sharp gaze pierced Subaru’s profile from within the veil’s shadow.

Nudged to stop talking nonsense, Subaru replied with a sultry, “Yes”. However, Subaru agreed with the danseuse that this was a good opportunity.

Therefore—

Subaru: “Let’s follow the advice of the guards and make our debut on the main street!”

Flop: “All right, si… No, Miss Natsumi!”

Flop followed along as Subaru decided to start the performance off with a bang right on the spot.

They took off part of their costumes, exposing their shoulders, stomachs, and backs. They then stepped out, each holding an instrument in their hands, poised at the sides of the main street.

And then—

Subaru: “Come on, come by and take a look! I will now show you a song and dance that has been handed down through time and across the world, from beyond the Great Waterfall of the far East! This is from a traveling troupe that has come to the city today to perform!”

Subaru intoned a promotional line loudly, and then Flop, who had received eye contact, began to play the lyulyre, a stringed instrument held in his hand.

The light sounds combined to form music, which drew even more attention from the people who heard it.

???: “Oh, what’s going on?”

???: “They say they’re traveling entertainers! Music, music!”

???: “Wow, that’s quite a collection of beauties…”

The people walking down the street, lured in by Subaru’s words and Flop’s music, stopped or peeked out from the inside of buildings, having their attention drawn by the troupe.

Subaru and Flop were on the lead instruments, as Taritta and Kuna followed with simpler percussion instruments, such as castanets.

Subaru was grateful enough that since Flop was more skilled than expected, so he had no qualms with the music. More importantly, the odds of victory were roughly fifty percent.

Subaru: “From now on, we will sing and dance a story from a different world, far, far away! It is a story of people, dragons, demons, and strange beings that cannot be expressed in words. Please, everyone, relax and enjoy to your heart’s content!”

With a smile on his face and an excited tone of voice, the anticipation built up as Flop’s performance with Subaru reached its first climax.

Everyone was in love with their performance and the beauty of the musicians, but the real deal was right after this.

And just as the music crescendoed into its apex—

???: "…"

A black-haired dancer slowly removed the thin silk she was wearing, and stepped out into the street.

Upon lifting the veil with one hand and revealing his face, the people who had been listening to the music turned their gazes towards him, as a shock feeling like a punch to the gut permeated them.

Yes, that was it. He wanted that reaction, that look, and yet, he was upset.

Subaru: "It's so frustrating."

As he played his instrument, Subaru expressed his inner frustration of being beaten.

Deep in his heart, he felt defeated. But it should feel good to be beaten by something of such high caliber. But that was a lie. A sense of defeat was ultimately a sense of defeat, and it was frustrating.

However, this calmness just before it all turned into a frenzy was the key to this plan

Then, to the fullest extent, they could charm the people of Guaral with this dance.

Subaru: "Now, you're up, Bianca—!"

Abel: "…"

After glancing at Subaru with a flushed look, Abel a.k.a. Bianca slowly raised his arm.

One fluid movement, of merely raising an arm. In spite of this, his gestures had an elegance that exuded from deep within his being. It melted into the air and instantly dominated the main street.

A flowing, beautiful, and solemn dance began.

The dance that accompanied the music was something that Abel had originally mastered, but with Subaru's own twist, was probably new to everyone.

Yet, it even dispensed a need for any sort of manipulation or petty tricks.

With Subaru's tweaks, what had been a solid dance was now far superior.

Audience: "…"

The audience forgot to breathe as their gaze was enraptured by the beautiful dance. It was a cry of beauty that appealed to their instincts, it told them not to take their eyes off it even for a moment. To put it bluntly, this was what the eyes were meant to behold.

Abel's dance was arrogant and pompous, confronting his audience with such thoughts.

—It said, "Look at me".

The sight of the mesmerized and stunned crowd was frightening to Subaru, even though he had been the one to come up with the idea.

If there were a thief here, the people standing around would have their pockets openly searched and would not even notice if someone took their wallets. —No, that assumption was not valid, since even a thief would not be able to take their eyes off Abel's dance.

???: "…"

It was only one song and dance, lasting less than five minutes of time. The performers had been concentrating on not making any mistakes, but Subaru wondered if anyone would have even noticed if they had messed up. To be honest, Subaru's true thoughts were that it would be doubtful.

Once the performance ended, Abel's heels and toes made ground.

Seeing this posture, the audience finally realized that the dance was already over and Abel was just standing there.

Immediately, the main street was filled with applause and cheers.

Just as Subaru had hoped, just as he had aimed for, it was a resounding response.

However, unlike Flop, who was holding up his instrument and responding to the cheers, Subaru was smiling to the crowd with mixed feelings.

At any rate—

Abel: "—Hmm."

He had no idea what to say to Abel, who smiled triumphantly at him.

4

The reputation of the troupe in the Fortress City of Guaral had been determined by the great success of their first performance.

A demonstration of sorts set on the principal avenue, but the response had been far greater than they had expected, and so the troupe's activities after that became much easier.

However—

Subaru: "Don't forget that we were only brought into the spotlight because of our novelty. Our performance is just a hasty effort… Our act now is merely a passing fancy."

Flop: "I see! In other words, we need to work on our skills steadily, don't we, Husband-kun?"

Subaru: “Yes. That’s why we need to work tirelessly and be alert every day!”

Subaru clenched his fists firmly while Flop, who sat upright, nodded with a smile.

In contrast to his loud voice, Flop was a very good listener and responded quickly. Admirably, Subaru’s speech gained momentum thanks to Flop.

Anyway, it was not Flop that Subaru really should be talking to.

Subaru: “You two! Don’t let your guard down.”

Taritta: “Uh-oh, now we got caught in the crossfire.”

Kuna: “W-we did…?”

When Subaru pointed at them, Taritta and Kuna immediately looked displeased.

Inside the inn, the two of them had taken off the clothes they’d dressed up in, and gone back to their Shudraqian style, which appeared almost like underwear. While working as members of the troupe, they were properly dressed, but as soon as they entered the secluded inn, they looked like this.

Subaru: “You’re slacking too much.”

Taritta: “I’m not saying we’re not relaxing, but on the other hand what about her…?”

Subaru: “What do you mean? Actually, what are you even talking about? You know, I find these conversations without a clear subject pretty annoying.”

Taritta: “Natsumi, that’s what. Why you would pretend to be something you’re not, even when no one’s looking, is beyond Kuna and I. Is it really necessary?”

Subaru: “Pretending to be something I’m not…?”

Having no clue, Subaru replied questionably, and Taritta and the others were taken aback.

Naturally, “It’s a joke,” Subaru said, as he dispelled their surprise.

Subaru: “Nevertheless, I can’t accept that notion. You know why? “The devil is in the details”, as they say, and it’s the seemingly useless details that bring about the reality of the situation. That’s precisely why it’s essential to…”

Flop: “Not cut corners in places outside the public eye, is what you’re saying. Mhmmhm, as expected, Husband-kun… No, Miss Natsumi! I’m learning a lot!”

Flop was truly a student worth teaching, as that was an answer worth one hundred points.

That said, in regards to the point that he couldn’t correct himself from using “Boku” as his first person pronoun, no matter how much he tried; Kuna looked in protest at Subaru, but he passed it off with a smile.

—At that moment, Subaru and his troupe of traveling entertainers were staying at an inn in Guaral.

It had already been three days since they had begun their infiltration, and in that time, they had performed a total of ten times, receiving a more-than-adequate response.

He had not been in need of money to begin with, as he had the proceeds from the sale of the Elgina’s horn, but a good amount of money continued to come in for each show, so he thought it to be a really profitable venture.

Subaru: “I think it’s time to move on to the next phase.”

Gently placing his finger on his chin, Subaru hoped for a change in their stagnant situation.

In fact, their current situation was going so well that it was almost too good to be true. Every show was a great success, and the citizens, including the guards, displayed a lot of interest.

This was due to the perfection of Bianca's dancing, as well as the conversational skills of Natsumi and Flora.

Bianca's mysteriousness was also a selling point, and since she rarely appeared in public except to dance, Natsumi and the others naturally took over the role of gathering information.

Initially, the plan had been for Subaru's Natsumi and Flop's Flora to take over the task, since Abel a.k.a Bianca was unable to speak in a female voice.

Subaru: "Strangely enough, no one's suspicious of Flora, right? She hasn't even changed her voice."

Flop: "Haha, I don't have any special skills like Miss Natsumi. But I've been traveling alone with my sister for a long time. Maybe I've picked up some of my sister's habits or something, and that could've given me this feminine-like aura."

Subaru: "So it's from Medium…"

Flop happily proposed his new theory, but the Medium that appeared in Subaru's brain was beautiful in appearance, and her ever-changing facial expressions were adorable and charming. However, the theory that her presence'd had an effect on Flora's current perfection was something that could be debated.

Abel: "—You have a lot of time to waste, do you not?"

Subaru: "Hm."

A cold, icy voice interrupted the conversation between Subaru and the others.

It was Abel, the dancer of the troupe, who was sitting on a chair by the window without the wig on his head, that had finally decided to join the conversation.

Abel had danced in various places as the star of the show day after day, and although he attempted not to show it, a slight hint of fatigue could be seen.

Of course, he would never admit it, but spending time in Guaral placed a heavy burden on the body and mind. They were always keeping their guard up being behind enemy lines. Subaru, as Natsumi, was also constantly reminding himself to not lose his calm demeanor.

One never knew what tragedy would await them if they became discouraged behind enemy lines.

At first, this strategy had been regarded as a joke by both Rem and Mizelda.

However, Subaru had proposed the plan in a serious manner, and they had discussed it together to increase the chance for success. He was not so pessimistic as to give up and lament that the plan had failed.

Therefore—

Subaru: “Bianca, why don’t you get some rest? After all this time, I’ve never seen you sleep.”

Flop: “I’m not sure what you’re talking about, Miss Natsumi. It’s impossible that… huh? Huh? Now that you mention it, I don’t remember seeing Miss Bianca sleeping either.”

Flop tried to laugh at Subaru’s point, but then went serious upon noticing how that rang true. Not paying attention to Flop, Abel snorted and ignored it.

Abel’s strong sense of caution was ongoing, and he did not lower his guard with Subaru and the others.

Of course, Subaru understood that it was not easy for a man in his position to be able to open up to others.

But the fact that he could not show any signs of relaxation, even to his comrades who were undertaking this life-threatening mission alongside him, was more than a little tiring.

As usual, he would not even blink both eyes at the same time, Despite the fact nobody here would do anything were he to close both of them.

Subaru: “That way of life is tiring, isn’t it?”

Abel: “—Are you really the one telling me this?”

Abel frowned back at Subaru, the latter conveying his honest thoughts.

Hearing this, Subaru was unable to comprehend it all. It was true that Abel’s way of life was definitely suffocating, and Subaru’s was not.

Abel: “It is especially pathetic that you are not aware of it, but I forgive you. Keep doing your best.”

Subaru: “You don’t have to tell me, I’ll keep living. As for you…”

Abel: “Closing both eyes signifies surrendering the right to life and death to the other. I do not take myself lightly enough to allow that to happen, even for a moment.”

Subaru: “…”

Abel: “Do not lose your sense of tension, I am sure you have touched on it before.”

With those words, the ones Subaru wished to retort with were blocked.

Subaru stared at Abel’s profile with a bitter feeling, but he was no longer being taken seriously. Abel, who had taken off his wig and jewelry, wore feminine outfits at the inn, so that he could change into Bianca as soon as something happened. That was the justification as to why he looked so good without his wig, even though he should be in an unbalanced state without it.

This was the beauty of the tense atmosphere that was the result of the “ever-present battlefield” mindset Subaru had told the others, Flop included, to maintain.

And while he was thinking about Abel’s cold profile—

Abel: "—There is movement."

Subaru: "Wha?"

Muttering this, Abel stood up from his chair and went to his bunk. Subaru was taken aback as he witnessed how quickly he had put on the wig that had been left there. However, the meaning of that action was made clear immediately.

Loud and uninhibited footsteps came up from downstairs, and the door to Subaru and the others' room was violently slammed.

???: "So this is where the traveling troupe is. Open up. It's a messenger from the City Hall."

Subaru: "Ah, j-just a minute, sir!"

???: "Haha, don't make me laugh, I ain't waiting. We're soldiers."

A hoarse voice mocked the panicked Subaru, and the door of the room opened unceremoniously. Then, a man dressed in the red and black uniform of a soldier strolled into the room.

The man had two swords on his back, his face twisted with joy as he hid his violent impulses, one that Subaru had already seen—Jamal.

Subaru: "—Hk."

Jamal: "Don't be so frightened, I ain't gonna eat you."

Jamal snapped his teeth at Subaru, who involuntarily gasped and stiffened. With an eye patch over his right eye, he glared over the room with his left, not bothering to hide his unrefined attitude, chuckling "Heh heh". He then looked at Taritta and the others in their underwear, who had been slow to react.

Behind him, other than Jamal, there were four other soldiers. Apparently, it was Jamal who led them, and no one dared to interrupt his rough and brutish demeanor.

With his men following behind him, Jamal nodded his head in agreement.

Jamal: “I see, we got some beautiful ladies here. When I heard those lovestruck bureaucrats talking ‘bout it, I thought they were exaggerating…”

Subaru: “Soldier-sama, what can I do for you…?”

Jamal: “—I’m talking right now, woman.”

The tension in the air made Subaru chew the inside of his mouth. Jamal suddenly grabbed Subaru’s neck with his hand.

Not with the intention of breaking it, but with a soft touch to stop him from speaking—still, the agility of his movement and the strength of his grip made him feel just how vast the difference of their abilities was.

After all, Jamal, despite his appearance and bad attitude, was very good at what he did. Up to that point, he was probably the most skilled person Subaru had laid eyes upon in the Empire—although scary and strong were two different things.

Jamal: “You’ve got a nice, defiant look in your eyes. I like those sharp eyes, too.”

Subaru: “Ah, I’m flattered by your compliments… Kh.”

Jamal: “I also like the fact you don’t talk too much. How ‘bout I invite you to my bedroom tonight and…”

Jamal’s face was close to Subaru’s, as he looked at him with a lascivious stare.

@floating_hero

Even at such a close distance, he did not seem to have noticed Subaru's true identity. That in itself was welcome, but it seemed to have tugged at his heartstrings in the opposite sense.

He had received such invitations before, but he had always been able to avoid them with a smile and a good story. But when dealing with Imperial Soldiers, it became hard to refuse.

—It was then that a strong wind blew.

Subaru: "—Oh."

Unexpectedly, a breeze more forceful passed through the room, and Subaru's black hair flew up and tickled Jamal's cheek. After a moment of annoyance, Jamal turned his attention to the window and saw a figure standing there.

It was the black-haired dancer who was causing a stir in Guaral, standing there, wig back on and holding his elbows in a relaxed manner. Catching the figure head-on, Jamal whistled in surprise.

It was a great show of boldness, whereas most of the people were stuck admiring her.

Jamal: "Haha, so this is the danseuse I've heard so much about. No wonder you could pull it off."

Abel: "Hmph."

After Jamal released Subaru with a breath of surprise and admiration, he quickly approached Abel. He then grabbed him and made the danseuse face him.

Even though he was unaware, he was holding the Emperor's precious face in his grasp, giving him a crude smile.

Subaru thought that was exactly what someone had meant when saying ignorance was bliss.

Abel: "…"

Jamal: “You’re a thick-skinned woman, unlike that one. But that’s also okay.”

Abel squared his jaw and quietly stared at his opponent. While Subaru was on edge, Jamal sniffed as he engaged in the Empire’s utmost level of disrespect.

Then, Jamal turned around with his grip still on Abel’s chin and—

Jamal: “Rejoice, traveling entertainers! I’m here to invite y’all to a feast at the City Hall. Zikr Osman, General Second-Class, who runs this city, requests your presence.”

Subaru: “Zikr Osman, the General Second-Class…!”

Jamal: “Ah, ain’t it an honor? For a traveling entertainer to be invited to join a General Second-Class of the Empire.”

—Subaru clenched his fists subconsciously, as if to say So it begins.

Jamal’s pompous words overcame the disrespectfulness of the scene and sent a shock of surprise and joy through Subaru.

Zikr Osman, General Second-Class! It seemed as though they had caught the exact fish they were trying to hook.

Jamal: “No way you traveling entertainers are gonna turn me down, right?”

Subaru: “That…”

Flop: “Of course not! We’d hoped to bring song and dance to the Imperial Soldiers! It was the true meaning of our trip!”

Jamal: “Good answer! I like that.”

Subaru’s hesitation was overshadowed by a more immediate answer from Flop.

Flop’s charm, which allowed him to open himself to any opponent, was on full display here against Jamal.

Jamal, feeling good about Flop's crisp answer, quickly and roughly released Abel's face, then staggered to the entrance of the room.

And then—

Jamal: "Get ready to go. I'm taking y'all to the City Hall."

Subaru: "What? If you've invited us, we'd like to join you lat…"

Jamal: "Hahaha, don't worry 'bout it. We've been told to bring you there. This is our job, too. You can change right now. I'll also have my men in the back carry your belongings."

Subaru: "…"

Jamal: "It's a Generals-only banquet tonight. We lowly soldiers can only hope for more after tomorrow. So…"

With no intention of letting them go, Jamal's vulgar gaze harassed everyone in the room

Apparently, they could not afford to ruin his good mood. Fortunately, Subaru, Abel, and Flop were all at least dressed as women.

Taritta and Kuna, who were in most danger, were clearly women, so there was no need to worry that their lack of preparation would derail the mission. That said—

Jamal: "Take your time."

But the humiliation of having to clean up the room while they watched them unceremoniously change their clothes and pack their bags was hard to shake off. However—

Flop: "Got it! Come on, everyone, let's get ready! We don't want to keep the soldiers waiting! Let's get this done right!"

Subaru: "Flora …"

Flop: "This is so unlike you, Miss Natsumi! Neither blood nor tears suit you."

Subaru: “…”

His boiling anger disappeared at Flop’s words, who then smiled at him.

The words which he had taken the trouble to add at the end, were taken as a dare to remind Subaru of the purpose of the Bloodless Siege.

Subaru: “—. Yes, you’re right. Here, you and Bianca prepare yourselves! Especially since Bianca is a clod who can’t do anything but dance!”

Abel: “…”

Taking advantage of Abel’s inability to speak, Subaru delivered a scathing assessment of Bianca. Abel’s gaze stabbed him, but Subaru brushed it off.

He quickly cleared up the luggage in the room, changed his clothes to go up to City Hall, and forced himself to behave as Jamal wished.

At best, he could only whistle and enjoy watching them change.

Subaru was sure the biggest shock and regret of Jamal’s life would be waiting for him at the time the operation went according to plan.

That was the reason why—

Flop: “No! I don’t think you have to go so far as to need to shake your butt, Miss Natsumi!”

5

Even to the untrained eye, there was nothing in the City Hall that looked like military equipment.

Since the building was used for the management of the city during peacetime, it was only natural that no military equipment was prepared here. Even so, there were currently more than three-hundred Imperial Soldiers in the city, and more than five-hundred if the guards were included, so the defensive power was sufficient.

More importantly—

Subaru: “We’ve succeeded in sneaking into their bosom, but…”

Inside the building, Subaru chuckled as he took a look at the map in his mind.

Operation “Kumaso Takeru” was progressing unexpectedly smoothly.

He hoped that if the beautiful traveling entertainers became the topic of conversation in the city, the General known as the Womanizer would take an interest in them—and ultimately invite them to a banquet which would allow Subaru and the others to seize their target.

By being invited directly to the City Hall, Subaru could see an opportunity to realize their plan.

At the same time, however, another problem surfaced.

Subaru: “We’re going to have to carry out the operation tonight…”

There was no time to tell this to Mizelda and the others in the second squad.

Jamal, who had come to pick up Subaru and the others at the inn, had not allowed them to make contact with the outside world, not out of caution, but because of his perverseness.

There was no mistake that Jamal was a troublesome person, as he had bad intuition, yet compensated with good skills.

Even inside the City Hall, Subaru and his team’s activities were restricted, and since they could not take separate actions for any reason during the course of the meeting, they had yet to inform the other team of tonight’s plans.

Therefore—

Subaru: “We need to contact the outside world from inside the City Hall.”

There was also the possibility of failure, but if Subaru and the others’ operation succeeded, it would be necessary to disarm the other Imperial Soldiers inside the city.

Naturally, this would require a certain amount of strength, so regardless of the success or failure of Operation “Kumaso Takeru”, they needed to be in a position to cooperate with the outside world.

That was why he was undergoing a lot of trial and error.

Subaru: “I don’t know what she’s thinking, but Bianca’s unreliable…”

It sounded good to say that he was concentrating on this evening’s banquet, but ever since they had been invited to City Hall and isolated in confinement within the waiting room, Abel had been silent.

Of course, he understood that cooperation with the outside world would determine the success or failure of this plan, but he had not responded to Subaru’s advice.

Flop was also extremely supportive, and to be honest, he had been a great help, but he did not pose as an appropriate person to discuss the plan to bring down the City Hall with. First of all, Subaru did not want to do something that would cause him any more trouble.

In other words—

Subaru: “I have to do something about it.”

Clenching his fists, Subaru fired himself up in the bathroom he was led to.

Subaru and the others had been ordered not to leave the waiting room, but as expected, they would never forbid them from going to the bathroom. Nevertheless, they could not act recklessly, as the City Hall would immediately be flooded with Imperial Soldiers if they showed any suspicious behavior.

Subaru glanced at the windows, but unfortunately could not even try to go outside, as they had been fitted with iron bars, and because the waiting room itself was located on the third floor of the building.

He did not think the soldiers were particularly wary of Subaru and the others. However, the idea of leaving them completely unguarded was out of the question. That may be the manifestation of imperialism.

In the worst case scenario, the idea of reconsidering the decision to go ahead with the operation tonight at the banquet came to Subaru's mind.

Subaru: "…Even if we could miss the banquet, we wouldn't be able to avoid the invitation afterwards."

They were a troupe of traveling entertainers with beautiful women.

In the first place, when it came to bringing down the so-called Womanizer, it was easy to imagine that the goal was dancing, performing arts, and the nightly fun that lay ahead.

Even if he could avoid the advances of the citizens, it would be difficult for him to refuse the advances of an Imperial Soldier, and a General at that. And there was nothing he could do if they took him to the bedroom.

After all, this was still just crossdressing, and there was no universal guide to what to do from there on out.

Subaru: "I mean, if that happens, it's game over with a bad ending."

So, he needed to settle things tonight at all costs.

Besides, even if by some miracle they were able to avoid tonight's invitation, if Jamal's words were true, there would be a banquet tomorrow that would be attended by ordinary soldiers, rather than the Generals.

Common soldiers—that would, of course, include the one Subaru wanted to meet the least.

Subaru: "…"

To be honest, when Jamal had come into the inn, Subaru thought his heart would stop.

He was relieved that he had not recognized Natsumi as Subaru, but that didn't erase all of the danger—there was still a chance that he could have been killed by that arrow.

Subaru: "I don't want to call that too high a hope, do I?"

It was a difficult state of mind to be in.

He did not want to see him again, yet he also did not want him to be dead. It was complicated.

Even Subaru knew that there was evil in this world that could not be allowed to live. The Sin Archbishops were one of them, and they all stood for unforgivable sins.

So, if it were a Sin Archbishop, Subaru would be willing to let them die without hesitation. But he was not one of them; he was only the object of Subaru's fear, not evil.

First of all, if he were to put it that way, what about Louis, one of the Sin Archbishops, who he continued to overlook without a second thought?

Subaru: "—. It's no good. Right now, I need to focus on the plan in front of me."

It was ridiculous to be worrying about his foundation collapsing now.

Generally speaking, it was not just his foundation. Although he was now wearing makeup, his body and mind were still in tatters everywhere.

Subaru was good at making use of what little he held in hand, and that was what made him special.

Subaru: "I can't stay here much longer, can I?"

After a thorough search of the bathroom, he concluded that, unfortunately, there was nothing there that could be used. He needed to think about other methods of contacting the outside world.

There was also the guard waiting in front of the bathroom, the watchmen who kept them from wandering around inside the City Hall, and besides, Subaru really didn't want to be suspicious.

They may have to rethink the plan. If the situation became more pressing, Abel might understand this viewpoint.

Subaru: "I'm sorry to keep you waiting. I've been a little nervous."

Guard: "Hmm, oh, don't worry. I just found someone to talk to."

Subaru: "Someone to talk to?"

As Subaru quietly walked out of the bathroom, the soldier on guard duty who had been waiting for him responded. He seemed to be talking to someone who was passing by, who, with a twitch of their chin, looked over and said—

???: "—Oh, so you're the dancer invited as this evening's entertainment."

—Subaru's heart froze as he saw a face there that he definitely did not want to see.

Subaru: "Ah, ku…"

???: "Hm? What's the matter? You look so startled. Oh, come on, I'm not going to eat you."

Seeing Subaru's throat tremble, the other person laughed and cracked a joke.

It was a quip that he had heard from Jamal at the inn only a short time ago. But unlike Jamal, who had delivered it because of his dirty mind, he couldn't brush it off this time.

He wanted to ask if he really did not want to eat him.

Guard: “What, did you do something, Todd?”

Todd: “Me? Don’t be ridiculous, there’s nothing I can do. My wounds are so severe that I’ve been bedridden for quite a bit. I’m barely able to walk around.”

Guard: “That’s true, too. So it’s like she hated your face physiologically?”

Todd: “That’s rather hurtful…”

The man scratching his head and having a friendly conversation with the soldier on guard—Todd.

The object of fear that made Natsuki Subaru most wary, and the one that made him question the morality of killing those outside of the Sin Archbishops. That was the nightmare personified that was chatting in front of him.

Subaru: “—Ah.”

He needed to say something; Subaru thought, his brain revolving at high speed.

Silence was not good. He must not give even a hint of suspicion. Todd would find out and use it as an excuse to attack.

He did not need evidence or proof. If he had a suspicion, he would try to crush it.

Therefore—

Todd: “Hey, seriously, what’s wrong with you? Wait, have we already…”

Subaru: “Ah, I’m sorry… it’s just that…”

Todd: “It’s just that?”

The same words were repeated quietly, but his heart felt like it was going to flip over.

He wanted to end the conversation by saying he just didn't feel well. But just before he said it, he wondered if it was really okay.

Illness was a common excuse, but it would be a lie. He felt like Todd could see through a lie.

If Subaru tried to use his knowledge gained from Return by Death, Todd would understand his intentions and thrust a knife into him. Lies would be found out. Definitely.

Lies must be avoided.

He was not just feeling bad, Subaru was having a hard time breathing right now—

Subaru: "I'm a little, well, scared…"

Todd: "Scared? Of me?"

Subaru: "Not just you. I hate to say this, but… I was brought here a little too forcefully."

He averted his gaze, and tried not to look Todd in the eye.

Each and every movement caused doubt to swirl in Subaru's mind, as he tried to ascertain if he had succeeded or failed. He felt like if he were to be looked in the eye, his lie would be found. He felt like if he lied, they would see through him.

He was not lying. He was definitely afraid of Todd. There was no twisting that fact.

Hearing Subaru's desperate answer, Todd closed one eye.

Todd: "When she says they were forced to be brought here, who was it that took them?"

Guard: "Uh, I believe it was Private First-Class Aurélie."

Todd: "Oh, Jamal. That makes sense, then. Well, sorry if he scared you."

Subaru: “Eh…”

Todd, who was convinced by the exchange with the guard, said so and apologized to Subaru.

When Subaru peeled his eyes away at his unexpected attitude, Todd scratched his cheek with his fingers.

Todd: “I wouldn’t say he’s a bad… guy. Jamal’s got a bad mouth and personality, and he’s not very smart. But he’s not a bad guy. He’s just being himself.”

Subaru: “Ha, ha…”

Todd: “If you could, would you please be open-minded and forgive him? It looks like he’s going to be my brother-in-law. His angelic sister, who looks nothing like him at all, is my fiancée.”

Subaru was puzzled by Todd’s words that came with a wry smile.

From the looks of it, Todd did not seem to be distrustful of Subaru’s words or actions. Rather, he seemed to be sympathetic and concerned about Subaru’s involvement with Jamal.

Here, Subaru was unable to hide his astonishment at the skill he had mastered for the art of crossdressing and the fact that he had been saved by Jamal, who was usually crude and problematic.

His days of pursuing beauty, having thought they were for nothing, had not been in vain.

Even the sexual harassment he had received from Jamal proved itself useful.

???: “—Oh! Hey, Todd, what the hell are you doing out here!”

While Subaru was thinking about it, a shout of anger echoed through the corridor.

It was Jamal, raising his voice and making rough footsteps. Upon noticing Jamal’s approach, Todd put his hand on his forehead.

Todd: “Oops. You found me…”

Jamal: “I didn’t find you! The guy with a hole in his stomach should rest! You thought you can’t trust what you don’t see with your eyes, didn’t you?”

Todd: “No, no, no, I trust you. I trust you. You’re surprisingly diligent and you do your job well. But even if they work diligently, screw-ups are always gonna be screw-ups, right?”

Jamal: “That’s what I mean when I say you only trust your eyes…!”

Jamal clicked his tongue at Todd’s reply, who raised his hands and shrugged his shoulders.

But when Jamal, who was approaching with a snort, noticed Subaru beside Todd, his expression changed from anger to a smile.

Jamal: “Oh, you’re that sideshow girl, aren’t you? You’re the one I like the most out of all of them. Hey, if you don’t get invited tonight…”

Todd: “Ah, yes, yes, enough enough.”

Jamal, with a fond look in his eyes, reached out and tried to grab Subaru’s shoulder. However, of all people, it was Todd who stopped Jamal’s hand.

Todd grabbed Jamal’s wrist and gave him another “Enough” as his cheeks contorted.

Todd: “You’re scaring her with your attitude. This girl who I’d never met before got scared all of a sudden, and that stung.”

Jamal: “I didn’t do anything at all. I don’t know why you’re interrupting me in the first place… No way, you… with that woman…?!”

Todd: “Don’t joke about it, Jamal. Your sister’s the only one for me. You know that, right?”

Jamal: “It’s complicated for a brother to be told that his sister is someone's only love…"

Jamal muttered with a venomous look on his face, as he shook off Todd's hand.

He then glanced at Subaru, but the way his cheeks were drawn together seemed to dissuade him from messing with him any further.

Surprisingly, Jamal also had some sense. Or perhaps he had the heart to be hurt by being scared by someone he thought was a little too nice.

Either way—

Todd: "Anyhow, let's get going. We're not going to be able to attend today's banquet anyway."

Jamal: "That said, I'm getting tired of trying to close the holes in the city's defences."

Todd: "It won't be boring. It's a guarantee, a guarantee. —That's where the enemy will come from, absolutely."

With a chuckle, Todd's sharp words scratched Subaru's chest.

He praised his choice in his heart, thinking that the idea of using a secret path had been seen through. Then, after praising himself—

Todd: "By the way, what's your name?"

Subaru: "…"

Subaru was not sure if Todd had seen his distraction.

The feint-like question made Subaru seriously think that he was going to lose consciousness.

He had been asked for his name. Why, why, why, the questions raged.

Wouldn't he at least ask his name? —No, Todd wouldn't ask. That was why Rem had been wary of Todd from the beginning. Because of his bad relationship with him, Subaru had not exchanged names with him this time. Should he give his name, or not, what should he do?

Todd: “Please, just tell me.”

The request was repeated, and Subaru gasped.

Resigned to not being able to pull off an answer, he smiled as nonchalantly as possible and reluctantly said his name.

Subaru: “—Natsumi Schwartz, that’s my name.”

So he voiced his name.

He could not think of any other choice but to do this. He hoped and prayed that it was the right answer, and waited for the other person’s response.

When he heard the reply, Todd nodded his head, stroking his chin with an “Hmm”,

Todd: “You heard her, Jamal. Aren’t you happy you got her name now?”

Jamal: “Shut up! I’m getting the fuck outta here!”

Todd: “Okay, okay… Oh, can I follow you outside too?”

Jamal: “You’re a really untrustworthy guy… Do what you want!”

Todd followed, shrugging his shoulders upon perceiving Jamal’s angry voice, the latter barking with a red face.

With that, the two men disappeared from Subaru’s sight, never once looking back. They turned a corner in the hallway and disappeared. Out of sight, out of mind.

Subaru: “…Really?”

Guard: “Hey, are you okay? You’re looking really pale.”

Subaru exhaled as he looked away, wondering if he would ever come back. The only remaining soldier on guard was concerned about Subaru, as he saw how exasperated he was.

There was no time left for Subaru to respond.

However, he managed to make amends with the soldier on lookout duty, and accompanied him back to the waiting room to join Flop and the others, who were standing by inside.

Flop: “It took you long enough, Miss Natsumi…! Are you okay? You look really pale.”

Subaru: “I’ve already heard that… For the moment, the storm has passed. But the problem remains.”

Back in the waiting room, seeing the worried look on Flop’s face, he finally had time to worry about his heartbeat and his breathing.

Slowly, Subaru calmed himself down by taking deep breaths to correct his rough physiological reactions.

Yes, he had escaped the storm he had suddenly encountered. Probably.

They could not let their guard down until the very end, but for now, the tempest should be over.

However, they still had not overcome the big obstacle that was their initial problem.

Subaru: “We have to find a way to contact the outside world. If we go on like this, even if our plan succeeds…”

Taritta: “Ah, then don’t worry, Natsumi. Kuna and I left a signal that my sister will understand.”

Subaru: “What?”

Subaru’s eyes widened as he was told that the problem he had been facing had been solved just like that.

Taritta looked apologetic for his reaction, while Kuna seemed unconcerned. His gaze, directed towards them, was asking what was going on wordlessly.

Taritta: “Well… Natsumi will be the bait, and I will signal the others, so get your job done. That’s what Bianca said.”

Subaru: “Wha, wha, wha…?”

Subaru’s eyes widened and he looked at Abel in the corner of the room.

Then, noticing his leer, Abel narrowed his eyes, shook his head loosely, and declared—

Abel: “Rather than telling you and having you move unnaturally, I used you as a natural decoy. Fortunately, you seem to have performed your task reasonably well. I shall praise you for that.”

Subaru: “Shut up! Do you know what I’ve had to deal with…?!”

Flop: “Oh, calm down, Miss Natsumi! You’re ruining your pretty face!”

Subaru: “Shut up!”

He was about to get mad at Abel’s attitude, but Flop stopped him from behind.

He really wanted to punch that arrogant demonic face, but Subaru had no choice but to remain calm. As this strategy would not be possible without that face.

It was unbelievably terrible that he would use his own face as a hostage.

Subaru: “You, I’m definitely going to hit you when it’s over…!”

Abel: “If you have so much time to think about what you shall do after its terminus, then I am sure you shall be able to perform without fault.”

Subaru: “Flora! We’re going to rehearse until it’s time!”

Flop: “Okay, okay, okay.”

Subaru gritted his teeth in anger, as if saying “you are the very epitome of always having a comeback for everything I say.”

Whatever the case, if they had made contact with the outside world, all they had to do was wait for the time in question.

At most, yes, at most—

Subaru: “—It’ll be awful if the plan doesn’t work.”

He muttered in defeat, but Subaru had been convinced over the course of the past few days that it would definitely work.

It was really frustrating, because it seemed as though there was nothing that would not fall in love with this arrogant danseuse, except perhaps a Sin Archbishop.

Chapter 24:
Arrogance

1

—As the beginning of the banquet approached, the tension increased.

???: "…"

There was no conversation in the waiting room where the five of them had gathered, and it was quiet.

Nobody could utter a word, neither Abel, who was concentrating, nor Subaru. Even Flop was silent, so the weight of the atmosphere was overwhelming.

They had made it this far, so there was nothing to worry about.

Or, at least, they should be able to think that way, but human beings were not so simple. No matter how good the crossdressing was, the anxiety grew as the main event was about to happen.

Despite how loudly his heart screamed, and how much the cold sweat wetted his back, the flow of time could not be halted, and the promised time would yet come.

???: "The banquet is ready. It's time for you to go."

The voice of the soldier on guard duty rang out, and the moment of the release of the tension arrived.

Looking at each other, Subaru and the others picked up their instruments and followed the soldier leading the way out of the waiting room. They underwent a quick physical examination, but Subaru and the others, wearing only light clothing, had no way to carry concealed weapons.

They passed the inspection, receiving curious and perverted looks, and were ushered into the banquet room.

Only—

Taritta: “—Hk.”

Subaru: “Taritta-san?”

Subaru raised an eyebrow at Taritta’s stiff cheeks and heavy gait.

Although he whispered so that the soldiers leading her would not hear him, his voice had definitely reached Taritta, but she did not respond. From the look in her eyes, it was easy to grasp her mental state.

The extreme tension in her body was strong and overwhelming.

Leaving her familiar village, not being able to rely on her sister, the chieftain of the tribe, and going behind enemy lines almost unarmed, may have put her under a lot of stress.

Her breathing was rough, and she looked like she was about to collapse. Subaru tried to cheer her up, but he could not think of what to say.

It would be easy to say comforting words like “don’t worry” or “leave it to me”.

Would that soothe Taritta’s spirit in this moment?

So, while Subaru was unable to take a step forward due to his inner hesitation—

Abel: “—Taritta.”

Taritta: “…”

Abel: “There is nothing to worry about. Just look at me.”

It was a voice that sounded terribly arrogant and pompous, but full of absolute confidence.

The words were baseless, no different from the comforting words Subaru had thought just before. However, the effect of those easy words of comfort was tremendous.

Letting out a faint breath, Taritta blinked her eyes.

She had forgotten to breathe, and the color in her face had been almost gone, but she was brought back to her senses. It was a voice that contained simple words, but it held the power to strongly affect the hearts of others.

The haves would instantly outstrip the hard work of the have-nots.

He had been made painfully aware of this many times, but now, he had been able to witness it clearly.

Subaru: “Guess I’m not angry anymore.”

Subaru muttered this to himself as a consolation. But he soon realized that not only had Taritta’s nerves relaxed, but his own as well. And so, he bent his lips.

Of course he was not going to tell him that, though, because he’d probably triumph in it, were he to do so.

And then—

???: “—Welcome. I heard that you guys are going to perform a great song and dance.”

In the hall where the banquet had been prepared, Subaru and the others were greeted by nearly thirty strong men. They had been told that no ordinary soldiers would be allowed to enter the banquet hall today, so the people here must be the so-called commissioned officers and Generals. In the midst of all these Generals, a man sitting in a chair at the far end called out to the troupe.

Subaru: “…Is that Zikr Osman, the General Second-Class?”

After Subaru muttered under his breath, he glanced sideways at Abel, the danseuse of the group, whose face was hidden by a veil, who pulled his chin slightly as to answer positively to Subaru’s question.

In response to the affirmation, Subaru looked at the other party again, and furrowed his spruced up eyebrows.

Zikr Osman, the commander of the Imperial Soldiers stationed in the Fortress City of Guaral.

As a General Second-Class of the Empire, he was expected to be a strong warrior, but his appearance betrayed Subaru's imagination in more than one way.

First of all, he was short. He looked about half a head shorter than Subaru, who was by no means a tall man. He was almost as tall as Kuna if she stood up straight.

Of course, there was a precedent in Garfiel, who was short yet strong, so physique was no reason to underestimate him. However, he did not appear like someone of real importance either.

The most striking thing about him was his distinctive, puffy haircut.

If he had to describe it in words, he would say it was an afro, but just the fact that it was on top of a short man's head gave him a sort of mascot-like charm.

Subaru had been told beforehand that Zikr was a military strategist. He certainly did not look like the type to make a military career out of martial prowess.

Zikr: "Now, we have a tricky problem. We've been holed up in the city, feeling more and more depressed by the day. That is why we have set up this feast. You know what your roles are, don't you?"

Subaru: "—Yes, sir. We are extremely honored to be invited."

Subaru kneeled before Zikr, who had thrown an exaggerated remark with his chin resting on the armrest.

Flop, Taritta, and Kuna followed, but Abel, who stood at the end of the line, did not. For a moment, Zikr's gaze narrowed, and a sense of anxiety spread through the Generals.

Sure enough, one of the soldiers with a cup of sake at his feet stood up, putting a cup of alcohol near his own feet, and glared at Abel.

Soldier: “Why don’t you kneel? You know you’re in front of the General Second-Class…”

Zikr: “Wait. Don’t be so uptight. This place was opened for drinking and feasting. What we want from those who make their living in the arts is not etiquette, but unrelenting comfort.”

Soldier: “Mh… If you say so, General…”

It was Zikr, of all people, who rebuked the soldier who was bothering Abel.

The soldier reluctantly sat down in response to his generous attitude. All the while, Abel kept his face hidden under his veil and did not show any sign of wincing.

Zikr: “You don’t even falter in the face of a warrior’s spirit? You seem to have a lot of confidence in your dance. But your first impression was not good. I expect you to overturn it.”

Subaru: “Thank you for your generosity… But please do not worry.”

Zikr, who had a curious view of Abel’s arrogance, replied with a “Hm?” to Subaru as the latter knelt down, raising his eyebrows in interest.

It hurt to think about the rest, but this was the opportunity Subaru had been bestowed with. He was going to make the most of it. He would let Zikr taste complete defeat.

Subaru: “—Who you are about to lay your eyes on, is the beautiful danseuse from beyond the Great Waterfall. Her silky black hair that drinks up the sun’s light, along with her heavenly fair skin that has received the blessing of the spirits, her utmost beauty is comparable to the divine beings, and tonight, she will lavishly perform for you all.”

As he stood up, Subaru laid out his opening words.

As if to prove that his overly exaggerated preamble was not a bluff, the veil that hid Abel’s face was slowly lifted.

As soon as the veil revealed that enamoring visage, all those present gasped in unison at the haughtiness of the danseuse.

Zikr: “…”

In particular, the shock of Zikr, who had gotten lost in Abel’s gaze, was massive.

As he had shown a tolerant stance towards them from the start, perhaps he had already been prepared to deal with the situation magnanimously, or perhaps he had received a shock tantamount of being blindsided.

It was as if he had literally forgotten how to breathe and speak.

Subaru: “—Please, allow us the chance to display our danseuse’s act.”

Subaru hung his head down out of politeness, as he propositioned to Zikr. Likewise, Flop bowed his head and raised his respective instrument to ask for permission to begin the feast.

In response, Zikr nodded his head, prompting Subaru to exchange a glance with Flop.

They then nodded to each other, signaling that they were ready, and began to play.

Subaru: “—Tonight, what you will witness is a dance from the hometown of our danseuse, a dance from beyond the Great Waterfall. Please, satisfy to your heart’s content, the dance from the ends of the end.”

That it was from beyond the Great Waterfall, was an exaggerated expression.

However, it was not a lie in the sense that it was a dance unknown to the Imperial Soldiers. Both the song and the dance had been brought not from this world, but from Subaru’s.

Of course, they had been arranged accordingly, but as the basis of the dance was different, the dance alone was enough to attract the attention of the audience.

However—

Abel: “…”

He was a danseuse who charmed others with his beauty and fluid dancing, so he probably did not even require the help of an exotic song and dance from another world.

Abel: “…”

You’ve got the concept of appetizers with drinks, however this was not just the food being served at the drinking party, if you had a type of entertainment that promoted the drinking of alcohol, anything could be called an appetizer.

Naturally, sideshows were also included, and the dances are called appetizing dances, so they very much served as an appetizer for drinking—But they would hardly have this much of an effect.

The dance of the danseuse dazzled the soldiers, burned their throat, and made their souls thirsty for alcohol.

They naturally tipped their cups more frequently and quickly, while their cheeks turned a shade of vermilion all over. General Second-Class Zikr, in an attempt to heal the numbness in his cerebellum, was a stand-out for sipping booze at a particularly fast pace.

With his judgment robbed by alcohol and dance, he would commit mistakes that he would not normally make.

For example, the unprecedented mistake of giving in to his desire to see a sword dance, which resulted in handing over his own sword, as per the danseuse’s request.

Abel: “—It is your loss, Zikr Osman.”

Therefore, even with the tip of the sword pointed at his neck, and with the unquestionable voice of a man coming from the mouth of the danseuse, the eyes of the Womanizer, Zikr Osman could not escape from this euphoria.

2

—“We did it”, Subaru shouted inwardly, now that victory had been secured.

The sword in Abel’s hand was in a position to pierce Zikr’s throat with ease.

Zikr, who had bent backwards, exposing his neck, had no chance to fight back. Without a doubt, the enemy commander had been seized successfully.

And they had even done it earlier than originally planned, at the appropriate timing.

Originally, Subaru’s plan had been to make a name for themselves in the city as a traveling troupe and infiltrate Zikr Osman’s bosom. Ideally, they would then be summoned to Zikr’s bedchamber, where they would be able to catch him off-guard, take him into custody, and force the Imperial Soldiers stationed in Guaral to surrender.

That premise had been overturned by the holding of this banquet.

Abel: “—At the banquet, we shall neutralize all the remaining soldiers in the city.”

These had been the words of Abel, who had announced the change in strategy when they had been summoned to the banquet.

A high-risk, high-reward strategy, which would be fruitful if successful, yet dangerous—Subaru agreed to change the plan on the condition that they would switch back to the original one depending on the situation.

He had not expected it to work out this well.

Zikr: “…”

Abel: “I shall say it again, Zikr Osman. You have lost. Surrender now and have your men disarm. Otherwise, your cup shall be filled not with alcohol, but blood."

Abel, holding his sword to the motionless Zikr, advised him to surrender once again.

But there was no fear in Zikr's eyes, despite the fact his life was being threatened. Those were not the eyes of a determined Imperial Soldier. Rather, there was hesitation in his eyes.

Hesitation, doubt, and other similar emotions.

Zikr: "Dancer, you… No, you're…"

The hesitation manifested itself in Zikr's eyes much if he had seen something awe-inspiring. It did not seem like the reaction of a man in front of a mere dancer.

General: "—Hk! You bandits! You got no right to…!

One of the dumbfounded Generals came to his senses and immediately tried to jump Abel.

But, faster than they could reach for Abel's back, their arms and legs were pierced by thrown knives. —Blades pitched by a concealed Kuna.

Kuna: "I'm sorry, but the Chieftain told me to protect Abel's face."

She had secretly sneaked knives from the banquet in the tambourine-like instrument in her hand during Abel's dance.

The Generals hesitated at the sight of the fallen soldier, his limbs perforated by the blades.

However, there was one figure that dodged Kuna's blade, and jumped out of the way.

???: "Stop joking! Do you think you can stop Imperial Soldiers with something like this?"

The howling bearded giant of a man caught an additional throwing knife with his arm and brushed it away.

Then pulling out his own greatsword, he flew straight at Abel, with a desire for blood,

Subaru: “Abel—!”

Abel, who had captured Zikr, was presenting his stick-like back.

Subaru screamed Abel’s name, but the danseuse did not even blink.

As things were, a large sword would be brought down at Abel’s back—

Taritta: “—Kuh!”

At the same moment, Taritta gritted her teeth and aimed at the man, taking a bow from one of the soldiers.

Prepping an arrow, she aimed it at the bearded colossus approaching Abel. Taritta’s green eyes lit up with murderous intent.

She was steeled to take the man’s life in order to save Abel and stop the assault.

Flop: “Don’t kill him!!!!”

Taritta: “—Hk!”

But just before the arrow was released, Flop shouted in a panic.

Hearing this, Taritta’s eyes hesitated, and the arrow’s aim blurred slightly. And so, the arrow pierced not into the man’s back, but into his right shoulder.

Bearded General: “Gah?!”

The man screamed in agony and turned over after the tremendous impact. But the momentum of the greatsword in his hand could not be killed, and it spun around and headed for Abel’s back.

It seemed as if the sword would smash Abel’s head from behind. However, the tip of the sword narrowly grazed the back of his head and fell to the floor with a violent thud.

Abel had almost lost his life, but he had escaped disaster just in the nick of time.

And then—

???: "…Ah."

With a flutter, Abel's braided black hair was undone and spread.

The tip of the big sword sliced through the hair clip, untying the knot. —No, it did not stop at that. The frayed wig lost its function, and the fake black hair fell to the floor.

The danseuse's long hair had been replaced by Abel's own sable hair.

—The ruthless Emperor, who, along with the hair clip, had shorn off the soft impression of the danseuse.

???: "General Second-Class! It's our opportunity to get these guys now…!"

Zikr: "—Stop! Do not disobey me!"

While the soldier whose limbs had been pierced by knives and the one who had gotten shot in the right shoulder by an arrow groaned, Zikr silenced the appeals of the a General who was still attempting to resist.

If they recklessly stood their ground, regardless of how many fell, they would be crushed in one go by Subaru's forces. And that was the counterattack they most wanted to avoid.

However, Zikr would not let his subordinates fight on. He understood that, now that he himself had been pinned down, and his subordinate Generals had also had their movements suppressed, the outcome had already been determined.

So—

Zikr: “If I do as you say, can you guarantee the lives of my men?”

Abel: “That also depends on your attitude, Coward.”

Zikr: “Guh… Hk.”

Zikr showed his willingness to accept the recommendation to surrender while reddening and biting his lip as he was abused by the relentless Abel.

That was the face of a man who had experienced humiliation beyond having been caught in a plot against him and having his person captured.

Abel snorted, looking down at Zikr’s humiliation.

Abel: “I heard about you, Zikr Osman. Before being labelled the Womanizer, you had been dubbed the Coward.”

Zikr: “… An unbecoming epithet for an Imperial Soldier. Is that why you chose such a strategy?”

Abel: “…”

Zikr: “If I’m the Coward on top of being the Womanizer, I would surrender to a woman at the point of a sword…”

If so, what a humiliation that would be.

Or, if that was the case, Zikr would have died of humiliation. But the reason why Abel had deemed it feasible was different from the reason Subaru and the others had heard.

It was because—

Abel: “A strategist who, through his skillful and steady use of troops, has achieved few notable results in battle, but has also caused little casualties to his allies. An excellent commander, but lacking aggressiveness. Hence, Coward.”

Zikr: “Yes, that is correct, too. I am, but…”

Abel: “What are you confused about?”

Zikr: “Eh?”

Zikr’s eyes widened as Abel narrowed his eyes and asked that question.
